

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Harvard College Library

FROM THE ICHABOD TUCKER FUND

ESTABLISHED IN 1875 BY THE BEQUEST OF ICHABOD TUCKER,
CLASS OF 1791, AND THE GIFT OF
MRS. NANCY DAVIS COLE, OF SALEM

THE LITERARY WORLD:

85

A FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW OF CURRENT LITERATURE.

VOLUME XVIII.

JANUARY—DECEMBER, 1887.

BOSTON:
E. H. HAMES & COMPANY,
1887.

~~25.18~~

BP 312.1 (18)

1887, Jan. 8 - Dec. 27.

Tucker fund.

4461
52.142
2-6

INDEX TO VOLUME XVIII.

[Titles in italics refer to entries in "Literary Index."]

- ABBOT, W. J., Blue Jackets of 1812, 425
 Abbott, C. C., Waste Land Wanderings, 115
 Abbott, E. A., Kernel and Husk, 212
 Abbott, L., Life of Beecher, 151
 About Money, Mulock-Craig, 22
 Abraham, Joseph, and Moses, Kellogg, 285
 Acting and Actors, 143
 Actors and Actresses, Matthews and Hutton, 41, 87
 Actors, Yesterdays with, Winslow, 231
 Ad Musam, Scotland, 56
 Adams, B., Emancipation of Massachusetts, 57
 Adams, C. F., Poems, 368
 Adams, H. C., Charlie Lucken, 11
 Adams, L., Aunt Hepsy's Foundling, 268
 Adams, L., Geoffrey Stirling, 187
 Adams, O. F., 125; Post-Laureate Idylls, 25
 Addison's Essays, 156
 Advertisements, Novels as African Farm, Story of,
 After Paradise, Lytton, 318
 Agatha and the Shadow, 58
 Agnes Surriage, Rynner, 12
 Agriculture and Chemistry, Storer, 133
 Albee, J., Bow'n Hill, 9
 Albee, J., Home of, 8
 Albee, J., Miss Tipty Toes, 10
 Albert, K., 9
 Alcott, A. B., New Connecticut, 30
 Alexander, L., Lulu's Library, 426
 Aldrich, T. B., Home, 254
 Alexander, A., Problems of Philosophy, 71
 Alexander, E. P., Railway Practice, 42
 Alexander, J. W., 268
 Alexander, Mrs., Forging the Fetters, 197
 Alexander's Empire, Mahaffy, 197
 Alice's Adventures Under Ground, Carroll, 70
 Alkahest, Balzac, 213
 All is Lost save Honor, 427
 All Things to him who Waits, 190
 Allan Quatermain, Haggard, 236
 Allinson, E. P., and B. Fenrose, Philadelphia, 187
 Almanacs, 47; Cottillon, 429; Whitaker's, 23
 Alphabet Book, Waugh, 423
 America, French Explorations, 294;
 Frenchman's Impressions, 56; German books, 24; Icelandic discovery, 44, 318, 374; Index to historical documents, Stevens, 45; History, Winsor, 294; Retrospections of, Bernard, 69
 American Ancestry, 29, 126; Cyclopaedia, 30; Girls' Handy Book, Beard, 423; Historical Association, papers, 169; History, Half Hours with, Morris, 371; History, Magazine of, 44; History, M.S. sources, 255; Impressions, 227, 270, 302; Jettings, 18; Literature, books on, 92; Literature in Germany, 235; Literature, Richardson, 6; Whipple, 170; Magazine, 17, 108, 125, 250, 257, 285, 330, 373, 462; Patriotism, Bishop, 105; Poetry, Harris Collection, 24; poets, 31; Progress, Stories of, 11; travel, 284
 Americans, 47
 Americanism, 15, 108, 371
 Americans, Eminent, Lossing, 371
 Ames, H. H., Catalogue of Nevins Library, 134
 Amici, E. de, Cuore, 78, 169
 Amiel, 302
 Among the Law Makers, Alton, 87
 Amor Vincit, Martin, 269
 Anatomy of Negation, Saltus, 103
 Andersen's Fairy Tales, 425
 Andover Review, 142, 237, 270, 301
 Andrews, E. B., General History, 363
 Andrews, J. M., Plants as Sanitary Agents, 28
 Andrews, M. A., A Fancy, 184
 Animals, in captivity, 452; Distribution of, Helprin, 74; Stories and Pictures of, Tenney, 74
 Annals of the English Stage, Doran, 487
 Annie Barton's Journal, Wilbur, 42
 Announcements, 286, 321-8
 Anthony Memorial, Edmunds, 24
 Anthonius of Three Threes, 23
 Apocalypse, New Theory, 103
 Apotheosis of an Ideal, 170
 Appeal to Life, Munger, 247
 Apple Culture, Bailey, 28
 Appleton & Co., 321
 Appleton, G. W., Terrible Legacy, 251
 Arabian Nights, Burton, 14, 151; Townsend, 425
 Arcady, Jessop, 430
 Architecture, of Greece and Italy, Bishop, 351; Short History, Tuckerman, 351; Outline History, Clement, 90
 Argyll, Scotland, 121
 Ariel and Calliban, Cranch, 26
 Aristophanes in N. Y., 31
 Armstrong, Son, 322
 Arnold, M., on Grant, 87; Poems, 220
 Arnold, T., Stanley, 196
 Around World on Bicycle, Stevens, 196
 Art, Le, 44; Medieval, Reber, 102; Modern School, Meynell, 416; Principles, Van Dyke, 105; Review, 271
 Artelouse, Hytton, 166
 Artists, Finnish, Conway, 103
 Ascham, R., Johnson, 220
 Ashby-Sterry, J., Lazy Minstrel, 26
 Ashton, Dawn of XIXth Century in England, 488
 Asiatic Review, 47
 Assyria, Ragozin, 262
 Ass'ya, Turgenieff, 35
 Athol, Minor, 170
 Athens, American School at, 56; British School at, 15
 Athos, Riley, 348
 Atkinson, E., Margin of Profits, 299
 Atkinson, J., Shih Námeh, 13
 Atlantic Monthly, 14, 43, 75, 106, 142, 188, 220, 249, 285, 329, 373, 462
 Atlas, Historical, Labberton, 70; of Northwest, 105
 Atonelement, Magee, 103
 Audubon, J. J., 302
 Audubon Magazine, 237
 Aunt Hepsy's Foundling, Adams, 268
 Auringer, O. C., to Marston, 120; Scythe and Sword, 202
 Australia, Literature in, 62
 Authors, Acts and Anecdotes, Barrows, 364; American, Bolton, 359; Ballads about, Spofford, 415; Boyhood of, Riding, 422; Club, Boston, 136, 168; Club, N. Y., 30, 104; German, League, 366; Home Life, Griswold, 86; of Nineteenth Century, Brandes, 3; One Hundred, 31; Publishers and, 103; Reading, 120, 125, 463
 Avery, J., 256
 Aztecs, Biar, 55
 BABYLAND, 426
 Baconian Theory, Literature of, 248
 Bag of Diamonds, Fenn, 268
 Bailey, L. H., Apple Culture, 28
 Bain, A., Composition and Rhetoric; Teaching English, 220
 Baird, H. M., Huguenots, 119
 Balreuth, Margravine of, 227, 285, 329
 Baker, G. A., Mrs. Hephaestus, 138
 Baker, J. F., Federal Constitutions, 220
 Baker, W. S., Portraits of Washington, 37
 Balch, E., Zorah, 460
 Baldwin, Edler, 169
 Balkan Peninsula, Laveleye, 118
 Ballads, about Authors, Spofford, 415; about Books, Matthews, 28; of the Revolution, Raymond, 202; of Romance and History, 102
 Ballou, M. M., Due North, 102
 Baltimore and April 19, 1865, Brown, 123
 Balzac, H. de, Alkahest, 213; Country Doctor, 67; Cousin Pons, 21; Death of, 246; Aorcia, 18; Two Brothers, 213
 Banker of Bankersville, Thompson, 169
 Bar Harbor Days, Harrison, 236
 Baring-Gould, S., Red Spider, 284
 Barr, A. E., 76; Border Shepherdess, 369; Bow of Orange Ribbon, 11; Squire of Sandal-Side, 73
 Barrows, C. M., Acts and Anecdotes of Authors, 364
 Barrows, S. J. and I. C., Shaybacks in Camp, 227
 Bascom, J., Sociology, 102
 Bates, A., sketch, 217; Lad's Love, 211; Sonnets in Shadow, 202
 Bates, C. F., 61, 108
 Battles since Waterloo, Knox, 361
 Baylor, F. C., Behind Blue Ridge, 218; Juan and Juanita, 426
 Baynes, S., 222
 Beckett, C. H., Who is John No Man, 219
 Bee-Man, etc., Stockton, 347
 Beecher, H. W., 88, 174, 232, 279; as a Humorist, Kirk, 279; Life, Abbott, 151; Memorial, Bok, 220; Norwood, 268; Prayers, 122; Proverbs, 156; Summer in England, Pond, 188
 Beers, R. W., Mormon Puzzle, 90
 Before an Audience, Sheppard, 74
 Behavior, Washington's Rules, 86
 Behind Blue Ridge, Baylor, 218
 Bell, A. M., Elocution, 371
 Belle Nivernaise, Daudet, 119, 415
 Belt, H. P., Mosaic of Promise, 41
 Benedict, E. L., Stories of Europe, 422
 Benjamin and Bell, 62
 Benjamin, F. N., Sunny Side of Shadow, 265
 Benjamin, S. G. W., Persia, 150; Sea Spray, 345
 Bensei, J. B., Lines to, Clark, 152
 Bent, S. A., Longfellow's Golden Legend, 86; Short Sayings of Great Men, 87
 Benton, T. H., Roosevelt, 74
 Berkeley, Study of, 255
 Bernard, J., Retrospections of America, 69
 Besant, W., To Call Her Mine, 268
 Best Book, 427
 Bettany, G. T., Life of Darwin, 259
 Between the Centuries, Read, 202
 Between Two Lovers, Barr, 42
 Between Whiles, Jackson, 168
 Bevan, P., Songs of War for Union, 163
 Beyond the Stars, McCullagh, 388
 Bhagavad Gita, Chatterji, 381
 Biar, L., Aztecs, 55
 Bible History, Echoes of, Walsh, 167
 Bible, Les Origines de, 31; People's, Parker, 122, 300
 Bibles, old, prices, 239
 Bickersteth, R., Life, 167
 Bicycle, Around World on, Stevens, 196
 Bigg, C., Christian Platonists, 39
 Binding of Books, 8, 40
 Biographies, World: Bates, A., 217; Cooke, G. W., 297; Dodd, A. B., 92; Finck, H. T., 283; Garrett, E., 141; Gibson, W. H., 73; Laveleye, E. L., 347; de, 118; Iyall, E., 221; Peck, S. M., 153; Saltus, E. V. E., 347
 Biography, National, Dictionary of, Stephens, 22, 123, 158, 253
 Birds, North American, Key to, Coues, 480; Annual of, Ridgway, 432
 Birrell, A., Life of C. Brontë, 292; Obituary, 198
 Dicta, 198
 Bishop, H. H., Architecture of Greece and Italy, 351
 Bishop, P. P., American Patriotism, 105
 Bishop, W. H., Golden Justice, 41
 Bishops in the Tower, Luckock, 86
 Black Coppies, 437
 Black, W., Sabina Zembla, 167, 168
 Blackmore, R. D., Springhaven, 195
 Blackwood's Magazine, 108, 143, 174, 207, 255, 302
 Blake, J. V., Essays, 23; Poems, 26
 Bledisloe, Trotter, 460
 Blind Brother, Greene, 126, 185
 Blood of Abel, Bryant, 329
 Blue Jackets of 1812, Abbot, 425
 Bodyke, Norman, 345
 Boisgobey, Cecil's Fortune, etc., 139
 Bolmer, W. B., Church and Faith, 299
 Bolton, S. K., Famous American Authors, 350
 Bonnie Prince Charlie, Henty, 386
 Book, Cost of making a, 14; old, 302; Old, and its Story, 282; Prices Current, 108; A Printed, 223; production, English and American, 205
 Book-buying Habit, Holt, 216, 217
 Books, Best, 126, 143; Best Hundred, 169
 Book on, 215; About Books, 29; of 1896, 56; Grace Before, 296; Lists of, 92; for Young People, 11
 "Books that Have Helped Me," 108, 159, 223, 270, 302
 Book-Worm, Diversions of, Rees, 74
 Border Shepherdess, Barr, 369
 Bos'n Hill, Albee, 9
 Boston Notes, 124, 136
 Boston, Old, Porter, 147
 Boston Pilot, 104
 Boswell, J., 231; Life of Johnson, Hill, 171
 Botany, Primer of, Knight, 171
 Bouton, J. B., Roundabout to Moscow, 164
 Bouton, J. W., 322
 Bow of Orange Ribbon, Barr, 11
 Bowen, J. E., Conflict in Egypt, 140
 Bowen, B. F., Philosophy of Thelism, 83
 Boy Travelers on the Congo, Knox, 425
 Boynton, J. P., Lines and Interlines, 26
 Boys and Masters, Gilkes, 454
 Brain, Functions of, Ferrier, 102
 Brain-forcing in Childhood, 48
 Branch of May, Reese, 283
 Branes, G., Authors of 19th Century, 123
 Brand, Coleridge, 366
 Brasey, Lady, 366
 Brazil, Condition and Prospects, Andrews, 83; Literature in, 90; Three Thousand Miles Through, Wells, 83
 Bread in Desert, McKinn, 154
 Brentano, A., Fairy Tales, 425
 Breat, Center, 219
 Bride of Nile, Ebers, 219
 Brigham, W. T., Guatemala, 417
 Bright Star of Life, Farjeon, 42
 Bristol, Hunt, 180
 British Ballads, Book of, Hall, 488
 Broken Vow, Little, 328
 Bronte, C., Birrell, 292
 Brooks, A., Sermons, 73
 Brooks, E., Historic Girls, 423; Indian, Story of, 428; Storied Holidays, 454
 Brooks, P., Sermons, 187
 Brotherton, A. W., Poems, 283
 Broughton, R., Doctor Cupid, 59; Novels, 207
 Brown, A., Fools of Nature, 387
 Brown, C. B., novels, 382
 Brown, M. A., 44; Norse Discoverers of America, 318, 374
 Brown, T. E., Modern Socialism, 105
 Brown, W., Baltimore and April 19, 1865, 123
 Browne, F. F., Life of Lincoln, 22
 Browne, H. J., Is it Shakespeare's Confession, 317
 Browne, H., and E. Behnke, Voice, 171
 Songs and Speech, 171
 Brownies, Cox, 426
 Browning, E. B., 207, 255
 Browning, R., 87, 103, 271; Clubs, 24; Drama, Rolfe and Hersey, 243; Introduction to, Corson, 3; Symons, 39; Parleyings, 51, 60; Readings, 45; Strafford, 46; Women of, Burt, 21; Works, Riverside edition, 261
 Bruce, W., Poems, 421
 Bruteon's Bayon, Habberton, 39
 Bruno, G., Frith, 133
 Buchanan, R., Look Round Literature, 148
 Buchholz Family, Stinde, 268
 Buckley, A. B., History of England, 198
 Humblebee Bogo's Budget, 202
 Bunner, H. C., Story of N. Y. House, 179
 Bunyan, J., as Allegorist and Preacher, 15
 Burbridge, Liturgies, 86
 Burnham Breaker, Greene, 423
 Burns, R., 78
 Burroughs, J., 47
 Burt, M. E., Browning's Women, 291
 Bush, G. G., Harvard, 13
 Butler, A. J., Court Life in Egypt, 318
 Butler, C. M., Episcopal Doctrine, 167
 Butler, J. S., Insanity, 300
 Butterworth, H., Songs of History, 268; Zigzags in India, 424
 Button's Inn, Tourgee, 291
 By the Way, 12
 Byrner, E. L., 76; Agnes Surriage, 12
 Byron, 302; last verses, 78; letters to, 78; on Southey and Disraeli, 108
 CABOT, J. E., Life of Emerson, 341
 Cady, F., Through the Fields with Linnaeus, 133
 Caine, H., Life of Coleridge, 219
 Calamity Jane, Spencer, 204
 Calendars, 87, 429, 435
 California letters, 45
 Calverley, C. S., 62
 Cambridge, 429
 Cameron, H. L., Pure Gold, 139; Versa Nevill, 27; Worth Winning, 186
 Campbell, H., Prisoners of Poverty, 107
 Campbell, V. L., Civitas, 201
 Canada as field for romance, 296
 Canadian Churches, Carmichael, 167
 Canary Islands, 254
 Cannibals and Convicts, Thomas, 6
 Canning, G. Hill, 135
 Canning and Preserving, Rorer, 156
 Capernaum, Day in, Delitzsch, 285
 Capital, Marx, 183
 Captain of Janizaries, Ludlow, 236
 Carey, R. N., Uncle Max, 187; Wee Wee, 186
 Caribbees, Paton, 450
 Carlyle, T., Cromwell, 47; Early Letters, Norton, 21; Goethe Correspondence, Norton, 188; Reminiscences, Norton, 220
 Carman, B., Lilia Pura, 152; Shelley, 8
 Carpenter, H. B., Liber Amoris, 26
 Carroll, L., Alice's Adventures Under Ground, 70; Game of Logic, 122
 Carthage, Church, 58
 Cassell & Co., 327
 Catalogue, Annual American, 205; Educational, 271; Harris Collection of Poetry, 24; Milwaukee Library, 85; Nevins Library, 134
 Catechism, Yonge, 103
 Cathedral Days, Dodd, 83
 Catholic Church, New, 389
 Cave, M. E., Drawing from Memory, 90
 Celebrities of the Century, Sanders, 228
 Celere, P., Exploits of J. B. Quies, 120
 Century Co., 46, 322
 Century Magazine, 14, 59, 91, 125, 157, 171, 173, 189, 301, 352, 390, 462
 Chadwick, J. H., Whole Truth, 135
 Chaffin, W. L., History of Easton, 68
 Chamberlain, B. H., Japan, 235
 Champney, L. W., Great Grandmother Girls, 423; Three Vassar Girls at Home, 424
 Channing, W. E., Passages from MSS., 86
 Chaplain's Cruise, Fenn, 42
 Charlie Lucken, Adams, 11
 Charnay, D., Ancient Cities of New World, 317
 Chatterbox, 426
 Chatterji, M. M., Bhagavad Gita, 381
 Chatter's Poetry, 135
 Chautauqua, 190
 Chauvenet, Geometry, 352
 Chelosophy, Heron-Allen, 170
 Chess Masters of Today, 15
 Chester Coterie, Hamilton, 119
 Cheyne, T. E., Job and Solomon, 289
 Child of the Century, Wheelwright, 134
 Children are We, 328
 Children of Silence, Seiss, 370
 Children's Quartos, 424
 China, German books on, 270; Religions of, Du Bose, 12; Wilson, 243
 Chinese Ghosts, Hearn, 55
 Chinese Stage, Gottschall, 103
 Christ Unveiled, Johnson, 103
 Christian Evidences, Row, 39
 Christian Facts and Forces, Smyth, 351
 Christian Platonists of Alexandria, Bigg, 39

- Hallowell, R. F., Pioneer Quakers, 57
 Hamerton, P. G., Stones, 23, 30
 Hamilton, A., Works, 201
 Hamilton, H., Poet's Praise, 201
 Hamlet, 255
 Hammond, W. A., On Susquehanna, 120
 Handful of Monographs, Preston, 86
 Handy Helps, Southwick, 155
 Hannington, J., Dawson, 115
 Happy Dood, Cooke, 59
 Harby, T., Woodlanders, 135, 149, 152, 164
 Harcourt, Gilchrist, 323
 Harper & Brothers, 323
 Harper's Magazine, 44, 75, 106, 142, 188, 221, 249, 285, 329, 373, 462
 Harris, S., Self Revelation of God, 67
 Harrison, Mrs. B., Bar Harbor Days, 238
 Harte, B., Crusade of Excelsior, 236
 Millionaire of Rough and Ready, 73
 Harvard, Bush, 13; Library, 40; Monthly, 124; Social life at, 47
 Haskins, D. G., Emerson's Ancestors, 15, 122
 Hatch, E., Church Institutions, 328
 Hauff, W., Kalte Herze, 13
 Haweis, H. R., Conquering Cross, 247
 Light of Ages, 371; Picture of Jesus, 38, 71; Picture of Paul, 122; Story of the Four, 38
 Hawthorne, J. W., Countess Almara's Murder, 41; Great Bank Robbery, 298; Tragic Mystery, 235; Trial of Gleason, 41
 Hawthorne, N., 31; Tanglewood Tales, 425
 Haynes, A. A., Jesuit's Ring, 139
 Haynes, W. H., Literary Iconoclasm, 132
 Haynes, E. J., Dollars and Duty, 349
 Hays, H., Village Maid, 41
 Hayward, A., Correspondence, 52, 62
 Hazard, C., Life of Dinan, 10
 Hazlitt, W., Bibliography, 348
 Health, books, Dr. Frank, 247; Journal of 222; Lessons, Walker, 318
 Heard, A. J., Russian Church, 299
 Heard, J. Jr., on Tolstoy's Power of Darkness, 297
 Hearn, L., Some Chinese Ghosts, 85
 Heart of Weed, 26
 Heavenward, 429
 Hebrew Grammar, Lowe, 215
 Hebrew Text-books, 45
 Helprin, A., Distribution of Animals, 106
 Helene, Tiscuan, 106
 Helps to Belief, 103, 122
 Henry III., Misrule of Hutton, 385
 Henry, G. A., Bonnie Prince Charlie, 396
 Her Only Son, Stretton, 461
 Her Will and Her Way, 427
 Heroic Ballads, 421
 Heron-Allen, E., Chelosophy, 170
 Hersey, H. E., Browning's Dramas, 243
 Heyse, F., Romance of the Canoness, 350
 Hidden Sunbeams, 119
 Hidden Way, Street, 269
 Higginson, F., descendants, 126
 Higginson, S. J., Princess of Java, 315
 Higginson, T. W., 173; Monarch of Dreams, 35; Writing and Speech-making, 121
 Hill, Canning, 135
 Hill, G. B., Boswell's Johnson, 259
 Hillard, K., Dante's Convito, 14
 His Little Royal Highness, 424
 His One Fault, Trowbridge, 74
 His St. Fin East, Parks, 166
 Historic Glen, Brooks, 423
 Historical Atlas, Labberton, 70
 History, in American Colleges, 31; burned, 190, 238; General, Andrews, 363; Patton and others, 458; Romance of 302; songs of, Butterworth, 368
 Hitchcock, H., American Constitutions, 123
 Hobart Pasha, Sketches from Life, 96
 Hobbes, T., 159
 Hodge, A. A., Lectures on Theology, 298
 Hoffman, Prof., see Lewis, A. J.
 Holland, H. S., sermons, 154
 Holland, J. G., Life of Lincoln, 388
 Holley, M., 173
 Holmes, M. J., Gretchen, 350
 Holmes, O. W., Hundred Days in Europe, 348
 Holt, H., on Periodicals, 184, 217
 Holy Child, T. E. Van Bibber, 498
 Home Club Study, Gould, 217
 Home Sanitation, 254
 Homer, Iliad, Seymour, 431; Odyssey, Morris, 167, 190, 191
 Homespun Yarns, Whitney, 11
 Homiletic Review, 330
 Honduras, New, Lombard, 381
 Hope, A. R., Youngsters' Yarns, 381
 Horne's Nest, Roe, 187
 Horse, Foot, and Dragon, Zogbaum, 419
 Horsemanship for Women, Mead, 253
 Hosmer, J. K., lectures, 61; researches, 56
 Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 323
 House of the Musician, Johnson, 235
 How I was Educated, 430
 How to make a Saint, 204
 Howard, B. W., Tony the Maid, 461
 Howard, C. H., Shakespeare for Woman, 124
 Howell, J., songs, 202
 Howells, W. D., 55; on Dickens, 24; interview, 232; Italian Poets, 344; Minister's charge, 4, 39, 71; Recollections, 353; Thompson on, 281
 Hubbard, B., Memorials of Half Century, 300
 Hughes, —, Fraser, 135
 Hughes, T. F., 249
 Hugo, V., 15, 93; Tales, 31
 Hugo, V., Les Misérables, 108, 171, 220, 427, 435; Things Seen, 119
 Huguenots in America, Baird, 108
 Hulah, J., 108
 Humble Romance, Williams, 203
 Hume, D., Knight, 41
 Hume, R. W., My Lodger's Legacy, 186
 Hundredth Man, Stockton, 382
 Hungary, Vambéry, 58
 Hunt, A., That other Person, 139
 Hunt, T. W., English Prose and Prose Writers, 182
 Hunt, W., Bristol, 180
 Huntington, F., St. Paul's Problem, 426
 Hutzler, S., Klein Menschen, 24
 Huxley, T. H., Advance of Science, 385
 Hylton, J. D., Arteloise, 168
 Hymns, and Hymn tunes, 15; illustrated, 429
 I AM THAT I AM, Warriner, 70
 Illustrating Books, Wood, 100
 Illustrations for books, 173
 Imaginary Portraits, Pater, 275
 Imitator, 26
 In Divers Tones, Roberts, 164
 In Golden Days, Lyall, 259
 In His Name, Hale, 454
 In Ole Virginia, Page, 203
 In One Town, Downey, 187
 In Time of Roses, Scannell, 119
 In the Swim, 206
 Inchfawn, Meade, 461
 Index, to American Historical Documents, Stevens, 45; Early English Text Society, 257; Leonard Scott Co., 125; Literary, to Periodicals, 15, etc., 428; education, 62
 India, Literature of, 1887, 477
 Indian, American, Story of, Brooks, 89
 Indian Wheat Trade, Wolf, 343
 Industrial Education, Love, 380
 Ingelow, J., works, 280
 Insane, Care of, Mills, 123
 Insanity, Rutler, 300
 Instrumentation, 463
 Intellectual Movement, 187
 International Law, Davis, 463
 Interstate Commerce Act, 156; Passes, 187
 Invaders, Tolstol, 449
 Ireland, Young People's History, Towle, 101
 Irene, 41
 Irving, W., 159; Home of, 452; Rip Van Winkle, 449; Works, 456
 Islam, C., Fishery Question, 425
 Isles of the Princes, Cox, 363
 Ismay's Children, 387
 Italian Literature, Phillimore, 135
 Method, Combs, 230; Poets, Howells, 477
 Italy, Literature of, 1887, 477
 Italy, Revolution in, Maurice, 383
 Ivan Ilyitch, Tolstol, 229
 Ivins, W. M., Machine Politics in New York, 156
 JACK AND BEANSTALK, Tennyson, 202
 Jack as Fisherman, Phelps, 365
 Jackson, E. P., Earth in Space, 350
 Jackson, H., 44, 45; Between Whites, 168; grave, 216; Sonnets and Lyrics, 275
 Jackson, T. G., Dalmatia, etc., 23
 Jacob's Wife, Sergeant, 269
 James, H., Princess Casamassima, 5, 39
 Jameson, J. F., Ussellin, 204
 Japan in Light of Aino Studies, Chamberlain, 235
 Japan, Literature of, 1887, 479
 Japanese Fairy Tales, 100
 Jappie Chappie, Shute, 423
 Jay, J., Whitelock, 371
 Jean Monteith, McClelland, 461
 Jeffrey, E., 191, 171, 220, 371
 Jesu, 89, R., 119
 Jess, Haggard, 116
 Jessup, A., Arcady, 430
 Je-u-it's Ring, Hayes, 139
 Jesus, Life and Times, Clarke, 201; Picture of, Haweis, 38, 71
 Jewett, S. O., Story of Normans, 58
 Jewish Courtesy, 269
 Job and Solomon, Cheyne, 425
 John N. Nut, Lang, 425
 Johnson, F., Psychic Studies, 167
 Johnson, V. W., House of Musician, 235
 Johnston, A., Connecticut, 310
 Johnson, J., Readers, 209
 Joseph, March, 122
 Josiah Allen's Wife, 173
 Journal of Health, 222
 Journalism, among Cherokees, 255; as a profession, 62, 72; semi-denominational, 353; in U. S., 47
 Journalist, 300
 Joy in Widest Community Spread, 29
 Juan and Juanita, Baylor, 426
 Juanita, Mann, 156
 Juvenilia, Lee, 184, 331
 KALOOOLAH, Mayo, 422
 Kalle Herz, Hauff, 13
 Kansas, map, 171
 Karma, Sinnett, 73
 Katscher, L., Letters from Germany, 24, etc., 19
 Katy of Catoctin, Townsend, 19
 Keating, J. M., Maternity, etc., 204
 Keats, J., Colvin, 279; MSS., 191; Odes and Sonnets, Low, 450; poems, 385; verses to, Williams, 24
 Kellogg, A. H., Abraham, Joseph, and Moses, 295
 Keltie, J. S., Statesman's Year Book, 121
 Kennard, S. A., Life of Mrs. Siddons, 187
 Kenyon, J. B., 136
 Kerner and Husk, Abbott, 212
 Kidnapped, Stevenson, 72
 King, C. W., Gnostics, 455
 Kingsley, C., Song of a River, 421
 Kirby, G. B., Years of Experience, 42
 Kirk, E., Beecher as Humorist, 279
 Kirk, E., 78
 Kirkland, J., Zury, 169
 Kitchen Companion, Parloa, 171
 Klein Menschen, Hutzler, 24
 Knickerbocker Nugget, 428
 Knight, J., Life of Rossetti, 219
 Knight, W., Life of Hume, 41
 Knight-Errant, Lyall, 151
 Knockabout Club, Ober, 424
 Knowledge, 222
 Knox, T. W., Boy Travelers on Congo, 425; Decisive Battles, 361; Dog Stories, 422; How to Travel, 171
 Kringle, G., Poems, 26
 LABBERTON, R. H., Historical Atlas, 70
 Labor, Land and Law, Phillips, 105
 Labor Question, in Fiction, 168; Plain Man's Talk on, Newcomb, 105
 Ladd, G. T., Psychology, 181
 Ladd's Love, Bates, 211
 Laffan, see Adams, L.
 Laffan, W. M., Wood Engravings, 449
 Laidon, A., 61
 Lamb, Of letters, 62
 Land of Darkness, Oliphant, 62
 Land of Fire, Reid, 101
 Land and Leute in America, Naubert, 173
 Landing of Pilgrims, Hemans, 275
 Lane-Poole, S., Moors in Spain, 26
 Lanfrey, P., Napoleon, 164
 Language, evolution of, 47; Lessons, 259
 Lardner, 171; universal, 454
 Languages, Ancient and Modern, Order of Words in, Weil, 187
 Lanier, S., Lines to, Andrews, 119
 Larned, A., Village Photographs, 206
 Last von Reckenburg, François, 461
 Last Things, Five, Spencer, 388
 Lathbury, M. A., Twelve Times One, 424
 Latin, Art of Reading, Hale, 295
 Laurie, S. S., Universities, 55
 Laveleye, E. L. V. de, sketch, 118; Balkan Peninsula, 118
 Law, Talks about, Dole, 116
 Lawyer's Code of Ethics, 70
 Lazy Minstrel, Ashby-Sterry, 26
 Lecky, W. E. H., England in 18th Century, 215, 229
 Lee, K. Dorothy Wordsworth, 47, 324
 Lee & Shepard, 184, 381
 Lee, V., Juvenilia, 167
 Leeds, G., Sermons, 167
 Legend of Delaware Valley, MacMurray, 202
 Leipzig, book-trade, 15; libraries at, 295
 Leo XIII, memoirs, 191, 368
 Leopardi, G., 171
 Le Douarin, A. D., Yucatan, 171
 Les Misérables, see Hugo.
 Letters, Find of, 190
 Letters from Heaven, 371; from Surprise Land, 271
 Letters, profession of, 271
 Lewis, A. J., Conjuror Dick, 26
 Lewis, A. J., Carpenter, 26
 Libraries, Bancroft, 45; Cambridge, 216; Du Bois, 190; Harvard, 40; Hawkins, 93; Historical Society, Brooklyn, 173; Leipzig, 295; Library, Littleton, 294; Milwaukee, 85; Nevins, 134; New York Free, 62, 126; Newberry, 264; Sherman, 261; Stewart, 129; Winter, 46
 Libraries of the land, 296
 Library of Continental Literature, 105
 Library, office of, 239; reference, 346
 Liede and Sprüche, Siller, 369
 Light of Ages, Haweis, 371
 Lights of Two Centuries, Hale, 365
 Li Lorimer, Gift, 139
 Lilia Para, Carman, 202
 Lives of Florence, Sand, 152
 Lincoln, A., Browne, 2; Holland, 388
 Linguistic and Oriental Studies, Cust, 459
 Linnaeus, Through Fields with Caddy, 133
 Lippincott Co., 324
 Lippincott's Magazine, 44, 75, 106, 221, 249, 288, 330, 371, 462
 Literary Pop, To, Pawcett, 162
 Literary Iconoclasm, Hayne, 15, 47
 Literary log-rolling, 31
 Literary men, 108
 Literary movement, 8
 Literary Salad, Porter, 8
 Literary World, 3
 Literature, and action, 206; and character, 271; democracy of, 302; English, in public schools, 41; European, review of, 249; Look Round, Buchanan, 148; in a republic, 31; of streets, 62; Study of, Morley, 156; tendencies, 255
 Little, Mrs. A. R., World as We Saw It, 167
 Little, W. J. K., Broken Vow, 323
 Little Wide-Awake, 426
 Lurgies, Burbridge, 108
 Love, Joy of, 47
 Lockley Hall and liberalism, 31, 159
 Lodge, H. C., Hamilton's Works, 23, 30
 Lottie, W. J., Windsor Castle, 211
 Lotze, 215
 Lombard, T. R., New Honduras, 381
 London letter, 72
 London, east-end, 47, 254
 London Quarterly, 47, 254
 Longfellow, H. W., art, 78; Birthday Book, 429; garden, 260; Golden Legend, 86; memorial, 430; Memorials, Final, 163; method, 353
 Look-about Club, Bamford, 426
 Lord's Prayer, Hyde, 122
 Losing, B., Eminent Americans, 371
 Lost Reputation, Martin, 269
 Lothrop Co., 76, 324
 Lotze, H., Logic, 215
 Love, S. G., Industrial Education, 343
 Love and Theology, Woolley, 389
 Lovely Wang, Wingfield, 153
 Lovins, Luke, 421
 Low, W. H., Keats's Odes and Sonnets, 450
 Lowell, J. R., in Chicago, 77; Democracy, etc., 23; Old English Dramatists, 88, 104; Sir Launfal, 421
 Lubbock, J., Pleasures of Life, 42
 Lucian's works, 42
 Lulu's Library, Alcott, 279
 Lusk, S., York of Thorah, 78
 Lyall, E., sketch, 321; Autobiography of a Slander, 298; In Golden Days, 259; Knight-Errant, 154
 Lytton, Lady, Life, 168, 205
 Lytton, R. B., after Paradise, 318
 MABEL STAKHOPE, O'Meara, 81
 McCarthy, J., on modern fiction, 423
 McClelland, M. G., Jean Monteith, 461
 McClurg & Co., 325
 McCosh, J., 62; Psychology, 299
 McCray, F. T., Environment, 203
 MacDonald, G., Sermons, 329
 Mace, F. L., Poems, 367
 Machine Politics, Ivins, 186
 Mack, R. E., Queen of Meadow, 439
 McKenzie, E., Some Things Abroad, 154
 McKim, R. H., Sermons, 181
 Macmillan's Magazine, 249, 285, 301, 373
 Macquoid, K. S., 76, 352
 Magicians, Stories of, Church, 426
 Magnetic Measurements, Nipher, 28
 Mahaffy, J. P., Alexander's Empire, 197; conversation, 373
 Mail service, American, 47
 Major and Minor, Norris, 378
 Malheurs de Sophie, Segur, 119
 Manchester, Bishop of, Hughes, 119
 Man Who Would Like to Marry, The, Parkes, 486
 Mann, H., Thoughts for a Young Man, 206
 Mann, M., Juanita, 155
 Manners and Social Usages, Sherwood, 204
 Manuscripts and publishers, 173
 Maps, 105, 220, 236, 329, 461
 Marcella, Grace, 24
 March, D., First Khedive, 122
 Margaret, Queen, 289
 Margin of Profits, Atkinson, 299
 Mark Logan, Kinzie, 364
 Marlitt, E., 236
 Marlowe, C., 213
 Marryat, F., Tom Tiddler's Ground, 22
 Marston, P. B., 56, 72, 87, 191; For a Song's Sake, Garden Secrets, 362; Verses to, Auringer, 120; Works, 206
 Marns, Our Darlings, 486
 Martin, J., Poems, 202
 Martyr of Golgotha, Earich, 139
 Mary Stuart, Strickland, 12
 Marx, C., Capital, 153
 Marzials, F. T., Life of Dickens, 135, 219
 Marzio's Crucifix, Crawford, 458
 Massachusetts, Emancipation of, Adams, 459
 Master of Ceremonies, Penn, 139
 Masters of Situation, Tilley, 101
 Maternity, Keating, 204
 Matrimonial Agent, Winterfield, 139
 Matthews, B., Actors and Actresses, 41
 87; Ballads of Books, 28; Secret of Sea, 27
 Mattie's Secret, Desbeaux, 424
 Maurice, C. E., Revolution in Italy, 383
 Maximilian's Empire, Fall of, Schraeder, 106
 May, S., Drone's Honey, 218
 Mayo, W. S., Kaloolah, 422
 Mead, T. H., Horsemanship for Women, 253
 Meade, L. T., Inchfawn, 461
 Melklejohn, J. M. D., English Language, 388
 Memorials of Half Century, Hubbard, 300
 Men and Letters, Scudder, 105
 Mendenhall, T. C., Century of Electricity, 456
 Mercer, L. P., New Birth, 254
 Mère Suzanne, 386
 Meredith, G., 93; Novels, 137; Shaving of Shagpat, 285
 Merimée, F., Tales Before Supper, 269
 Meriwether, L., Tramp Trip, 46, 67
 Merritt, A., 422
 Merry Men, Stevenson, 85, 103
 Metaphor, mixed, 56
 Metcalf, W. H., Summer in Oldport Harbor, 252
 Methinks if ye could know, 107
 Metukabla, Wellcome, 214, 216
 Mexico, About, Johnson, 87; Study of, Wells, 37
 Meyer, C. F., Monk's Wedding, 236
 Meynell, W., Modern School of Art, 416
 Michigan, Cox, 12
 Microscopy for Beginners, Stokes, 123
 Midshipman at Large, Talbot, 453
 Miller, J., Songs of Mexican Seas, 267
 Miller, J. B., Trade Organizations, 399
 Millionaire of Rough and Ready, Harte, 7
 Mills, C. K., Care of Nervous and Insane, 123
 Milton, J., minor poems, Rolfe, 329
 Milwaukee, Library, 85; School, 171
 Mind Cure, 254
 Minister's Charge, Howells, 4, 39, 71
 Minor, T. C., Altholia, 470
 Minor Chords, Albree, 122
 Miracles, Maitland, 122
 Mirage of Promise, Belt, 41
 Miss or Mrs., 280
 Miss Bayle's Romance, 186
 Miss Churchill, Reid, 102
 Miss Gascogne, Riddell, 119
 Miss Ruth and Miss Susan, Chapman, 298
 Miss Topsy Toes, Albree, 10
 Missing Sense, Woolridge, 459
 Mistaken Paths, Dick, 252
 Mr. Incon's Misadventure, Saltus, 347
 Mrs. Barth's Memorial, 427
 Mrs. Hephestus, Baker, 138
 Mitchell, S. W., Prince Little Boy, 426
 Wear and Tear, 7
 Moberley, C. E., Early Tudors, 106
 Modern Idols, Thorne, 105
 Modern Muse, 169
 Modern Proteus, 201
 Mohl, Madame, Simpson, 215; quoted, 21
 Mommisen, T., Roman Provinces, 11
 Monarch of Dreams, Higginson, 31
 Monk's Wedding, Meyer, 236
 Montauban, G. D., Cruise of a Woman Hater, 203
 Montgomery, D. H., English History, 373
 Moody, M. L., Tragedy of Brinkwater, 169
 Moon Hoax, 262
 Moon Maiden, Greenwood, 119
 Moore, O., Parnell and His Island, 184
 Moore, T., Epicurean, 186
 Moors in Spain, Lane-Poole, 26
 Moral Philosophy, Peabody, 135
 Morality and Redemption, Fairbairn, 461
 Morgan, A., on Donnelly cipher, 321
 Morley, H., English Writers, 153
 Morley, J., Study of Literature, 156
 Morrison Fuzzle, Beers, 81
 Morphology, Journal of, 289
 Morris, C., Half Hours with American History, 371
 Morris, M., Claverhouse, 370
 Morris, W., Homer's Odyssey, 167, 190, 191
 Motherhood, Conscious, Marwedel, 388
 Mothers, God made, 190
 Motives, humor of, 423
 Mouton, L. C., 98, 104, 151; Ourselves and Our Neighbors, 439
 Müller, F. M., Science of Thought, 154
 Mulock-Craig, D. M., 430; About Money, 23; Unknown Country, 426
 Munger, T. T., Appeal to Life, 426

- Munroe, K., Flamingo Feather, 253
Muntz, E., Life of Raphael, 487
Munroe, M. N., Dialect in stories, Picard, 217
Murray's Magazine, 29
Music, History of, Naumann, 31
Musical devotees, 31
Musical History, Davis, 121; Instruments, Hipkins, 239, 463
My Confession, Tolstoi, 268
My Creed, Savage, 219
My Garden, Clark, 449
My Lodger's Legacy, Hume, 248
My Own Love Story, Trollope, 248
Mystery of God, Tyms, 187
- NAPOLKON I, Life, Lanfrey, 12; and Marie Louise, 121
Nation in a Nutshell, Towle, 123
National Review, 47, 78, 108, 174, 207, 255
Natural Law in Business World, Wood, 249
Naturalist, Notes of, Ball, 249
Naumann, E., History of Music, Necrology, 62
Necrology, 1887, 485
Nell's Bondage, 427
Nelson & Sons, 327
Nerval, G. de, Sylvie, 13
Nervous and Insane, Mills, 123
New Birth, Mercer, 254
New England literary progress, 40
New Man of Rossmore, Walworth, 71
New Princeton Review, 91, 167, 237, 301
New Testament, Commentary, Meyer, 122; Introduction, Warfield, 74, 215
Word Studies, Vincent, 293; Peshto Version, 29
New York, book centers, 171; letter, 104; notes, 120, 136
New York, History, Roberts, 140
Newcomb, S., Labor Question, 105
Newspaper, Harrisburg, First, 31; Sunday, 15, 47; Western, First, 271
Newspaper notices of books, 190
Newton, R. H., Social Studies, 319
Newton, W. W., Vine out of Egypt, 374
Nims and Knight, 325
Nineteenth Century, 47, 78, 108, 143, 174, 222, 255, 302
Nineteenth Century Club, 120
Nineteenth Century Sense, Darby, 277
No Name Series, 186
Nordau, M., Paris letters, 270
Norman, H., Bodyke, 345
Normans, Jewett, 58
Norris, W. E., Major and Minor, 387
Norton, C. E., see Carlyle
Norway and Denmark, literature, 159
Norway, Literature of, 1887, 480
Norway, Nights and Russian Days, Davis, 230
Norwood, Beecher, 122
Not Your Own, Everard, 452
Nott, J. F., Animals in Captivity, 93
Novel, modern, 15; thoughts about, 47, 78
Novelist, Statesman and, 47, 78
Novelists, why no great, 47, 78
Nuova Antologia, 90
Nursery Rhymes, 423
Nursing, lesso, in, 123
- O WEARY WOMAN, Thine the Weary Work, 238
Ober, F. A., Knockabout Club, 424
Obiter Dicta, Bitter, 106
Obnet, G., Dames du Croix-Mort, 106
Oil Painting, Collier, 123
Old Colony Series, 46, 58
Old Folks at Home, Foster, 420
Old Garden, Deland, 125
Old House at Sandwich, Hatton, 121
Old New England Days, Damon, 136
Old People, books for, 135
Old Testament, Morality, Smyth, 131
Olipphant, M., Episodes, 181; Haifa, 131
Olipphant, M. O. W., Land of Darkness, 62
Ombra, Genevraye, 119
O'Meara, K., Mabel Stanhope, 41
On the Nisquahanna, Hammond, 120
On the Wung, 139
Once Again, Forester, 120
O'Sullivan, C., American Electoral System, 210
Opera in Profile, 35
Origin of the Fittest, Cope, 53
Ormsby, J., Don Quixote, 416
Oswald, F. L., Poison Problem, 271
Ouida, 71
Our Darlings, Mars, 486
Our Heredity from God, Powell, 427
Our Little One's Annual, 456
Ourselves and Our Neighbors, Moulton, 237
Overland Monthly, 253
Oxford, in Middle Ages, 191; University, Creighton, 123
Oxley, J. M., 30
- PAGE, T. N., in Old Virginia, 203
Painters and Painting, Cyclopædia, 46
Palestine, Oliphant, 131
Palgrave, F. T., Tennyson's Lyrical Poems, 23
Palgrave, M. E., Promise Kept, 454
Palmer, G. H., New Education, 263
Panin, I., Lectures, 433; Thoughts, 265
Pannies, Whitney, 135
Papacy, History, Creighton, 121
Parables of Our Savior, Taylor, 28
Paris Letters, Nordau, 270
Parker, J., 120; People's Bible, 122, 300
Parkes, H., The Man Who Would Like to Marry, 486
Parks, L., His Star in East, 166
Parliament, History, Skottowe, 171
Parson, M., Kitchen Companion, 184
Parrell and His Island, Moore, 92
Partridge's readings, 105
Parts of Speech, Knox-Heath, 105
Passos, J. R. D., Interstate Commerce Act, 123
Pater, W., Imaginary Portraits, 275
Paton, W. A., Down the Islands, 122
Paul, Picture of, Hawaii, 87
Pausanias, Greece, 87
Peabody, A. F., Moral Philosophy, 135
Peck, S. M., sketch, 155
- Penelope's Suitors, Bynner, 237
Penny, V., 325
People and Pastor, 217
Periodicals vs. Books, Holt, 184, 216, 253
Periodicals, Index, 15, 31, etc.
Periodiques Anglaises, 47
Perry, M. G., Griffis, 455
Perry, N., 125; Flock of Girls, 423; New Songs, 26
Perry, T. S., Evolution of Snob, 163
Persia, Benjamin, 150
Persons and Places in Europe, Benedict, 422
Perspective, 156
Peschan, E., Zeitglossen, 153
Pfeiffer, E., Sonnets, 202
Phelps, E. S., Gates Between, 343; Jack Philadelphia, 300; History, Allinson and Penrose, 187; Literary Life, 223
Phillips, M., Devil's Hat, 185
Phillimore, C. M., Italian Literature, 135
Phillips, W. A., Labor, Land, and Law, 105
Phillips, Exeter Lectures, 203
Philosophical Classics, 41
Philosophy, Encyclopedia, Lotze, 215; Problems, Alexander, 71
Phonographic Instructor, Watson, 158
Physica, Anthony and Brackett, 371
Platt, J. J. and S. M. B., Poems, 284
Pleasant, G. H., on dialect in Murree's stories, 217
Pickwick, true story, 93; Victoria edition, 239
Plerson, E. De L., Society Verse, 244
Plants as Sanitary Agents, Andrews, 159
Platonists, Christian, of Alexandria, 39
Playwright's Daughter, Edwards, 42
Pleasures of Life, Lubbock, 262
Plimpton, F. B., Poems, 74
Plucky One, Spencer, 140
Poe revival in Boston, 104
Poem wanted, 92
Poems in Color, 422
Poetic Outlook, 108
Poetry, contributed: Andrews, M. A., A. A. Fancy, 184; Auringer, O. C., To Marston, 120; Brontë, 104; Carman, B., Lilla Pura, 152; Shelley, 8; Clark, K. E., To Bensen, 152; Cole, S. V., To Whittier, 40; Fawcett, E. A., To a Literary Pop, 89; Hayne, W. H., Literary Iconoclast, 153; Place au Romain, 89; Scollard, C., Ad Musam, 56; Smith, J. O., Poetic Voices, 72; Williams, F. H., To Keats, 24
Poetry, in education, 108; modern, 201; recent, 25, 78, 201, 293, 367; religious, 58; scientific temper in, 302, 353
Poets and Poetry of America, Lavante, 205
Poet's Selection of poems, 215
Poison Problem, Oswald, 71
Poker, Keller, 135
Political Science Quarterly, 215
Pomp, Charm of, 248
Pond, J. B., in England with Beecher, 188
Poole, M. L., Vacation in a Buggy, 320
Poole, A. P. S., 61
Pope Leo XIII., Memoirs, 149
Popular Tales and Sketches, Clouston, 325
Porter, E. G., Rambles in Old Boston, 147
Porter, R., Literary Salad, 39
Post-Laureate Idylls, Adams, 25
Pott & Co., 328
Powell, E. P., Our Heredity from God, 257
Power of Darkness, Tolstoi, 427
Powers, H. N., Ten Years of Song, 368
Præterita, see Ruskin, 363
Prayer-Book, Manual, Hale, 432
Prayer-Meetings, Y. P., Clark, 366
Prayers from Plymouth Pulpit, Beecher, 121
President's Lives of, Stoddard, 122, 385
Preston, D. S., Columbus, 284
Preston, H. W., Year in Eden, 19, 39, 40
Preston, M. J., 158; Colonial Ballads, 183; For Love's Sake, 26; Handful of Monographs, 86
Price-List, McClurg, 369
Prince, J. T., Course and Methods, 183
Prince of Flaming Star, Farmer, 74
Prince Little Boy, Mitchell, 426
Prince of Naphtali, 76, 92
Prince Peerless, Collier, 119
Princess Casamassima, James, 5, 39
Princess of Java, Higginson, 315
Printing, History of, Hessels, 249
Prisoners of Poverty, Campbell, 170
Prizes for S. S. books, 326
Problems of Philosophy, Alexander, 71
Proctor, R. A., Half Hours with Stars, 459
Professor Johnny, Jak, 185
Promise Kept, Palgrave, 454
Prose Pastoral, Sylvester, 213
Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit, Drysdale, 166
Prudence Winterburn, Doudney, 423
Psychic Studies and Christian Thought, Johnson, 167
Psychological Theory, Bowne, 83
Psychology, Dewey, 39; Ladd, 181; McCosh, 299; and Education, Baldwin, 371
Publishers and Authors, 103, 191
Publishers' Imprints, 84
Publishing House, Indian, 271
Pulpit Treasury, Kelly, 389
Punch, History in, 15
Pure Gold, Cameron, 139
Puritan Lover, Fessenden, 369
Putnam's Sons, 325
Pyle, H., Rose of Paradise, 369; Wonder Clock, 425
QUAKER'S PIONEER, Hallowell, 57
Quarterly Review, 47, 271
Queen of Meadow, Mack, 423
Queens, Famous, Farmer, 329
Question of Identity, 27
Questions, Queer, Oliphant, 105
Quiles, J. B., Startling Exploits of Cell-ero, 120
RABELAIS, Three Giants of, Dimitry, 428
Ragazin, Z. A., Assyria, 262
- Railway Practice, Alexander, 42
Ran Away from Dutch, Perelaer, 365
Randall-Diehl, Elocutionary Studies, 488
Randolph, Fifty Years of English Song, 488
Random Recollections, Stanton, 182
Ranke and Method, 78
Rankin, J. E., Poems, 268
Raphael, Muntz, 487
Rawlinson, O., Egypt, 150
Raymond, G. L., Ballads of Revolution, 202; Poems, 268
Reading, Adventures of, 353; Memoir, 147
Readers, Historical, Gilman, 279
Reading, Johnson on, 302
Realf, R., 302
Realism, German, 86; Philosophical, 27
Reber, F. von, Medieval Art, 102
Recent Past, Wilmer, 350
Recollections, 433
Recollections of Minister to France, Washburne, 430
Recollections of Private Soldier, Wilkin-son, 69
Red Spider, Baring-Gould, 284
Redpath, J., 61
Rees, J. R., Diversions of Book-Worm, 74
Reese, L. W., Branch of May, 283
Reeves, J., Rothschilds, 204
Reform, Andrews, 329
Reid, C., Miss Churchill, 102
Reid M., Land of Fire, 101
Reynolds-Winslow, C. M., Yesterdays with Actors, 231
Religion, the good are of one, 130
Religious Progress, 13
Remusat, Mme. de, 255
Renaissance in Italy, Symonds, 195
Republic of Future, Dodd, 300
Revelation, Commentary, Düsterdieck, 122; Warren, 23
Revival of 18th Century, Overton, 27
Revolution in Tanner's Lane, Rutherford, 369
Rexford, F. R., Brother and Lover, 26
Rhetoric, Genung, 300
Richardson, C. F., American Literature, 6
Riddell, J. H., Miss Gascoigne, 298
Riddle, A. G., Life of Wade, 41
Riding, W. H., Boyhood of Authors, 422
Ridgway, R., Birds of North America, 329
Riel, L., Blood of Abel, 348
Riley, A., Athos, 449
Rip Van Winkle, illus., 27
Risla's Daughter, Green, 86
Roba di Roma, Story, 325
Roberts Brothers, 164
Roberts, C. G. D., In Divers Tones, 164
Roberts, D., Two Royal Lives, 186
Roberts, E. H., New York, 140
Roberts, M., Western Avenues, 302
Robinson, A. M. F., Letter from Eng-land, 184; Margaret of Angoulême, 102
Robinson, E., Forest Acquaintances, 423
Robinson Crusoe, 423
Rodenbough, T. F., Uncle Sam's Medal of Honor, 119
Roe, E. P., 138; Hornet's Nest, 187
Roger Camerden, 139
Roland, Blake, 55
Roland, Song of, 15
Roife, W. J., Poetical Works of Scott, 487
Roife, W. J., 222; portrait, 265; Brown-ing's Dramas, 243; English Classics, 30; Milton's Minor Poems, 329
Scott's Lay of Last Minstrel, 86; Tennyson's Poems, 156
Rollins, A. W., Three Tetons, 261
Roman Provinces, Mommsen, 117
Romance of Canones, Heyse, 330
Romance of Poor Young Man, Feuille, 202
Romance of the Unexpected, Foster, 202
Romantic Love and Personal Beauty, Finck, 277
Rome, Day in, Shumway, 134
Romeo and Juliet, illustrated, 455
Roosevelt, T., Life of Benton, 74
Rosenkranz, J. K. F., Philosophy of Edu-cation, 140
Rose, C., Silent Workman, 196
Rose, W., Voice Culture, 488
Rossett, D. G., 151; Dante and Circle, 168; Life, Knight, 219; Poems, 71
Roth, R., Still Hours, 7
Rothschilds, Reeves, 204
Roundabout to Moscow, Bouton, 164
Rousset, A., Forest Waters Farm, 453
Routledge & Sons, 326
Row, C., Christian Evidences, 39
Future Retribution, 292
Royal Girls and Courts, Sherwood, 453
Royce, J., Fend of Oakfield Creek, 155
Rural Hours, Cooper, 156
Ruskin, J., 280; on best 100 books, 215; Præterita, 166
Russell, W. C., 93; Golden Hope, 102
Russia, Dole's lectures, 280
Russia, Literature of, 1887, 421
Russian books in France, 31
Russian Church, Heard, 299; Lyrics, Wilson, 388; Novellists, Vogüé, 372; novels, 47; Refugee, Wilson, 253
Rutherford, M., Revolution in Tanner's Lane, 369
- SABINA ZEMBA, Black, 167, 168
Saint Michael, Werner, 169
St. Paul's Problem, Huntington, 426
Salem, 270; Slabbe, 103
Saltus, E. V. E., sketch, 347; Anatomy of Negation, 103; Mr. Incoul's Mis-adventure, 347
Samuels, S., From Forecastle to Cabin, 115
Sand G., Country of, 93; Lilies of Flo-rence, 202
Sanders, L. C., Celebrities of the Cen-tury, 228
Santa Croce, 389
Saone, Hamerton, 451
Sappho, Wharton, 205
Saracens, Gilman, 205
Saracinesca, Crawford, 165, 167
Saracota Chips, Sheppard, 220
Sardello, 62
- Savage, M. J., My Creed, 219; These De-generate Days, 140
Sayings of Great Men, Bent, 487
Scandinavian Studies in U. S., 174
Scannell, F., in Time of Roses, 119
Scapra, 296
Scatrazzini, Handbook to Dante, 131
Schaef, P., and S. M. Jackson, Encyclo-pædia of Divines and Christian Workers, 273
Scheherazade, Warden, 341
School books, 305
Schoolroom Friend, Warman, 185
Schurman, J. G., Darwinism, 457
Science (mag.), 44
Science, and Immortality, 459; and morals, 15; Science of Thought, Müller, 431
Scollard, C., 125; Ad Musam, 56; with Reed and Lyre, 25
Scotland, Argyll, 121; Queens of Kauf-man, 454
Scott, the Poetical Works of, Rolfe, 487
Scott, W., Bridal of Fiermain, 428; Lay of Last Minstrel, 86
Scottish Poetry, Nature in, Veitch, 249
Scottish Pulpit, Taylor, 461
Scottish Review, 47
Scribner's Magazine, 44, 75, 106, 142, 168, 204, 221, 249, 285, 329, 390, 462, 173, 326
Scribner's Sons, 173, 326
Scudder, H. E., Men and Letters, 456
Scythe and Sword, Auringer, 202
Sea-Spray, Benjamin, 345
Sebastopol, Tolstoi, 234
Second Corps, Walker, 36
Secret of the Sea, Matthews, 27
Seine, Boat Life on, Daudet, 119, 415
Seis, J. A., Children of Silence, 370
Self, 250
Self-Revelation of God, Harris, 67
Selling, J. P., 104
Sentiment, Decay of, 223
Sentimental Calendar, 369
Serbat, A. R., Method in Education, 263
Sergeant, A., Jacobi's Wife, 269
Sermons, 73, 154, 167, 185, 219, 247, 279, 329, 351
Seth's Brother's Wife, Frederic, 400
Seven to Twelve, Green, 186
Sever, J., Gilmore, 126, 198
Seigneur, Mme. de, 62
Sewage, Tidy, 254
Seybert Commission, Report, 278
Shah Námeh, Firdausi, 13
Shakespeare, W., romance in time of, 78; Was he Shapleigh? Winsor, 269
Shakespeare's Confession, Is it? Browne, 317
Shakespeareana (W. J. Rolfe): Actors' names, 43; Analysis of plays, 91; Anne Hathaway, 28, 42; Bacon and S., 372; Beaumont & Fletcher, 462; Calendar, 455; Chicago's Bos-ton, 106; Concordances, 60, 237; Cowden-Clarke, M., 107; Cymbeline, 141; Daniel come to judgment, 124; Donnelly cipher, 390; Editions, Caswell, 463; First folio, 533; Illustrated, 28; Irving, 461; Poet, 26; Victoria, 206, 238; Elizabethan English, 43; Female Characters, Martin, 42; Furnivall, F. J., on Verse-texts, 221; Greek Mythology and S.'s name, 463; Hamlet, 29, 142; Henry IV, 43, 418; Hugo on S., 24; Human Life in S., Giles, 390; Incongruities, 189; Insomnias of S., Heard, 106; Irving H., at Stratford, 390; Later style of S., 124; Lexicon, Schmidt, 60, 76; Library at Stratford, 172, 189; Lincoln's S., 141; Line notation, 172, 236; Lowell on Richard III, 75; Marlowe, 141; Massinger, 189; Merchant of Venice, 60, 91; Merrill Series, 141, 189, 222, 372, 462; Middleton, 222; Morgan, A., Verse-texts, 221, 238; Old English reading, cheap, 205; Olipphant's New English, 157; Outlines, Halliwell-Phillips, 238; Passionate Pilgrim, 42; Patines, 91; Pears, 172; Pronouncing Vocabulary, 463; Prophet not without honor, 189; Rarities at Hollingsbury house, H.-Phillips, 389; Reference canon, 157; Rialto, 91; Richard III, 75; Rolfe, W. J., 60; Scenes and Characters, 28; Scotland, Did S. visit? 13; Shakespeareana (mag.), 75, 463; Shapleigh entangle-ment, 141; Sink, 43; Society, N. Y., 60, 77, 107, 157, 206; Sonnet to S., 463; Sonnets, 107, 248; Stratford, matters at, 372; Taming of Shrew, 238; Tours of S.'s Company, H.-Phillips, 390; Verses-texts, 221, 238; Wit, Wisdom, and Beauties of S., Ward, 372; S. for Woman, 124
Shall Not of Bible, 429
Shaving of Shagpat, Meredith, 258
Shaybaks in Camp, Barrows, 227
She was—what a woman should be, 190
Shelley, P. B., 15, 47, 108, 159, 255; concordance, 45; Life, Dowden, 7, 19, 23; Poem on, Carman, 8
Sheppard, N., Before an Audience, 74; Saratoga Chips, 220
Sheldans, Fitzgerald, 151
Sherman, F. D., 92; Madrigals and Catches, 202
Sherman, J., Library, 261
Sherwood, Mrs. J., 120; Manners and Social Usages, 204
Sherwood, M. E. W., Royal Girls, 453
Shillaber, L., Cook-Book, 279
Shumway, E. S., Day in Rome, 134
Schurz, C., Life of Clay, 171
Siam, Cort, 87
Siberia, Dostoevsky, 350
Sidney, P., Symonds, 35, 55
Signal Success, Coston, 3
Sigrid, Thorodden, 169
Silence of Deau Maitland, 186
Silent Workman, Ross, 254
Siller, F., 7
Slabbe, M. C., Salem, 103
Sinnott, A. P., Karma, 73
Sleeping World, Fearing, 201
Smile of Ocean, 190

Smith, F. H., Well-Worn Roads , 389	TABLEAUX, Weld, 74	Twelve Times One, Lathbury, 424	Welsh, A. H., English Masterpiece , 430
Smith, J. O., Poetic Voices , 72; Professional Fool in Literature , 347	Tablet, Cebes, Parsons, 123	Twentieth Century, 168	Werner, E., Saint Michael , 169
Smyth, J. K., Footprints of Saviour , 13	Talbot, C. E., Midshipman at Large , 453	Twilight Thoughts, Claude, 213	West, J. H., Uplifts of Heart and Will , 360
Smyth, N., Morality of Old Testament , 13	Tales Before Supper, Gautier, and Merimee, 289	Two Brothers, Balzac, 182	West, J. H., Making of Drake , 387
Social Law of Mutual Help, Huntington, 122	Tartarin, Daudet, 415	Two Gentlemen of Boston, Fawcett, 182	Westall, W., Fair Crusader , 341
Social Studies, Newton, 71	Taxes, Jones, 371	Two Gentlemen of Gotham, 188	Westbury, H., Frederick Hazzledon , 341
Socialism, Brown, 105	Taylor, B. F., Poems , 26; Theophilus Trent , 300	Two Royal Lives, Roberts, 427	Western Avenues, Roberts, 215
Society Verse, Pierson, 284	Taylor, E. T., 62	Tymms, T. V., Mystery of God , 187	Westminster Abbey, Memorials of, A. P. Stanley, 487
Sociology, Bascom, 102	Taylor, W. M., Parables , 28; Scottish Pulpit , 461	URLAND, L., 152; Poems , 424	Westminster Review, 78, 222, 254, 302
Soldier's Ward, Gerdes, 386	Texas, Jones, 285	Ulysses, On Track of, Stillman, 453	What to Do, Tolstol, 315
Solomon, Cheyne, 289	Tempest Driven, Dowling, 248	Uncle Sam's Medal of Honor, Rodenbough, 285	Wheatley, H. B., Dedication of Books , 153
Some of Our Fellows, Mellington, 454	Temple Bar, 301	Under the Storm, Yonge, 349	Wheelwright, J. T., Child of Century , 138
Some Things Aboard, McKenzie, 459	Ten Dollars Enough, Owen, 13	Underwoods, Stevenson, 280, 367	Whipple, E. F., 167; American Literature , 170
Song of the Bell, Schiller, 454	Tenny, Mrs. S., Pictures and Stories of Animals , 74	Unfortunate Woman, Turgeneff, 35	Whist Players' Puzzles, 15
Song of a River, Kingsley, 421	Tennyson, A., Enoch Arden , 421; Influence , 40; Locksley Hall , 8, 23, 25, 39; Lyrical Poems , Falgrave, 23; and posthumous , 47; Poems , Hand Volume edition, 428; Poems , Rolfe, 156	United States History, one volume, 29	White, A. D., Comets , 299
Songs of Mexican Seas, Miller, 367; of War for Union, Bevan, 283	Teresa Itasca, MacAlpine, 139	United States of America, Literature of, 1897, 485	White Cockades, Stevenson, 387
Sonnets of the Century, of Europe, 368	Terrible Legacy, Appleton, 251	Universities, Rise of, Laurie, 65	White, Stokes & Allen, 158
Sonnets in Shadow, Bates, 192	Thackeray's Letters, 71, 108, 223, 271, 302; volume, 384; works, pocket edition, 220	University, development of, 302	Whiting, L., 216
Sons and Daughters, 53	That Child, 219	Unknown Country, Mulock-Craig, 361	Whitman, W., 40, 45; on Lincoln, 46; Society, 214
Sorosis, 120	That Other Person, Hunt, 139	Uplifts of Heart and Will, West, 300	Whitney, A. D. T., Daffodils , 202; Home-spun Yarns , 11; Panics , 135
South America, Vincent, 254	That Winter Night, 129	Urbanitzky, Electricity, 12	Whittaker, T., 327
Southern Hivotac, 136	Theatrical Literature, Lowe, 271	Usselin, W., Jameson, 204	Whittier, J. G., 15; birthday, 455; Verses to Cole, 40
Southern literature, 143, 200	Their Pilgrimage, Warner, 342	VACATION IN A BUGGY, Pool, 349	Whittier's 80th Birthday, 488
Spain, Literature of, 1887, 483	Theism, Bowne, 370	Vandenberg, A., Hungary, 58	Who is John Noman? Beckett, 219
Spanish Idioms, 205; Phrase-Book, 433	Thekla, Armstrong, 255	Van Bibber, T. E., The Holy Child , 488	Whole Truth, Chadwick, 135
Speakers, 369	Theocritus in Sicily, 296	Vanderbilt, M., Ways and Means, 139	Wide World, Warner, 382
Speculator in Petticoats, Malot, 364	Theological Lectures, Hodge, 296	Vanderpoole, L., 92, 132	Wild Ride, 346
Spencer, G. E., Calamity Jane , 170	Theophilus Trent, Taylor, 300	Van Dyck, J. C., Principles of Art , 105	Wilhelmine, of Baireuth, 227, 285, 329
Spencer, H., Evolution , 388	These Degenerate Days, Savage, 140	Vane, H., Hosmer , 46	Wilkeson, F. H., Recollections of Soldier , 69
Spencer, J. A., Five Last Things , 277	Thomas, J., Cannibals and Convicts , 6	Varley, J. P., 136	Williams, F. H., To Kents , 24
Spooford, H. P., Ballads about Authors , 415	Thompson, M., Banker of Bankersville , 233	Vasili, F., 46	Williams, J. L., Land of Sleepy Hollow , 452
Sprague, R. M., Gay Day for Seven , 424	169; on Howells, 281; on Tolstol, 265, 380	Venus of Melos, Stillman, 453	Williams, M. E., Bumble Romance , 263
Springhaven, Blackmore, 195	Thomson, J., 29	Verona Nevill, Cameron, 119	Wilmer, R. H., Recent Past , 350
Spyri, J., Grilli's Children , 454; Veronica , 119	Thorne, W. H., Modern Idols , 189	Victoria, Life, Tullock, 388; Reign, 7	Wilson, H. R., Russian Refugee , 253
Squire of Sandal-Wide, Barr, 73	Thoroddson, J. T., Sigrid , 421	Victorian Half Century, Yonge, 250	Wilson, J. H., China , 243
Stall, S., Church Work , 300	Thorpe, R. H., Ringling Ballads , 385	Victorian jubilee, 249	Windsor Castle, Loftie, 211
Stanley, A. P., Memorials of Westminster Abbey , 487	Thoughts, Panin, 205	Victorian Poets, Stedman, 383	Wingfield, L., Lovely Wang , 155
Stanley Huntington, Wilson, 121	Thraldom, Sturgis, 298	Village Maid, Hays, 349	Winslow, W. C., Egyptian Explorations , 184
Stanton, H. B., Random Recollections , 182	Three Good Giants, Dimitry, 428	Village Photographs, Larned, 254	Winsor, J., History of America , 294; Was Shakespeare Shapleigh? 267
Stars, How to tell, Proctor, 459	Three Tetrans, Rollins, 261	Vincent, F., on South American travel, 254	Winter, J. S., Driver Dallas , 460
Steam Engine, Marks, 388	Three Vassar Girls at Home, Champney, 424	Vincent, M. R., Word Studies in New Testament , 295	Winter Memorial Library, 46
Stedman, E. C., Home of 9; Victorian Poets , 383	Through Gates of Gold, 14, 90	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wister, A. L., Werner's St. Michael , 169
Stephens L., Dict. of National Biography , 22, 123, 159, 253	Through Wilderness, Currier, 421	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	With Hooks of Steel, 427
Stephens, H. W., French Revolution , 51	Thucydides, Morris and Smith, 220	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	With Reed and Lyre, Scollard, 25
Stevens, B. F., Index to American documents , 45	Thwing, C. F. and C. F. B., Family , 327	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wolf, J., Indian Wheat Trade , 89
Stevens, T., Around World on Bicycle , 186	Tidy, G. M., Sewage , 101	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wolf, U., 89
Stevenson, E. I., White Cockades , 387	Tilley, W. J., Masters of Situation , 101	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Woman's World, 462
Stevenson, R. I., Kidnapped , 72; Merry Men , 85, 103; Studies of Men and Books , 178; Underwoods , 280, 367	Titus, American, 118	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Women, in Cambridge examinations, 248; Contemporary, 152; Pen Portraits, Cone and Glider, 388
Stewart, A., Tale of Troy , 123	To Call Her Mine, Besant, 389	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wonder Clock, Fyle, 425
Stewart, A. T., collection, catalogue , 46	Todd, C. B., Two Poets' Homes , 9	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wood, H. T., Natural Law in Business , 170
Still Hours, Rothe, 7	Tolerance, Brooks, 187	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wood, H. T., Illustrating Books , 160
Stillman, W. J., On Track of Ulysses , 453	Tolstol, L. N., 30, 71; Cossacks , 349; a Crank? 264; Howells , on 233; Invasion , 349; Ivan Ilyitch , 229; My Confession , 266; in periodicals , 47, 191, 223; portrait , 261, 246; Power of Darkness , 297; Sebastopol , 234; Thompson , on 233, 265, 280; What to Do , 315; Works , 54, 239, 321	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wood, Mrs. H., 77; East Lynne , 119
Stinde, J., Hutchins Family , 288; Woodland Tales , 186	Tom Tiddler's Ground, Marryat, 23	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Woodland Tales, Stinde, 186
Stockbridge, J. C., Catalogue of Harris Collection , 24	Tony the Maid, Howard, 461	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Woodlands, Hardy, 135, 149, 182, 184
Stockton, F. R., Bee-Man , 347; Hundredth Man , 382; Stories , 13	Tourgee, A. W., Button's Inn , 291	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Woolley, C. P., Love and Theology , 389
Stoddard, W. O., Lives of Presidents , 122, 389	Towie, G. M., Ireland , 101; Nation in Nuthell , 123	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Woolridge, C. W., Missing Sense , 436
Stoic Terminology in Roman Law , 122, 389	Townsend, G. A., Katy of Catoclin , 19	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Word Studies in New Testament, Vincent, 295
Stokes, A. C., Microscopy , 47	Townsend, V. F., Life of Washington , 488	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Words, Fortunes of, Garlanda, 291
Stokes & Brother, 326	Trade Organizations in Politics, Miller, 299	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wordsworth, D., Lee, 54
Stone, J. S., Heart of Merrie England , 364	Tragedy of Brinkwater, Moody, 169	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Working Girls, Stories for, 427
Storer, F. H., Agriculture and Chemistry , 133	Tragic Mystery, Hawthorne, 235	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	World as We Saw It, Little, 167
Storied Holidays, Brooks, 454	Tramp Trip, Meriwether, 46, 67	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	World's good things, 385
Stories of Far West, Heermans, 244	Trans-Allegheny Pioneer Hall, 388	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	World's Workers, 239
Stories, short, 47	Travel, American vs. European, 284	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wormley, K. P., 186
Story, W. W., Roba di Roma , 58	Travel, How to, Knox, 107	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Worth Winning, Cameron, 186
Story of N. Y. House, Bunner, 179	Traveler's True Tale, 171	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wright, H. C., Stories of American Progress , 11
Story of Our Lord, Youngusband, 488	Tre, Pol, and Pen, 427, 455	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wright, W. B., Sermons , 351
Story of the Four, Haweis, 38	Treasure Lost, 427	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Writer, The, 32
Story, two ways of telling, 47	Treasures by the Wayside, 455	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Writing and Speech-making, Higginson, 222
Street, J. C., Hidden Way , 269	Trent, Council of, Fra Paolo, 173	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319	Wyeth, M. E. C., 222
Streeton, H., Only Son , 461	Trial of Gideon, Hawthorne, 41	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Strickland, A., Mary Stuart , 12	Trollope, H. M., My Own Love Story , 248	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Strike in B. Mill, 139, 168	Trotter, A. M., Bledisloe , 460	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Studio, 77	Trowbridge, J. T., His One Fault , 74	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sturgis, J., Dick's Wandering , 252; Thraldom , 298	Troy, Tale of , Stewart, 123	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sturtevant, J. M., 45	Tuckerman, A. L., History of Architecture , 351	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Suckling, J., Poems , 284	Tudors, Early, Moberley, 105	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Summer School of History and Romance, 232	Tullock, J., Sundays at Balmoral , 370	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Summer in Oldport Harbor, Metcalf, 252	Tipper, M. F., 40	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sunday Reading, 426	Turgeneff, I., Assya ; Unfortunate Woman , 35	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sundays at Balmoral, Tullock, 370	Turgeon's Briefs, 389	Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sunny Childhood, Barker, 424		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sunny Side of Shadow, Benjamin, 205		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sweden, Literature of, 1887, 483		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Swinburne, A. C., Select Poems , 329		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sylvester, H. M., Prose Pastorals , 13		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Sylvie, Nerval, 13		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Symonds, J. A., Renaissance in Italy , 195; Life of Sidney , 35, 55		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Symons, A., Introduction to Browning , 39		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319
Synonyms, Whateley, 105		Vine out of Egypt, Newton, 319

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 1. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 314. Publishers.

BOSTON, JANUARY 8, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

BEGIN THE NEW YEAR BY SUB-SCRIBING TO

Scribner's Magazine.

Published Monthly. With Illustrations.

$3.00 A YEAR. 25 CENTS A NUMBER.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE aims to give its readers general literature of lasting value and interest. Each number is fully and handsomely illustrated by the work of the leading artists reproduced by the best known methods. The pictures will be in the best sense illustrative of the text.

The first (January) number was published on December 15. The edition of 100,000 copies was exhausted on the day of publication. Second and third editions were put to press at once, and the sale of the first issue has now reached 140,000 copies.

From the New York Sun:

If ever a magazine was started with a place ready and waiting for it, the new SCRIBNER'S has that good luck. The name is a letter of recommendation to friendship and respect. The cover is an invitation to closer acquaintance. The table of contents is a revelation of character and intelligence. The first number is welcomed before it is read, and when it is read it takes its place easily and at once among the things that justify their own existence and need no probation before being fully and finally accepted. The individuality of the handsome new magazine is distinct. It is an imitation of none of its contemporaries, and is on a level with the best of them, both in the merit of its general scheme, and in the details of workmanship. This, we believe, will be the verdict of the intelligent reading public of the new SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

Address

Charles Scribner's Sons,

PUBLISHERS,

743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

Containing Standard Works of European Literature, English and Foreign, in the English Language, on

History,	Theology,	Biography,
Poetry,	Art,	Archæology,
Philosophy,	Fiction.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, etc. $1.40 or $2.00 per volume (with exceptions). Complete sets in 677 volumes at special prices, on application.

The following works are recommended to those who are forming public or private libraries. The volumes are sold separately:

Addison's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Bacon's Essays, Moral and Philosophical Works, 2 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Boswell's Life of Johnson and Tour in the Hebrides, etc. (NAPIER), 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Burke's Works and Life, 8 vols., $1.40 each.
Burns's Life. By LOCKHART, $1.40 each.
Cervante's Don Quixote, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Chaucer's Works (PROF. SKELTON), 4 vols., $1.40 each.
Coleridge's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Defoe's Works, 7 vols., $1.40 each.
Gibbon's Roman Empire, 7 vols., $1.40 each.
Goethe's Works, 14 vols., $1.40 each.
Goldsmith's Works, 5 vols., $1.40 each.
Hansli's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Lamartine's Works, 8 vols., $1.40 each.
Lessing's Laocoon, etc., $1.40.
Lessing's Dramatic Works, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Milton's Prose Works, 5 vols., $1.40 each.
Moliere's Dramatic Works, 3 vols., $1.40 each.
Plutarch's Lives (new translation by LONE and STUART), 4 vols., $1.40 each.
Schiller's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Vasari's Lives of Painters (with new appendix by Dr. Richter), 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Burney's (Mme. D'Arbly's) Cecilia, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Burney's (Mme. D'Arbly's) Evellina, $1.40.
Fielding's Novels, 4 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Petrarch's Sonnets, $2.00.
Mansoni's Betrothed (I promessi Sposi), $2.00.
Pepys's Diary, 4 vols., $2.00 each.
Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, $2.00 each.
Spinoza's Chief Works, 2 vols., $2.00 each.
Humboldt's Cosmos and Travels, 2 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Staunton's Works on Chess, 4 vols., $2.00 and $2.40 each.
Gilbart on Banking, 2 vols., $2.00 each.
Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, eleven parts, $1.40 and $2.00 each.

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock, also of Bohn's Libraries, will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

THE NEW AMPHION.

Being the Book of the Edinburgh University Union 'ancy Fair, in which are contained sundry artistic, instructive and diverting matters, all now made public for the first time. Illustrated, 16mo, vellum, $2.00.

* Containing original pieces by Robert Browning, John Stuart Blackie, Andrew Lang, R. L. Stevenson and others.

"CAVENDISH ON WHIST."

The Laws and Principles of Whist stated and explained, and its practice illustrated on an original system by means of hands played completely through. By "CAVENDISH." 16th edition, with an appendix on American Leads and the Plain Suit Echo. Printed in color. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

FROM MOZART TO MARIO:

RECOLLECTIONS OF HALF A CENTURY.

Auber, Rossini, Verdi, Meyerbeer, Fantina-Corbelli, Chopin, Schumann, Mozart, Wagner, Paganini, Thalberg, Patti, Nilsson, Mario. By LOUIS ERNST. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"No such book of musical recollections has appeared in our time."—World.

ROMANTIC SPAIN:

A Record of Personal Experiences. By J. A. O'SHEA. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $3.40.

THE GROWTH OF FREEDOM IN THE BALKAN PENINSULA.

Notes of a Traveller in Montenegro, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria and Greece, with Historical and Descriptive Sketches of the People. By JAMES GEORGE COTTON MINCHIE. With a map, crown 8vo, cloth, $4.20.

THE MINISTRY OF FINE ART TO THE HAPPINESS OF LIFE.

By T. GAMBIER PARRY, M.A. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

CONTENTS: Purpose and Practice of Fine Art; Ministry of Fine Art to Common Life and to Spiritual Life; Ministry of Color to Sculpture and Architecture; History of Mosaic, Ancient and Christian; Art and Artists of Glass Painting, Ancient and Medieval; Adornment of Sacred Buildings; Art in Archaeology; Builders and Buildings of the Cathedral at Gloucester.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY For 1887.

The POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY contains articles by well-known writers on all subjects of practical interest. Its range of topics, which is widening with the advance of science, includes:

Political Science and Government.

Domestic and Social Economy. Education.

Religion as it is related to Science.

Ethics, based on Scientific Principles.

Sanitary Conditions; Hygiene; the Prevention of Disease.

Architecture and Art in connection with Practical Life.

The Development of the Race.

Food-products and Agriculture.

Natural History; Scientific Exploration.

Discovery; Experimental Science.

The Practical Arts.

The Science of Living.

It contains Illustrated Articles; Portraits; Biographical Sketches.

It records the advance made in every branch of science.

It is not technical; it is intended for non-scientific as well as scientific readers, for all persons of intelligence.

No magazine in the world contains papers of a more instructive, and at the same time of a more interesting, character.

TERMS:

$5.00 per annum; single numbers, 50 cents each.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

LIBER AMORIS

A Metrical Romance of the Middle Ages. By HENRY BERNARD CARPENTER. Gilt top and rough edges. $1.75.

"Unusual poetic skill and power, rare scholarship."— Transcript.

"Full of high and sustained eloquence."—Woman's Journal.

"Picturesque and charming."—Post.

"A high purpose and a noble poem."—Pilot.

"A notable and lovely poem."—Advertiser.

"The story is very beautiful, and it is beautifully told. . .
A noble addition to our genuine poetry."—Courier.

"A poem of lofty conception, of beautiful imagery, of a power seldom known in modern verse."—Traveller.

"It is full of sweetness and light, and studded with rare gems of thought and expression. It is emphatically a great poem."—Herald.

"A new and wonderful poem, abounding with poetic art, full of opulent imagery, strong and deep emotion, and penetrating thought. It combines a story of great interest with descriptions of events and scenes that overflow with vivid color and romantic charm. . . A work so charged with faith, hope, belief in immortal love, and written with such exuberant beauty of romance, such joy in existence and such remarkable command of verbal music. Had Tennyson or Browning written it, the work would need no introduction. As it is, it ought to take a high place. It is quite as exceptional a poem as Edwin Arnold's 'Light of Asia.'"—George Parsons Lathrop, in N. Y. Star.

* For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, post free, on receipt of price, by

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

WANTED.

Position on Newspaper or Periodical as Book Reviewer or Literary Editor. Address, CRITIC,
85 Prospect Street, Cambridgeport, Mass.

Standard Books for the Holidays.

CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN.

Choice Literature, Full Notes, Large Type,
Good Paper, Firm Binding, Low Prices.

Twenty-one volumes now ready, including Andersen's
Fairy Tales, Esop's Fables, Robinson Crusoe, Swiss Family
Robinson, Scott's Lady of the Lake, Tales of a Grandfather, Quentin Durward, etc., Johnson's Rasselas, Gulliver's Travels, Plutarch's Lives, and others. Prices vary from 25 cents to 75 cents.

Complete editions of Scott's Ivanhoe (60 cents), Guy Mannering (60 cents) and the Talisman (60 cents), in boards.
"Those Dreadful House Boys," by mail, postpaid, $1.00.

A fascinating children's book.
Hudson's Harvard Shakespeare.
Hudson's Life, Art and Characters of Shakespeare.
Hudson's Home and Club Shakespeare.

GINN & CO., 7, 9 and 13 Tremont Place.

RICHARD REALF.

I will soon publish the BIOGRAPHY and COM-PLETE POEMS of the late Col. RICHARD REALF.
The price of the volumes will be $2.00 each. Address
THOMAS D. SUPLEE, CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.

GERMAN SIMPLIFIED.

An eminently practical new method for learning the German language. Edition for self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with Keys), at 10 cents each; school edition (without Keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers.
Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by Prof. A. Knoflach, 140
Nassau Street, New York. Prospectus mailed free.

QUERIES ANSWERED.

Set N. Y. DAILY (Illustrated) GRAPHIC for sale
by A. S. CLARK, 34 Park Row, New York.

OUR HOMES

HOW TO HEAT & VENTILATE THEM.

New Edition of 96 pages, with additional matter, and illustrations of 45 of the finest residences in the country. A complete Manual on the subject of Sanitary Heating and Ventilating, besides giving valuable suggestions to those who are building or furnishing a home. The book is exceedingly artistic, and will be mailed free on receipt of 6 cents in stamps.
SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO., Boston, Mass.

WORCESTER'S Unabridged Quarto DICTIONARY

With Denison's Reference Index for 75 cents additional.

EDITION OF 1887.

ENLARGED

BY THE ADDITION OF

A New Pronouncing
Biographical Dictionary

of nearly 12,000 personages, and

A New Pronouncing
Gazetteer of the World,

noting and locating over 20,000 places.

Containing also

Over 12,500 New Words, recently added, together with

A Table of 5,000 Words in General Use, with their Synonyms.

THE NEW EDITION OF

Worcester's Dictionary

CONTAINS THOUSANDS OF WORDS NOT TO BE FOUND IN ANY OTHER DICTIONARY.

ILLUSTRATED WITH WOOD-CUTS AND FULL-PAGE PLATES.

The National Standard of American Literature.

Every edition of Longfellow, Holmes, Bryant, Irving,
Whittier, and other eminent American authors, follows
Worcester. "It presents the usage of all great English writers." It is the authority of the leading magazines and newspapers and of the National Departments at Washington.

Oliver Wendell Holmes says:

"Worcester's Dictionary has constantly lain on my table for daily use, and Webster's reposed on my shelves for occasional consultation."

The Recognized Authority on Pronunciation.

Worcester's Dictionary presents the accepted usage of our best public speakers, and has been regarded as the standard by our leading orators, Everett, Sumner, Phillips, Garfield, Hillard and others. Most clergymen and lawyers use Worcester as authority on pronunciation.

From Hon. Chas. Sumner.

"The best authority."

From Hon. Edward Everett.

"His orthography and pronunciation represent, as far as I am aware, the most approved usage of our language."

From James A. Garfield,

Late President of the United States.

"I most cordially recommend Worcester's Dictionary as the most reliable standard authority of the English language as it is now written and spoken."

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,

715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

Sent Free

to any address, a copy of our Annual Holiday Catalogue of Books, at great reductions from retail prices. The largest, most elegant, and the cheapest collection of books offered by any booksellers in America. Save money by sending a postal card at once for a copy, that you may have time to place your order before Christmas.
ESTES & LAURIAT, 301-305 Washington
St., opposite the "Old South," Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JANUARY 8, 1887. No. 1.

CONTENTS.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ROBERT BROWNING . . .	3
MRS. COSTON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY . . .	3
A DANISH CRITIC OF MODERN AUTHORS . . .	3
THE PHILOSOPHY OF WEALTH . . .	4
THE MINISTER'S CHARGE . . .	4
THE PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA . . .	5
SIR FRANCIS DOYLE'S REMINISCENCES . . .	5
RICHARDSON'S AMERICAN LITERATURE . . .	6
CANNIBALS AND CONVICTS . . .	6
PROFESSOR DIMAN'S MEMOIR . . .	10
THEIR PILGRIMAGE . . .	10
MINOR NOTICES:
Rothe's Still Hours . . .	7
Modern Idols . . .	7
Electricity in the Service of Man . . .	12
Lectures and Essays by Clifford . . .	12
A Primer of Michigan History . . .	12
The Dragon, Image, and Demon . . .	12
The Family . . .	12
Etc., Etc., Etc. . .
BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE:
A Flat Iron for a Farthing . . .	11
Conjuror Dick . . .	11
Through the Wilderness . . .	11
Charlie Lucken at School and College . . .	11
Homespun Yarns . . .	11
Children's Stories of American Progress . . .	11
MINOR FICTION:
A Demigod . . .	11
The Sentimental Calendar . . .	11
The Bow of Orange Ribbon . . .	11
Agnes Surriage . . .	12
ENGLISH OPINIONS . . .	7
PARAGRAPHS . . .	8
SHKLELY. A Poem. By Bliss Carman . . .	8
CORRESPONDENCE . . .	8
TWO POETS' HOMES. Steadman's and Albee's. By Charles Burr Todd . . .	8
SHAKSPERIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe: Did Shakespeare Visit Scotland? . . .	13
THE PERIODICALS . . .	14
FOREIGN NOTES . . .	14
NEWS AND NOTES . . .	14
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS . . .	15
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED . . .	15

AN INTRODUCTION TO ROBERT BROWNING.*

THE present "rage" for Browning has called forth of late numerous handbooks and annotated volumes of selections, but we doubt if any of them is the product of a less judicial mind than this Introduction by the Professor of English Literature in Cornell University. Professor Corson will not admit the existence of harshness or ruggedness in Browning's verse; the art is everywhere perfect, while the poet himself is "the completest fulfillment of this equipoise of the intellectual and the spiritual." To an altogether untenable distinction between the intellect and the spirit in poetry Professor Corson devotes his first introductory essay. The value of the distinction may be seen when Chaucer is pronounced in a high degree a poet of the spirit, ranking in the same class with Browning. The most objective and the most subjective of English poets certainly are not thus allied.

Professor Corson's real distinction is between the natural and the classical school in English verse, best represented by Cowper and by Pope. But he wastes many pages in trying to establish his false antithesis between intellect and spirit, while the second essay on the idea of personality in Browning's poetry, is even more ambitious and unsatisfactory than the first. As an introduction, it has the fatal characteristic of being more difficult than the poet's verse.

The other two essays really throw some light upon Browning's obscurities and the peculiarities of his verse; but the most valuable part of the volume is in the arguments to the thirty odd poems prefixed in a body to the poems themselves. The selection, which includes "The Flight of the Duchess," "James Lee's Wife," "Abt Vogler," "Rabbi Ben Ezra," "Saul," and other shorter pieces, is very well made to exhibit Browning's great range. For the beginner it is probably, with the exception of Mr. Rolfe's smaller book, the best selection with notes yet made; we should, however, advise the beginner to take the poems as an introduction to Professor Corson's first two essays, if he reads these latter at all!

MRS. COSTON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.*

THE picture of a beautiful woman, in court dress, with the air of one awaiting homage, confronts the title-page of this book. This is Mrs. Coston, who never, from the laudatory and otherwise singular introduction to the closing chapter, seems to be without the consciousness of her beauty. She was a Miss Patty Hunt of Philadelphia. While a school-girl, in short dresses, she found her "Prince Charming" in the person of the brilliant and talented Benjamin Franklin Coston, age nineteen, and made a clandestine match with him. The giddy pair were forgiven, established in a happy home, and lived happily for a few years, until the sudden death of the husband left the wife a widow at a little past the age of twenty, penniless, with four children to care for. One of the children soon followed his father, and a second not long after. The story of all this romance and these incidents is related from the beginning, with the full complement of surprises, adventures, shocks, and sorrows, and with perfect candor.

Mr. Coston, who was clearly a noble and highly gifted young man, left a box of papers to which, in his last illness, he alluded as of considerable value. Among these papers his widow found a "plan of signals," which, under her skillful business management, were soon made available and became known as the "Coston Signals." Her book becomes largely the history of her experiences with the United States and foreign governments in introducing these signals. She proved a woman as remarkable for her ability and perseverance as for her beauty; everywhere in Europe she received flattering attentions, and her narrative is brilliant with descriptions of court life, and of the distinguished personages, statesmen, and courtiers, men of high rank and of literary distinction, who did her honor, and paid tribute to her personal charms. Her many visits to Europe gave her opportunity to see a great deal of life, and being of a happy temperament, she enjoyed all she saw, making the best even of her discomforts. After fifteen years of life abroad, she says that in many respects Sweden has remained in her memory as the most delightful country she has visited.

Gossipy, but without malice, with a piquant flavor to its egotism, brightened all along by anecdote, this is an entertaining book; and the reader who sets out with the young girl of fourteen, full of admiration at her own loveliness, will be gratified to know at the close that in her present home, "Villa Coston," surrounded by her grandchildren, she is still "young in heart, in health, and the capacity for happiness," and that time has dealt gently with the beauty that has been so captivating.

A DANISH CRITIC OF MODERN AUTHORS.*

IN this series of nine essays or "literary portraits" Dr. Brandes passes in review representative men of no less than six different nationalities, all of them distinctively men of the nineteenth century — men who by natural affinity may be classed as modern minds, who look at things in a modern way, and are wholly modern in their styles of expression. Dr. Brandes's method is uneven, and the satisfaction and profit to be derived from reading these papers vary a good deal with the subject. Some, like those upon Paul Heyse, Hans Christian Andersen, Gustave Flaubert and Paludan-Müller, are elaborate reviews of gesammelte Werke, with the personality of each author lightly sketched, as it were, on an intellectual background; for Dr. Brandes declares that with the exception of Tegnér he speaks of each from personal acquaintance, or at least from a "close view." Other essays, like those upon Renan and Stuart Mill, are fragmentary outlines of individuals, with no attempt at any systematic estimate of productive genius. The chapter upon Renan is merely a collection of not very important reminiscences of chance meetings with the author of the Vie de Jésus; that on Mill is more complete, and on the whole presents an interesting view.

Dr. Brandes is not a critic in whom lightness and grace are prominent traits. He is inclined to formulate theories and to keep to hard and fast lines. He is formal in his expositions and given to abundant quotation. On the other hand he is never controversial. When he has found what he regards as the key to any specified nature—and he is quick to seize upon a leading characteristic and to amplify it—he is always sympathetic and discerning, regardful of the best, liberal in his opinions, charitable to idiosyncrasies. One reads with pleasure all that he writes, and one finds that in the process of reading there is a sensible expansion of the mental horizon. This expansion is not, as is too often the case with critics of the day, the effect of a deftly conjured mirage, but an actual broadening of visual range made possible only by an ascent to greater possibilities of perception.

* An Introduction to the Study of Robert Browning's Poetry. By Hiram Corson, LL. D. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.50.

* A Signal Success. The Work and Travels of Mrs. Martha J. Coston. An Autobiography. J. B. Lippincott Co.

* Eminent Authors of the Nineteenth Century. By Dr. Georg Brandes. Translated by Rasmus B. Anderson. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.00.

Of all these essays that upon Hans Christian Andersen is the most firm in outline, and the most brilliant in tone. The exquisite charm of Andersen's style, its artful simulation of artlessness, its studied spontaneity, are clearly pointed out, and its inspiration and growth are carefully traced. It is admirably said that the source of Andersen's wide and lasting popularity is in his portrayal of the elementary in human nature—the fancies and emotions of childhood expressed in the language of a child. This ability to reduce to the last analysis is the most noteworthy of Dr. Brandes's qualities as a critic. Of Heyse we are told that he follows nature, "not as a naturalist, but as a worshiper of beauty;" and Heyse's essential ideality and optimism could not be summed up more tersely or more truly. Of Mérimée, Dr. Brandes says that he "treated romantic material in an unromantic manner;" but Flaubert "endeavored to elevate his materials through the artistic manner of his treatment, and since in his eyes the most important attribute of authorship was the plastic power, perspicuity was beyond all else what he strove to attain." This of course is said of Flaubert at his best, before "the encyclopædia gradually supplants the emotions." In the essay on Mill we find a clever vignette of Sainte-Beuve, who, as Dr. Brandes views his work, never closed a subject entirely and without reservation; he was never quite catholic, nor quite romantic, nor quite imperial, nor quite a naturalist; one thing alone he was absolutely and entirely—Sainte-Beuve; in other words, the critic with feminine sympathy and ever-lurking skepticism. He was of the tiger race, yet was no tiger. He attached himself thoroughly to no one and to nothing, but he rubbed against everything, and the inevitable friction produced sparks.

We are somewhat weary of finding fault with translations, and this of Professor Anderson's is generally so readable that it ought not to be subjected to serious blame. Perhaps it is enough to say that we occasionally come upon passages which, owing to laxity of form, are not at the first inspection intelligible, and that the punctuation seems to be at times unsystematic and confusing. The illustrations indicate, on the part of the publisher, more enterprise than judgment in the selection of the process by which they were made. But with or without illustrations, and in any fairly adequate version, Dr. Brandes's essays constitute for American readers a book of decided originality and significant merit.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF WEALTH.*

THIS is a book of foundations. It is exactly what its title indicates—not a text-book or treatise on political economy, but a discussion of some of the underlying principles of that science. It is the work of a thinker, who is well read on the subject and takes high and advanced ground. Professor Clark's political economy is certainly not the traditional dry, dreary, "dismal science," but a happy and hopeful one. There are wrongs, to be sure, and trials ahead in the righting of them; but God rules, even in the world of wealth, and justice and truth will surely prevail, and man, capitalist as well as laborer, will be elevated continually, as the great struggle goes on towards the ultimate triumph and reign of right and law.

The writer cuts loose at once from the orthodox foundations of economic science. Not individuality, universal selfishness, but universal brotherhood, is the basis of his philosophy. Everything in all the political and labor movements of the times indicates a revolution in the whole economic structure. The iron despotism of selfishness, greed, and power has long enough borne sway; the dawn of a new era is at hand, based on higher principles of equal rights of labor and capital, of mutual obligations and duties as well as rights, of granting as well as gaining. Competition has been the almighty tyrant hitherto, and in the days of small things, when every man was his own capitalist, employer, workman, sales-agent, all combined, has had its place and done its appropriate work. But those days are forever past, and now, among the great consolidations of capital and the corresponding combinations of labor, its power is gone, and something must take its place. Brute force has largely come in for a time; but we are too far along in a Christian civilization to endure that, or any other relapse towards barbarism, anarchism, or the crude socialism of the times. Arbitration is coming in as the peacemaker between labor and capital; better yet, profit-sharing is to give the laborer the due portion of the gains; best of all, though probably last of all, coöperation is to unite laborer and capitalist in one, so that there can be no strife, and "the law which condemned society, as an organic whole, to a career of brutality will be changed to a law which will open before it a continuous growth in righteousness."

Men are altruistic in their economic action; society is egoistic. Men work for each other; society works for itself. . . . Wealth is the means by which society serves its members.

* The Philosophy of Wealth: Economic Principles Newly Formulated. By John B. Clark, A. M., Professor of History and Political Science in Smith College, Lecturer on Political Economy in Amherst College. Ginn & Co. $1.10.

The key is no longer minor but major in which Mr. Clark puts his philosophy of wealth. Society is organic, a unified body of many members. Individual members may go wrong, and selfishly try to subvert the general good to their own sordid ends; but society is keen-eyed, and in the long run just, and will right those wrongs in spite of individual selfishness. Already what amelioration to the race has society wrought in the face of all selfish opposition, by her stern laws, written and unwritten, in behalf of rights and the right! We have, as yet, but the beginning of what shall be, when a Christian society shall gain full control of all its members, and shall be able, as it will be, to hold all to the grand principles of justice, equality, and universal brotherhood.

We have not space to examine Professor Clark's discussion of wealth, labor, value, distribution, wages, coöperation, etc.; all of these vary more or less radically from the traditional treatment, and have the upward not the earthward look, as we have tried above to indicate. It is commonplace to say that the work ought to be in everybody's hands; but certainly, at a time when the study of economics is so rapidly spreading, it is a work of advanced and stimulating thought with which every teacher of the subject, at any rate, should make himself familiar. The chapter on "The Ethics of Trade" ought to be issued as a tract and laid on every business man's desk in the country; and the chapter on "The Economic Functions of the Church" deserves an equally wide circulation in both church and parish.

THE MINISTER'S CHARGE.*

ARTISTICALLY speaking, there could hardly be a greater contrast in methods than that which is to be observed in a comparison of Mr. James's Princess Casamassima with Mr. Howells's Minister's Charge. Both books treat, in the main, of life on the lower planes of existence, but in how different a manner! Mr. James, a careful, almost an intuitive, observer, holds himself, as it were, above the little circle of men and women whose psychological traits he lays bare and studies with the elaborate patience of scientific research, and yet he keeps inevitably an even balance of values, and gives to each personage, to each motive and action, to each colloquial utterance, a definitely assigned place. Mr. Howells, on the other hand, makes himself the companion and intimate of his characters; he sketches their habitat with pitiless fidelity; he reproduces their speech with marvelous skill; and thus he succeeds in imparting to his pages an aspect of realism which is said to be the despair of his contemporaries. In all this he is delightfully human, and the vitality and warmth of color imparted to his pages have a peculiar charm.

* The Minister's Charge; or, The Apprenticeship of Lemuel Barker. By William D. Howells. Ticknor & Co. $1.50.

In his story of Lemuel Barker Mr. Howells has pushed his method of free and easy realism to the farthest limits, and, given the material, one could not ask that it should be used in a more entertaining way. Lemuel and 'Manda Grier and Statira Dudley form an amusing trio, but it is a question whether there is not too much of them. In real life we do not find them such potent sources of delight, and even in Mr. Howells's hands they sometimes fail to awaken sympathetic emotions. Notwithstanding the sermonic earnestness of the morbidly conscientious Sewell, we miss from the book the high moral purpose which made Silas Lapham a masterpiece of character-sketching. After all, in the passion for companionship with varied types of humanity, is it not possible to get too near, and thus to lose almost entirely the sense of perspective?

In The Minister's Charge it seems to us that there is an almost fatal lack of perception of relative values. The vision is narrowed for the time being to a very small field, and the general result partakes of the nature of a panorama. The book is in a degree amusing (how otherwise?) and in a certain way instructive; but it is never edifying or stimulating. It is not a book that will bear a second reading. We are ready to admit the democratic principle in fiction; we believe that no phase of life is too common, too rude, or too vulgar to be seriously considered by the novelist, but it should be considered in definite relation to something else. Mr. Howells, in The Minister's Charge, is more than democratic—he is anarchical. He emphasizes the trivial at the expense of the important. It is all very well to hold that the writer of fiction ought to represent as nearly as possible life as he sees it—but everything depends on the visual range of the seer! If Mr. Howells has in truth become deliberately myopic in his study of the phenomena of existence, he cannot expect us to attach the same value to his observations that we do to those of one who looks upon life from a more elevated position and sees more.

THE PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA.*

IT is safe to say that Mr. James has never given us stronger work than he has put into this story of The Princess Casamassima. There is more flesh and blood in it than one finds in any of his foregoing novels, with the possible exception of Roderick Hudson; and the field is broader, the characters are more diversified, the central theme is more clearly defined, than one is wont to look for in Mr. James's essays in fiction. As a result, we have now a firmly outlined and well-rounded narrative, supplied with abundant motives for action, and moving steadily, if not always swiftly, on to a distinct climax.

There is still enough to say with regard to Mr. James's method, which remains in general hard and dry, like a deftly executed etching by an artist not wholly in sympathy with his material. But the aim of Mr. James, we may suppose, is to record his impressions of life with as little as possible of modifying sentiments and emotions; his realism, even when most aggressive, is always delicate, and we are all the time conscious that he is not giving us the whole picture, although it by no means follows that this is a source of regret. The artist's duty is to select; to suppress some details and to emphasize others. Mr. James chooses to suppress the coarse and brutal elements of nature, and to occupy himself with subsidiary emotions, sentiments, and ideas. With him refined suggestions go farther than naked actualities.

In the story of The Princess Casamassima, he takes us into the slums of London, and unveils some of the actors in that human fermentation known as socialism, yet in no instance does he attempt any revelation of the conditions whence socialism takes its rise. With socialistic ideas he is concerned very much, and he studies them chiefly in their action on individuals, but with socialism in the mass he has nothing whatever to do. Strictly speaking, the story is not so much the story of the Princess Casamassima, as it is of little Hyacinth Robinson, whose career is closely traced from his precocious boyhood to the tragic ending with which the book closes. The Princess is, however, the leading personage in the sense of being the most significant character. She is the Christina Light of Roderick Hudson, and she retains all the enigmatic qualities that lent so much fascination to her first appearance. She bears a certain likeness to Mr. George Meredith's Diana of the Crossways, and is not a creation easily to be analyzed. The two ruling influences of her nature are an insatiable curiosity as to life, and a mortal terror of ennui. These motives carry her to great lengths, and men are toys in her hands. Little Robinson, the illegitimate son of an English nobleman and a French light-o'-love, grows up to manhood under the care of his foster-mother, a cockney dressmaker, and there takes place in him a struggle of hereditary tendencies. He is, in a certain sense, the victim of circumstances; no attempt is made to heighten the pathos of his fate, but the pathos is only too perceptible, and the inevitable sequence is a triumph of artistic comprehension. Perhaps the most real character in the book is Millicent Henning, a delightful type of the blooming cockney girl, a "magnificent plebeian," and the author spares no pains in making the portrait "as large as life."

It would be useless to attempt to unravel the threads of the story, and to enumerate every personage; if not useless, at least impossible, within reasonable limits. The book is one to be read slowly; to be put down now and then, and to be taken up again with a pleasant sense of intellectual recreation. There are fine touches of wit on every page, and every page is worth reading.

SIR FRANCIS DOYLE'S REMINISCENCES.*

THIS "gossiping volume" of recollections, by the Ex-Professor of Poetry at Oxford, whom the head-servant at his dame's described as "the ink-spillingest boy as ever comed to Eton," is one of the most entertaining volumes of autobiography we have met for a long time. It is all the more agreeable because it sacrifices chronological order to the association of ideas as the principle of arrangement. Two matters, to be sure, will not add to the interest which American readers must take in these thoroughly good-humored pages, abounding in excellent anecdotes: Sir Francis is a great lover of horses, after the manner of Englishmen, "born in Octavian's year," and he is a very ardent Tory. This last trait often brings him into political collision with Mr. Gladstone, with whom his acquaintance began at Eton, continuing at Oxford, and ripening into a warm friendship. He was Mr. Gladstone's "best man" at his wedding, and is only an opponent to the statesman now, though the warmth of his horror over home rule is rather amusing to the American mind. He is so much of a pessimist as to think the English government worse than it was sixty years ago, and likely to be worse still sixty years from now. But aside from political matters Sir Francis, who allows that he may have become fossilized in the Civil Service, preserves the best of tempers, and is far from holding those inordinate ideas of his own importance which are at the base of most pessimism:

From the want of a certain fixity of purpose I have fallen between two stools [literature and politics], and now at the age of seventy-six consider myself rather a poor creature.

Francis Doyle was the son of an ex-captain in the British Army, for many years Chairman of the Excise; he was educated at Eton and Oxford, where he knew Gladstone, Arthur Hallam, Hope Scott, and Bruce, afterward Lord Elgin, the latter realizing his idea "of a born orator, with perhaps the single exception of Carlyle, more than any man I have ever met." Of young Hallam he writes:

We all of us, even Mr. Gladstone, I think, felt while conversing with him, that we were in the presence of a larger, profounder, and more thoughtful mind than any one of us could claim for himself.

* The Princess Casamassima. A Novel. By Henry James. Macmillan & Co. $1.75.

* Reminiscences and Opinions of Sir Francis Hastings Doyle, 1813-1885. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

As an Etonian, not a Rugbeian, he claimed for his own head-master one qualification which Dr. Arnold did not possess:

I mean the knowledge of God Almighty's intention that there should exist for a certain time, between childhood and manhood, the natural production known as a boy.

During his holidays he met Sydney Smith, of whom he tells several new stories. Frederick Tennyson, Lord Tennyson's elder brother, was one of Doyle's Eton contemporaries, "full of genius like most of the Tennysons," and with a poetical talent "naturally more akin to that of the Laureate, in spirit and in form, than the talent of their intermediate brother Charles."

Sir Francis says little about his tenure of the Poetry Professorship in Oxford, where he succeeded Matthew Arnold, but he defends Macaulay's verses with no little spirit against Mr. Arnold's too sweeping indictment, while he confesses himself a heretic as regards Keble's Christian Year:

Poetry has been somewhere or other called "idealized utterance;" accepting this definition as an approach to the truth, and judging Keble by it, I should say that he commonly stammered rather than spoke; yet to talk of him without due reverence seems something like blasphemy.

This heresy, however, is a mild one compared with another which I am reluctantly bracing myself up to acknowledge. . . . Dr. Johnson bluntly condemns "Lycidas" . . . well, I say ditto to old Sam.

But when Miss Austen is named:

I am one of the regular Austen vassals, and consider her as without a rival among English writers, in her own line and within her own limits.

Concerning her loss of a lover, the Captain Wentworth of Persuasion, Sir Francis tells a history which the English reviewers seem to consider apocryphal; it is the reason why he thinks Persuasion the most beautiful and the most interesting of her stories . . . because it contains more of herself, more of her own feelings, hopes, and recollections, than the rest of her books put together.

Sir Francis studied law, and was taken as marshal by the famous Baron Parke, an old family friend. He tells many a good story of the bar; but his own connection with it was brief. After his marriage he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel receiver-general of customs, an office which he retained for many years. His recollections after this time are more concerned with public events than with literature or law; but one of the best chapters is the final one on the Doyle family, in which are many lively stories of war told by Sir Francis's great-uncle, Sir John, and his Uncle Carlo Doyle. The two told by the latter about General Sherbrooke reading the funeral service and his threatening of the commissary are very racy. Sir Francis distrusts democracy, but no American at all interested in English politics or literature of the present century need distrust Sir Francis's ability to amuse and instruct him greatly.

RICHARDSON'S AMERICAN LITERATURE.*

CONTENTS.

The Perspective of American Literature. — The Race Elements in American Literature. — The New Environment of the Saxon Mind. — Early Descriptive and Historical Writers. — The Theologians of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. — Benjamin Franklin. — Political Literature. — Washington Irving. — Religion and Philosophy in Later Years. — Ralph Waldo Emerson. — Essayists. — Historians. — Borderlands of American Literature.

IF we were to characterize briefly Professor Richardson's sagacious and painstaking review of American Literature, we should say that it was an excellent primer writ large. Professor Richardson aims at philosophical criticism, and in this he is undoubtedly right. If one aims high enough, one is sure to hit the ground at last, and in criticism anything is better than surface-skimming. Professor Richardson has much to say of the importance of perspective, and if the judicial attitude which he adopts in conformity with this principle is sometimes forced and artificial, it is at least consistently maintained. The broad lines of our native intellectual growth are clearly marked down on a scale of rigid exactitude. The scale, to be sure, is arbitrary; now and then where Professor Richardson reads inches, others may read feet, but the standard has been applied in all instances with a conscientiousness that leaves no opportunity for cavil. It is not an easy task to write of what is near us in a manner that shall satisfy posterity. We may go further, and say that the historian who is obliged to take note of contemporary matters cannot hope entirely to overcome the personal equation. Either he will be too rigidly exclusive and fail to justify all his conclusions, or he will endeavor to classify some things that will not fall into the established categories.

For purposes of philosophical discussion, Professor Richardson is, it seems to us, too rigidly exclusive. He speaks slightly of "expository criticism," and censures rather scornfully elaborate accounts of colonial literature, thereby condemning by implication the invaluable researches of Professor Tyler, whose fruitful investigations in this field have made a certain amount of generalization possible. Professor Richardson should not be too severe with the fact-hunters; they have their mission to perform. A map of a continent with only its great geographical features marked out appeals directly to the eye, and is useful in conveying elementary information; but when we desire substantial and convincing data, we call for an atlas, and mastering the details can form our own conclusions. Professor Richardson, in his broad view of the development of American thought, is like one who sketches the aspect of the earth's surface as seen from a balloon — and sometimes the balloon gets to so unconscionable an altitude that only a few isolated mountain-peaks are visible. The method, in fact, is more geographical than analytical. In the introduction the author has something to say of the importance of environment and of foreign influences; but he makes no significant attempt to indicate the effect of these extraneous forces, which must be traced in all their pervasive and mutable forms if we would comprehend their modifying action. As a philosophical discussion of the genesis and growth of American literature, we find ourselves unwilling to award to Professor Richardson's book the dignity and weight which it would seem to claim. But as a popular manual it has distinct and important value.

In what manner the material is mapped out, will be seen from the table of contents given at the head of this article. To a certain degree, the author discards chronological sequence, and he leaves the treatment of poetry and fiction to another volume. But the successive chapters are planned with care, and elaborated in a systematic manner; they afford rapid surveys of what is most enduring in the literary product of America up to the present time; and they remain, from beginning to end, as we have said, true to a fixed measure of relative values. The style is not animated, but it is concise, and Professor Richardson offers many shrewd observations that carry conviction even when he is most dogmatic. He defines American literature as "isolated inheritance, working freshly," and the phrase is well chosen. Of the Indians he says that they "stand on the outskirts of Caucasian civilization in North America, a problem and a menace, a theme for literature, and a subject for moral and industrial reform." And there is a clever thrust in the remark: "It must never be forgotten that deck-hands, 'longshore-men, and stage-drivers, Californian miners, Chinese highway robbers, buffaloes, and Indians are but a part of our civilization, and that literature may concern itself with such themes as God, duty, culture, and eastern lakes or rivers, and still be distinctly American." The book may be accepted as a noteworthy contribution to means of popular culture; and thus understood it is very welcome.

CANNIBALS AND CONVICTS.*

THE author of Cannibals and Convicts is an Australian journalist. His book is a record of observations in the Polynesian Islands, chiefly the New Hebrides, which are the first important group lying east of Australia, and about 1,200 miles therefrom, having the Fijis about half that distance still further to the East. Seven or eight hundred miles nearly south of New Caledonia, which is the largest of the New Hebrides, lies Norfolk Island, associated with the legend of the memorable Mutiny of the ship "Bounty." Mr. Thomas's book begins with the Fiji Islands, and their converted King Thakambau, gives one chapter each to Norfolk Island and Tonga, or Tongataboo, the latter one of the Friendly Islands, and in closing touches lightly on New Guinea; but the bulk of it—26 out of its 34 chapters—is devoted to the New Hebrides, in particular the islands of New Caledonia, Tanna, Ambrym, Api, and Annatom or Aneitum, and to the important questions of which of these islands are the center. For the book is more than a narrative. It is an inquiry and a discussion, having for its motive resistance to the French occupation of the New Hebrides. The case as represented by Mr. Thomas is this:

* American Literature. 1607-1885. Vol. I. The Development of American Thought. By Charles F. Richardson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.

* Cannibals and Convicts. By Julian Thomas. With Portraits and Map. Cassell & Co. $2.00.

Reference to the map will show that these islands are but a link in the chain which, from New Guinea to the Solomons, with Santa Cruz, and so on to New Caledonia, form outposts separating Australia from the Eastern Pacific, coigns of vantage, which, in the possession of foreign powers, cannot but prove a source of danger to the future welfare of Australia and the [British] Empire. These islands of the Western Pacific lie in the direct track between the terminus of the newly-opened Canadian Pacific Railway at Vancouver, and the northern part of Australia. This new ocean route, which is one that can be taken entirely under the British flag, with the Panama Canal, which some day may be completed, will revolutionize to a great extent the traffic between Great Britain and Australia. The ocean highway should be kept clear of any foreign toll-bars thereon. . . .

But France has annexed the New Hebrides de facto, if not de jure. . . . Posts of French soldiers have been established on the New Hebrides; the French flag has been raised there; and the natives have been taught to believe that the Man-a-Wee-wee holds the supreme power. . . . The French have invaded the New Hebrides, and are making war upon the natives, who detest them, and who, of all the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific, would gladly welcome and call for the rule of Great Britain as opposed to that of France.

These are Mr. Thomas's conclusions, and the facts presented in his book go towards supporting them. An active agent in the political process which he deprecates is the New Hebrides Company, a powerful and wealthy trading corporation, officered by Englishmen, but by Englishmen who have naturalized themselves as French citizens, and organized under French law. The point of the peril which Mr. Thomas sees in this French occupation of the islands lies in the fact that colonization is largely in the person of convicts transported for life, and that Australia is thus "endangered by the influx of the scum of France."

Of Norfolk Island and the interesting colony there Mr. Thomas gives a graphic description; picturing particularly the Church of St. Barnabas built as a memorial to the lamented Bishop Patteson. Throughout his trip he pays much attention to the missionaries and their work, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, Anglican, and Wesleyan, but his lack of sympathy is evident, and the impressions given are not favorable. His general estimate of the Pacific Island missionary seems to be that he is a well-meaning but injudicious man. Still he cannot but acknowledge the results that have been accomplished, as in Fiji. Without illustrations, the book is effectively pictorial in style. It abounds with little word sketches like this:

On one side we caught glimpses of the bay shining in silver splendour through the trees: on the beach a son of the soil, nude, except for an apology for a waistband, but decorated with a coronet and amulet of beads, stalked along carrying a small bow and a brace of arrows. What did he seek? How I envied him his thickness of wool and strength of skull, which enabled him to walk, like Adam before the Fall, unabashed in the noonday glare, whilst I skulked into every bit of shade I could. Suddenly he raised his bow, and fired twice, and wading into the water pulled out two fish transfixed on the arrows.

Many pages are devoted to the war-path in New Caledonia—the French quelling of a native insurrection, with numerous scenes of atrocity; many more to the labor-trade question, a modified form of human slavery, under which natives are bought and sold for specified terms of service. The cannibalism of the past and the polygamy of the present, the unconscious savagery of men and women, and the innocent naturalism of children, are described with unflinching frankness. Truly this is a region of the earth where "every prospect pleases and only man is vile." No physical attractions could exceed those of these fertile, luxuriant islands, with their bold, volcanic mountains, their coral reefs, their white beaches, their limpid surrounding waters, their groves of cocoa and palm, their inducements to a lazy, sensuous life; and no moral degradation could be deeper than that of the lustful, bloodthirsty brutes who inhabit them. Civilization, however, is encroaching on the domain, and books like this which let in the light are themselves an evangelizing influence.

MINOR NOTICES.

Still Hours. By Richard Rothe. Translated by Jane T. Stoddart. [London: Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.]

The Foreign Biblical Library is a new London enterprise, intended to provide translations of the best and latest contributions of "Orthodox foreign scholarship to Biblical study and research." It will consist mainly of standard commentaries in the latest editions, but other works interesting to the Bible student will be included. Delitzsch's commentaries on the Psalms and Isaiah are commenced and also Kurz's Church History. That the "orthodoxy" of the series will not be very rigid is shown by the inclusion of a volume of Schleiermacher's sermons, and the translation, as the initial volume, of Rothe's Stille Stunden. This is a volume of brief paragraphs extracted from Rothe's note-books containing his reflections on his reading, and classified by Prof. Nippold. Many of these reflections might have been omitted without detriment to the thought-capital of the world, but on the other hand many others show the rare union of a liberal mind and profound piety. Rothe called himself, as a theologian, "a supernaturalistic rationalist, not a rational supernaturalist," and declared that "we look upon Christianity too much as mere religion, while in reality it is an entirely new human life. The Redeemer was entirely man; if ever a purely original man existed, it was Jesus;" while "the special glory of Christianity consists in the marvelous variability."

Modern Idols. By William Henry Thorne. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] These "studies in biography and criticism," very inappropriately included under the title of Modern Idols, were first printed in the Philadelphia Times, and are much above the common level of newspaper criticism. They hardly make good their claim, however, to a more permanent form, belonging as they do to the good writing done for the day, and not to the more elaborate realm of books. The papers on Burns, Carlyle, and George Eliot are bright, but the poise of a first-class critic is wanting here, as in the papers on Matthew Arnold and George Sand. Arnold, it seems, is not a poet; and George Sand is simply an infamous person; the moral standard by which she is tried being quite different from that before which Burns is summoned.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

The detective stories apparently most popular with the British public are of French or American origin. The enterprising publishers, who have inundated the market with not always irreproachable translations of Gaboriau and Du Boisgobey, have made their selection from too limited a field; but they have been wise in their generation, and they must have had their reward. Equally satisfactory must have been the reprints of Miss Green's stories, The Leavenworth Case and A Strange Disappearance, while another American novel, Shadowed by Three, yields to neither in its thrilling and well-sustained interest, however ludicrous and long-winded it may at times appear. Most of these novels possess sufficient merit to explain a portion of, if not all, their success. They are certainly not of the highest class, but they meet many of the requirements of good fiction. — The Saturday Review.

If the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland has in it made his first essay, he needs encouragement and warning in about equal measure. He is evidently a man of culture, and has made a study of style; but he must beware lest he be "inebriated by the exuberance of his own verbosity." He has an eye to nature and to character, especially character in humble life; let him use that eye, and not the spectacles of any "master." Let him eschew "incidents" of the Hetty Sorrel or Alma Lee sort. Let him, above all things, seek to represent—if need be to idealize—the tragedy of real life, not the melodrama of the transpontine stage. It will be a matter for surprise and regret if the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland does not greatly improve upon this book, which may be unfavorably criticised, but cannot be despised or ignored. — Spectator.

Mr. Dowden has given us such a picture of the man as for fidelity, literalness, and fulness of detail may never again be equaled. He has done everything for Shelley that industry, insight, faithfulness, and loyalty could do. But the total effect produced is not invigorating to the better part of our sympathies. The man who is now revealed to us from top to toe, may have been a great poet, but he was not a great man. He was not only not a moral man according to the laws of England; he was not a moral man according to the laws of nature. — T. Hall Caine, in the Academy.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JANUARY 8, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

It is not so very many years since Cooper died, and yet the boatmen and loungers about the lake had only the faintest impression of the man—there was a writer by that name, one of them said, and some of his family lived near the house of the great man already referred to. The magician who created Cooperstown sleeps in the old English-looking churchyard of the Episcopal church, in the midst of the graves of his relations, and there is a well-worn path to his head-stone. Whatever the common people of the town may think, it is that grave that draws most pilgrims to the village. — CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER, in Their Pilgrimage.

. The Literary World enters on its Eighteenth Volume with the prestige of a successful past, the encouragement of a substantial present, and the inspiration of a promising future. As in the past so for the future we prefer not to boast of what has been done, or to talk of what is to be done, but simply to do, and to leave the doing to speak for itself. The work of the paper will continue along the lines upon which it has won its position; and its editorial resources, never so ample as they have been the past year, will be steadily enlarged and strengthened as rapidly as the growth of its material resources will allow. We have no aim but to make an honest, fearless, trustworthy journal of literary criticism, a friend to all good books, and a foe to all bad ones. Absolutely independent, meaning to be truthful, aiming to be fair, the Literary World invites the increasing co-operation of all friends of genuine literature.

. Our present issue is largely occupied with reviews of the later publications of 1886, many of which were crowded one side by the mass of Holiday Books and by the Annual Review of the World's Literature. These two incidents of the year's work, coming close together at the busiest point of all the year, made, as they always make, large demands upon our space; but we believe no apology therefor will be required by our readers. Perhaps they will accept it as clothing some matter a little old with a garb of freshness that we present them, as we have the pleasure of doing, this number of the Literary World in a new suit of type.

. After giving a single lecture in Boston Mr. Henry M. Stanley has returned to Europe, in prompt obedience to a sudden summons of the King of the Belgians, prompted by difficulties on the Congo; but Mr. Justin McCarthy remains, and beside agreeable appearances in private and a political address or two, discoursed last week Monday evening in the Boston Tremont Temple on "Modern Fiction—Real and Ideal." Mr. McCarthy spoke wholly without notes, and to the gratification of his hearers. The point of his remarks seemed to be that in fiction the most effectively realistic was the most truthfully idealized. His condemnation of Zolaism was severe; his commendation of Howells and Bret Harte generous. Trollope, too, he justly extolled; and specified George Meredith, Blackmore, and William Black, as the coming English novelists of the day. Meredith is not as well known here as he ought to be, and as he will be when Roberts Bros.' new edition of his works gets fairly before the public, as we shall presently help to place them.

. "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After," regarded in London (so the reporters say) as the most significant production in the newly published volume of poems by Lord Tennyson, appeared last week in an obviously imperfect form in the Independent, to which journal it was sent by cable. Opinions seem to differ very decidedly as to the merit of the composition. In technique it certainly leads to melancholy comparisons with the work of the Alfred Tennyson of other days; but its spirit is frankly Tennysonian in spite of the embittered tone with which it is permeated. To us it seems like the roar of a sick lion—disjointed, hollow, inspired by an impotent fury, yet leonine after all. Through its broken numbers there breathes a terrible scorn for the surface results of our modern ideas of progress. It is the last protest of a once mighty voice against the devilish spirit of reprisal that is fanning the smouldering embers of civil war in Ireland, against the "tonguesters" that threaten the ruin of Britain's greatness, against the literature of the day "wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism" aiming to Paint the mortal shame of nature with the living hues of art.

As we read we recall to mind a couplet from the first ballad of "Locksley Hall":

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and he bears a laden breast,
Full of sad experience, moving toward the stillness of his rest.

[Original Poetry.]

SHELLEY.

One heart of all the hearts of men,
Tameless nor free,
Plunged for a moment in the fire
Of old regret and young desire,
A meteor rushed through air, and then—
What eyes can see?

O rebel captive, fallen soul,
Self-strong and proud,
Throbbing to lift against the stars
An angel voice—whose frenzy mars
And frets the song which thou wouldst roll
Aloft aloud!

To thee was given half to mould
That heart of thine
(Knowing all passion and the pain
Of man's imperious disdain),
Into a song whose splendor told
The dawn divine.

It held the rapture of the hills
Deep in its core;
The purple shadows of the ocean
Moved it to supreme emotion,
The harvest of those barren rills
Was in its store.

Thine was a love that strives and calls,
Outcast from home,
Burning to free the soul of man
With some new life: how strange, a ban
Should set thy sleep beneath the walls
Of changeless Rome!

More soft, I deem, from spring to spring,
Thy sleep would be,
Where this far western headland lies
Beneath these matchless azure skies,
Under thee hearing beat and swing
The eternal sea.

A bay so beauteous islanded—
A sea so stilled—
You well might dream the world were new;

And some fair day's Italian blue,
Unsoiled of all the ages dead,
Should be fulfilled.

Where all the livelong day and night
A music stirs,
The summer wind should find thy home,
And fall in lulls and cease to roam:
A covert resting, warm and bright,
Among the firs.

An ageless forest dell, which knows
Nor grief nor fear,
Across whose green red-berried floor
Fresh spring shall come and winter hoar,
With keen delight and rapt repose
Each year by year.

And there the thrushes, calm, supreme,
Forever reign,
Whose glorious kingly golden throats
Hold but a few remembered notes;
Yet in their song is blent no dream
Of tinge of pain!

BLISS CARMAN.

Fry's Island, N. B., Canada.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MECHANIC'S INSTITUTE,
PARIS, ONTARIO, 9th Dec., 1886.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

We require for our Circulating Library about $500 worth of books per annum, and the question of procuring works strongly bound is continually forced upon our selecting committees in consequence of the condition in which the ordinary book is found after even a few weeks' service. At this writing we have two large cases sent from a publisher on approval, and quite a number of the books would suit, were the binding up to the mark. Can you not recommend to us some way of overcoming the difficulty? We have about 4,500 volumes in our library, and some of the older volumes, as for instance, Johnson's Poets and the Dramas of the Last Century, which are bound in leather, are in splendid order, although they have been in use here and elsewhere for nearly a century. Would it be possible for us to purchase works unbound so that we can have good binding done to order?

JOHN ALLEN.

TWO POETS' HOMES. Stedman's and Albee's.

BY CHARLES BURR TODD.

NEWCASTLE ISLAND is that large, irregularly outlined mass lying at the mouth of the Piscataqua River in New Hampshire, separated from the quaint old town of Portsmouth by two or three "harbors" and the narrow sinuosities of Sagamore Creek. On the north-east is a huge backbone of trap, washed by the Piscataqua on one side and the Atlantic on the other. Here two genial poets, Edmund C. Stedman and John Albee, have their homes, lured primarily by the sea, I think, and in no little measure by the beauty of the island's lanes and beaches, and its wealth of historic and romantic associations.

The first is Mr. Stedman's. As one goes down the rustic lane leading from Newcastle road to Jaffrey Point, he sees it on the left, behind two acres of lawn; a modest dwelling, whose shingled roofs and wide low porch suggest one of those Queen Anne cottages that cover every eligible site on our Atlantic coast. Cross the lawn to the seaward side, however, and you will find that the owner and his architect built with some sense of the novel and poetic in their souls. The north and west walls are of stone, the north wall carried up into a tower, with a marvelously wide sea outlook. Examine these walls closely, and one sees that they are built of stone—trap, lava, and small, smooth boulders—gathered on the neighboring beaches, and arranged in courses with an eye to artistic effect. The tower is built of the same material. There is a loggia at its base, like those in old Venetian villas, looking seaward out toward Appledore, Applegate, and their sister isles. From the porch a door opens directly into a wide hall, large enough for a summer parlor, and indeed used as such. There is a large fireplace on the left, with ancient andirons. The furniture is old and quaint, reft by Mrs. Stedman from the ancient homes of Portsmouth and other places. On summer evenings, when the sea wind blows cool, a fire of driftwood is lighted on the hearth. Part of a mast or spar, torn from its socket, perhaps in some hurricane of the Antilles, does duty as a back-log, and burns with a lambent, bluish flame; on this heaped fagots catch the flame, and set the shadows to dancing merrily over the polished floor and in and out amid the furnishings. Then about the fire gathers a notable company. There is always a visitor at the cottage—author, poet, artist, savant, or traveled man from foreign lands. Barrett Wendell, the young Boston author, who has a villa near by, or Prof. Bartlett of Harvard College, who summers on the island, or John Albee and his charming daughters, drop in to complete the circle; the conversation takes a wide range; not until a late hour is the fire left to burn itself out without human companionship.

The poet's study is a small upper chamber in the tower, with deep, casemated windows looking every way but to landward. Eastward is the ocean with its white-maned coursers rolling in, and the eternal plaint of the smitten crags. The Piscataqua flows beneath, at flood or ebb smooth as a mill-pond, at half tide a mill-race foaming, swirling, boiling, roaring through the deep gorge between sharp crags that forms its bed. Beyond the river is the storied land of Kittery and York in Maine, and over the crags on the northwest one can see the top hamper of the historic frigate "Constitution," moored at the Portsmouth navy yard. The view from the west window takes in the craggy, winding south shore, the vista being closed by the ruinous Martello tower on Jourdan's Rocks, and the deserted walls of Fort Constitution. Up in this eyrie the gulls and sandpipers are company. When the sky lowers and the sea roars, Mother Carey's chickens fly in with news of the coming storm; and when the gale breaks, an August northeaster perhaps, the breakers whiten the black crags, and the foam flecks leap the low parapet between lawn and crag, and cover the grass like a midsummer snowfall.

Some of the best work of the poet in recent years has been done in this little room alone with sea and sky. In New York his literary work is done after nine o'clock at night; here he devotes his mornings to it. The afternoon is reserved for social pleasures, boating and fishing, rides into the storied lands about him, strolls through the romantic lanes and along the sounding beaches of the island. Jaffrey Point is his favorite haunt. Its jagged front receives the full brunt of the Atlantic; on one side is a pretty beach of shingle and pebble; inland bayberry, sweet fern, and juniper cover the site of the first fortifications thrown up by Captain Walter Neale for the defence of the infant colony. The surf here is ever fine—best if there has been a storm far out at sea to send the great surges rolling in slowly and with grandeur. It is here, I think, because it perfectly mirrors the scene, that our poet's "Surf," one of the best sea poems in the language, must have been written, two stanzas of which I repeat by way of description:

Splendors of morning the billow crests brighten,
Lighting and luring them on to the land,
Far-away waves where the wan vessels whiten,
Blue rollers breaking in surf where we stand,
Curved like the necks of a legion of horses,
Each with his froth gilded mane flowing free,
Hither they speed in perpetual courses
Bearing thy riches, O beautiful sea!

Strong with the striving of yesterday's surges,
Lashed by the wanton winds leagues from the shore,
Each driven fast by its follower urges
Fearlessly those that are fleeing before.
How they leap over the ridges we walk on,
Flinging us gifts from the depths of the sea,
Silvery fish for the foam-haunting falcon,
Palm weed and pearls for my darling and me.

In charming contrast to Mr. Stedman's "Kelp Rock" is Jaffrey Cottage, the home of John Albee, transcendentalist poet, lecturer, and historian. It is but a stone's throw away, by a well-worn footpath through the lawn, across the rustic lane which ends here, and into a farm-yard whose velvety green sward suggests the sun and showers of two centuries. The cottage, facing the sea, with an orchard "fruited deep" on the left, and green meadows stretching away in the rear, is all that a poet's home should be. Long rear roof, dormer windows, mossy shingles, and woodbine covered front, speak of the date, 1677, when George Jaffrey's fisher carpenters gave it the finishing touches. Everybody in Newcastle knows it. The poet owner in his History of Newcastle has given a charming description of it and its associations:

The same Jaffrey parlor was used as the meeting place of the Provincial Assembly in 1682-83, when Cranfield was Lieutenant-Governor of New Hampshire. This parlor (or hall as sometimes called) forms a large and incongruous portion of the cottage, and was used for various public purposes in former times, not the least curious of which were "small-pox" parties, in days when people retired from the world to be inoculated. It was not very serious business, and young folks made a holiday of it, and were said to do considerable courting on such occasions. I fancy some names scratched on the window panes of the Jaffrey parlor still visible, are mementos of that time of tenderness and sore arms. The cottage has always been a favorite resort of lovers, than whom there are no human beings more easy or pleasant to entertain; satisfied with themselves and each other, you share in the benevolence of the rosy illusion, and your hospitality seeks to be unrestricted. At such times the small, sea-moated farm flows with milk and honey, and never too much; for I find, contrary to common observation, that lovers have, whether from the saline situation, or in compliment to the unworthy host, the most extraordinary appetites. The sequel of these little histories has often been celebrated in the great parlor in numberless marriages. Of course, also, in seven generations of dwellers, the feet of them that carry out the dead have often been heard at the door. It lends a kind of sanctity to the old house to think how many souls have lived and died here, how many strangers too, now dust, have looked out of its windows. Once Longfellow peered pensively out of them upon the sea, musing his Lady Wentworth ballad. Once Mrs. Stowe stooped through the attic to wonder at the huge beams and chimney pile, and many other poets and romancers have passed in and out the house, adding modern memories to its ancient archive. And now on the adjoining shore a poet has come to abide and enrich this seat of olden local renown with his wide and living fame.

We may add that the house was built prior to 1680, by George Jaffrey, sometime Treasurer to the Province of New Hampshire. Soon after Cranfield came in with his oppressive administration, seized upon the cottage, ejecting the lawful owner, and made it the Gubernatorial Mansion. It served the colony as state house too. In the great parlor for several years the legislators of New Hampshire met to shape the affairs of the colony. At times their shapes in full bottomed wig and crimson waistcoat, velvet breeches, and silken hose, appear to haunt the room—peer out of window on the sea, quaff the generous punch at the buffet, which still occupies its corner, or with arm on the ancient mantle, stand benevolently regarding one.

To this house came Mr. Albee in 1864, with his beautiful young wife, driven forth by I know not what spirit. Perhaps the same that called Thoreau to the Walden woods and wastes of Cape Cod. He had already achieved a career. Educated at Harvard as a theologian, he entered the ministry, and was ordained to an Orthodox pulpit. But soon becoming a disciple of Emerson and Channing, and too honest to preach against his conviction, he resigned his pastorate, and came up to this farm of thirty acres, where he has resided ever since, tilling the soil with his own hands, studying, dreaming, writing a little prose and more poetry, lecturing before the Concord School of Philosophy, and finding time amid it all for a leisurely tour of Europe, and frequent visits to the great cities. If his desultory literary work has not brought him fame, it is perhaps because he has never coveted it enough to make eager tilt for it. He has sung simply, naturally, like the robins in his hedgerows, songs that can only delight every lover of simple, natural music. His History of Newcastle is a prose poem steeped in the quaint atmosphere of the town, one of the finest things of the kind I have ever read. His thin volume of poems, published by the Putnams in 1883, has had few readers, I presume, chiefly because it has never been brought to the attention of that constituency which would delight in it. Probably a hasty critic would stamp most of it as Emersonian. There are, however, many poems on the history and romance of the island, and others of chiefly local interest. Some of the gems of the collection, of which there are many, are found among them. As for instance these:

Bos'n Hill.

The wind blows wild on Bos'n Hill,
Far off is heard the ocean's rote,
Low overhead the gulls scream shrill,
And homeward scuds each little boat.

Then the dead Bos'n wakes in glee
To hear the storm-king's song,
And from the top of mast pine tree
He blows his whistle loud and long.

The village sailors hear the call,
Lips pale and eyes grow dim;
Well know they, though he pipes them all,
He means but one shall answer him.

He pipes the dead up from their graves,
Whose bones the tansy hides;
He pipes the dead beneath the waves,
They hear, and cleave the rising tides.

But sailors know when next they sail
Beyond the Hilltop's view,
There's one amongst them shall not fail
To join the Bos'n's crew.

In "Miss Tipty Toes," I think I recognize Miss Laura, the five-year-old granddaughter of his neighbor poet:

Miss Tipty Toes.

She darts from room to room
Like a shuttle through the loom,
In and out away she goes,
Who can catch Miss Tipty Toes?

Here she comes, there she flies,
Now she laughs, and now she cries;
Full of joys and little woes
Is my sweet Miss Tipty Toes.

Gibble gabble, how she talks!
She's never still, never walks,
And o'er all the house it snows
With gay bits of Tipty Toes.

Now your whiskers she will tug,
Then around your neck must hug—
She loves you? no, don't suppose
Passing mood of Tipty Toes.

She's a thousand things more dear,
Thirteen dolls with all their gear;
Belike counts you one of those
At most, does Queen Tipty Toes.

Yet most tender just at eve,
When all playthings she must leave,
Then, for little respite, shows
Artful heart of Tipty Toes.

Still by day, and still by night,
I grow fonder of the sprite,
And her heart whoever knows
He must love dear Tipty Toes.

And I oft look down the years,
Thinking of the hopes and fears,
When the rosebud is a rose,
And no more small Tipty Toes.

PROFESSOR DIMAN'S MEMOIR.*

AMERICAN historical scholarship lost in Prof. Diman of Brown University (deceased in 1881) one of its finest minds, distinguished for the breadth of his culture and his fascinating eloquence. The broad church of America had reason to sorrow for a preacher in many respects of the first order, who, ministering to Congregational churches, was on terms of friendship with Episcopalian and Unitarian alike, and gave up his ministry to become the foremost professor in a Baptist college.

Miss Hazard's memoir of his uneventful life is written with a love not destitute of discretion. It is obliged to go much into minor details, many of which we should have preferred to take for granted had their room been filled with such matter as the introductory lecture on history here given.

Prof. Diman's first appearance in the pulpit was as a little golden-haired boy in response to a text "calling" Jeremiah! He was too independent for the orthodoxy of his recent day, declaring that "there is no warrant whatever for erecting the bold, naked, literal dogma of everlasting punishment into an article of Christian faith," and holding such views of the atonement that the council called to settle him at Brookline, Mass., was the scene of hot controversy. His position he well stated in his diary in Germany as a young man:

While Christ was the ideal man, so it is ever to be the aim of every one in the same manner to realize the ideal man, and thus be also a manifestation of the Logos in the flesh. Each believer should be the living word of God.

Narrow people in every sect distrusted a man who could so speak, but broad churchmen in all denominations admired his catholic spirit and delighted in his noble life.

THEIR PILGRIMAGE.*

NOMINALLY this "pilgrimage" was that of a pleasure party to various American watering places from Cape May to the Thousand Islands; really it was that of a humorous literarian and a dexterous artist in search of the picturesque characteristics of American summer life. The book is a sort of emulsion; a mixture not merely of wood-cuts and letterpress, but of frank description and covert criticism, of reality and romance, of hotel experiences and observations vivified and at the same time softened by a love story. There is much in Mr. Warner's writing to remind of some of Mr. Howells's earlier work, but his materials are more diverse and his aim more desultory than in the case of anything similar of Mr. Howells's. This is not a "wedding-journey," but a lovers' journey. One effect of the book, including its pictures, is to recall the "Porte Crayon" of a former generation, whose pleasant sketches of Virginia life enriched the pages of the same magazine (Harper's) in which these chapters first appeared.

American life and character as seen at the mountains and the beaches from June to September constitute a world by itself, with abundant capabilities for employing pen and pencil, and a visit to it in a good-natured mood is the chief function of Mr. Warner's book. It is a kind of observation car into which he invites the reader, for a ride all along shore and occasionally into the interior. The love story is incidental, and never distracts attention from the kaleidoscopic scenes and ever varying incidents which attend our progress. We begin with the Hygeia Hotel and Fortress Monroe, as exemplifying the "duty of a paternal government to place its military and naval stations close to the fashionable resorts." We pass on to Cape May, and then over "a long circuit by rail through the Jersey sands" to Atlantic City. "The handsome Jersey people were not traveling that day." From the "jig-saw architecture" of Atlantic City we escape to the natural grandeur of the Catskills, and so on by long strides to Narragansett Pier with its domestic simplicities and Newport with its luxurious frivolities, to Martha's Vineyard and Plymouth, to the Isles of Shoals and Mount Desert, to Virginia's Natural Bridge and Sulphur Springs, to Long Branch and Ocean Grove, to Saratoga and Lake George, to Richfield Springs, and Cooperstown, to Niagara and Alexandria Bay, and finally to the White Mountains and the Berkshire Hills. But let Mr. Warner's own words introduce the reader to some of these scenes:

At Newport.

It happened to be a day when the blue of the sea was that of the Mediterranean, and the sky and sea melted into each other, so that a distant sail-boat seemed to be climbing into the heavens. The waves rolled in blue on the white sand beach, and broke in silver. Three young girls on horseback galloping in a race along the hard beach at the moment gave the needed animation to a very pretty picture.

At Bar Harbor.

Mrs. Montrose, a stately dame of the old school, whose standard was the court in the days of Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, disapproved of this laxity, and when a couple of young fellows in striped array one evening whirled round the room together, with brier-wood pipes in their mouths, she was scandalized.

At the White Sulphur.

"What do you think of a place," he wrote Miss Lamont—the girl read me a portion of his lively letter that summer at Saratoga—"into which you come by a belated train at half-past eleven at night, find friends waiting up for you in evening costume, are taken to a champagne supper at twelve, get to your quarters at one, and have your baggage delivered to you at two o'clock in the morning?"

At Lake George.

When the steamer approaches, a band of young ladies in military ranks, clad in light marching costume, each with a broom in place of a musket, descend to the landing—and delight the spectators with their warlike manoeuvres. The march in the broom drill is two steps forward and one step back, a mode of progression that conveys the notion of a pleasing indecision of purpose, which is foreign to the character of these handsome Amazons, who are quite able to hold the wharf against all comers. This act of war in fancy dress, with its two steps forward and one back, and the singing of a song, is one of the most fatal to the masculine peace of mind in the whole history of carriage.

Richfield Springs.

Of course the raison d'être of being here is the sulphur spring. There is no doubt of its efficacy. I suppose it is as unpleasant as any in the country. Everybody smells it, and a great many drink it. The artist said that after using it a week the blind walk, the lame see, and the dumb swear.

"English, you Know."

"Your great English poet is very much read here," King said, by way of being agreeable. "So we have heard," replied Mrs. Stubbs. "Mr. Stubbs reads Tennyson beautifully. He has thought of giving some readings while we are here. We have been told that the Americans are very fond of readings." "Yes," said King, "they are devoted to them, especially readings by Englishmen in their native tongue. There is a great rage now for everything English; at Newport hardly anything else is spoken." Mrs. Stubbs looked for a moment as if this might be an American joke.

Nobody will question that Mr. Warner has seen with his own eyes every landscape, every stretch of beach, every hotel piazza and dining-room, every skirt and whisker which in this book he describes. There is an intense life-likeness to it all, like that of the stereograph; the figures are as real as the places; the characters are more than types; they even will recognize themselves. But the author's feeling is never cynical nor harsh. His humor is a constant quality.

* Memoir of the Rev. J. Lewis Diman, D.D. By Caroline Hazard. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

* Their Pilgrimage. By Charles Dudley Warner. Illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. Harper & Bros. $2.00.

His good-nature is contagious. His companion artist is in sympathy with him, and though the latter's drawings are of uneven merit, the playful ones are never coarse, and the best are delicate and sincere and almost as good as Du Maurier's. They who have visited the localities included in this merry-go-round will refresh their recollections by means of it with hearty relish, and they who have not may experience in a positive way one of the pleasures of the imagination.

We may add that the book is beautifully made, with gilt top, uncut front edges, and a binding of distinction in library style.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A Flat Iron for a Farthing; or, Some Passages in the Life of an Only Son. By Juliana Horatia Ewing. [Roberts Bros. $1.00.] Not as attractive as some of the stories of this lamented author, and not as pathetic as others; yet with pleasing qualities. The little narrative, which the author says grew from other incidents after the purchase of the Flat Iron, is autobiographic in form; and Oakford, with its one long steep street "very clean, pebbled, and picturesque," and the shops in houses with overhanging stories, is a remembrance of the author's own childhood. There is a comfortable, admirable Nurse Bundle, whom at five-and-fifty her dear boy, yet almost a baby, thinks he should like to marry when he is old enough, an original lad, a wise father, and a right sort of rector; and there are such happenings and teachings and good influences as Mrs. Ewing knew so well how to put into delightful shape—a book which no young reader can fail to like and be helped by.

Conjuror Dick. By Angelo J. Lewis (Professor Hoffmann). [Frederick Warne & Co. $1.50.] The hero, having become assistant to a professional exhibitor, tells the story of his travels and adventures, in company with the professor and his family, in England and Continental Europe; introducing accounts of some of the mysteries shown, and an amusing exposure of certain impostures of spiritism. Curiously, there is a slight suggestion of Charles Dickens in the minutiae of the hero's early life; of Thomas Hughes in the introducing of the interrupted prayer at school and of a fight as resultant therefrom; and of Captain Marryat in the general good fellowship and variety of adventure. The book is written in better English than most juveniles. And its general tone is not only moral, but deeply, though unobtrusively, religious.

Through the Wilderness. By Mrs. S. Currier. [T. Whittaker. $1.25.] The story of a young girl and her little brother deserted by their drunken father in a small German settlement in Northern Illinois, and of the heroine's struggles and fidelity to what she believed duty, until at last among the happy results ensuing was the reformation of her father. Religion is very largely interwoven with the tale; and the emotional style common to many feminine writers is carried to extreme. The author might improve her language.

Charlie Lucken at School and College. By the Rev. H. C. Adams, M.A. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.] Charlie Lucken is a brave and manly lad. The beginning of his story dates back to the early part of the century, and the author has tried to depict English school and college life as it was before modern educational ideas became supreme. The incidents and adventures, however, are mostly outside of school limits, and include a chase by a French war-ship, encounters with burglars, the rescue of people from drowning, and so on.

Homespun Yarns. By Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.] These eleven stories for young people are collected from magazines; some of them were written recently, others, years ago, like "Zerub Throop's Experiment," which has been revised for present use. Mrs. Whitney can be simple and charming, or obscure and not so charming, although in any case she is helpful to nobler living, and she never writes without a purpose. Nearly all of these stories belong to the better class, and the first on the list, which is the simplest, is one of her best. Not much teaching in "When I was a Little Girl," but a winsome little narrative it is about a small matter, made delightful in the telling. "Sally Gibson's Spunk" and "Girl Noblesse" have good lessons for girls. Other sketches are for the benefit of boys especially. "Buttered Crusts" has morsels of wisdom, but why, O dear and honored author, will you write such puzzling paragraphs as this?

Thankful Holme had been an orphan for five years, living here in a pleasant old country house with her Grandmamma Peniworth. By three successive marriages, in the third of which was no survivor of the first, herself and two much older step-sisters, both now some time married, had been left with no real blood-tie between them, save a distant cousinship, the father of Charlotte and Laura Peniworth having been a half-nephew of Aunt Salva's, and the second husband of his widow having become in his turn a widower, and then married old Madam Peniworth's daughter, Thankful's mother.

Children's Stories of American Progress. By Henrietta Christian Wright. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.] A capital book for young people—well written, keeping firmly to the proper historical perspective, and dealing with eighteen epochs in our national development under such headings as the beginning of Western settlement, the Barbary pirates, the purchase of Louisiana, the first steamboat, the story of slavery, the story of the railroad, the discovery of gold, the Rebellion, the South after the War. The story of the Rebellion fills only twenty-five pages and is a little masterpiece of concise and picturesque narrative. Now and then we find sentences that are rather long for young readers, but this is the only point in which the author seems to have fallen short of her ideal. We cannot speak with much favor of Mr. Davis's illustrations.

MINOR FICTION.

A Demigod. [Harper & Brothers. $1.00.] In bold originality of conception and in power of execution this remarkable romance fairly takes a place among the notable literary creations of the last year. It is a tale of modern Greece. The author's theme is a hero, a man evolved, in the popular scientific language of the present day, by a careful process of artificial selection continued during several generations, whose great size and magnificent physical powers are well matched by his moral courage and fidelity to what he believes duty. With this character, living with his mother in an old Lacedemonian mountain fastness, the narrative brings into contact a party of traveling Americans—a retired Boston merchant and army officer whose ingeniously violent objurgations add an amusing element to the tale, his daughter, a girl of fine presence and character and withal somewhat philosophical, an aunt, and a cousin of the latter, and an odd little Greek, at some time a professor, who undertakes the duties of guide in the wild, picturesque mountains called the Taygetus, but whose guidance results in the capture of the party by a troop of brigands. In this duration the Americans remain till rescued by the prowess of the "demigod." Without needing to outline the plot further, we can in fine describe the novel as interesting and of unusual power. Its anonymous authorship is becoming an interesting puzzle. One guess ascribes it to Mr. Crawford, and that it is no novice's work is certain.

The Sentimental Calendar. Being Twelve Funny Stories. By J. S. of Dale. [Charles Scribner's Sons.] The exterior of this volume is in charming taste. The contents are not at all "funny," in spite of the "Major's preface," and his preface is needlessly absurd. That, and the "sentimental," must be taken as pleasing devices on the part of the author, who usually proves to be serious, often tender with that real sentiment which is the farthest possible from the "sentimental." Sometimes he shows us the deeps in the human heart, such as we have no knowledge of in many writers of short stories. Both sweetness and nobility are in the sacred feeling of "A First Love Letter," and "Our Consul at Carlsruhe," two pieces of exquisite tenderness and delicacy. Mr. Stinson is a true artist; he leaves something for the imagination; an artist also in his use of words. "Bill Shelby" has a captivating descriptive quality. There are in all twelve stories, each with a legend for the month, and each has a vignette heading from drawings by F. G. Attwood.

The Bow of Orange Ribbon. A Romance of New York. By Amelia E. Barr. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.] This story opens in New York City in the days of the old Dutch burghers, in the family of Joris Van Humskirk, one of "His Majesty's Council for the Province," a man of sterling worth. He has a fine Dutch house, with a Dutch garden sloping down to the river. His wife, Lysbet, is a woman worth knowing. Of his children the favorite is Katherine, distractingly pretty. The son of a Scotch neighbor and nearest friend is mildly in love with Katherine, and the elders have foreordained a marriage, but, unfortunately for the match-makers, a gallant and ardent young English officer, Hyde, is in town, who has won the little damsel almost at first sight, and he wears a bow of orange ribbon she has clandestinely sent him as a love-token. The young Scotchman swears he will shoot it from his breast, challenges him, and the English officer receives wounds that are nearly mortal. Katherine is secretly married to him, and the next spring steals away from her father's house and goes with him to England. Hyde proves unworthy of her trust, but repents, and they return to America to live about the time of the breaking out of the war, when he and the Van Humskirks engage on the "rebel" side. The Hydys become important people, founders of a distinguished family which still keeps as a talisman the bow of orange ribbon. This is the scant outline filled in with the Dutch household life, the pastoral days of Katherine in the English ancestral home, and excellent portraiture of English, Scotch, and Dutch, to say nothing of the old sort of love making which seems so fresh in these days of so much vivisection of one's feelings and motives. As in all Mrs. Barr's stories, there are women who dignify womanhood; Lysbet is wise and noble, and Katharine grows in mental and moral stature when the test of trial comes.

Agnes Surriage. By Edwin Lassetter Bynner. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] The Agnes Surriage who figures in this story was an historical character. She was the daughter of humble fisher folk of Marblehead, and was possessed of remarkable beauty, and an intellectual range far above her condition. She was discovered by Sir Harry Frankland, who, about the middle of the eighteenth century, served as collector of the port of Boston. Frankland brought her to Boston, had her educated under the supervision of Madame Shirley, the governor's wife, and later made her his mistress. Ostracized by society, the youthful pair retired to Hopkinton—then in the "wilderness"—where Frankland built a comfortable mansion. Later, Frankland sought a diplomatic mission, and the two lived for a time in London, and afterwards in Lisbon, where they were at the time of the great earthquake, with an account of which the book concludes. This is the material employed by Mr. Bynner, and he has used it to excellent purpose. The manners and customs of those early days are admirably depicted, and all the characters are endowed with life and individuality. The author has evidently been tireless in his collection of historical data, which he has treated with romantic freedom, and yet with a fidelity to the spirit of the times not often to be found in historical romances. The account of the courtship of Elder Hawkins and the Widow Ruck, which forms a legitimate episode in the narrative, is conceived with delicious humor. Mr. Bynner has acquitted himself honorably of his task in producing a novel of very exceptional merit. But we wish that he had chosen a less objectionable theme for the exercise of his fine and discerning talent.

MINOR NOTICES.

Electricity in the Service of Man: A Popular and Practical Treatise on the Applications of Electricity in Modern Life. From the German of Dr. Urbanitzky. Edited, with Copious Additions, by R. Wormen, D.Sc., with an Introduction by John Perry, M.E., F.R.S. [Cassell & Co.] A finely printed octavo of nearly 900 pages, with 850 excellent and often full-page illustrations, divided into "Principles of Electrical Science" and "Technology of Electricity," the latter comprising about three-fourths of the whole. Part Second has also two divisions, Generation and Conduction of Electricity, embracing electric machines, dynamos, batteries, etc., and Practical Applications of Electricity, including the electric light, electro-chemistry and metallurgy, electro-motors, telegraph, telephone, phonograph, etc. About half the book is given to these "practical applications." Those who are looking for a full, scientific account of electricity in its theory, history, and applications, will find it in this volume. Occasionally its explanations are technical and misty. The full index fails to lead us to the places where the various electrical units are explained, and, strangely enough, they are nowhere in the book well and clearly defined. The authors do not mention the remarkable discoveries of Henry, by which the invention of the telegraph became possible. These and some other similar oversights, however, are minor defects in a work of general excellence. It is to be regretted that the translators omitted the portraits and biographies of eminent electricians found in the original German edition.

Lectures and Essays. By the late W. K. Clifford. Edited by Leslie Stephen and Frederick Pollock. Second Edition. [Macmillan & Co. $2.50.] From this second edition of Clifford's essays, two papers, "rather mathematical than philosophical," have been omitted, being included in the volume of mathematical papers published in 1882. The volume has now a unity of thought which the first edition lacked. Mr. Pollock has revised the admirable introduction, which remains one of the best biographical sketches in the language. As they now stand in this compact volume these essays are accessible to a larger public than could purchase them in the first edition, the early product of a rare philosophical genius, who, unhappily, did not live long enough to outgrow certain crudities in his speculations on morals and religion, but whose work, as a whole, no student of later scientific thought can neglect.

A Primer of Michigan History. Compiled by William J. Cox. [Lansing: H. R. Pattengill.] This little book has grown out of the experience of Supt. William J. Cox of Hancock, Mich., who has found the usual text-book on United States history deficient in the special history of the individual States. It is designed for the pupils of the public schools, and for private students, but will prove interesting to any one who may desire to know anything of the history and resources of Michigan. It contains an introduction and five chapters, respectively on the French Period—1634 to 1760; the English, 1760 to 1796; the Territorial, 1796 to 1837; on Michigan as a State—1837 to 1886; and A Brief Sketch of the Material Resources. A list of one hundred and fifty questions and an index complete this little book of 102 square 12mo pages.

The Dragon, Image, and Demon; or, The Three Religions of China. By Rev. H. C. Du Bose. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $2.00.] Rev. Mr. Du Bose, for fourteen years, now, a missionary representing the Southern Presbyterians at Soochow, evidently belongs neither to the number of ordinary missionaries who can see nothing good in "heathen" religions, nor to that smaller band of men, like Dr. Legge and Spence Hardy, who have studied the faiths they confronted in China and India with deep appreciation and earnest scholarship. We can recognize much that is morally admirable in Confucianism and Buddhism, even in Taoism, but the absurdities and follies of these systems receive by far the larger share of his attention, and he does not justify his contrast to a famous poem of our day in heading a chapter, "Buddha the Night of Asia." The description of the curious manner in which the three religions just named are dovetailed in China is yet very spirited, and there is a mass of detail given about the actual working of these faiths in the China of today, quite fully illustrated, which makes his work of no small value to the student of comparative religion, while the ordinary reader will find here much entertainment and instruction.

The Family. An Historical and Social Study. By Chas. F. Thwing and Carrie F. B. Thwing. [Lee & Shepard. $2.00.] Rev. Mr. Thwing and Mrs. Thwing, now of Minneapolis, have illustrated in their authorship of this work the position of entire equality in the marriage relation which they maintain. No sign appears that one deserves more credit than the other for this valuable compilation of trustworthy information concerning the history of the family in all the historic ages, and this well-proportioned exposition of its place and function in modern society. Under the head of "The Family Destroyed" the alarming statistics of divorce in the last generation are presented; to check the evil tendency to laxity, the authors advocate judicial separation for minor offences, while full divorce should be granted only "for adultery, attempt on life, very grave cruelty, and long continued desertion." In respect to property rights under marriage the anomaly of favoring the wife more than the husband is condemned, and the abolition of dower and curtesy recommended.

A second edition, in four volumes, of the praiseworthy English translation of Lanfrey's History of Napoleon, calls for no special comment, except a word of commendation with regard to the tasteful manner of its publication. Lanfrey's work was at once recognized on its first appearance as indispensable to the student of the Napoleonic career, and time has only emphasized the verdict. The author was the first to make use of the vast mine of material to be found in Napoleon's correspondence, and his account may therefore rightly be regarded as "the first essay toward a serious estimate" of the life and character of the Emperor. Other materials of importance have come to light since the pen was struck by death from the hand of Lanfrey, but they seem to confirm rather than to weaken his opinions, which, in their discriminating severity, have had so much influence in transforming the popular conception of Napoleon as a ruler and as a man. [Macmillan & Co. $9.00.]

Rosalie Kaufman has made a serviceable abridgment of Agnes Strickland's warm defence of The Life of Mary Stuart, following the original closely, and omitting only passages of secondary importance. In spite of Mignet and Froude Mary Stuart remains and will remain a romantic figure, and those who wish the imaginative view, may follow Strickland with confidence that they will see only the most favorable side of the evidence. It is a book that can be read with pleasure, and its eloquent plea in behalf of the unhappy queen moves to sympathy if not to conviction. This edition has many illustrations gathered from various indifferent sources; it is well printed; but has no index. [Estes & Lauriat. $2.50.]

From L. Couquet, Paris, we have the Sylvie of Gerard de Nerval, got up in the most ravishing style on "petit papier vélin du marais," with forty-two etchings by M. Ed. Rudaux. The delicacy and charm of these illustrations are simply irresistible, and they harmonize exquisitely with the idyllic grace of the dainty novelette in which de Nerval's erratic and evanescent genius found characteristic expression. M. Ludovic Halévy contributes a gossiping introduction, in which he tells us something of de Nerval's untimely fate: "He was a poet, and prose killed him." The typography of the little book is beyond praise. Only one thousand copies were printed, and the plates have been destroyed. [New York: John Delay, 23 Union Square.]

Two Comedies, by F. Donaldson, Jr., scintillate now and then with flashes of borrowed wit, but they do not, in a general way, offer very enlivening reading. They are love comedies, of course. [Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.00.]

To the excellent series of the "Chandos Classics" has been added a reprint of James Atkinson's abridged translation in prose and verse of the Shāh Nāmah of Firdausi. The translation was first published in 1832, and it has held its own in the esteem of scholars, and has no successful rival in English, although a condensed version in prose, made by Helen Zimmern from the French, is a work of decided merit. Atkinson's rendering, however, is regarded favorably, as retaining much of the spirit and Oriental flavor of the original. At the close of the volume, the story of Sohrāb is given in full in sonorous pentameters. The book is one the student of literature cannot afford to neglect. [New York: F. Warne & Co. $1.00.]

Das Kalle Herz, Wilhelm Hauff's charming tale, edited, with English notes, glossary, and a grammatical appendix, by W. H. van der Smisen, on the same lines as the same editor's previous selection from Grimm's tales, is printed in Roman type, and according to the revised German orthography, while the words are accented in the glossary, which, as well as the notes, is compiled with care and accuracy. The appearance of the book is a pleasure to the eye distressed by the old-fashioned Gothic character. [D. C. Heath & Co. 80c.]

Two series of Stockton's Stories have been issued in companion volumes, collecting into a permanent form many favorites from the magazines, including "The Lady or the Tiger?" tantalizingly unfinished, the "Story of Assisted Fate," the absurd "Tale of Negative Gravity," the preposterous attempt of "A Borrowed Month," "Thomas Hyke" and "My Bull Calf," the creepy "Transformed Ghost" and "Spectral Marriage," and not the least characteristic "My Wife's Deceased Sister"—twenty-one in all. Mr. Stockton's resources of comic, grotesque, and ludicrous invention seem inexhaustible. [Charles Scribner's Sons.]

In The Forest Waters the Farm; or, The Value of Woodlands as Reservoirs, we have a translation, by Rev. S. W. Powell, of a prize essay by a French inspector of forests, M. Antonin Rousset. The original, entitled "The Studies of Master Peter about Forests and Agriculture," has had a great circulation in France, where the plantation of forests in the interests of agriculture has been systematically and profitably pursued for the last twenty-five years. In eight dialogues between the school-master and the farmer, Pierre, all the advantages to be gained by re-wooding the bare pastures are expounded, to the conviction of the conservative old farmer who naturally preferred at first the immediate benefit of the scanty pasturage to the more remote benefit from the forests to come. [New York: Forest and Stream Co. 50c.]

Mr. George Gary Bush's brilliantly beautiful little book on Harvard the First American University gives an account of the college for the first century of its existence. Its principal topics are the little now known about John Harvard, whose bequest of about £750 and of his library of 325 books rendered possible the opening of the institution; the early rules of discipline, courses and modes of study, examinations, commencement exercises, characters of the students and of the early presidents; college government, finances and theological characteristics. We find some confusion between the boards of trustees, of fellows and overseers; but in general the style is simple and clear. [Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.25.]

Catherine Owen's Ten Dollars Enough, or "Keeping House Well on Ten Dollars a Week," is a cookery book in the guise of a story. On the narrative of the daily life of a young married couple are strung more than two hundred tested recipes, of which the cheery mistress Molly and her German servant Marty made use in concocting delicious breakfasts, dinners, and teas that made the life in the cottage almost an ideal one, so far as the cookery element goes. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.]

Rev. Julian K. Smyth is a Swedenborgian minister of Boston. Under the title of Foot-prints of the Saviour he has collected some "devotional studies in the life and nature of our Lord." They are based on extreme literalism, and have little contact with modern ideas or the modern spirit. The devotional temper is mediæval. [Roberts Bros. $1.00.]

Religious Progress, a little English book by an octogenarian, seeks to promote union among Christians on the basis of the elementary doctrines of religion and the simplest axioms of morals. Its temper is excellent, but its essential flatness shows its origin to have been in a quite uninspired mind. [Trübner & Co. Half a crown.]

The moral difficulties in the Bible considered by Dr. Newman Smyth of "Andover heresy" fame in The Morality of the Old Testament are such as serve the standing army of assailants of Christianity. Dr. Smyth takes first a broad general view of the principles which should govern our estimate of Old Testament morality, and then applies them to specific cases in point. The essay is interesting and scholarly, but its style demands studious attention on the part of the reader. [Cassell & Co.]

—Miss Kate Hillard, who for some years has been making a special study of Dante, and who is now residing in Rome, has in preparation a translation of the "Convito." The edition will include translations of the notes and comments of the best Italian editors, and of the dedicatory epistle to Can Grande, and also all the references found in the "Convito" to the other writings of the author. Full consideration will also be given by the translator to the different theories concerning Beatrice. The work is expected to be in readiness in about a year's time.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Did Shakespeare Visit Scotland? A friend in New York sends us four "cuttings" from the Evening Post in which this question is discussed, and asks that we will "settle the controversy." The discussion was started by Fleay's statement in his recent Chronicle History of the Life and Work of Shakespeare (p. 232) that the earlier (1601) form of Hamlet "was evidently hurriedly prepared during the journey to Scotland." It is quite like Mr. Fleay, who sneers at former biographers for giving mere fancies as facts, to treat an idle conjecture—which Halliwell-Phillipps, on whom he is particularly severe, does not think worthy even of casual mention—as something so well established that it needs no evidence to sustain it. His remark on p. 43 that the additions to Hamlet, "alluding to the theatrical war and the popularity of the Chapel Children, to which the travelling of the company is attributed" show that "Shakespeare was one of the strolling detachment," can hardly be regarded as such evidence, though Fleay appears to be satisfied with it.

One of the writers in the Post takes the ground that a London theatrical company was not likely to have visited Scotland in Shakespeare's time, on account of the difficulties and dangers of the journey. He says of the supposed tourist on his way to the North:

He would have to foot it, or ride on horseback around the firths, and keep himself not only provisioned and watered for the trip, but armed to the teeth. As to sleeping-places, he would have to protect himself against wild beasts as well as against the weather. . . . According to the libraries, Mr. Daly could take his company to Wrangell Land for a professional season with less expense and labor, and more pecuniary profit than William Shakespeare's taking his London company to Scotland.

It is certain, however, that Master Laurence Fletcher did take his company from London to Scotland in 1599, as another company had been taken ten years earlier, in 1589; but there is no evidence whatever that Shakespeare went thither with either of them. Knight devotes an entire chapter (pp. 419-443) of his Biography to the question, "Did Shakspeare visit Scotland?" and endeavors to prove that, though he probably did not do so in 1589 or 1599, he did in the autumn of 1601; but his elaborate argument seems to us inconclusive, and, so far as we know, has convinced none of the critics.

For an excellent résumé of the discussion, see Furness's "New Variorum" Macbeth, pp. 407-410. As we have said again and again, that edition is a condensed library of Shakespearian literature for the plays it includes. Every question in any way connected with them—as this supposed Scotch visit with certain details in the text of Macbeth—is exhaustively treated in those encyclopædic volumes. No scholar—least of all one who ventures into a controversy in print—can afford to do without them.

PERIODICALS.

The Century Magazine for January maintains the even level of excellence, and has rather more pronouncedly than usual the American tone, which is one of its popular characteristics. The life of Lincoln treats of Lincoln's removal to Springfield, his relations with the Speeds, the marriage of Lincoln, and his part in the Clay campaign of 1844. The Anne Rutledge episode, which some biographers have dwelt upon as significant, is passed over in six lines. More is said of the "young lady from Kentucky," to whom Lincoln proposed marriage after a curious courtship, and whose refusal had a serious effect upon him. Very little is said of Mrs. Lincoln, and it is evident that she is to play a slight part in the history. Elsewhere in this number Professor Langley, we are glad to see, renews his fascinating account of "The New Astronomy" with a paper on "Comets and Meteors." Mr. Cable's Louisiana story of "Carancro" has in abundance what it was once the fashion to speak of as local color. Edward Atkinson reveals in skillfully arranged diagrams and statistics the vast material resources of the United States, and predicts that the possibilities of competition thus ensured will force a general European disarmament. Mr. Henry James gives a fine and discriminating analysis of the histrionic talent of Coquelin. George Bancroft is the subject of a sketch by George M. Sloane, who treats his subject with becoming dignity and a certain amount of reserve. The frontispiece portrait of Bancroft, drawn by J. W. Alexander, is strongly conceived, and is bold and free in its execution.

Two serial stories begin in the Atlantic for January. "The Second Son," in which Mrs. Oliphant and Mr. Aldrich coöperate, deals with the fortunes of an English country family, and is quite in the Trollopian vein. In "Paul Patoff" Mr. Marion Crawford promises to register another success; the scene is Constantinople, and the leading characters are two Russian brothers, with a mysterious dark-eyed woman in a yashmak moving in the background. Agnes Repplier writes of "What Children Read," and laments, not without reason, that the masterpieces of imaginative literature are no longer regarded as suitable intellectual food for young people. "After reading a few modern stories," says Miss Repplier, "one is troubled with serious doubts as to the moral usefulness of adults;" and she has much to say of the self-righteousness and independence of the favorite types in the books now popular with children. Mr. Hamerton continues to discuss "French and English" with lucidity and impartiality. Mr. Hamerton remembers when Englishmen first began to wash themselves all over every day, and says that the custom is not now as extensive as many foreigners believe. The French, he says, are becoming a cleaner people, but the English are only about forty years in advance of them in this respect. The most serious and weighty paper in this number of the Atlantic is that by George Frederic Parsons on "The Saloon in Society," which deals with the too familiar truths of the drink evil in an original and impressive way. We must not fail to mention Miss Edith Thomas's Arcadian rhapsody on "Men and Trees," and Margaret Vandegrift's charming little allegorical tale of "The King Who Went Out Governing."

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Duke of Argyle has a new book ready called Scotland as It Was And as It Is.

Mr. W. A. Croffut's book about The Vanderbilts is published in London by Griffith, Farran & Co., and is pronounced by the Spectator "interesting because the subject is interesting," with the opinion added that "there is as much flunkeyism" in it "as if it were the life of a Royal Duke written by a Gold-Stick-in-Waiting."

A History of the Life and Work of the martyred Bishop Hannington, of Eastern Equatorial Africa, by E. C. Dawson, is out in London; an addition to the literature of Christian heroism. [Seeley & Co.]

Our readers have heard of Sir Richard Burton's famous translation of the Arabian Nights, made for scholars, and limited to a thousand copies. Lady Burton, aided by Mr. Justin McCarthy, has now prepared a "Household Edition" of the same for popular reading, marked by a good deal of abridgment, of course, but for which Miss Amelia B. Edwards vouches in the Academy, "not merely as a suitable gift for young folk, free libraries, and mechanics' institutes, nor even as an inexhaustible storehouse of Oriental legends, superstitions, proverbs, poetry, manners, customs, and the like, but as a most remarkable tour de force in the way of literary workmanship." A singularity of the style is the rhymed cadence into which it falls, after the Arabian manner, of which the following paragraph is an example:

So Nur-al-Din thanked him and rose, he and the damsel, and followed him into the garden; and lo! it was a garden, and what a garden! The gate was arched like a great hall, and over walls and roof ramped vines with grapes of many colors; the red like rubies, and the black like ebony; and beyond it lay a bower of trellised boughs, growing fruits single and composite, and small birds on branches sang with melodious recite, and the thousand-noted nightingale shrilled with her varied shrill; the turtle with her cooing filled the site; the black-bird whistled like human wight, and the ring-dove moaned like a drinker in grievous plight. The trees grew in perfection all edible growths, and fruited all manner fruits which in pairs were bipartite; with the camphor-apricot, the almond apricot, and the apricot "Khorasani" high; the plum, like the face of beauty, smooth and bright; the cherry that maketh teeth shine clear by her sleight, and the fig of three colors—green, purple, and white. There also blossomed the violet as it were sulphur on fire by night; the orange with buds like pink coral and marguerite; the rose whose redness makes the loveliest cheeks blush with despatch; and myrtle and gilliflowers and lavender with the blood-red anemone from Nu'uman high. The leaves were all gemmed with tears the clouds had dight; the chamomile smiled showing teeth that bite, and Narcissus with his negro eyes fixed on Rose his sight; the citrons shone with fruits embowed, and the lemons like balls of gold; earth was carpeted with flowers tintured infinite; for Spring was brightening the place with joy and delight; and the streams ran ringing to the birds' gay singing, whilst the rustling breeze upspringing attempered the air to temperance exquisite (pp. 331, 332).

—The édition de luxe of The Book of the Tile Club is without doubt one of the most noteworthy productions of the book-making art in America. All the full-page illustrations are printed in various tints on Japanese paper, and the binding, of imported vellum, is of significant merit. The edition is limited to one hundred numbered copies at $50 each.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—D. Lothrop & Co. have in press Poems in Many Tones, by Professor C. E. D. Roberts of King's College, Windsor, Canada; Christmas Eve and Easter Day and Other Poems, by Robert Browning, edited with notes by Heloise E. Hersey and provided with a preface by W. J. Rolfe; Dame Heraldry, a popular account of heraldic devices, by F. W. S., with nine full-page plates in colors; and, in the "Spare Minute Series," a volume of compilations from Ruskin, by Rose Porter.

—The Atlantic Monthly for February will contain a poem by James Russell Lowell, filling about five pages of that magazine, the general trend of the poet's thought being a protest against the materializing tendencies of the times. In the March number of the Atlantic will appear the first part of Dr. Holmes's narrative of his recent European outing—"Our Hundred Days."

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have in preparation The Millionaire, a story by Bret Harte; Talks about Law, a popular exposition of what law is and how it is administered, by E. P. Dole; and a new edition of W. W. Story's Roba di Roma. On the 15th inst. this house will publish Mr. Bishop's Golden Justice, Pioneer Quakers, by Richard P. Halowell, and, in the "Riverside Literature Series," part second of Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales.

—After three years of persistent work in the preparation of text and illustrations, Cupples, Upham & Co. have just ready Rambles in Old Boston, New England, by Rev. Edward G. Porter, the illustrations, of which there are upwards of one hundred, having been engraved from sketches by George R. Tolman and printed in a warm-toned brown ink. This book is to be sold exclusively by subscription. In connection with it, should be mentioned a little brochure by Samuel Adams Drake on the Old Boston Taverns and Tavern Clubs, with eleven illustrations of signboards pertaining to the most noteworthy of these ancient hostelries. A portion of the narrative was originally read before the Bostonian Society, but most of it is now first made public; a good deal of the material employed was collected by the late S. G. Drake.

—Professor E. C. Smyth's argument in The Andover Heresy trial, and The Creed of Andover Theological Seminary, by Rev. D. T. Fiske, D.D., are two pamphlets bearing the imprint of Cupples, Upham & Co.

—Sons and Daughters, a novel by the author of Margaret Kent, is in the press of Ticknor & Co., who will also publish this month, Happy Dodd, by Rose Terry Cooke, and The Lay of the Last Minstrel, edited with notes by W. J. Rolfe.

—We print the following note as it comes to us from the publishers: "A work which is reported to be of a remarkable character will be published by Roberts Bros. in February. It is called Through the Gates of Gold; and though by a well-known author, it was submitted to that house under conditions of the strictest secrecy, and nothing concerning the writer's identity or nationality is to be revealed. As Roberts Bros.

have had much experience in the secret-keeping business, there seems to be little prospect that the mystery surrounding the origin of the work will be penetrated. The book deals with problems of the future life in an unusual manner, and it is believed that it will make as much of a sensation as did The Gates Ajar. Its simultaneous publication in London has been arranged for."

—A batch of four novels will be issued by Roberts Bros. on the 15th: A Question of Identity, in the "No Name Series," Mabel Stanhope, by Kathleen O'Meara, Agatha and the Shadow, the second volume in the "Old Colony Series," and A Year in Eden, by Harriet Waters Preston. A translation of Balzac's Médecin de Campagne—The Country Doctor—will be ready early in February.

—A second edition of Dr. D. G. Haskins's monograph on Ralph Waldo Emerson and his Maternal Ancestors being demanded, the publishers, Cupples, Upham & Co., propose to bring out the work in a more desirable form, finely printed from old-face type, and containing some additional matter and several illustrations never before made public, including a portrait of the mother of Emerson, and a sketch of his early Canterbury home. A few large-paper copies with the illustrations printed on India paper will be made for subscribers at $5.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

Enlarging this department a little, we give, in addition to selected important titles, chiefly of articles on literary topics, the contents of leading English periodicals in full.

American Jottings. Grant Allen. Fortnightly, Dec.
Americanisms. Notes on. R. A. Proctor. Knowledge, Dec.
Athens, The British School at. Macmillan's, Dec.
Balzac, Novels of. III. Temple Bar, Dec.
Book-Trade, The Leipzig. W. C. Dreher. Andover Rev., Nov.

Bunyan as an Allegorist and Preacher. J. O. Murray. Homiletic Rev., Jan.
Chess Masters of Today. J. Hoffer. Fortnightly, Dec.
Editors, Pre-Revolutionary, A Group of. S. G. W. Benjamin. Mag. of Am. Hist., Jan.

Elective System, Possible Limitations of. I. Geo. H. Palmer. Andover Rev., Dec.
English Literature at the Universities. Macmillan's, Dec.
Faust, Illustrations of. Temple Bar, Dec.

History in Punch. II. F. C. Barnard and Arthur A. Beckett. Fortnightly, Dec.
Hugo, Victor. Parts I-IV. Revue Suisse, May-Aug.
Hymns and Hymn Tunes. D. E. Hervey. Church Review, Dec.

Literary Log-rolling. J. C. Adams. Forum, Jan.
Newspaper, The Sunday. T. W. Chalmers. Homiletic Rev., Jan.

Novel, The Modern. T. S. Perry. The New Princeton, Nov.

Outcast, London. G. S. Reaney. Fortnightly, Dec.
Roland, Song of. Temple Bar, Dec.

Science and Morals. Prof. Huxley. Fortnightly, Dec.
Shelley, The Character of. J. Verschoyle. Fortnightly, Dec.

Whist Players' Puzzles. Knowledge, Dec.
Whittier, John G. R. E. Prothero. Longman's, Dec.

Blackwood's Magazine.—Home Rule for Scotland; Saracinesca. By F. Marion Crawford. Chaps. 22-24; Musings without Method. Mutiny Quelled by One Determined Man—Of Pattens and Stage-Waggons—Roman Jack; The Popular Pastime—Cricket; The Fall of an Island; Novels: "The Children of Gibbon," "Princess Casamassima," "Sir Percival," "A Bachelor's Blunder," Confederation—the Solvent of the Eastern Question. By George Baden-Powell; The Scotland of Mary Stuart. No. IV. Politics and Religion. By John Skelton.

The Contemporary Review.—The Army: Welsh Disestablishment. By Stuart Rendel, M.P.; Goethe and Philosophy. By Professor Edward Caird; Sea Phrases. By W. Clark Russell; Christianity as the Absolute Religion. By Canon Westcott; Tenant Right and Agrarian Outrage in France. By R. E. Prothero; Dean Plumptre's "Dante." By the Bishop of Ripon; Ten Years of National Growth. By M. G. Mulhall; Mohammedanism in Central Africa. By Joseph Thomas; Domesday Survivals. By Canon Isaac Taylor; Contemporary Records.

The National Review.—An Empire Institute. By George Baden-Powell, C.M.G.M.P.; The Representation of the Laity. By the Bishop of Sydney; France as It is and Was. By a Parisian; The British Merchant Service. By W. B. Whall; Open Spaces and Physical Education. By Lord Brabazon; Modern Philosophy: Realism v. Idealism. By R. S. Moffatt; A Practicable Experiment in Home Rule. By Almeric Fitzroy; After Horace. By Harold A. Perry; Why Break Up the Marriage Code?

By Percy Greg; Life at the Scotch Universities. By J. Leys; Peasant Proprietors in Germany. By Lady Paget; Canon Kingsley as a Naturalist and Clergyman. By Henry Evershed; Corporation Reform. By John Reynolds; Correspondence.

The Nineteenth Century.—On the Suppression of Boycotting. By the Hon. Mr. Justice Stephen; Nova Scotia's Cry for Home Rule. By Mrs. Fellows; The Classes, the Masses, and the Glasses. By Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Bart., M.P.; The "Hamlet" of the Seine. By Lady Pollock; Buying Niagara. By J. Hampden Robb (ex-State-Senator); Massage. By Lady John Manners; A Suspended Conflict. By the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers; Rural Enclosures and Allotments. By Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice and H. Herbert Smith; A Thought-Reader's Experiences. By Stuart C. Cumberland; The Loyalty of the Indian Mohammedans. By Sir Wm. H. Gregory; A Flying Visit to the United States. By the Right Hon. Lord Brassey.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES OF GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES, etc. Edited by Brander Matthews and Lawrence Hutton. Macready and Forrest and their Contemporaries. Cassell & Co., Limited. $1.50

HOME LIFE OF GREAT AUTHORS. By Hattie Tyng Griswold. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

YEARS OF EXPERIENCE. By Georgiana Bruce Kirby. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY. By J. A. Symonds. Harper & Brothers.

HUME. By Wm. Knight, LL.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF STEPHEN GIRARD. With an Appendix Descriptive of Girard College. By Henry Atlee Ingram. 3d Edition. Philadelphia: National School of Oratory.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER IN THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. By Frank Wilkeson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vol. VIII. Burton-Cantwell. Macmillan & Co.

Essays and Sketches.

SELECTIONS FROM BUDDHA. Tr. by Samuel Beal and Ed. by F. Max Müller. Cupples, Upham & Co. 50c.

THE NEW PRINCETON REVIEW. VOLUME II. A. C. Armstrong & Son.

PETER PLIMLEY'S LETTERS AND SELECTED ESSAYS. By Sidney Smith. Cassell & Co., Limited. Paper 10c.

BROWNING'S WOMEN. By Mary E. Burt. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00

ABOUT MONEY AND OTHER THINGS. A Gift-Book. By the Author of John Halifax. Harper & Brothers.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. By Victor Hugo. Translated by Melville B. Anderson. A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.00

Fiction.

GRAHAM'S LADDIE. By Julia McNair Wright. With Map. Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25

WAYS AND MEANS. By Margaret Vandegrift. Illustrated. Porter & Coates.

THE GUILTY RIVER. By Wilkie Collins. Harper & Brothers. Paper 25c.

TCHITCHIKOFF'S JOURNEYS. By Nikolai Vasilievitch Gogol. Tr. by Isabel F. Haggood. 2 Vols. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.50

TERESA ITASCA AND OTHER STORIES. By Avery McAlpine. Funk & Wagnalls.

FOES OF HER HOUSEHOLD. By Amanda M. Douglas. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

A DAUGHTER OF THE PEOPLE. By Georgiana M. Craik (Mrs. A. W. May). Harper & Brothers. Paper 20c.

A BANKER OF BANKERSVILLE. By Maurice Thompson. Cassell & Co., Limited. $1.00

THE MINISTER'S CHARGE. By William B. Howells. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

GOLDEN BELLS. By R. E. Francillon. Harper & Bros. Paper 25c.

DOCTOR CUPID. By Rhoda Broughton. J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.

THE WITCHING TIME. Tales for the Year's End. Edited by Henry Norman. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 25c.

THE SILENT WOMAN. By Clinton Ross. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

THEIR PILGRIMAGE. By Charles Dudley Warner. Illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. Harper & Brothers.

IN THE WRONG PARADISE AND OTHER STORIES. By Andrew Lang. Harper & Brothers.

AN UNFORTUNATE WOMAN AND ASS'VA. By I. S. Turgénief. Tr. by Henry Gersoné. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.

MY LODGER'S LEGACY; or, The History of a Recluse. Written by Himself. Compiled and Arranged by Robert W. Hume. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00

THE TRIAL OF GIBBON AND COUNTESS ALMARA'S MURDER. By Julian Hawthorne. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.

JOHN WESTACOTT. By James Baker. Harper & Bros. Paper 20c.

A MODERN TELEMACHUS. By C. M. Yonge. Harper & Bros. Paper 25c.

CASHEL BYRON'S PROFESSION. By George Bernard Shaw. Harper & Bros. 25c.

DOLLARS AND DUTY. By Emory J. Haynes. James H. Earle. $1.50

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor Hugo. With Illustrations. In 5 Vols. George Routledge & Sons. $15.00

History.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY OF IRELAND. By George Makepeace Towle. Illustrated. Lee & Shepard. $1.75

UNCLE SAM'S MEDAL OF HONOR. Compiled by Gen. Theodore F. Rodenbough. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

THE AZTECS, THEIR HISTORY, MANNERS AND CUSTOMS. By Lucien Biart. Tr. by J. L. Garner. With Map and Illustrations. A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.00

THE STORY OF THE MOORS IN SPAIN. By Stanley Lane-Poole and Arthur Gilman. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

A SHORT HISTORY OF PARLIAMENT. By B. C. Skotowe. Harper & Brothers.

SOCIETY IN THE ELIZABETHAN AGE. By Hubert Hall. With Colored and Other Plates. London: Swan, Sonnenschein, Lowrey & Co. $3.50

HISTORY OF THE SECOND ARMY CORPS IN THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC. By Francis O. Walker. With Portraits and Maps. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

THE CHIEF PERIODS OF EUROPEAN HISTORY. Six Lectures by Edward A. Freeman. Macmillan & Co. $2.50

Holiday Publications.

ABIDING. Compiled by Editor of Rest and Peace. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 35c.

CONFIDING. Same Editor and Publisher. 35c.

LITTLE RHYMES IN BROWN. By Lucy Evangeline Tilley. Westerly, R. I.: George C. Champlin.

ISAAC ABBOTT. Illustrated. Cincinnati: Robert Clarke & Co. Paper. By mail $1.00

GRANDMOTHER'S GARDEN. By Eben E. Rexford. Illuminated. A. C. McClurg & Co. $3.00

ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND. By P. Villars. Tr. by Henry Frith. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $10.00

CALENDAR FOR 1887. Illuminated. Boston: Pope Manufacturing Co.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By John Bunyan. Elstow Edition. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.75

THE POSTHUMOUS PAPERS OF THE PICKWICK CLUB. By Charles Dickens. Jubilee Edition. With Notes and Numerous Illustrations. Edited by Charles Dickens the Younger. In 2 Vols. London: Macmillan & Co. $5.00

HAPPY HUNTING GROUNDS. By Wm. Hamilton Gibson. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $7.50

Juvenile.

FIRST WEEKS AT SCHOOL. By J. H. Stickney and S. C. Peabody. With Plain and Colored Illustrations. Ginn & Co. Paper.

THE LAND OF FIRE. By Capt. Mayne Reid. Illustrated. Frederick Warne & Co. $1.50

HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. Second Series. Edited by J. H. Stickney. Ginn & Co. 45c.

HOW? OR, SPARE HOURS MADE PROFITABLE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. By Kennedy Holbrook. Illustrated. Worthington Co. $2.00

BETTY'S DECISION. Tr. from the German by Mary E. Ireland. Lutheran Publication Society. 60c.

JACK AND THE BEAN-STALK. English Hexameters by Hallam Tennyson. Illustrated by Randolph Caldecott. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Philosophy.

PSYCHOLOGY. By John Dewey. Harper & Brothers.

THE ORIGIN OF THE FITTEST. ESSAYS ON EVOLUTION. By E. D. Cope. D. Appleton & Co.

Poetry.

MY RECITATIONS. Compiled by Cora Urquhart Potter. With Portrait. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

LIBER AMORIS. By Henry Bernard Carpenter. Ticknor & Co. $1.75

LYNES AND INTERLINES. By Julia P. Boynton. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE PORT'S PRAISE. By Henry Hamilton. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

LYRICAL POEMS. By Alfred Lord Tennyson. Selected and Annotated by Francis T. Palgrave. White, Stokes & Allen.

PORT-LAUREATE IDYLS AND OTHER POEMS. By Oscar Fay Adams. D. Lothrop & Co.

LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS. Riverside Edition. 6 Vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each $1.50

RISIFI'S DAUGHTER. A Drama. By Anna Katharine Green. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

BALLADS OF BOOKS. Chosen by Brander Matthews. Geo. J. Coombes.

BROTHER AND LOVER. A Woman's Story. By Eben E. Rexford. John B. Alden. 40c.

MAKE THY WAY MINE, AND OTHER POEMS. By George Klinge. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00

ELSIE'S WEDDING, AND OTHER POEMS. By Jasper Barnett Cowdin. Brooklyn: D. S. Holmes.

THE HEART OF THE WREED. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

LOCKSLEY HALL SIXTY YEARS AFTER, ETC. By Alfred Lord Tennyson. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Scientific and Technical.

THE BUDDHIST DIET BOOK. Compiled by Laura C. Holloway. Funk & Wagnalls. Paper 50c.
THE NEW FIRST MUSIC READER. Compiled by Luther Whiting Mason. Ginn & Co. 30c.
BEFORE AN AUDIENCE; or, The Use of the Will in Public Speaking. By Nathan Sheppard. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.
HOW TO BECOME A PUBLIC SPEAKER. Philadelphia: The National School of Elocution and Oratory. Paper 30c.
MINERAL PHYSIOLOGY AND PHYSIOGRAPHY. A Second Series of Chemical and Geological Essays, with a General Introduction. By Thomas Sterry Hunt. S. E. Cassino.

Text-Books.

SCHOOL ROOM GAMES AND EXERCISES. Compiled and Written by Elizabeth G. Bainbridge. Interstate Publishing Co. 75c.
STANDARD SELECTIONS FOR ELOCUTIONARY DRILL AND MEMORY WORK IN GRAMMAR AND HIGH SCHOOLS. Compiled by John D. Billings. Interstate Publishing Co. 60c.

Theological and Religious.

IN QUIETNESS AND IN CONFIDENCE. By Rose Porter. A. D. F. Randolph & Co.
THE BOOK OF REVELATION. Edited by Israel P. Warren, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00
THE PARABLES OF OUR SAVIOUR EXPOUNDED AND ILLUSTRATED. By William M. Taylor, D.D., LL.D. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.75
PILGRIM SONGS FOR THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL. Edited by John W. Tufts. Boston: Congregational S. S. and Publishing Society. 40c.
HYMNS AND ANTHEMS ADAPTED FOR JEWISH WORSHIP. Compiled by Dr. Gustav Gottheil. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
THE PICTURE OF JESUS (The Master). By Rev. H. R. Haweis. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25
NOTES ON THE PARABLES OF OUR LORD. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D. 15th Edition Revised. D. Appleton & Co.
NOTES ON THE MIRACLES OF OUR LORD. By Richard Chenevix Trench, D.D. 13th Edition Revised. D. Appleton & Co.
EPISODES IN CLERICAL AND PARISH LIFE, with Other Sketches on Church Subjects Contributory to Christian Unity. By William Staunton, D.D. E. & J. B. Young & Co.
MEDITATIONS UPON THE LITURGICAL GOSPELS FOR THE MINOR FESTIVALS OF CHRIST, ETC. By Edward Meyrick Goulburn, D.D. E. & J. B. Young & Co.

Travel and Observation.

LETTERS FROM SURPRISE LAND. A Girl's Letter from the West. Cupples, Upham & Co. Paper.
A STUDY OF MEXICO. By David A. Wells. D. Appleton & Co.

Miscellaneous.

EARLY LETTERS OF THOMAS CARLYLE. Edited by Chas. Eliot Norton. With Portraits of Carlyle's Wife and Mother. Macmillan & Co. $2.25.
NATURAL HISTORY READERS. By Rev. J. G. Wood. Second Reader. Illus. Boston School Supply Co.
CHOICE DIALOGUES FOR SCHOOL AND SOCIAL ENTERTAINMENT. Philadelphia: The National School of Elocution and Oratory. Paper 30c.
THE WORKS OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON. Edited by Henry Cabot Lodge. Vol. IX. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

For Sale—"Fewacres."

THE HOMESTEAD AT FARMINGTON, MAINE, so long occupied by the late Jacob Abbott and his sisters, is now offered for sale. The property consists of a roomy and rambling old-fashioned Cottage, with outbuildings, containing in all fifteen or more rooms, and something over two acres of land, charmingly situated just outside the village, and combining seclusion with convenience in an unusual degree. With a few trifling exceptions, the entire premises are in good order. The house is home-like and comfortable; and the grounds, richly endowed by nature, and tastefully improved by Mr. Abbott himself, are adorned with paths, terraces, groves, hedges, seats, arbors, and magnificent elms. The beauties of Farmington as a New England village, its excellent school privileges, the famed loveliness of the Sandy River Valley, and the proximity of the Bangsley Lakes, Old Blue, and other pleasure resorts in Western Maine, make "Fewacres" even apart from its associations, a singularly desirable estate for a family wishing a summer abode or a country residence all the year round. Price low. Address the executor,

EDWARD ABBOTT,

11 Dana Street, Cambridge, Mass.

FOR SALE.

The unbound numbers of the Literary World, from 114 to 234 inclusive, excepting 115, 128, 140, 170, 171, 180, 190 and 211. Address Mrs. M. E. K. Ross, Rutland, Vt.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

LONGFELLOW'S WORKS.

In the New Riverside Edition. Complete in eleven volumes. Crown octavo.

POETICAL WORKS.

In six volumes. Cloth, $9.00; half calf, $16.50; half levant, $24.00.

PROSE WORKS.

In two volumes. Cloth, $3.00; half calf, $5.50; half levant, $8.00.

TRANSLATION OF DANTE.

In three volumes. Cloth, $4.50; half calf, $8.25; half levant, $12.00.

COMPLETE SETS.

Cloth, $16.50; half calf, $30.25; half levant, $44.00.

This edition has Five Steel Portraits, and copious Literary, Historical, Biographical and Bibliographical Notes.

Progressive Orthodoxy.

A Contribution to the Christian Interpretation of Christian Doctrines. By the Editors of the Andover Review, Professors in Andover Theological Seminary. $1.00.

The trial of the Andover Professors for "heterodoxy," largely for what they published in this book, renders it a work of unusual interest.

The February Atlantic

Will have a poem over five pages long, entitled

CREDIDIMUS JOVEM REGNARE,

By James Russell Lowell;

And the first of a series of articles

By Oliver Wendell Holmes,

Describing his recent visit to England, under the title,

OUR HUNDRED DAYS;

Continuations of the Two Notable Serial Stories:

THE SECOND SON,

By Mrs. M. O. W. Oliphant

And T. B. Aldrich,

PAUL PATOFF,

By F. Marion Crawford,

Author of "A Roman Singer," "Mr. Isaacs," etc.;

THE FEDERAL CONVENTION,

By John Fiske,

Continuing his admirable papers on American History;

A DAY,

A Poem by John G. Whittier;

And Short Stories, Essays, etc.

N. B. Now is the time to subscribe.

$4.00 a year, postage free.

ANDOVER REVIEW

For JANUARY has articles on

"Possible Limitations of the Elective System," by Prof. GEORGE H. PALMER; "The Theology of Mission Epochs," by Rev. GEORGE A. JACKSON; "Nathaniel Hawthorne," by Rev. C. C. STARBUCK; "The Moral Dangers of Musical Devotees," by VIDA D. SCUDDER; "A Bible Study—Christ's Teaching Concerning Heredity," by Prof. GEORGE HARRIS; EDITORIAL ARTICLES: Christianity and its Modern Competitors, (II.) Social Ethics; City Evangelization, and A Leaf from History; SOCIOLOGICAL NOTES; "The Text of Ezekiel," by Professor MOORE; "Current German Thought," by ARTHUR C. McGINNANT; Book Reviews. 35 cents; $4.00 a year.

Now is the Time to Subscribe.

Postal Notes and Money are at the risk of the sender, and therefore remittances should be made by money-order, draft, or registered letter, to

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Injuries received in
TRAVEL, SPORT OR BUSINESS
ALL Around the GLOBE
 ARE INSURED AGAINST BY

THE TRAVELERS
OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Original Accident Company of America,
 Largest in the World.

Also, a Large and Sound Life Company,

With larger Assets in proportion to its Liabilities than any other Successful Company.

Ask Agents to show a copy of our
New Life Policy.

Lowest Rates of Any Liberal Policy Yet
 Issued.

NO CONDITIONS OR RESTRICTIONS
 WHATEVER AFTER TWO YEARS.

Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide
 Travel.

Cash Surrender values, Paid-up Policy, or Special Term Insurance, Plainly Stated in Every Policy Issued.

Paid Policy-Holders over $11,500,000.

Assets, $8,417,000. Surplus, $2,096,000.

RATES AS LOW AS TWENTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE
 WILL JUSTIFY.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, Pres. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.
 JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst. Sec.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

FOR

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 4.30 P. M. Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.
 A. A. FOLSON, Supt. B. & P. R. R.

WHEN YOU GO TO

TROY OR ALBANY

Take the EXPRESS TRAIN leaving Boston at 10.30 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted, via Hoosac Tunnel Route, arriving at Troy 6.55 A. M. and Albany 7.25 A. M., connecting with Morning Trains via D. & H. C. Co., West Shore and New York Central Railroads, for all points North and West. Palace Sleeping Cars, Passenger Coaches and Baggage Cars run through without change from Boston to Troy and Albany. For Tickets, Sleeping-Car accommodations and further information, apply at the Company's Office, 290 Washington St., Ticket Office, Fitchburg Railroad, Causeway Street Station, Boston, or any authorized Ticket Agent in New England.
 J. E. WATSON, Gen. Pass. Agent. A. V. FISHER, Trav. Pass. Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 30 cents.
 Other advertising pages, 16 "
 Or $30.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 2. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 315. Publishers.

BOSTON, JANUARY 22, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

Charles Scribner's Sons

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

THE SELF-REVELATION OF GOD.

By SAMUEL HARRIS, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Systematic Theology in Yale College. 1 vol., 8vo, uniform with "The Philosophical Basis of Theism," $3.50.

This work is a restatement of the evidence of the existence of God and of the reality of His revelation of Himself, as modified by, and in harmony with, the legitimate results of recent thought, and meeting skepticism in its present positions.

The subject is divided into four parts, the first of which treats of the Revelation of God, in the experience or consciousness of man. The three remaining parts are concerned with the verification of this fundamental fact by the other revelations which God makes of Himself, viz: Part II. His Revelation of Himself as the Absolute Being. Part III. His Revelation of Himself as the Personal God in the Constitution and Course of Nature, and in the Constitution and History of Man. Part IV. His Revelation of Himself reconciling the World to Himself in Christ.

SOME PROBLEMS OF PHILOSOPHY.

By ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER, Professor of Philosophy in Columbia College. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00.

Professor Alexander states briefly, but comprehensively and clearly, those problems of philosophy which may be regarded as still unsolved, and to understand the nature of which is to understand the present condition and work of philosophy itself. The range of the book may be surmised from such titles as "The Problem of the Ultimate Nature of Matter," "The Relation of Belief to Knowledge," "The Problem of the Human Will," "The Immortality of the Soul," "The Doctrine of a First Cause," "The Doctrine of Cause and Effect," etc.

OLD FAITHS IN NEW LIGHT.

By NEWMAN SMYTH. New and Revised Edition. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50.

The current discussions in theology give the appearance of this volume in a new edition a special and timely interest. Dr. Smyth's book is a very comprehensive and singularly clear survey of the whole field of modern thought in relation to the fundamental questions of theology, and a very lucid presentation of the changes which have been effected and the positions which are now held by those who believe in the "new theology."

THE MEXICAN GUIDE.

New Edition for 1887. By THOMAS A. JANVIER. 1 vol., 18mo, with large folded maps, leather, net, $2.50.

In conformity with the original plan of the work, that it should be annually revised and amended, the New Edition for 1887 contains, in addition to other important changes, an entirely new part treating of Provincial Mexico. The Guide has received the official indorsement of the Mexican Government, the warm commendation of the newspaper press, and the substantial approval of the traveling public.

"There is little but hearty praise to be given to Mr. Janvier's work. He has succeeded in producing a happy combination of Baedeker and Murray, uniting the practical helpfulness of the former with the latter's tendency to supply artistic and historical details."—The Nation.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by

Charles Scribner's Sons,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

Containing Standard Works of European Literature, English and Foreign, in the English Language, on

History,	Theology,	Biography,
Poetry,	Art,	Archæology,
Philosophy,	Fiction.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, etc. $1.40 or $2.00 per volume (with exceptions). Complete sets in 677 volumes at special prices, on application.

The following works are recommended to those who are forming public or private libraries. The volumes are sold separately:

Addison's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Bacon's Essays, Moral and Philosophical Works, 2 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Beaumont's Life of Johnson and Tour in the Hebrides, etc. (NAPIER), 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Burke's Works and Life, 9 vols., $1.40 each.
Burns's Life. By LOCKHART, $1.40 each.
Cervante's Don Quixote, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Chaucer's Works (PROF. SKERTON), 4 vols., $1.40 each.
Coleridge's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Defoe's Works, 7 vols., $1.40 each.
Gibbon's Roman Empire, 7 vols., $1.40 each.
Goethe's Works, 14 vols., $1.40 each.
Goldsmith's Works, 5 vols., $1.40 each.
Hasselt's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Lamartine's Works, 8 vols., $1.40 each.
Lessing's Laocoon, etc., $1.40.
Lessing's Dramatic Works, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Milton's Prose Works, 5 vols., $1.40 each.
Moliere's Dramatic Works, 3 vols., $1.40 each.
Petrarch's Lives (new translation by LONE and STEWART), 4 vols., $1.40 each.
Schiller's Works, 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Vasari's Lives of Painters (with new appendix by Dr. RICHTER), 6 vols., $1.40 each.
Burney's (Mme. D'Arblay's) Cecilia, 2 vols., $1.40 each.
Burney's (Mme. D'Arblay's) Evelina, $1.40.
Fielding's Novels, 4 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Petrarch's Sonnets, $2.00.
Mauzoni's Betrothed (I promessi Sposi), $2.00.
Pepys's Diary, 4 vols., $2.00 each.
Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, $2.00 each.
Spinoza's Chief Works, 2 vols., $2.00 each.
Humboldt's Cosmos and Travels, 3 vols., $1.40 and $2.00 each.
Staunton's Works on Chess, 4 vols., $2.00 and $2.40 each.
Gilbart on Banking, 2 vols., $2.00 each.
Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, eleven parts, $1.40 and $2.00 each.

. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock, also of Bohn's Libraries, will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

THE ANATOMY OF NEGATION.

By EDGAR SALTUS. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

CONTENTS: The Revolt of the Orient The Negations of Antiquity—The Convulsions of the Church—The Dissent of the Seers—The Protests of Yesterday—A Poet's Verdict—Bibliography.

THE HAYWARD LETTERS.

Being a Selection from the Correspondence of the late A. Hayward, Q.C. 1834 to 1884. With an Account of His Early Life. By HENRY E. CARLISLE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $7.50.

The importance and great interest of these letters cannot be better proved than by mentioning the names of some of the principal of Mr. Hayward's correspondents, viz.: Mr. Gladstone, M. Thiers, Sir G. Cornwall Lewis, Duke of Newcastle, Count D'Orsay, Mrs. Norton, Lady Dufferin, Lady Palmerston, M. de Rémusat, Louis Blanc, Dumas, Von Radowitz, M. Mignet, Mme. de Goethe, Tieck, Mr. Kingslake, Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, Lord Dalling, M. Montalembert, M. Merimé, Lord Clarendon, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Broughton, Sir Wm. Stirling Maxwell, Mr. Lockhart, Theodore Hook, Sidney Smith, Lady Waldegrave, Mrs. Grote, etc. The correspondence, which commences in 1834, and is continued without a break to the date of Mr. Hayward's death, in 1884, is preceded by an account of his early years, derived from the personal reminiscences of his relations and friends.

CAPITAL.

A Critical Analysis of Capitalist Production. By KARL MARX. Translated from the Third German Edition by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and edited by Frederick Engels. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $12.00.

THE RELIGION OF SOCIALISM.

Being Essays in Modern Socialist Criticism. By ERNEST BELFORD BAX. 12mo, cloth, $1.80.

Burke's (Sir Bernard) Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, etc., for 1887,

Corrected to the latest date. Super-royal, 8vo, cloth, gilt, $18.00.

"Constant reference to the pages of 'Burke' enables us to testify to its invariable accuracy."—Court Journal.

FROM MOZART TO MARIO,

By LOUIS ENGEL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

"No such book of musical recollections has appeared in our time."—World.

"Mr. Engel's book is one to be not quoted, but read."—Saturday Review.

HARPER & BROTHERS' NEW HOLIDAY PUBLICATIONS

OTHER NEW BOOKS.

I.
HAPPY HUNTING-GROUNDS. A Tribute to the Woods and Fields. By W. HAMILTON GIBSON, author of "Highways and Byways," "Pastoral Days," etc. Illustrated by the author. 4to, illuminated cloth, gilt edges, $7.50. (In a box.)

II.
SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER; OR, THE MISTAKES OF A NIGHT. A Comedy. By Dr. GOLDSMITH. With ten full-page photogravure reproductions printed on separate plates, numerous process reproductions and wood engravings from drawings by Edwin A. Abbey. Decorations by Alfred Parsons. Introduction by Austin Dobson. Folio, illuminated leather, gilt edges, $20.00. (In a box.)

III.
HOME FAIRIES AND HEART FLOWERS. Twenty Studies of Children's Heads. With floral embellishments, head and tail pieces, initial letters, etc., by FRANK FRENCH. With poems by MARGARET E. SANGSTER. 4to, illuminated cloth, $5.00. (In a box.)

IV.
THEIR PILGRIMAGE. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Characteristically illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. Post 8vo, half leather, gilt top, $2.00.

V.
THE LAND AND THE BOOK. By WILLIAM M. THOMSON, D. D., forty-five years a missionary in Syria and Palestine. A new and popular edition. In 3 vols., copiously illustrated, square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $9.00 per set. Sold in sets only.

VI.
BOY TRAVELLERS SERIES. With colored frontispieces and profuse illustrations and maps. 8vo, ornamental cloth, $3.00 per vol.

PART I. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey to Japan and China. PART II. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey to Siam and Java. PART III. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey to Ceylon and India. PART IV. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey to Egypt and the Holy Land. PART V. Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey through Central Africa. PART VI. Boy Travellers in South America. PART VII. Boy Travellers in the Russian Empire. (New edition nearly ready.)

The following volumes, profusely illustrated, 8vo, ornamental cloth, $2.50.

HUNTING ADVENTURES ON LAND AND SEA.
PART I. The Young Nimrods in North America.
PART II. The Young Nimrods Around the World.

THE VOYAGE OF THE "VIVIAN" TO THE NORTH POLE AND BEYOND. pp. 298.

OTHER NEW BOOKS.

I.
PSYCHOLOGY. By JOHN DEWEY, Ph. D., Professor in the Michigan University. pp. xii., 428. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

II.
A SHORT HISTORY OF PARLIAMENT. By B. C. SKOTCHDOPOLE, M. A., New College, Oxford. pp. vi., 346. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

III.
ABOUT MONEY AND OTHER THINGS. A Gift-book. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." pp. vi., 224. 12mo, cloth, 90 cents.

IV.
THE GUILTY RIVER. A Novel. By WILKIE COLLINS, author of "The Woman in White," "Armadale," "The Moonstone," etc. pp. 180. 16mo, half cloth, 60 cents.

V.
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY. By J. A. STYMONDS. pp. viii., 186. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents. In the "English Men of Letters" Series. Other volumes of the same series, 12mo, cloth, 75 cents per vol.

VI.
IN THE WRONG PARADISE, AND OTHER STORIES. By ANDREW LANG, author of "Custom and Myth," etc. pp. 256. 16mo, half cloth, 60 cents.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postpaid, to any part of the United States and Canada, on receipt of the price.

HARPER & BROTHERS' CATALOGUE sent on receipt of ten cents' postage.

FEBRUARY ATLANTIC

Now ready, contains following articles:

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL,

A remarkable poem, five pages long.

M. O. W. OLIPHANT AND T. B. ALDRICH,

THE SECOND SON. V.-VIII.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER,

A DAY. A Poem.

F. MARION CRAWFORD,

PAUL PATOFF. III., IV.

JOHN FISKE,

THE FEDERAL CONVENTION.

SUSAN FENIMORE COOPER,

A GLANCE BACKWARD.

OLIVE THORNE MILLER,

A BIRD OF AFFAIRS.

HARRIET WATERS PRESTON,

TWO SERIOUS BOOKS.

LAWRENCE SAXE,

A Striking Two-Part Story,

THE LADY FROM MAINE. I.

Other Essays, Poems, Contributors' Club, etc.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a number.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

NEW BOOKS.

THE EMANCIPATION OF MASSACHUSETTS.

By BROOKS ADAMS. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Mr. Brooks Adams is convinced that certain important aims of the early settlers of Massachusetts have been hitherto very inadequately stated. In this book he attempts to point out these, and to show the steps by which Massachusetts was emancipated from the ecclesiastical and political narrowness, bigotry and intolerance which he claims dominated the Colony down to the Revolution. His book is vigorously written, and challenges careful study.

THE GOLDEN JUSTICE.

A Novel. By WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP, author of "The House of a Merchant Prince," "Detmold," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

This is unquestionably the most striking novel Mr. Bishop has yet written. While appearing serially in the Atlantic Monthly, it attracted marked attention by its plot (which has been pronounced worthy of Hawthorne), its dramatic incidents, its fine discrimination of character, and its excellent narrative style.

THE PIONEER QUAKERS.

By R. P. HALLOWELL, author of "The Quaker Invasion of Massachusetts." 16mo, $1.00.

The author's purpose is to indicate the true place held by the early Quakers in the history of the world's progress towards freedom, as contrasted with the popular theory advanced by prominent historians and essayists, that they were merely religious "cranks."

THE QUAKER INVASION OF MASSACHUSETTS.

By R. P. HALLOWELL. New Edition, revised. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

SHAKESPEARE'S INSOMNIA.

And the Causes Thereof. By FRANKLIN H. HEAD. 16mo, parchment paper cover, 75 cents.

"A clever little brochure, in which the writer quotes copiously from Shakespeare's works to prove that he was a victim of insomnia, and then undertakes to account for it by showing that at the times when these particular plays were written the author was harassed by importunate creditors and heartless attorneys who were trying to make him pay debts which it was beyond his power to pay. . . . Especially interesting to lovers of Shakespearean bibliography."—Chicago Journal.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I. The Geographical and Geological Distribution of Animals.

By ANGELO HEILPRIN, Professor of Invertebrate Paleontology at the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, etc. Vol. 57 of The International Scientific Series. One vol., 12mo, 435 pages, price $2.00.

"In the preparation of the following pages the author has had two objects in view: that of presenting to his readers such of the more significant facts connected with the past and present distribution of animal life as might lead to a proper conception of the relations of existing faunas; and, secondly, that of furnishing to the student a work of general reference, wherein the more salient features of the geography and geology of animal forms could be sought after and readily found."—From the Preface.

II. The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities.

WITH A SURVEY OF MEDIEVAL EDUCATION. By S. S. LAURIE, LL. D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. Vol. 3 of The International Education Series, edited by W. T. HARRIS, LL. D. 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

"In the history of the rise and organization of universities, the student of education finds the most interesting and suggestive topics in the entire range of his specialty. For, in the history of the development of the higher and the highest education, he sees the definite modes by which the contributions of the past to the well being of the present have been transmitted."—From Editor's Preface.

III. Creation or Evolution?

A PHILOSOPHICAL INQUIRY. By GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS. One vol., 12mo, 564 pages, cloth, price $2.00.

"The result of my study of the hypothesis of evolution is that it is an ingenious but delusive mode of accounting for the existence of either the body or the mind of man; and that it employs a kind of reasoning which no person of sound judgment would apply to anything that might affect his welfare, his happiness, his estate, or his conduct in the practical affairs of life."—From the Preface.

IV. The Poison Problem;

OR, THE CAUSE AND CURE OF INTemperance. By FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D., author of "Physical Education," "Household Remedies," etc. 12mo, cloth, price 75 cents.

V. Social Etiquette of New York.

REWRITTEN AND ENLARGED. 18mo, cloth, gilt, price $1.00.

This book has been entirely rewritten and considerably extended. There are several new chapters, and the subject of each chapter has been brought down to date, so as to record the latest changes in social customs.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work will be sent by the publishers, by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3 & 5 Bond Street, New York.
92 Franklin St., Boston.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JANUARY 22, 1887. No. 2.

CONTENTS.

KATY OF CATOCTIN	19
A YEAR IN EDEN	19
DOWDEN'S LIFE OF SHELLEY	19
BROWNING'S WOMEN	21
COUSIN PONS	21
CARLYLE'S EARLY LETTERS	21
BROWNE'S LIFE OF LINCOLN	22
MINOR NOTICES:
Dictionary of National Biography	22
Whitaker's Almanack	23
The Works of Alexander Hamilton	23
Meditations upon the Liturgical Gospels	23
A Short History of Parliament	23
About Money	23
Aphorisms of the Three Threes	23
The Book of Revelation	23
Philosophical Realism	27
The Evangelical Revival in the Eighteenth Century	27
The Parables of Our Saviour	28
Letters from Surprise Land	28
Etc., Etc., Etc.
RECENT POETRY:
Locksley Hall Sixty Years After	25
Post-Laureate Idylls	25
With Reed and Lyre	25
Ariel and Caliban	26
Liber Amoris	26
The Heart of the Weed	26
Ballads of Books	26
Etc., Etc., Etc.
MINOR FICTION:
Count Xavier	27
Vera Nevill	27
In the Clouds	27
A Question of Identity	27
A Secret of the Sea	27
ENGLISH OPINIONS	23
PARAGRAPHS	24
TO JOHN KEATS. A Sonnet. By Francis Howard Williams	24
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	24
THE ANTHONY MEMORIAL. John Edmonds	24
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Shakespeare for the Pocket	28
Victor Hugo's "William Shakespeare"	28
"Shakespearean Scenes and Characters"	28
The Ballad of Anne Hathaway	28
Hansen's Legend of Hamlet	29
NOTES AND QUERIES. 801-806	29
NEWS AND NOTES	29
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	31
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	31

KATY OF CATOCTIN.*

WE recognize in Katy of Catoctin the same refreshing vigor, dramatic interest, and power of vivid portraiture which made The Entailed Hat a noteworthy product in American fiction. Here, as in the foregoing work, are both originality and individuality, and if both are sometimes crude and even grotesque, we may pardon much to a writer who has so firm a command of his material and who follows the varied threads of a most complex theme with an unflagging enthusiasm.

The central motive of the story is to depict the conspiracy of Booth, but it begins further back with John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry, and follows down scene by scene along the dark and bloody path of the civil war till the end is reached with the assassination of Lincoln, and Booth's capture and ignominious death. Many of the characters are historical, and the descriptions of places are evidently the fruits of personal observation. Each of the numerous and heterogeneous array of actors in the drama is set forth in sharp outline and with the color and semblance of life. There is enough in the book to offend the fastidious taste, but there is in it more to interest and to fire the fancy of the reader who is willing to meet the author on his own ground, and there is also a firm and noble patriotism which gives tone to the whole narrative.

We think Mr. Townsend would have done better if he had made his stage smaller and elaborated details more carefully, but taken as it is the book is one that can afford to stand on its own merits; its essential artistic sincerity cannot be denied, and its claim to attention is something that cannot be ignored.

A YEAR IN EDEN.*

THE "Eden" of Miss Preston's new novel is a typical New England town, Pierpont, and the "year" therein, with its "spring" of sweet young love, its "summer" of feverish passion, its "autumn" of withered hopes, and its "winter" of moral death, is a sad chapter of life, such as is sometimes enacted before our eyes, and here is related more with the effect of actuality than that of mere fiction. We are introduced to Pierpont at the moment when its people are saddened by the death of good Dr. Huntingdon, whose ministry has brooded over the town for half a century, and of whom and of whose character and service Miss Preston gives a fine picture. The interest of the story soon gathers around Monza Middleton, the orphaned child of an unknown Italian mother, and her young lover, Arthur Bryce, a manly fellow, the first passages of intimacy between whom are beautiful and fragrant like the apple-blossoms which she waves over his head, as he lies convalescing from injuries received in a runaway accident.

But now the serpent glides into this Eden, in the person of Philip Winslow, a thorough and somewhat spotted man of the world with a lovely but unloved wife. Between the sincere Arthur and the capricious Monza he insinuates his way; Monza is fascinated and he is infatuated; her hot Italian blood and his badly demoralized nature are too much for honor and principle; he persuades her to flee with him; the wife is worse than widowed; Arthur, heart-broken, goes to his death through a hole in the ice—though whether accidentally or by intention the reader hardly can decide; and the curtain falls upon the guilty pair furtively established in one of the palaces of Venice.

Such is a bald outline of this well-rounded, richly furnished, painful history. Enough subordinate characters are mingled with the leaders to give variety, animation, and contrast to the action, and to relieve somewhat the sultry atmosphere, and the scenery is sketched in with a careful and accomplished hand. Refinement of feeling and literary grace would be expected of a novel by Miss Preston; intellectual power, also, with some concessions to the spiritual distrust and unrest of the times, but with a faint though distinct undertone of faith and hope in things better than what are seen. There is an affluence of thought and style, a certain elaborateness and luxuriance of expression, that make the reader feel as if he were in a warm and elegant interior, adorned by a cultivated and tasteful mind. That it is a painful story, A Year in Eden, goes without saying. The cruel heartlessness of Monza, the still more cruel lawlessness of Winslow, and the deadly consequences of their unbridled passion draw a heavy cloud over this once fair Pierpont prospect.

We, writing this notice, have just turned from Professor Dowden's new telling of Shelley's old story. There is something in the fiction of Philip Winslow's cool desertion of Helen for Monza which carries our thoughts back to the fact of Shelley's like desertion of his wife Harriet for Mary Godwin. If both the re-statement of the fact and the telling of the fiction could help to freshly warn the world against loose ideas of marriage and the indulgence of them, the world would be the better.

Miss Preston has given us a strong, fine, impressive story.

DOWDEN'S LIFE OF SHELLEY.*

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY, English poet, was born in 1792 and died in 1822. Within this short period of thirty years was crowded about as much of romantic incident and brilliancy of intellectual achievement as are commonly associated with human lives. At 13 in love with his cousin, at 17 a pamphleteer in the service of atheism, at 19 eloping to Gretna Green with a girl three years his junior, at 20 an imprudent champion of the wrongs of Ireland, at 22 separated from his wife and traveling on the Continent with another woman, at 25 Byron's boon companion, already the friend of Southey and De Quincey, of Leigh Hunt and Keats, as also the author of "Adonais," "Queen Mab," "Alastor," and "Prometheus Unbound," and at 30 drowned in the waters of the Mediterranean and his body burned to ashes upon its shores—such was the life of Shelley, one of the most gifted, fitful, luxuriant, ungoverned natures of his time. The prejudices which his generous and reckless career awakened have somewhat melted away; some misconceptions of his character founded upon ignorance of his motives have been in a degree removed; time has softened the outlines of his distorted image; one biographer after another has added to our knowledge of the truth about him; and in this last, amplest, and perhaps ablest because best equipped of them all, Professor Dowden has given us a study which without hiding the deformities of Shelley's personality or the excesses of his life presents both in the most favorable light consistent with the truth. In an unusual degree it may be said of Professor Dowden's work that it does not speak for the subject, but allows the subject to speak for itself. And what juster act to the memory of Shelley, as we stand over his lifeless body on the beach near Via Reggio, "the tall slight figure," with the volume of Sophocles in one jacket pocket and Keats's poems in the other, than to let the passionate, wild, undisciplined, but well-meant life there briefly ended tell its own dramatic tale?

* Katy of Catoctin; or, The Chain Breakers. A National Romance. By George Alfred Townsend. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* A Year in Eden. By Harriet Waters Preston. Roberts Bros. $1.50.

* The Life of Percy Bysshe Shelley. By Edward Dowden, LL. D. Two Volumes. J. B. Lippincott Co. $9.00.

We have not lacked lives of Shelley before this, notably among them Medwin's, Trelawney's, Hogg's fragment, Lady Shelley's "Memorials," Denis MacCarthy's, and John Addington Symonds's in "English Men of Letters;" but Professor Dowden's will easily come to the front of them all by reason of having not only the help of its predecessors in the field, but the use of large and invaluable masses of original material not hitherto available. Six pages of Dr. Dowden's preface are filled with the simple enumeration of these fresh sources of information, among which may be specified all the Shelley papers in the possession of Sir Percy and Lady Shelley, Mary (Godwin) Shelley's manuscript journal, the great collection of Boscombe Manuscripts, Mr. Buxton Forman's incomparable collection of Shelleyana, Mr. Rossetti's compilation of all autobiographical passages in Shelley's writings, the Frederickson, Morrison, and Lonsdale collections of Shelley letters, and two important lots of documents and letters of which free use was made, but which for private reasons are not introduced to the public here.

With all this wealth of fresh material the reader may expect of his author an elaborate, circumstantial, and fascinating biography, and he will not be disappointed. One seldom runs the paper-knife through the uncut leaves of two octavos disclosing such abundant evidences of interest. Two portraits of Shelley's effeminate, almost ethereal, personality, views of his birth-place and of one or two other scenes associated with him, and a fac-simile of his manuscript slightly illustrate the work. Chapter headings and date notes in the side margins keep the eye effectively on the progress of the narrative, tables of contents and an index facilitate reference, and large type and excellent paper make the reading a physical pleasure. The books are of London manufacture brought promptly out over here by the Lippincotts of Philadelphia. Our personal enjoyment of the first volume has been marred at one vital point [pp. 401-416] by the binder's mistake of inserting a "signature," "2 D," from Vol. II, so that while curiously enough the paging is unbroken, there is a very bad break in the text. But we presume this is an accidental fault in this particular copy, and not an organic fault in the entire edition.

The first volume brings the story down to Shelley's separation from his lawful wife, and to the beginnings of his association with Mary Godwin. The second volume is largely occupied with the narrative of the Continental wanderings, in which Byron bore so conspicuous a part. The work is eminently narrative and descriptive, and scarcely at all critical or judicial. Very seldom does the biographer state an opinion or offer an estimate; his intention seems to be to present the facts, as fully and freely as possible, and to a great extent by means of citation from letters and journals and to let the reader draw his own conclusions. The only exceptions to this habit of reserve are such incidental remarks as the following:

All Shelley's poems are fragments of a great confession.

It was, as Shelley believed, in a peculiar degree a poet's duty to sustain the hopes and aspirations of men in their movement of advance, and at the same time to endeavor to hold their passions in check by presenting high ideals, and showing that the better life of society is not to be won out of the air by sudden and desperate snatching.

It was one of the infirmities of Shelley's character that, from thinking the best of friend or acquaintance, he could of a sudden and with insufficient cause pass over to the other side and think the worst.

The domineering force of Byron's genius produced in Shelley a painful sense of his own powerlessness to play a part in the world of literature.

Shelley was no bookworm; he read to find something; and he communicated the life which study had quickened within him.

But it is impossible to miss the tone of Professor Dowden's memoir or to mistake the leanings of his own mind. Impressing us with his frankness and candor in presenting the evidence in the case, his manner is yet that of sympathy, and his aim one of extenuation. Wherever there is the benefit of doubt to be given he gives it. The free-thinking vagaries of Oxford, the marriage of Harriet Westbrook, the separation from her, the intimacy with Mary Godwin—these and similar difficult points are handled with an unshrinking but a gentle and tender hand. Of the vividness of the style, this account of that memorable scene on the Mediterranean shore is a good example:

The Burning of Shelley's Body.

The people from the surrounding district flocked in crowds to witness so strange a spectacle. "The sea, with the islands of Gorgona, Capraja, and Elba, was before us; old battle-mented watch-towers stretched along the coast, backed by the marble-crested Apennines glistening in the sun, picturesque from their diversified outlines; and not a human dwelling was in sight." Three white wands stuck in the yellow sand from low-water to high-water mark indicated, but not with precision, the place of burial. An hour of silent toil went past before they had discovered the lime in which the body lay concealed; suddenly a mattock with a dull hollow sound struck the skull, causing a general shudder, while the men drew back. The furnace being placed and surrounded by wood, the remains were removed from their shallow resting-place. It was Byron's wish that the skull, which was of unusual beauty, should be preserved; but it almost instantly fell to pieces. (Of the volume of Keats's poems which had been buried with Shelley's body, only the binding remained, and this was cast upon the pyre. Although the fire was greater than that of the preceding day, the body was but slowly consumed. Three hours elapsed before it separated; it then fell open across the breast; the heart, which was unusually large, seemed impregnable to the fire. Trelawney plunged his hand into the flames and snatched this relic from the burning. The day was one of wide autumnal calm and beauty. . . . During the whole funeral ceremony a solitary sea-bird crossing and re-crossing the pile was the only intruder that baffled the vigilance of the guard. Byron, who could not face the scene, had swum off to the yacht. Leigh Hunt looked on from the carriage. Having cooled the furnace in the sea, Trelawney collected the fragments of bones and the ashes, and deposited them in the oaken box. All was over. Byron and Hunt returned to Pisa in their carriage. Shelley and Trelawney, bearing the oaken coffer, went on board the Bolivar. The relics of Shelley's heart, given soon after by Trelawney to Hunt, were, at Mary Shelley's earnest request, supported by the entreaty of Mrs. Williams, confided to Mary's hands. After her death, in a copy of the Pisa edition of "Adonais," at the page which tells how death is swallowed up in immortality, was found under a silken covering the embrowned ashes, now shrunk and withered, which she had secretly treasured.

Dr. Dowden's spiritual portrait of Shelley brings out his love of children, his benevolent instincts, his high-bred courtesy of feeling and manner, the intensity with which he realized his own imaginings, his intolerance of restraint, his sudden and erratic impulses, his enthusiasm of humanity, his love of solitude and his social cravings, his delight in nature, his ambition of authorship, his indignations and his aspirations, his revolutionary ideals, his ecstasies of private happiness, and his sensibility to the sorrow of the world. The standard measurement of Shelley Dr. Dowden's work may not materially alter, but it will add considerably to the details on which it is based, and it may somewhat chasten the feelings with which that measurement is held. It will not, however, it cannot, lessen the detestation, the abhorrence, which every right-minded person must feel for the social theories which found a fruit in Shelley's disordered life, and for the coolly cruel selfishness with which he cast off a wife and took on a mistress, or the painful regret that an intellect so pure and gifts so brilliant should have been linked with a nature so disordered and a life so recklessly hastened to an untimely end.

—Mr. Humphry Ward's new and important work on The Reign of Queen Victoria is a compilation of distinct chapters in different departments of the national life which the Athenaeum enumerates as follows:

The Army, Lord Wolseley; The Navy, Lord

Brassey; The Administration of the Law, Lord Justice Bowen; The Civil Service, Sir R. Welby; The Development of the Constitution, Sir William Anson; National Finance, Mr. Leonard Courtney; India, Sir H. S. Maine; Ireland, Sir R. Blennerhassett; The Growth and Distribution of Wealth, Mr. Giffen; Industrial Organization, Mr. Mundella; Agriculture, Sir J. Caird; The Iron Trade, Sir I. Lowthian Bell; The Cotton Trade, Mr. J. Slagg; Schools, Mr. Matthew Arnold; Science, Prof. Huxley; Literature, Dr. R. Garnett; Medicine and Surgery, Mr. Brudenell Carter; The Theatre, Mr. W. Archer.

BROWNING'S WOMEN.*

MR. ROBERT BROWNING, though a delectable, must be confessed to be a difficult, poet. His lovers are inevitably his students; nor is their labor always rewarded with full assurance of having disentangled the full intention of his utterances.

Theirs, however, is a rewardful study. Only here and there is there a stanza or a couplet so enigmatical as to absolutely defy comprehension, and for these, ardent and ingenious disciples are always ready to invent the meaning which they cannot quite find, and worship it when invented. And, meanwhile, what treasures reveal themselves in the research even to those still capable, like Mr. Matthew Arnold's Goethe, of what dramatic capability, what deep philosophical insight, what force and feeling, what imagination!

Striking a finger on the place
And saying, "thou ailest here, and here;"

But if it be a hard task occasionally for Mr. Browning to explain himself, it is a still harder one when his devotees undertake to explain him. One of the latest of these attempts, Browning's Women, as it seems to us, does but darken a counsel which before was sufficiently obscure. The intent of its author, Miss Mary E. Burt, is to assist such weak-minded readers as quail before difficulties, by making "précis" of the separate women characters of the difficult poems, with their corresponding plot and story, that, seeing them thus clearly outlined, as it were, the student may revert to and grasp the meaning of the original, through the confusing draperies of metaphor and odd touches of reasoning with which the poet has overlaid them. It is the reverse of the process by which artists first settle the pose and anatomy of their figures and then proceed to dress them; for in this case the nude figure, in all its simplicity of beauty, is cut out of its environment and set forth plainly for the admiration and edification of the on-looker.

The idea is a good one, but it does not strike us that "Browning's women" are any easier to understand after Miss Burt has had her will with them. Here and there is a happy bit of delineation, as in "Balaustion" and "Pippa," but Balaustion and Pippa are easily enough understood without explanation. When it comes to Anael of "The Return of the Druses," to Eulalia in "The Saints' Tragedy," to the inexplicable lady of "The Inn Album," we find ourselves as much at sea as ever, and with our confusions rather increased than diminished by the analyst's tendency to foam and froth into such excited phraseology as "springs like a tiger upon the cunning serpent, stamping out his slimy strength," and "rising supreme above the fiend that seeks to outrage love and hurl the hideous monster of evil howling to hell's lower depths." Following a clue through a labyrinth demands above everything calmness and self-restraint, and we should fear that Miss Burt is too strongly a partisan and too passionate a reasoner to serve as guide to the stumbling crowd whom she would fain have follow over her poetical Hill of Difficulty. This may be said, however, that to lose the way with her entails only the vexation of a baffled quest, not a moral loss or a spiritual dis-enrichment.

COUSIN PONS.*

IT is strange to observe how readily the word Shakespearian rises to one's lips when one has read anew a novel by Balzac. The atmosphere of Balzac's novels is anything but Shakespearian, is, as a penetrating critic has justly remarked, "a peculiar artificial atmosphere, musty in quality, and limited in amount"—but the method, the range, these are Shakespearian. In everything that Balzac wrote there is the sense of a superabundant and comprehensive vitality. His characters, moving as they do in a heterogeneous and often grotesque milieu, are inevitably alive. Balzac is the prince of realists because, with all his passion for externals, he has the synthetic quality, the power of combining the elements of humanity into consistent and individual forms.

In Cousin Pons the sense of vitality is uppermost—it penetrates and vivifies every personage—and there is also the power of a tragic, a heart-moving, pathos which none but Balzac could sustain and justify. How they cling to the memory, those gentle and loving souls, Pons and Schmucke! How eagerly we follow every move in the pitiless game of circumstances that involves them in the meshes of fate and crushes them at last! It was Pons who had "contracted the fatal habit of dining well" at the tables of his rich relations, and the gratification of this unyielding passion is the source of all his woes. He becomes "a species of gutter for domestic confidences," and when at last he is turned away from the door of his cousin, Madame de Marville, his tender sensibilities are wounded to the quick. Then it becomes known that the despised musician is the owner of an almost priceless collection of bric-a-brac, and then the vultures cluster about him, flattering, threatening, deceiving, till they break that simple heart and gain their ends. Only Schmucke remains faithful, like a sheep to its foster-charge, and he in turn becomes the victim of the cupidity of others. None but Balzac could have written the closing chapters of this story and represented the grief, the torture, and the unfailing goodness of Schmucke, with the majesty of truth. But, as we have said, the sense of vitality, of living actuality, is uppermost in this book, and as we read we are in a little world where nothing is artificial but the surroundings, where men and women think and speak and act with the inspiration of motives that rule thought, speech, and action in real life everywhere.

To read one of Balzac's novels—or at least one of the best of them, and Cousin Pons is one of the best—to read one of these works a first, a second, or a third time, is an intellectual experience with an enormously expansive tendency. It continues to be a matter for congratulation that the masterpieces of the "Human Comedy" are presented by a translator of rare tact and sympathy in a form at once so faithful to the verbal characteristics of the original and so admirably harmonious in style. To attack Balzac in French is not a light undertaking even for those who are fairly conversant with the complex resources of his native tongue; but there is now no adequate excuse for American readers of cultivation and intelligence who fail to make the acquaintance of what are among the most significant essays in fiction that the world has ever seen.

CARLYLE'S EARLY LETTERS.*

IN spite of the wish of Carlyle as written in his will, "Express biography of me I had really rather that there should be none," materials are fast accumulating for a complete and authentic memoir, and by and by it will be made. Mr. Norton's work is avowedly controversial. It was undertaken at the request of Carlyle's niece, Mrs. Alexander Carlyle, and is composed of selections from the correspondence in her possession. This correspondence, Mr. Norton implies, has been through the hands of Mr. Froude, and the latter made from it the excerpts and deductions which form the foundation of the Reminiscences and the Letters and Memorials of Jane Welsh Carlyle. Mr. Norton charges Mr. Froude with having "given a view of the relations between Carlyle and his future wife, in essential respects incorrect and injurious to their memory," and of the view of Carlyle's character as presented in the biography, Mr. Norton says that "it may be a striking picture, but it is not a good portrait." And so, to justify these assertions, the fateful letters that passed between Carlyle and Jane Welsh prior to their marriage—the letters concerning which Carlyle's "strict command" was, "Burn them, if ever found. Let no third party read them; let no printing of them, or any part of them, be ever thought of by those who love me!"—these sacred letters are once more brought into evidence and further portions of them made public. In justice to Mr. Norton we may say here that he has used them with becoming delicacy, and even with reverence, and that his charges against Mr. Froude are enforced in such a manner as to leave no doubt of their validity. Only a few of Carlyle's letters to Miss Welsh are printed, but they are enough to show that the relations of the two young people were not such as Mr. Froude had portrayed them. In an appendix Mr. Norton summarizes briefly a number of instances wherein Mr. Froude has deliberately forced upon his readers false or distorted impressions, in a narrative which is declared to be a story "founded on fact," elaborated with the art of a practical romancer, in which assertion and inference, unsupported by evidence or contradictory to it, often takes the place of correct statement. Even if the form of truth be preserved, a color not its own is given to it by the imagination of the writer.

* Browning's Women. By Mary E. Burt. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00.

* Cousin Pons. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50.

* Early Letters of Thomas Carlyle. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. 1814-1826. Macmillan & Co. $2.25.

Thus Mr. Norton shows, for instance, that the affection of Miss Welsh for Edward Irving, which Mr. Froude dwelt upon as having "profoundly affected" her character in later years, was in fact only a "temporary passion;" that there is no justification for Mr. Froude's remark that her feeling with regard to Carlyle's devotion was that of an amused coquette at seeing "the most remarkable person that she had ever met with at her feet;" and that the representation of Carlyle as selfish, crotchety, and inconsiderate in the arrangements for marriage and housekeeping is, in general, controverted by the testimony of Miss Welsh's letters, which breathe almost continually a genuine respect and an enduring regard. In fact the correspondence as outlined and quoted by Mr. Norton depicts the natural growth of a mutual love based on a mutual respect, for each understood and admired the high intellectual qualities of the other. "Their faults often prevailed against their love," but "through all the dark vicissitudes of life love did not desert them."

In addition to his severe criticisms of the general method pursued by Mr. Froude, Mr. Norton accuses the editor of the Reminiscences with gross carelessness, or something worse, in the preparation of material for the press. "These letters as printed by Mr. Froude abound in errors and in unmarked omissions of words, clauses, and sentences, by which their tone is sometimes greatly altered. Almost every letter in the Life which I have collated with the original is incorrectly printed."

But this volume of the early letters of Carlyle has a more substantial value than that which pertains to it as an effective piece of controversial literature. It indicates the wholly untrustworthy nature of Mr. Froude's remarkable performance, but it substitutes for the distorted lines of the first picture a not less interesting and much more authentic portrait. The letters cover a period of twelve years in the life of Carlyle, from the time when, a lad of nineteen, he was just leaving college to take up the career of a country school-master, down through the years of apprenticeship to literature to the eve of his marriage in 1826. This was distinctly the formative period in the life of Carlyle, and that period is now, with becoming reservations, unveiled before us. We are enabled to see the genesis of his great talents, and the transformations they wrought in his character; the difficulties, doubts, and forebodings which he encountered; the sturdy simplicity of his home relations; and through all the firm, unalterable confidence in his own destiny as a leader among men. It is a significant and even an inspiring narrative here unfolded; and one that in due season, when the present tide of popular intolerance aroused by Mr. Froude's misleading "relations" has begun to ebb, will be largely instrumental in lifting the memory of Carlyle back to the pedestal of honor where it properly belongs.

BROWNE'S LIFE OF LINCOLN.*

WE doubt if any human life lies as near to the heart of the whole American people as that of Abraham Lincoln. "America's first American," as Lowell calls him, has not the statuesqueness of Washington, with whom the present biographer compares him, but he is flesh and blood, bone of our bone, as Washington can never be felt to be, and in a score of ways his character and career appeal to popular feeling as the elder patriot cannot do. The best evidence of this mighty hold on the common heart is the effect which this book is sure to have upon every reader, fastening his interest before half a dozen pages are turned, fascinating him all the way to the tragic end, and midway provoking by turns his smiles and tears. Was there ever just such a man as Abraham Lincoln? Was there ever just such a service as his? Was there ever just such a time as that which evoked him?

While Mr. Nicolay and Mr. Hay are beginning their more elaborate and perhaps more scientific and scholarly life of Lincoln in the Century, Mr. Browne, a Chicago journalist, has brought to completion a biography, hardly the Life as it is somewhat exclusively called upon the title-page, but one which is certainly a good life, full, faithful, and interesting. Our estimate of its externals is disadvantaged by the fact that we have only as yet the advance sheets, but it is a large octavo of nearly 750 pages, well printed, having a detailed table of contents and an index to proper names, though no general index, and with some fifty or sixty illustrations, among which are two steel plates. The wood-cuts lack artistic uniformity, and some of them, as, for example, the picture of Lincoln studying law on the wood-pile, are very poor; others, especially one or two of the Moss-engraved portraits, are good. The subject and the effective way in which Mr. Browne has handled it would have justified the publishers in a larger outlay on the illustrations.

* The Life of Abraham Lincoln. By Francis F. Browne. New York and St. Louis: N. D. Thompson Publishing Co. Advance Sheets.

The manner of the book is highly anecdotal. Each of the seventeen formal chapters into which it is divided is broken up into short sections, which have their own sub-titles, and almost every one of these is enlivened by a story. The book is, in fact, as full of stories as a pudding of plums. This style gives a scrappy look to the book, and seems to interrupt its continuity; but it makes it extremely readable. A dull, dry book about President Lincoln could probably never be written by anybody knowing how to hold a pen; certainly Mr. Browne has not written one. "Chock-full" are these pages of memorabilia—the homely scenes of the early frontier life, the struggle into position, the exciting contests which attended the opening of the political career, the preferment to the presidency, the wonderful opening of the nation's consciousness and affection towards its new leader, the stormy years of the war, and the deep and sudden pathos of the end.

Mr. Browne should not use the expression "funeral obsequies" as he does on p. 713. But seldom is a false note struck, either in style or in taste, and the story with its rich abundance of details, sometimes amusing, sometimes pathetic, always picturesque, brings out with new distinction the spiritual greatness, the moral strength, the child-like humility, the god-like patience, the tenderness, the humor, the sad solitariness, the elevation, the sympathy, of this commanding and unique figure on the stage of American history.

MINOR NOTICES.

Dictionary of National Biography. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vols. VIII and IX. [Macmillan & Co. Each $3.25.] Any volume in this great cyclopædia of British biography is of value, though of course the volumes differ in interest. There is greater variety and brilliancy in the names included in Vol. VIII, for example, than in those of Vol. IX; while Vol. IX is full of information of families and individuals which have played important parts in British politics. Taking the two volumes together, the shining names are Byron, Canning, Carlyle, and Chalmers, each of whom is treated with elaborate care, Pyron and Carlyle by Mr. Stephen's own hand. Ranged around these central figures are the Burtons and the Butlers, the Camerons and the Campbells—the latter filling altogether nearly 100 pages, the Carys and the Careys, the Carletons and the Carpenters, the Carolines and the Catherines—queens, the Cavendishes and the Cecils. Canute, Cædmon, and Caldecott have a place. The inclusion of the latter, who died only last year, and the mention of Carlyle's "Early Letters," just published, in the sketch of him, illustrate the freshness and completeness with which this work is edited. It is filling its place with tireless pains and admirable fidelity.

Whitaker's Almanack. 1887. [London.] If we were writing in London, or anywhere in Great Britain, we should have to say of the now famous Whitaker's Almanack that it is an indispensable repository of information touching current affairs. For American use it is less adapted, except for students of the British Empire. It would be hard to ask a question about England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, or the Colonies, political, financial, statistical, ecclesiastical, agricultural, industrial, or educational, which this book somewhere will not answer. Some 700 pages strong, it is yet compact enough to slip into a coat pocket.

The Works of Alexander Hamilton. Edited by Henry Cabot Lodge. Vol. IX. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.] This concluding volume of the Works of Hamilton reprints the "untouched original text" of The Federalist, the powerful and famous pamphlet-journal which appeared in New York in 1787 and '8 in support of the then new national constitution. Of its 85 numbers, Hamilton's authorship of 49 has never been disputed; Madison wrote 14, and Jay 4. Of the 18 remaining whose authorship is in doubt, Mr. Lodge ascribes several to Hamilton, with reasons, and divides most of the others between Hamilton and Madison. A critical introduction and a bibliography put the reader in possession of the historical facts. Only 500 copies of this letterpress edition of Hamilton's Works have been printed.

Meditations upon the Liturgical Gospels for the Minor Festivals. By E. W. Goulburn, Dean of Norwich. [E. & J. B. Young & Co.] The greater days of the Christian Year are here provided with a series of short devotional readings, which are historically instructive, theologically learned, and devotionally practical. Few men living are more amply qualified, either in knowledge or piety, for the preparation of such a manual. Attention is paid to some of the minor festivals which are more honored in the English use than the American, as, e. g., St. George's and St. Clement's Days; and prefixed is a chapter of some antiquarian value on the origin of Saint's Days, their Evens or Vigils, and the pruning of the calendar by the Reformers.

A Short History of Parliament. By B. C. Skottowe. [Harper & Bros.] A view of English history, taken from the Houses of Parliament, is not all comprehensive of course, but covers the present and the past five centuries. Mr. Skottowe, who is an Oxford scholar, begins with the roots of parliament in the Folk-moot, or old Anglo-Saxon tribal meetings of freeholders, and ends with Disraelian tactics and Gladstonean eloquence. This path traverses the high lands of English politics, and introduces us by the way to most of the personages who have shaped her destiny.

About Money. By the author of "John Halifax." [Harper & Bros.] Not all of this excellent, admirable book is "about money." Only one of its ten chapters consists of wholesome advice on that vital subject. Several of the papers which follow are stories; one is an appreciative though discriminating discussion of Sisterhoods, founded on a recent visit to the home of one when a young friend of the author was to make her "profession." "Life and its Worth" is a good lay sermon, none the less impressive for being a woman's.

Aphorisms of the Three Threes. By E. O. Towne. [C. H. Kerr & Co.] "The Three Threes" is a social club of nine Chicago gentlemen, who dine together at stated intervals at a down town restaurant. Meeting "every ninth night after the first night of each and every of the nine months following the ninth month of the year," and "seated in threes at three three-legged tables," these nine wise men of Chicago spend the evening in discussion. The drops which distil from their lips Mr. Towne has caught in this little book to the number of one hundred and sixty-two. They are such as the following:

He argues best who never contradicts.

Patience is the noblest form of courage.

He who thinks he needs it not, stands most in need of experience.

He may be bold for a cause that is timid for himself.

Lyrical Poems by Alfred Lord Tennyson. Selected and Annotated by F. T. Palgrave. [White, Stokes & Allen.] This dainty book, of "Golden Treasury" order, in its white parchment covers and with its 250 closely printed pages, contains 112 poems, including such as "A Dream of Fair Women," "Locksley Hall," "The Brook," "Sweet and Low," "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," "The Charge of the Light Brigade," and some of the songs from "The Idyls of the King." There are a few notes at the end of the book, and an index. The type is small, and the absence of "leads" detracts from the beauty of the page.

Democracy and Other Addresses. By James Russell Lowell. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] Besides "Democracy" the subjects of these English addresses are President Garfield, Dean Stanley, Fielding, Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Don Quixote; and two American addresses are added, one delivered at Chelsea, Mass., on Books and Reading, and that at the 250th Anniversary of Harvard College.

Essays. By James Vila Blake. [Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00.] Mr. Blake's thirty subjects are such as individuality, praise, censure, anger, and patience. One essay treats the sublime theme of eternal life. Questions of more general or political character are discussed in the essays on public education and on government. The work is interesting and thoughtful; and, though often decidedly original, it quotes freely from other writers passages illustrative of the author's thought. One of the best essays is that on death. The language is uniformly and noticeably simple, and has a certain antique style, perhaps intentionally, like that of Bacon's essays. At the close is a topical index.

The Book of Revelation. By Israel P. Warren, D.D. [Funk & Wagnalls.] Substantially a popularization of Prof. Stuart's standard commentary. Dr. Warren's criticism is judicial, and his interpretation of the symbolism of the Apocalypse does justice to it as a book of poetry, not of hard and fast prose.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

The prophet of the new "Locksley Hall" records against us many sad, and even shameful defaults. They are not to be denied, and the list probably might be lengthened. The youngest among us will not see the day in which new social problems will have ceased to spring as from the depths, and vex even the most successful solvers of the old; or in which this proud and great English nation will not have cause, in all its ranks and orders, to bow its head before the Judge Eternal, and humbly to confess to forgotten duties or wasted and neglected opportunities. It is well to be reminded, and in tones such as make the deaf man hear, of city children who "soak and blacken soul and sense in city slime;" of maidens cast by thousands on the street; of the seamstress scrimped of her daily bread; of dwellings miserably crowded; of fever as the result; even of "incest in the warrens of the poor." On the last-named item, and the group of ideas therewith associated, scarcely suited for discussion here, I am not sure that the warrens of the poor have more to fear from a rigid investigation than other and more spacious habitations.—Mr. Gladstone, in Nineteenth Century.

Tom Tiddler's Ground is such an exceedingly inspiring and cheerful title that one really cannot attempt to find any fault with it. Miss Marryat seems to have found America answer to the description, and to have picked up there not only gold, but golden opinions, not only silver, but silvern speeches, from all sorts of people—men and others. Her progress was, indeed, not quite unchequered. They ruffled her sometimes by wanting to know her age. Descendants of the Puritans supplicated—being no more able to command—that she would refrain from inflaming the youth of New England by appearing in low dresses. Blizzards, damp beds, unconscionable journeys in unconscionable weather, took liberties with her. Once somebody left a stove chimney, or something of the kind, open in her room, and did his level best to asphyxiate her; perhaps (but probably not, since this was, if our memory does not deceive us, in Canada) to put an end to the temptation which might arise to the youth of the New World from the contemplation of her shoulders. But still, on the whole, her experiences were quite rosy. She does not tell us, and we are not so impatient as to desire to know, what exact amount of literal Tom Tiddler business she did with her entertainment in America. But, as Mr. Anthony Trollope used to say, "the details must have been very interesting" to account for the tone of general satisfaction in the book. Miss Marryat never forgets that she is her father's daughter, and is quite refreshingly patriotic at times; nor is she at all convinced that they order matters better over there as a whole. She didn't like American women; she takes heaven and earth to witness the outrageous conduct of American railway porters towards their natural but helpless enemy, luggage; and she is outspoken even as to some ways of Jonathan himself. But, on the whole, she loves him; and the Americans will find little to object to in her picture of them. They were undemonstrative, but punctual, plentiful, and paying audiences; they said they had read her novels, and made complimentary remarks about them; they wrote nice things of her in the newspapers. At any rate, the book appears to have been written in a state of blissful satisfaction with the writer's self and with other people generally.—Saturday Review.

We think that, while Professor Dowden hardly dwells enough on the poorer side of Shelley's moral nature, he is nevertheless quite right in finding a real improvement in Shelley, instead of a falling-off, as he grew older. His caprice was less serious, his generosity soberer and more thoughtful, his political enthusiasms less windy and bombastic, his nature less irreverent, his forbearance more constant, his sympathy less relaxed and more self-controlled.—Spectator.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JANUARY 22, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

No book can be so fortunate, but that some will find fault; and that may be reckoned to have fared not ill, which none can with justice censure. — CLARENT: Strom, i, 1, 17.

[Original Poetry.]

To John Keats.

Deep in the whisp'ring pine whose profile bars
The moon's white face; hushed in the perfumed bowers,
Where, languid with the breath of sleeping flowers,
The summer night lies panoplied in stars;
High on the mountain crags, 'mid brakes and scars,
A spirit sought to find in poesy's powers
Some beauty to bedeck Time's conquering Hours,
Like roses on the flaming front of Mars.
Yet still, tho' lovingly, he sought in vain,
Till nature's blossom bore the bloom of art,
Till ecstasy of joy had wedded pain
In bonds which never hand of man shall part;
Then found within the chambers of thy brain
The sacred fire to light Endyn ion's heart.

FRANCIS HOWARD WILLIAMS.

* * The condescending depreciation with which Mr. Howells writes of Dickens in the January Harper's is somewhat amusing to one who is sufficiently independent of present fashions to put these two novelists in their proper relations of comparison, and is hardly in better taste than the "conscious unconsciousness" with which this writer here and elsewhere speaks of some of his fellows in American literature; but perhaps it does not fully justify the full severity of the comments which have been passed upon the paper by several of our contemporaries. True Mr. Howells speaks of Dickens's miracle-work as "very rough magic;" his pathos is "false and strained," his humor "largely horse-play," his character "theatrical," and his joviality "pumped;" his people are "monstrosities" and their motives "disproportioned and improbable." But it should be remembered in Mr. Howells's defence that in passing such judgment of Dickens he seems to be speaking particularly of the latter's contributions to Christmas literature, and might contend that he was not speaking of his writings as a whole. All the same, a considerable proportion of the enlightened and judicial public will wish that the old magician, "rough" though he were, still lived to wave his wand.

* * The study of Robert Browning's poems is certainly assuming form and proportion in this country, and it is noticeable that Chicago is taking the lead in the organization of methods and the production of visible results. Several circles of Browning students in that city, who have been at work for several years, have lately organized themselves into a "Chicago Browning Society," selected their publishers in true English fashion, and issued the first of their projected helps. Over a hundred persons, it is stated, attended the initiatory meeting, and the Society started with between sixty and seventy members. The annual fee is $2.50; life membership $25.00. The officers are a President, three Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and nine Directors; and at least four meetings are to be held each year.

— A Detroit publishing house will issue soon You and I, a book for self-education and culture, containing contributions, with portraits, from thirty of the most distinguished educators in the country.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

New German Books on America.

IV.

BERLIN, December 31, 1886.

ONE of the smallest, but also most useful and excellent, of recent works on your country is Herr Carl Naubert's Land und Leute in America, just issued by the famous firm of Langenscheidt, Berlin, the publishers of the renowned English and French grammars and dictionaries based on the "method" of Professor Langerscheidt. This volume is the fourth section of a work entitled Notwörterbuch der englischen und deutschen Sprache für Reise, Lektüre und Konversation, the first two sections having been an English-German and German-English pocket dictionary on a new principle, and the third an alphabetical volume on England on the plan of Dickens's well-known "Dictionaries" of London, Paris, Oxford, etc. The present work is a similar alphabetical book on the people of the States, their manners, customs, institutions, habits, and every-day life. It does not profess to guide its possessors through the "sights" and the like, but to teach them what no "Baedeker" or "Murray" teaches them; it shows them what a traveler who dwells in your country for a short time only, does not, as a rule, see, but which he ought to know lest he run the risk to make a fool of himself. The author has long lived in the States; besides, he has made use of many trustworthy and recent materials treasured up in books and journals. He who reads this volume before crossing the Atlantic, will, on reaching your hospitable shores, be well "up" in everything really worth knowing; and he who cannot make the voyage himself, will by its aid be enabled to understand many hitherto unintelligible allusions in American novels and newspapers; this will be especially useful for those translators of American books who make numberless ridiculous mistakes through their ignorance of life in the Union.

Herr Arthur Zapp, a gentleman of whose literary antecedents I am ignorant, publishes a thin but interesting volume, entitled Aus Kleindeutschland, containing about a dozen pictures and sketches from German life in the Union. The latter he designates "Smaller Germany" from the number of Teutons living there; however, he also applies this nickname to the more especially German quarter of "Gotham." He deals with the latter, with the prospects of German immigrants, with German societies, with the horrible corruption of the German language as spoken by many of my countrymen after a prolonged stay in "Yankeeland," with German-American self-made men, with German amusements in the States, more especially with the German theaters of New York; he also speaks of German pedlars, grocers, "intelligence offices," card-sharps, prize-packets, and other swindlers and swindling concerns, and devotes a chapter to the German press of New York. His papers are short, but pithy; sometimes they are too furtive to afford a sufficient amount of information on a given subject; on the whole, however, they deserve to be praised. In an appendix the author offers the would-be emigrants among his readers a good deal of practical counsel, whereas his geographical survey of the "various States of the Union" is far too perfunctory to be of any use. In an "epilogue" he argues most sensibly against those strange German patriots who complain of their emigrating countrymen becoming absorbed in the American nation, buying or manufacturing over there all they want, instead of importing it from the Fatherland. Herr Zapp says rightly that scarcely any one leaves Germany in order to care for her welfare in his new home, but that everybody who emigrates does so in order to benefit himself, because he was not prosperous or did not feel happy at home. He may ever remain attached to Germany, but he cannot help becoming attached to his adopted country also.

The third book which I have to mention today cannot exactly be called one on America, but it is one by a well-known American lady, Mrs. Sarah Hutzler of St. Louis, Mo. She has lived in Berlin for the last four or five years, and is one of our most prolific and valued writers on child-life. Her contributions are willingly, and even eagerly, accepted by many of our leading journals. She has published several volumes on the doings of children and their ways of thinking; the latest is just "out." It is entitled Kleine Menschen, and, like its predecessors, treats mainly of American child-life. This is another reason why I have to speak of it in this place. Most of the stories—for stories they are—are very good; some others the German public will probably think not quite life-like, but American children have other ways than European ones, have they not? Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that Mrs. Hutzler—who is at present married to Herr Kainz, the eminent actor—is highly gifted for the treatment of this department of literature. Max Nordau is of the same opinion, we gather from the preface he has written for this volume. This preface, a very clever disquisition on German lady writers, is creating much stir in female literary circles here. I cannot say it is being favorably commented upon, the ladies being angry with the spirited philosopher because he maintains that women, with extremely few exceptions, cannot write good books. He reproaches them with having corrupted and lowered the tastes of the reading public by what he calls weakly, milk-and-water productions, and asserts that their most proper field of observation, and consequently of writing, is child-life. I do not, of course, agree to Nordau's general condemnation of female literature, nor do I think that all the lady authors on earth ought continually to produce nothing besides stories or sketches on or for children. Some of Nordau's aperçus and arguments in this preface, however, are as indisputable as they are clever.

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

THE ANTHONY MEMORIAL.*

THE collection of American poetry which was presented to Brown University by the late Hon. Henry B. Anthony is probably the largest collection that has ever been made in this department of literature. The announcement that an elaborate catalogue of these books was to be printed, with biographical and bibliographical notes, was received with high satisfaction by the many persons who are interested in American bibliography. If judiciously and carefully made such a catalogue would be of very great value to all librarians, and to all those who are engaged in the study of the literature of our country. As the work was to appear with the sanction of the University, and as a Memorial to Senator Anthony, great confidence was felt that a competent editor would be employed; and that the work would be done in a manner to do credit to the bibliographical scholarship of the country.

* A Catalogue of the Harris Collection of American Poetry with Biographical and Bibliographical Notes. By John C. Stockbridge. Providence. 1886.

And the announcements that were made seemed to be a guarantee that there would be full and accurate transcripts of titles and careful descriptions of the books, with full information respecting editions, illustrations, and other details; so that the book would be a reliable guide to American poetical literature as far as represented in this collection. It was a rare opportunity for an editor to achieve a lasting reputation in a difficult undertaking.

The volume has been issued from the press, and a slight examination shows that the work has been very poorly done; it is, in plain truth, one of the most egregious failures in the whole range of bibliography. At the first glance the book appears to have been prepared with skill and care. There are a considerable number of notes; dates, sizes, and editions are given; the number of pages, designated by Roman and Arabic figures, is given; names of editors are mentioned; and the presence of illustrations and biographical sketches is noted. But a little close testing proves the work to be utterly worthless as a guide to American poetry. It abounds in errors and blunders of all sorts. There are errors in dates of publication; errors in size designations; errors in pagings; it is impossible to tell whether in such a page-designation as vi. 290 the number of pages is 296 or 290, because in many cases the pages marked by Roman characters are included in the Arabic number, and in other cases they are additional. In many cases the Roman paging is omitted where it occurs and only the Arabic is given. In many cases editor's names occurring on the title-page are omitted, and in others they are given. In some cases when the title-page mentions a biographical sketch the fact is noted, and in many cases it is not. In some cases remarks by the editor are printed as if they formed part of the title-page. In many cases a part of the title is omitted without any indication being given of the omission. In many cases important parts of the title are represented in the catalogue only by an "etc." In many cases anonymous works are entered as if the author's name were given on the title-page; and pseudonymous works are catalogued under the real name without any mention of the pseudonym. Privately printed books are entered with no reference to their being so issued. In some cases the occurrence of illustrations is noted, and in many instances no mention is made of them. In some cases the words of the title are transposed. In some cases books are said to be "not paged," when the paging is clearly given. In some cases books are attributed to wrong authors, when the true author is given in the book itself.

The following are specimens of individual errors:

Minute Philosopher for Modern Philosopher.
Home by the Sea for House by the Sea.
The Alp for an Alp.
Sapello for Capello.
Heavens for Heaven.
Hough for Houk.
Gallaher for Gallagher.
Hewett for Hewitt.
Osborne for Osborn.
Sylvia for Sylva.
Nicholas for Nichols.
Littlefield for Littleford.

The difficulty of securing absolute accuracy in work of this kind is readily recognized, and by none more readily than by those who have had practical experience in it; and where one is not able to see and handle the books which he describes, but must depend on other catalogues and various more or less reliable sources of information, it would be strange if he did not fall into many inaccuracies. But in this case the compiler has every volume before him, and his task is to transcribe the titles accurately and give correct descriptions of the books. And every one, who is interested in literature or bibliography, has a right to complain of such a slipshod piece of work as this.

Philadelphia.

JOHN EDMANDS.

RECENT POETRY.

We have already had something to say of Lord Tennyson's latest poetical emanation, Locksley Hall Sixty Years After,¹ and there is little of pith and moment to be added to our first judgment. It is hard to believe that Alfred Tennyson wrote such a line as:

Leave the master in the first dark hour of his last sleep alone, and yet here it is, and three-score more of lines equally defective from the poetical point of view. Form has counted for so much in the great mass of Tennyson's verse, that one necessarily misses the exquisite charm which, until within a few years, has pertained to all of his published productions. There has been of late a gain in vigor, the leonine tone has become dominant, and to this verbal beauty has been sacrificed. But, after all, it is substance, thought, that makes poetry, and the scathing eloquence of the dotard who is represented as denouncing the evil tendencies of this material age has nothing of dotage in its inspiration. A healthy mind nauseated with the filth of the contemporary debasing of literature and art, and the contemporary degradation of statemanship and culture, cannot avoid an emphatic protest, and Lord Tennyson's protest is Tennysonian. Of the three other productions in this volume, it is perhaps enough to say that "The Fleet" and the ode for the "Opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition" are not Tennysonian at all, and that the failure of "The Promise of May" as a stage production is now sufficiently comprehensible. The last-named is a drama absolutely devoid of dramatic action; but it has an original motive which is elaborated not without flashes of high poetical inspiration. At the same time, we cannot refrain from looking upon the leading character, Philip Edgar, as a moral monstrosity.

There is some excellent fooling in the *Post-Laureate Idyls*² of Oscar Fay Adams, who, with no slight felicity and with some passable humor, turns certain nursery jingles into sonorous measures that have a degree of likeness to those of the "Idyls of the King." We fear, however, that Mr. Adams takes himself too seriously in these ventures, for he gives them the place of honor in a volume which contains better matter. "A Tale of Tuscany" has warmth and color, which comes, perhaps, from its theme; the manner of it is trite enough, as is also that of "The Golden Lotus," which is an echo from The Light of Asia. We like Mr. Adams better in his lyrics, for here, to a perceptible extent, he dares to be himself. There is something exquisite and genuine in two lines of "Midsummer Passes":

¹ Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, Etc. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson, P.L., D.C.L. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

² Post-Laureate Idyls, and Other Poems. By Oscar Fay Adams. D. Lothrop & Co.

Behind her blushed the roses, and before
The scarlet poppies shimmered in the corn.

While The Old Garden, and Other Verses,³ by Margaret Deland, has been lying on our table awaiting attention, the first edition has been taken up by an eager coterie of appreciative minds who know true poetry when they meet with it. Mrs. Deland has the spontaneity, the delicate observation, and the sweet reserve of a true poet, and her little volume of verse may be likened to a bouquet of rarely perfumed blossoms, common enough in name, but brought by tender culture to the acme of perfection in form and tint, and arranged with intuitive art. The contents of the book take a wide range through nature, love, and life, and from simple description to fervent expressions of emotional ardor or religious faith or aspiration; and at the end there are some pretty verses for children. Here are four lines from the first page:

Braiding the darkness of the wide, bare hall,
The flickering sunshine softly comes and goes,
And 'gainst the broken plaster of the wall
Is blown the shadow of a climbing rose.

The *Sonnets and Lyrics*⁴ of Helen Jackson come to us as the last garnerings of a genius that went out in fire-flights of song. Their quality is easily distinguishable from even the best of contemporary verse in the combined delicacy and masculine vigor that mark them all. Here was a poet who saw deep into the human heart, who had loved and suffered as all humanity must love and suffer, and yet with a zest of passion and a keenness of torture which truly come only to souls of the finer sensibilities. Scarcely one piece in this small volume but may be marked as an addition to that small quantum of American poetry which shall endure the sifting processes of time. The distinguishing note of the collection is a serene and lofty fatalism, expressed most clearly in the noble sonnets, "Chance," "Sealed Orders," "Crossed Threads," and the overwhelming heart-sorrow of the tragic lyric, "Just Out of Sight." Yet beneath and sustaining the whole trend of this resonant, majestic music is the inspiration of an unconquerable faith as we find it gaining utterance in "Emigravit":

Who knows what myriad colonies there are
Of fairest fields, and rich, undreamed-of gains,
Thick planted in the distant shining plains
Which we call sky because they lie so far?
Oh, write of me, not "Died in bitter pains,"
But "Emigrated to another star!"

Mr. Clinton Scollard *With Reed and Lyre*⁵

³ The Old Garden, and Other Verses. By Margaret Deland. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

⁴ Sonnets and Lyrics. By Helen Jackson ("H.H."). Roberts Bros. $1.00.

⁵ With Reed and Lyre. By Clinton Scollard. D. Lothrop & Co.

vindicates the promise given in his Pictures in Song, and may now be regarded as fairly enrolled in the tuneful choir of select singers whose strains are their own excuse for being. We notice in this new volume of Mr. Scollard's a certain amplitude of phrase, a security and confidence of purpose, and a wholesome, active sympathy with all forms of natural life which did not find so full expression in his earlier work. He is quick and fertile of fancy, his perceptions are nearly always fine and true, and he has a command of versification which many an elder bard might envy. Some of the shorter productions (none of them is very long) have a felicity of form, an intensity of meaning, and an air of completeness, of inevitability, that would be hard to rival among the productions of our minor poets. With all this there is, however, a tendency to mannerism which we hope to see put in check. The boughs are continually "bourgeoning" in Mr. Scollard's rhymes, and after the sensation of pleasure at the lines which speak of

The tiny kingcup, that upon the floor
Of emerald meads unturns its ample gold,

we are disappointed at finding the same description applied to the jonquil a little further on. But Mr. Scollard's verse is too good to quibble over.

One does not often encounter religious verse so genuine and appealing as is gathered within the pages of Mrs. Margaret J. Preston's For Love's Sake.⁶ They are truly "poems of faith and comfort"—a faith so pure, so ardent, so elevating that it is at once a prayer and a benediction, a comfort that lies only in the sincere message of a soul that has felt and suffered all the pangs it would allay. Many of the poems in this volume (such as "Left Behind" and "A Litany of Pain," or the tender and gracious sonnets) are like boxes of rare ointment, distilled with loving care, perfumed with the breath of charity, to the wounds of the heart like delicate and healing balm. To all who suffer or have suffered this book comes with the ministry of peace.

Few poets are more chary of their rhymes than is Christopher Pearse Cranch, who cherishes his dreams and fancies and far-reaching thoughts long in solitude, and sees that they are clad in fitting measures before he sends them out into the world. There is no dross in the bullion that comes with his stamp upon it; it may not always be gold, but it is pure metal, without alloy, and it always rings true. *Ariel and Caliban*⁷ is finely imagined. Ariel, after Prospero is gone, longs for companionship, and strives to win the friendship of Caliban, whose sluggish brain he fires with new thoughts, and the two, cramped by the confines of Setebos set sail together for the land of deed and thought. The other poems in the volume are marked by a distinctive originality of conception and an easy dignity of form. Mr. Cranch's poem "Satan" appears in a revised and enlarged shape with the title of "Ormuzd and Ahriman."

The womanly quality that exists in everything that Nora Perry writes is persistent in her *New Songs and Ballads*⁸ which include a good deal of noteworthy verse. There is a freshness and daintiness about these flowers of song that do not savor of coquetry, but of feminine archness and reserve. They are a trifle forced at times, as if grown under glass, and lack something of the robust spontaneity of out-door blossoms; but they make up a fragrant and graceful garland—not all roses and lilies and violets, but with here and there sprigs of rosemary and rue.

*The Imitators*⁹ is ostensibly "a poem of Boston life," but we should be sorry to think that Boston life is as prosy and pedantic as the poem is. James Vila Blake¹⁰ is nothing if not assertive:

If awful throes should shake the world
Level, and on me Alps were hurled,
I should not be crushed;
If heaven crumbled and stars fell like rain,
Making seas mist and melting the rocky plain,
My voice would not be hushed.

So what could a mere critic do except to leave Mr. Blake in towering solitude? We must leave Mr. E. R. Champlin¹¹ also to his admirers since we cannot, unfortunately, number ourselves among "most readers" who, he thinks, will recognize his verses as familiar friends; at any rate we hope not to meet again soon such a poem as "A Day:"

It came in blackness shrouded,
And all my spirit clouded;
And, till its dreaded form went,
It filled my soul with torment!

One ought not to write poetry on days like that. Mr. J. Ashby-Sterry, as The Lazy Minstrel,¹² finds none but pleasant days in his calendar, and his muse goes in deshabille idling by Thames's bank, lounging in a hammock, or rambling through London streets. The author is a facile writer of society verse in the manner of Mr. Frederick Locker.

We cannot help thinking that Rev. Henry B. Carpenter would have done better if he had put his romance of *Liber Amoris*¹³ into unmetrical prose instead of attempting blank verse, in which he has the air of a zealous but by no means excellent artificer. A vague and sensuous imagery expressed in misty metaphors and nebulous tropes obscures the underlying thought as effectually as a fog shuts off a coast line. Nowhere do we find lucidity or spontaneity; everywhere affectation, traces of the artisan rather than of the artist. As for what we may by courtesy call the lyrical interludes, we can make very little sense out of them, and certainly they contain the most varied collection of impossible rhymes that we remember ever to have encountered in one small book. "Allotter," "daughter," "water;" "god," "unawed;" "commander," "squander," "wander;" "saber," "neighbor," "day-boor;" "lordship," "worship," "earthship;" "valleys" and "palace;" "region" and "decision;" "lord" and "poured;" "breaking" and "waken;" "scorning" and "dawning;" "eagle" and "sea-gull;" "down-turned" and "unadorned;" "searching" and "marching;" "bared" and "deferred"—these are a few of Mr. Carpenter's attempts at "correspondence of sound in the termination of words." The correspondence may be there; it surely is not perceptible to those who speak English.

The anonymous author of *The Heart of the Weed*¹⁴ chants in sonorous measures of love and misery. There is merit in some of her sonnets, but the lugubrious tone is depressing. There is modest merit of another sort in the *Lines and Interlines*¹⁵ of Julia P. Boynton. The poem, "Wild Tiger-Lily" ("the one unrivaled Cleopatra of the wood") has a captivating intensity, and "The Tragedy of a Field" is full of lyrical sweetness. The reapers have passed by, "and every spray of fragrant clover cleft asunder:"

Yet, field, charge not the reaper's hand with wrath
To thy life's purpose led no other path—
Seed-time and sunshine, sorrow and the swath.
Still mercy waits in many a sudden burst
Of healing rain upon thee faint, athirst,
And dying. Lo, beyond the sickle's scath
The chastened promise of the aftermath.

We are glad to see an edition of the *Complete Poetical Works*¹⁶ of Benjamin F. Taylor. Notwithstanding his inequalities, his too-frequent lapses from grammar, his linguistic and emotional eccentricities, Mr. Taylor has the heart of the true poet; he can feel, he knows what he feels, and he can tell us after a fashion wholly his own what his feelings and impressions really are. His poems of country life, some of the productions here classified as descriptive poems, and a few of his ballads are not likely soon to be forgotten. The homely simplicity of his rhymes when he is content to be simple and genuine has a charm that the toiling and striving verse-mongers toil and strive after in vain.

Complete resignation to the divine will and unyielding patience and charity for the faults and mistakes of others are inculcated in the carefully modulated poems of George Kringle,¹⁷ who, touching but few of the chords of song, awakens a pleasing, if too unvaried, harmony. The artlessness of Elsie's Wedding, and Other Poems,¹⁸ by Jasper Barnett Cowdin, is so overwhelming that they shrink from criticism like the leaves of the sensitive plant from the hand of the botanist. We suspect the author of willful ambiguity in her choice of a pseudonym. There is a tender simplicity also about the *Brother and Lover*¹⁹ of Eben E. Rexford; sometimes simplicity is a trifle mawkish when it becomes too simple.

It is pleasant at this point to turn for a moment to Mr. Brander Matthews's excellent collection of *Ballads of Books*²⁰ which has been printed at the Riverside Press in a manner to charm the gaze of the bibliophile. "The poets have ever been lovers of books," as Mr. Matthews well says, not wholly of books as literature but of books as books—as material expressions of immaterial ideas. The editor has ransacked English poetry pretty thoroughly to cull the contents of this volume, and he has had the assistance of a number of contemporary bookworms who have written appropriately for its pages. This book is surely one "that no library," cer-

¹⁴ The Heart of the Weed. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

¹⁵ Lines and Interlines. By Julia P. Boynton. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

¹⁶ Complete Poetical Works of Benjamin F. Taylor. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.75.

¹⁷ Make Thy Way Mine, and Other Poems. By George Kringle. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00.

¹⁸ Elsie's Wedding, and Other Poems. By Jasper Barnett Cowdin. Brooklyn, N. Y.: D. S. Holmes. $1.00.

¹⁹ Brother and Lover: A Woman's Story. By Eben E. Rexford. John B. Alden. 40c.

²⁰ Ballads of Books. Chosen by Brander Matthews. George J. Coombes.

⁶ For Love's Sake: Poems of Faith and Comfort. By Margaret J. Preston. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00.

⁷ Ariel and Caliban, with Other Poems. By Christopher Pearse Cranch. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

⁸ New Songs and Ballads. By Nora Perry. Ticknor & Co. $1.50.

⁹ The Imitators: A Poem of Boston Life. Cupples, Up-ham & Co. $1.25.

¹⁰ Poems. James Vila Blake. George H. Ellis.

¹¹ Heart's Own: Verses. By Edwin R. Champlin. C. H. Kerr & Co.

¹² The Lazy Minstrel. By J. Ashby-Sterry. Scribner & Welford. $2.00.

¹³ Liber Amoris. Being the Book of Love of Brother Aurelius. By Henry Bernard Carpenter. Ticknor & Co.

tainly no lover of books or of poetry, "should be without."

Majestic dignity of form, high reserve, swift intensity of passion, inflexible certainty of purpose, notable dramatic force, vivid depiction of varied personalities, luminous play of imagination—are the characteristics of the tragedy, Risifi's Daughter,²¹ by Anna Katharine Green. From the opening scene the tale moves strongly and firmly on to a well-designed climax. The elements are few and natural, and they are combined with a skill that never falters or misses its intention. We might quote, did space permit, some one of the many significant passages with which we have been impressed at a first reading of this commanding production, but we will content ourselves with commending it as an important manifestation of a genuine poetical impulse.

²¹ Risifi's Daughter. A Drama. By Anna Katharine Green. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

MINOR FICTION.

Count Xavier. By Henry Gréville. Translated by Mrs. Mary C. Robbins. [Ticknor & Co. $1.00.] Count Xavier is rather a slight performance, although executed with delicacy, and its sentiment is now and then sophisticated with the taint that affects almost everything in modern French fiction. The idyllic flavor which has been the most consistent charm in all the more noteworthy writings of Henry Gréville is here dimmed and tarnished, although the portrayal of the two girls, Mavra and Thecla, is in the author's better manner. Count Xavier is a young Pole who has inherited from his father a half ruined mansion and encumbered estates. His life of "real poverty and phantasmal luxury" is described, and then we find him at his aunt's where Mavra, the charming little peasant maid, conceives for him a pure and innocent affection which is almost idolatry. A little later the Count falls heir to his uncle's wealth and removes to the castle at Béla. There he finds a cousin, Thecla, his uncle's illegitimate daughter, and the two fall in love. To escape from the Count's importunities Thecla is forced by her mother to fly to a distant village. The Count makes a futile attempt at pursuit and finally sends a proposal for "an honorable marriage," which, after some parleying on the part of Thecla's mother and the Count's aunt, is accepted, and the lovers are pledged to a two years' engagement. The story closes with a clever bit of comedy by means of which the period of probation is greatly shortened. The quality of the translation may be judged from a single sentence:

So, as he had nothing to do, either pressing or useful, the young Count took care not to move, and, comfortably nestled between the back of the divan, also covered with deerskin as pliant as a Saxony glove, and the body of the sofa, in a small angle as hard as hewn stone, he meditated for five whole minutes.

Vera Nevill; or, Poor Wisdom's Chance. A Novel. By Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.] There is no special quality pertaining to Vera Nevill to differentiate it from the general run of society novels, unless it be extreme silliness and hysterical sentimentality. Vera Nevill is tall and queenly and has the figure "not of a sylph, but of a goddess;" she walks "with a certain slow and languid grace," and she has "dreamy eyes that are neither blue nor gray nor hazel, but something vague and indistinctly beautiful, entirely peculiar to themselves." Vera leads a life of elegant leisure in the home of her brother-in-law, a country vicar, and finally engages herself to Sir John Kynaston for his money. But she falls desperately in love with Sir John's younger brother, the stolid but handsome Maurice. Her passion is reciprocated, and when Maurice starts off on a journey Vera follows him to the station to bid him good-by, and accompanies him on the first stage of travel. Vera declares that she will throw over Sir John, but Maurice informs her that he is pledged to a certain Helen Romer for five years, and he will not break his pledge. Vera informs him that she will wait five years or forever, or words to that effect, and she gives Sir John his dismissal. Helen inherits her grandfather's wealth, and there being no further "obstacle," Maurice marries her after a tragic note of farewell to Vera. Then the latter comes into possession of compromising letters written by Helen to an earlier admirer, and not knowing what they contain, has promised to give them to Maurice. Helen learns of her purpose, and finding her obdurate asks her "in quick, feverish words" to "gather a water-lily." Vera good-naturedly complies, and Helen pushes her into the pond by which the two are standing. That is the end of Vera Nevill, but not of the book. The author and her characters are as devoid of grammatical culture as they are of common sense. "I did not know it was her," Lady Kynaston is made to say; and of the vicar's wife we are told that "she laid down in the dust before her" tyrannical mother-in-law.

In the Clouds. By Charles Egbert Craddock. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] Miss Murfree is in danger of attempting too much. This is not a born novel, but a made one. It is made out of the scenery of the Tennessee Mountains and the dialect of Tennessee Mountaineers; very bold and striking scenery it is, and very uncouth and realistic dialect; and ably made is the book, clearly a master's work in its way. But it lacks an interior impulse. It is too palpably a manufacture, a vehicle for the dialect of the region, as if that were a commodity with a value and charm of its own which stood in need of and had a right to a conveyance to the public. It is a strange remote life which is depicted in this story, peopled with wild, rude characters, and dominated by a grand and gloomy background of shaggy hills and precipitous ravines. The substance of such a book is a part of American history. The power in it is unmistakable. Its greatest skill is in the slight touches with which it sets broad scenes before us. But we get tired of the people in it; would like the region better without them and their coarse, slangy vernacular; would like, after a few moments with them, to pass on into the cool forests and up on the high crags, and leave them and their jargon and their log-cabin romance behind. The book is of the soil; so are scrub oaks and cacti, over which we have our preferences.

A Question of Identity. [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.] This is an addition to the "No Name Novels," and not a marked addition, the book falling far below Justina, its immediate predecessor in the series. However, this series has always had its ups and downs, and as that was one of the ups, this is one of the downs. A Question of Identity has a plot, but the plot is artificial, and the interest of it not sufficient to reward the labor of curiosity. There are two English twin sisters so exactly alike that the husband of one of them is sometimes at a loss to know which is his wife. This resemblance leads to a double and twisted complication, by which John Beckley is first led to believe himself a widower, and then finds he is not, and the reader is finally left to wonder whether he was or not. The story meanwhile has been transferred to the United States, and a New England deacon of the traditional, pronounced, and disagreeable type becomes a prominent character. We are tired of the New England deacon in fiction. We have had enough of him, with his cant, and selfishness, and cruelty, and hollow pretence. Apart from the long drawn out confusion between Leah and Rachel, the characteristic of this story is commonness.

A Secret of the Sea, etc. By Brander Matthews. [Charles Scribner's Sons.] It was a bold conception, out of the ordinary line, to introduce into a tale of today a conventional pirate of the black flag and "walk the plank" style, to furnish him with a type-writer, and to make out of his attack on a steamer a ruse for playing a risky game in the stock market. The audacity of the whole is equaled by its absurd ingenuity. Some of the characters of the opening tale reappear in several of those that follow. Mr. Matthews has a dexterous way of managing situations, and it is apt to be the unexpected that happens.

MINOR NOTICES.

Philosophical Realism. By William I. Gill, A.M. [Boston: W. H. Bradley. 85c.] Mr. Gill's "great object" in these pages is to show, he says, "that there is no matter, except mortal thought, and that mind is all." How he works out this ambitious conception in one direction will be shown to the complete satisfaction of all our readers, we imagine, by such lines as these:

These former which are called our parents and ancestors are our own very selves, and not our natural authors or even predecessors. . . . It is, therefore, a logical impossibility that anything in the universe should be the cause of my existence; for since all that universe is myself, I should thus have to be my own creator, and act with creative energy before I had an existence.

Mr. Gill seems to us to be too modest in thus disclaiming ability to act before he exists; all things should be possible to one who is himself the universe. At any rate, we fail to perceive how he can know his inability until he has tried at least once more; this very book appears like a plain case of something (apparently something) producing itself out of nothing.

The Evangelical Revival in the Eighteenth Century. By J. H. Overton. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 80c.] This is a brief but admirable sketch of the remarkable awakening of religious zeal and earnestness in England succeeding the spiritual torpor in the reigns of the first two Georges; describing the different leaders therein, the various parts which they played, and the characteristic literature and theology. Especially valuable and interesting is the exposition of the points of identity and difference between the "Evangelicals," who always remained loyal to the national church, and the "Methodists," who were at first equally loyal but later withdrew from its authority and with whom the "Evangelicals" were long confounded. The author's arrangement of topics is lucid and his style clear. Still more remarkable is the calm impartiality of tone so uniform in its fairness to all sides that it is difficult to determine precisely the author's own sympathies.

The Parables of Our Saviour Expounded and Illustrated. By William M. Taylor, D.D. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.75.] A collection of discourses taking up the parables as they occur in the Gospels, not a systematic treatise on the Parables. Besides Trench's Notes, Dr. Taylor has made good use of the later works of Prof. Bruce, Goebel, Dods, and Arnot. As an expositor Dr. Taylor is eminently sensible, free from idle conceits, and willing to follow the plain meaning of parabolic teachings. These otherwise excellent discourses sometimes fall into indiscriminate indictment of the pre-Christian world. We must remember how much nearer to the primitive savage the Greeks and Romans were than ourselves. Dr. Taylor, again, should not report Mr. Lecky as telling us that the moral condition of the ancient Greeks "was a mass of reeking rotteness," for this is far from being the impression left by the historians of European morals. The incalculable benefit which pure Christianity has been to the world is brought in danger of denial, by a natural reaction, when such injustice is done to the morals of antiquity.

Letters from Surprise Land. [Cupples, Upham & Co.] "Surprise Land" is California. The "Letters" are such as might have been written home by a girl in her early 'teens who had visited California as a member of one of the Raymond Excursion Parties. There are nineteen letters. They make no pretension to literary quality, are artless and simple, and are not most carefully printed, the first part of the book being disfigured by many errors. Experiences in a Pullman "sleeper" were novel to the writer, and she describes them in detail. With Chicago she was not particularly pleased. At Kansas City she had the novel sensation of a ride in the cable cars. En route to Santa Fe the most noticeable objects were carcasses of cattle scattered on the plains, and the black pigs running around. The view of the Spanish Peaks, like some other sights, was "beyond description." The glimpses of Mexican life at Santa Fe were curious and interesting, but the dogs of that frontier town were worse than those of Chicago. The Mojave Desert was not as bad as it had been pictured. At Albuquerque there was a visit to the Indian school; at Williams a tedious delay by a burned bridge. Los Angeles proved to be a garden of fruits and flowers. A visit to the Yosemite was signalized by a frightful stage-coach accident, which came near to being fatal, and by a meeting with "the Rev. P-l-ps B-ks" and another party from Boston. Mr. Brooks, wishing to make an excursion in the valley, had engaged a donkey for the following morning. When the hour came, the donkey came not, and in answer to inquiries the stable man said, "Oh the donkey got wind of it and ran away during the night!" And so on over the habitual round by way of the Big Trees of Mariposa, and the Palace Hotel of San Francisco, and Chinatown with its missionary agencies, and Salt Lake City, and Back to Boston, the best place in the world.

Mr. L. H. Bailey's ninety pages of Field Notes on Apple Culture furnish full, clear, and practical directions to the fruit farmer. [Orange Judd Co. 75c.]

The great and growing importance of the subject gives value to Nipher's Theory of Magnetic Measurements, a little tract of 94 pages, and should ensure its circulation among students of technology. [D. Van Nostrand. 50c.]

Dr. J. M. Andrews's volume on House-Plants as Sanitary Agents is a Philadelphia physician's thorough discussion of the relation of growing vegetation to health and disease, especially indoors. The author considers that plants and flowers "are worthy to be placed in the foremost rank of sanitary agencies," while "the complete efficacy of living plants as preventive measures in that deadly malady, consumption of the lungs, as well as the signal services they are capable of rendering in certain of the conditions of disease," are fully established. Plants in the house add needed moisture to the air, and flowers impart the life-giving ozone. These positions are supported by a large number of illustrations from experience and experiment. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.]

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROFFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Shakespeare for the Pocket. A correspondent in Ohio asks our opinion of the Illustrated Pocket Shakespeare, printed in Glasgow, and published in this country by A. C. Armstrong & Son of New York. He particularly wants to know whether the text is a good one and accurately printed.

We have examined the edition somewhat carefully, and can honestly commend it as an excellent illustration of "infinite riches in a little room." It is more compact than the "Handy Volume" Shakespeare, and the text is much better than in that edition. There are eight tiny volumes, literally small enough for the vest pocket, enclosed in a neat case measuring five inches in length by four in width and three in depth. The contents include not only the plays and the poems, but also a good "Life of Shakespeare," a "Complete Glossary"—as full as can be found in many bigger editions—and an "Index to Current Shakespearian Phrases." The text is well edited and well printed, the type being small but clear and the paper opaque though thin. The illustrations might well be spared, being "process" reproductions of large engravings which suffer from reduction to so diminutive a scale.

In the Life of Shakespeare some errors are noticeable, but fewer than in the average of such biographical sketches. The first line of the inscription on the poet's gravestone is printed thus: "Good Frend for Iesus SAKE forbear;" but the original is all in capital letters. The first line of the verses on the monument is made to read, "Stay, passenger, why goest thou so fast," omitting the "by" before "so." It is rare, however, to find these things given accurately.

This neat little edition is cheap withal, costing only $3.75 in cloth binding with red edges, and in cloth-covered case.

Victor Hugo's "William Shakespeare."

A translation of Victor Hugo's book on Shakespeare, published in 1864, has been made by Prof. M. B. Anderson, and brought out in a handsome volume of 424 pages by Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago ($2.00). The author remarks in his preface that the true title of the book should be "Concerning Shakespeare." He might have added "and almost everybody and everything else in history, literature, and art." Part First is divided into five "books," the first of which is devoted to "Shakespeare's Life." In this it is hard to find a single fact given correctly except such as afforded no opportunity for blundering. It is an amusing caricature, which the translator might well have omitted, instead of correcting a few points—not always the most important—in foot-notes, and referring the reader to Dowden's Primer for the rest. Book II. is on "Men of Genius;" Book III. on "Art and Science;" Book IV. on "The Ancient Shakespeare"—otherwise, Æschylus; and Book V. on "Souls." Part Second contains six "books:" on "Shakespeare's Genius," "Shakespeare's Work," "Zoilus as Eternal as Homer," "Criticism," "The Mind and the Masses," and "The Beautiful the Servant of the True." Part Third has three "books:" "After Death; Shakespeare; England;" "The Nineteenth Century;" and "True History—Every One Put in his Place." It is a brilliant and powerful, but most exasperating book. The criticism of Shakespeare, both as man and as poet, is often "far out," though often keen and eloquent. Only those who are at home in the subject should read it, and they will find much to enjoy in it; to others it will be merely bewildering and misleading.

"Shakespearian Scenes and Characters."

This is the title of a large and elegantly illustrated book, edited by Mr. Austin Brereton, and published by Cassell & Co. ($6.00). It contains thirty steel plates and ten full-page wood engravings, with descriptive notes on the plays and the principal Shakespearian players from Betterton to Irving. It is, in fact, a concise stage-history of the twenty-nine plays commonly represented in the theatres, with some account of the more famous actors of the past two centuries, including those in our own country. We do not know where so much information on this interesting subject is to be found elsewhere in a form convenient for reading or reference. The engravings are from paintings and drawings by leading English artists, and are for the most part graphic commentaries on the scenes and characters they depict.

A teacher in Rhode Island wrote to us the other day to inquire about illustrated editions of Shakespeare and other illustrated books likely to be useful and interesting to young students of the plays. This volume may well have a place in the list. It is a pity, indeed, that such books do not oftener get into the school libraries. Of illustrated editions we have had something to say in former years, but may recur to the subject in a future number.

The Ballad of "Anne Hathaway." A letter which we have mislaid inquires concerning the ballad playing upon the name of Anne Hathaway, ascribed to Shakespeare in early editions of Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song and sundry other anthologies. Suffice it here to say that Shakespeare did not write it, and that the history of the poem and one or two others on the same subject may be found in this department of the World, vol. xv, page 136.

Hansen's "Legend of Hamlet." Messrs. C. H. Kerr & Co. of Chicago send us a neat little pamphlet (sold for 25 cents), containing The Legend of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, as found in the works of Saxo Grammaticus and other writers of the 12th century. It is by Mr. George P. Hansen, late U. S. consul at Elsinore, where (as also at Copenhagen) he had access to public records and rare manuscripts, and collected the material on which the brochure is based. It gives many facts not within the reach of ordinary readers in any cheap form. We may add that it is also to be had in cloth binding for half a dollar.

A Correction. In the notice of Mr. Head's Shakespeare's Insomnia, in the World for Dec. 11th (p. 469), "John Barnade" should be "John Barnacle." The reader who takes everything we said as serious may not find either Barnade or Barnacle in the list of British Museum officers, but the latter is nevertheless the correct name of the "10th Ass't Sub-Secretary."

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

801. To H. G. L., Buffalo, N. Y. James Thomson, the author of "The City of Dreadful Night," was an English poet, born 1834, died 1882. His poems were published in 1880. An account of him may be found in Literary World, vol. xiii, p. 216.

802. To E. D., Meriden, Conn. Uhland's Poems have been translated by Platt [Leipsic, 1848], and by Sanders [1869]; his Songs and Ballads by Skeat [London, 1864]; some scattered writings by Longfellow.

803. To C. E. C., Abilene, Kansas. The following is a list of "helpful books treating of books and reading:"

Botta's Handbook of Universal Literature. Osgood. $2.50.
Hamerton's The Intellectual Life. Roberts Bros.
Porter's Books and Reading. Scribner. $2.00.
Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies. Wiley. $1.50.
Abbott's Hints for Home Reading. Putnam. 75c.
Atkinson's On the Right Use of Books. Roberts. 50c.
Legouvé's Reading as a Fine Art. Roberts. 50c.
Richardson's Choice of Books. Am. Book Exchange. 5c.
Thwing's The Reading of Books. Lee & Shepard. $1.25.

804. To G. N. S., Sioux City, Iowa. A good one-volume History of the United States is H. E. Scudder's. Eutler. $1.15.

805. To *, Hiawatha, Kansas. The foundation of a Farm Library might be laid as follows:

Emerson and Flint's Manual of Agriculture. Ware. $1.50.
Gardner's Farmer's Dictionary. Harper. $2.50.
Johnson's How Crops Feed. Judd. $2.00.
Mitchell's My Farm of Edgewood. Scribner. $1.75.
Waring's Book of the Farm. Porter. $2.00.
Thompson's Law of the Farm. Whitney. $4.50.
Goodholme's Domestic Encyclopedia. Montgomery. $5.00.

806. To E. W., New York. The words
Joy in widest commonality spread, are from Wordsworth's "Fragment from the Recluse."

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Mr. T. S. Perry has written for the February number of Scribner's Magazine an article on "Russian Novels." The first edition of this issue of Scribner's will be one hundred thousand copies.

— Worcester's Unabridged Dictionary has recently been enlarged by the addition of a new pronouncing biographical dictionary, containing nearly twelve thousand names, and a new pronouncing gazetteer of the world, enumerating and locating over twenty thousand places.

— A biography of Rev. George C. Haddock by his son is announced by Funk & Wagnalls, New York. Mr. Haddock, it will be remembered, was an uncompromising enemy of the saloon power, and was shot dead in Sioux City, Iowa, by a man who is said to have been incited to the crime by a conspiracy of liquor dealers.

— A limited edition of The Complete Works of Benjamin Franklin, edited by John Bigelow, is announced by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. The work will fill ten royal octavo volumes, will be printed from type, and only six hundred sets will be published. Mr. Bigelow has made use of the Stevens Collection now in possession of the government at Washington, and has gleaned from it all the unpublished material which is indisputably the work of Franklin of sufficient historical or literary importance to be worthy of preservation in a permanent form. The Autobiography of Franklin will be printed from the author's manuscript now in Mr. Bigelow's possession. The edition will be, both in completeness and mechanical execution, an édition définitive. The first volume will be ready in a few weeks.

— Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will shortly publish, simultaneously with its publication in England, a new volume of poetry by Robert Browning, entitled Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in Their Day.

— Mr. Marion Crawford's story of "Paul Patoff," now appearing as a serial in the Atlantic Monthly, is also published simultaneously in a French version in the Nouvelle Revue of Paris, where Mr. Crawford's novels have been received with much favor.

— Walt Whitman and the Rev. C. A. Bartol will contribute papers on Boston sailors' preacher, Father Taylor, to the Century Magazine for February, to which number Mr. E. C. Stedman contributes a poem, "Souvenir de Jeunesse."

— A prize of $25.00 is offered by Messrs. Cassell & Co., Limited, to readers of Cassell's Family Magazine, for the best practical paper on "The Domestic Service Difficulty in America," with suggestions for its solution.

— Ginn & Co. announce that, owing to the large demand for Prof. Minto's Manual of English Prose Literature, they will hereafter print it themselves instead of importing sheets. The first number of the Journal of Morphology, to be issued by the same house, will not appear until March, owing to the difficulties in the way of printing one of the elaborate plates.

— D. C. Heath & Co. announce for publication soon, A Synopsis of the Nature and Effects of Alcohol and Narcotics, by L. H. Luce, M. D., who, in the course of twenty years' practice, has given a great deal of time and attention to this subject.

— Mr. Thomas Whittaker, has just ready Canon Luckock's new book, entitled The Bishop in the Tower, "a record of stirring events affecting the church and Non-conformists from the Restoration to the Rebellion;" and the second edition of the Symposium on Future Probation, the first having been exhausted the week after publication.

— A memorial paper on the late C. H. A. Dall, by Rev. John H. Heywood, is published in pamphlet form by George H. Ellis. It is a touching record of a life of devotion to others in missionary work in this country and in India. We notice that Mr. Dall is credited with a genetic relation to the Brahmo Somaj movement and as having an important influence on the teachings of Keshub Chunder Sen.

— Mrs. Bolton's Poor Boys Who Became Famous has entered on a 6th edition, and is well on toward a 7th.

— Joel Munsell's Sons of Albany, publishers of genealogies, have undertaken the compilation of a large and valuable work entitled American Ancestry, in which the direct male lineage of every citizen of the United States will be recorded who can trace his descent from families settled in America previous to 1800. The work will be similar in character to Burke's well-known publications, but adapted to the conditions of American society.

— Two young Persian gentleman, students in this country, were in Boston a few days since, having with them, among other curiosities, a copy of the Peshito version of the New Testament in the form of a parchment MS. dated A. D. 1207. Only two other copies of this date are known in the West, one being in the Vatican and the other in the British Museum. The MS. was the work of a Syrian priest named Bahab, who lived at Mosul. The copy is in good condition.

— The Brooklyn Magazine has deferred its change of name to the American Magazine until April 15, in order that the publishers may have suitable time for properly developing their plans. Miss Georgia Cayvan has written an article on "Young Women and the Stage" for the February number of this periodical.

— The new Murray's Magazine has made its appearance in London, opening with a chapter of "Byroniana" and closing with the first of a series of papers on "General Grant" by Matthew Arnold. Of the eight other contributors Vernon Lee is the only one of note.

— W. H. Allen & Co. of London announce a new History of the United States, in two volumes, by Mr. Percy Greg, a writer of some distinction in England, who was a strong sympathizer, according to the Academy, with the Southern cause. His work will cover "the whole period from the foundation of Virginia and Plymouth down to the close of the War of Secession, and the re-establishment of self-government in the Southern States."

— C. N. Caspar, Milwaukee, Wis., issues the prospectus of Caspar's Directory "of the American Book, News, and Stationery Trade." An important feature of this work will be a digest of the trade-lists of American publishers, which will afford a ready key to the titles of all books issued in the United States and Canada from 1873 to 1886. The subscription price is $8.00.

—One of the rising young magazinists of Canada is Mr. James Macdonald Oxley of Ottawa, now in his 32d year, and a contributor to the American Law Review, Lippincott's, the Popular Science Monthly, Outing, Wide Awake, and other periodicals, on both sides the Dominion line. By profession he is a lawyer.

—Detroit is becoming a noticeable publishing center. A new house has just been established, D. C. Haynes & Co., for the publication of periodicals and books in pharmacy and related topics. They will publish The Microscope, heretofore issued in Ann Arbor, and a new monthly entitled The Pharmaceutical Era. One book has already appeared from their press, a Manual of Practical Pharmaceutical Assaying, by A. B. Lyons, M. D., one of the firm.

—Capt. H. A. Ford's compilation of Poems of History, published in Detroit, is temporarily out of print, the first edition having been exhausted.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, report that the subscription list for the limited edition of 500 copies of Hamilton's works was filled something more than six months back, and they have no more sets to supply. One or two subscribers have expressed their willingness to sell their sets at an advance of $1 per volume, making the price $54 instead of $45. The subscription list of the "Franklin," mentioned elsewhere, is already in large part filled.

—At a largely attended meeting of the New York Authors' Club last week an improved financial condition was reported, and a gain of sixteen members during the year. Messrs. J. H. Morse, W. Hamilton Gibson, T. W. Knox, Geo. Cary Eggleston, Bronson Howard, A. B. Starey, Ripley Hitchcock, E. Munson Smith, and Noah Brooks were elected as governing council.

—Mr. W. J. Rolfe's edition of Scott's Lays of the Last Minstrel, to be published by Ticknor & Co. on the 25th inst., will be the 50th volume in the series of brown-covered, red-edged little quartos, Shakespearian and others, which this patient and diligent American scholar has added to our helps for the study of what is best in English literature. Shall we call the occasion a "semi-centennial," and proceed to celebrate it? We may do the latter, perhaps, by noting that 43 of these 50 volumes, namely, the 40 on Shakespeare, and the one each on Gray, Goldsmith, and Browning, have been published by the Harpers, and 7, including 3 each on Tennyson and Scott and one on Byron, by Ticknor & Co. In this enumeration are not reckoned a dozen or more other volumes, having Mr. Rolfe's name on the title-page, such as Craik's English of Shakespeare, a Handbook of Latin Poetry, the Cambridge Series in Physics, and the Sonnets from the Portuguese, edited for D. Lothrop & Co.; and no account is taken of the now fifteen annual editions of the Satchel Guide, Mr. Rolfe's authorship of which is no longer a secret. No. 51 of the English Literature quartos, Enoch Arden and Other Poems, is in the printer's hands, and another Browning volume has just gone to the Harpers.

—The Century Company is making active preparation for the publication of its new subscription book, Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, containing the famous war papers which have been running through the Century Maga- sine. Besides the papers therein printed, there are many which have never before been published, and one article, Mr. "Hayward's" "Life on the Alabama," though it was published in the magazine, will not be included in the book, since it turned out that its author was never on the Alabama, and that what facts he was possessed of were gleaned at second-hand from one of the Alabama's seamen, whom "Hayward" once met in Havana; and yet, perhaps, this particular article has been very nearly the most popular one of the whole series.

—Mr. T. B. Aldrich has recently been in New York, collecting material for the extra illustrating of Mr. E. C. Stedman's Poets of America, on which he and a great many other authors, including Mr. Stedman himself, are now busily engaged.

—Mr. J. W. Alexander, the New York artist, is now putting the finishing touches upon a portrait of Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, which will shortly be reproduced in the Century, the Century Company having sent Mr. Alexander to England mainly for the purpose of getting an exact likeness of the author's strange weird face. Mr. Alexander, by the way, was once a stable-boy for a wealthy Pittsburg gentleman, whose barn doors are said to have been covered with early evidences of the artist's talent. When a little older, Mr. Alexander went to New York, and worked for the Harpers as an office boy until he had saved enough money to go abroad to study. He returned a full-fledged artist, whose pictures now command high prices, although comparatively few of them, and those few chiefly portraits, ever find their way into the magazines.

—It has been estimated that nearly $15,000,000 have been paid by the public for the various editions of Appleton's American Cyclopædia. There have been 129,000 sets sold, aggregating 2,600,000 volumes, the annual supplements included.

—Several years ago Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons made an effort to introduce Count Tolstoi to American readers through The Cossacks, in an excellent translation by Mr. Eugene Schuyler, but the enterprise proving such a flat failure, the publishers decided not to bring out any other of the Russian novelist's works. The plates of The Cossacks were laid away until the recent revival of Russian literature in this country caused them to find a purchaser in Mr. Gottsberger, who will shortly bring out an edition of Tolstoi's great work.

—Mr. John Foord, who for many years was editor of the New York Times, which position he gave up to assume a similar one on the Brooklyn Union, has now become the editor of Harper's Weekly. It was difficult for the friends of Mr. Foord to understand why he left so fine a paper as the Times to build up the reputation of the Union, an undertaking which might well have staggered any other man than he. Harper's Weekly, however, is a suitable field for the display of those singularly brilliant qualities which caused the Times, during Mr. Foord's editorship, to be considered the most ably conducted newspaper in the United States.

—It is said that Col. Fred. Grant is now at work editing a minute diary kept by his father throughout his entire journey around the world. It covers the pages of fifteen or more little notebooks, and records from day to day the remarkable events in which General Grant took chief part, his impressions of men and women, and some curious experiences which have never as yet been seen in print. The diary, which is expected to fill a good-sized volume, will probably be brought out by Charles L. Webster & Co.

—It is whispered in New York literary circles that the author of that popular novel, The Story of Margaret Kent, is the young woman who has written much over the signature Miss Olney, although she is now the wife of Mr. Kirke, the former editor of Lippincott's Magazine. She recently announced to a friend her intention of acknowledging the authorship of Margaret Kent should her latest venture, Sons and Daughters, which Messrs. Ticknor & Co. have in press, prove equally successful.

—Mr. Edward King, the author of The Golden Spike, and a frequent contributor to the New York Post, is about to issue his new novel, A Venetian Lover, simultaneously in England and the United States, to secure a copyright in each country.

—The February number of Scribner's Magazine promises to be a marked improvement upon its very successful predecessor, both in point of illustration and in the general interest of its text. Mr. John C. Ropes's article on The Likenesses of Julius Cæsar will be beautifully and abundantly illustrated with reproductions from photographs in the author's collection, engraved for the most part by Closson, the frontispiece, "Julius Cæsar as Pontifex Maximus," being an especially fine engraving. Mr. Frederick J. Stimson ("J. S. of Dale") begins his story, "The Residuary Legatee; or, The Posthumous Jest of the Late John Austin."

—Edward Everett Hale's book on Franklin in France is now printed, and the sheets are ready for the binder, making a volume of some four hundred pages. The material employed is entirely new to the public, only three of the many letters of Franklin given having ever before been seen in print. Four portraits, also unfamiliar to Americans, will be included in the volume; of these one is after a medallion made by Nini during Franklin's residence in France.

—Roberts Bros. will issue early in February Cathedral Days, by Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd, a narrative of sight-seeing among the leading cathedral cities of England. There will be illustrations.

—New Connecticut, an autobiographical poem, by A. Bronson Alcott, is to be brought out by Roberts Bros. Mr. F. B. Sanborn, who edits "the naïve work," speaks of the author as one "who bridged the gulf between Puritanism and the Concord School of Philosophy." The work was conceived and executed after Mr. Alcott's eightieth year, "but not completed, when at the age of eighty-three he lost the power of writing from a stroke of apoplexy," so the editor has filled in the breaks in prose. A portion of the volume was printed, but not published, in 1881.

—Mr. Lowell, who has been so chary of his poetical favors of late, is to have still another poem in the Atlantic for March.

—A new poem, philosophical in tendency, and bearing the title, I Am that I Am, is announced by Cupples, Upham & Co. The author is Rev. E. A. Warriner.

—D. Lothrop & Co. have in press a collection of Bed-Time Poetry for children, selected and edited by Wendell Phillips Garrison.

—Count Lyof Tolstoi's new novel, The Death of Ivan Ilyitch, is highly praised for its truthfulness and delicacy of psychological analysis. "Never," says a recent reviewer of Russian literature, "has the tragi-comedy of human life been presented with such realism." The motive of the story seems to be the bitter consciousness of a misspent life.

— The Art of Writing and Speech-Making, by T. W. Higginson, is in the press of Lee & Shepard, who will also issue soon Moral Philosophy, a collection of university lectures by Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, D.D. Mr. Higginson's book is to be a handy manual made up of two magazine articles addressed to young writers and amateur orators.

— A new edition of Thomas Didymus, by James Freeman Clarke, is in preparation. There is a demand for the book on account of the careful review it affords of the condition of Judaism and Rome during the first century of the Christian era.

— Mr. John S. Lockwood, the former Boston publisher, is wintering on his ranch near Garden City, Kansas, over files of the Literary World, Nation, Publishers' Weekly, the American and English Trade Lists, out of which he is bringing down, from 1882 to date, his MS. List of Standard Books, now containing about 20,000 titles. Armed with this directory he will be ready in April to resume his Boston function of library purveyor. Mr. Lockwood has just finished helping to stock the new Reuben Hoar library of Littleton, Mass., which will be opened in the spring. The new town hall, which is nearly completed, contains fine accommodations for this library, which is the gift of a Boston gentleman who wishes to remain anonymous.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

American Poets.	Quarterly Rev. , Oct.
Aristophanes in New York.	Owen Wister.
Bible, les Origines de la.	Ernest Renan.
Brésil, Contes et Chanson Populaires.	Rev. Deux Mondes , Dec.
Léo Quenel.	Rev. Pol. et Lit. , Dec.
Elective System, Possible Limitations of the.	Andover Rev., Jan.
Geo. H. Palmer.	Quarterly Rev. , Oct.
English Literature at the Universities.	Harrisburg, Pa., The first Newspaper
Published in.	Penn. Mag., Nov.
Hawthorne, Nathaniel.	Rev. C. C. Starbuck.
History in American Colleges.	Andover Rev., Jan.
VI. Yale. H. B. Adams.	Education, Jan.
Hugo's (Victor) Tales to his Grandchildren.	St. Nicholas, Nov.
Brander Matthews.	The Forum, Nov.
Hundred Authors, The.	F. H. Hedge.
Literary Men, Utopian Dreams of.	C. T. Sempers.
Literature in a Republic, Hamerton on.	Harvard M., Dec.
Musical Devotees, Moral Dangers of.	T. W. Higginson.
Vida D. Scudder.	Harvard M., Dec.
Russes, les Livres, en France.	E. M. de Vogüé.
	Rev. Deux Mondes , Dec.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Art.

AN OUTLINE HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE FOR BEGINNERS AND STUDENTS. With Complete Indexes and Numerous Illustrations. By Clara Erskine Clement. White, Stokes & Allen. $2.50

Biography.

THE LIFE OF PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. By Edward Dowden. Two Vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $9.00
 DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vol. IX. Macmillan & Co. $3.25

ACTORS AND ACTRESSES OF GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES. Edited by Brander Matthews and Laurence Hutton. Vol. III. The Present Time. Cassell & Co. $1.50

THE CHRISTIAN PLATONISTS OF ALEXANDRIA. Eight Lectures before the University of Oxford in 1886. By Charles Bigg, D.D. Macmillan & Co.

PRÆTERITA. By John Ruskin. Vol. II. Chaps. VI, VII. John Wiley & Co.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN. By Francis F. Browne. New York and St. Louis: N. D. Thompson Publishing Co.

Essays and Sketches.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF BROWNING. By Arthur Symonds. Cassell & Co.

THE FAITH THAT MAKES FAITHFUL. By Wm. C. Gannett and Jenkin Lloyd Jones. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

THE SOCIAL STATUS OF EUROPEAN AND AMERICAN WOMEN. By Kate Byam Martin and Ellen M. Herroin. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 25c.

THE LEGEND OF HAMLET. By Geo. P. Hansen. Charles H. Kerr & Co.

Fiction.

BY WOMAN'S WIT. By Mrs. Alexander. H. Holt & Co. Paper 25c.

KARMA. By A. P. Sinnett. Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.

BRITTA. By Geo. Temple. Illus. Harper & Bros. Paper 25c.

THE MARTYR OF GOLGOTHA. A Picture of Oriental Tradition. By Enrique Perez Escrich. From the Spanish by Adele Josephine Godoy. 2 Vols. W. S. Gottsberger. $2.00

AGATHA AND THE SHADOW. Roberts Bros. $1.50

A YEAR IN EDEN. By Harriet W. Preston. Roberts Bros. $1.50

MABEL STANHOPE. By Katherine O'Meara. Roberts Bros. $1.50

A QUESTION OF IDENTITY. No Name Series. Roberts Bros. $1.00

SHE. By H. Rider Haggard. Harper & Bros. Paper 25c.

THE GOLDEN JUSTICE. By William Henry Bishop Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

THE LADY IN THE BROWN HABIT. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. Harper & Brothers. 20c.

History.

THE EMANCIPATION OF MASSACHUSETTS. By Brooks Adams. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

THE PIONEER QUAKERS. By Richard P. Hallowell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Juvenile.

VERONICA AND OTHER FRIENDS. Tr. from the German of Johanna Spyri by Louise Brooks. Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.50

THE PEASANT AND THE PRINCE. A Story of the French Revolution. [Classics for Children.] By Harriet Martineau. Ginn & Co. 40c.

A STORY BOOK OF SCIENCE. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer. Illus. D. Lothrop & Co.

Pamphlets.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT OF PHILADELPHIA. By E. P. Allinson and Boies Penrose. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University.

THE TEACHING OF THE SACRED SCRIPTURES CONCERNING WINE AND OTHER LIQUORS. By R. N. Davies. Cranston & Stowe.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. By the Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

THE PHONETIC ELEMENTS IN THE GRAPHIC SYSTEM OF THE MAYAS AND MEXICANS. By Daniel G. Brinton, M.D.

PRINCIPLES OF ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By H. W. Keigwin. Ginn & Co.

Poetry.

CIVITAS THE ROMANCE OF OUR NATION'S LIFE. By Walter L. Campbell. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE ROMANCE OF THE UNEXPECTED. By David Skatts Foster. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

MARGUERITE; OR, THE ISLE OF DEMONS, AND OTHER POEMS. By George Martin. Montreal: Dawson Bros.

SONNETS Revised and Enlarged Edition. By Emily Pfeiffer. Scribner & Welford.

POEMS FROM THE GERMAN OF HERMANN ROLLETT. Translated by Henry Phillips, Jr. Philadelphia: Privately Printed.

THE POEMS OF SIR JOHN SUCKLING. A New Edition Edited by Fred. A. Stokes. White, Stokes & Allen.

THE LADY OF DARDALE AND OTHER POEMS. By Horace Eaton Walker. Manchester, N. H.: Brown & Rowe.

THE BARCAROLLE. By A. S. Caswell and J. E. Ryan. Ginn & Co. $1.05

THE PRINCE OF THE FLAMING STAR. A Fairy Operetta by Lydia Hoyt Farmer. D. Lothrop & Co. $1.50

Scientific and Technical.

COURSES AND METHODS. A Handbook for Teachers. By John T. Prince. Ginn & Co. 85c.

Text-Books.

THE BEGINNERS' BOOK IN FRENCH. By Sophie Doriot. Ginn & Co. 95c.

Theological and Religious.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. B. B. Warfield. London: Hodder & Stoughton.

A FAMOUS LETTER.

WE give you two famous letters, and they are "D. K." They mean Dr. MARK R. WOODBURY'S DYSPEPSIA KILLERS.

A little lozenge, which cures DYSPEPSIA.

INDIGESTION. HEARTBURN.

And all stomach troubles. Price 50 cents a box (trial box 25 cents). Sent anywhere in the United States, by mail, on receipt of price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

THE MARTYR OF GOLGOTHA.

BY
ENRIQUE PEREZ ESCRICH.
 From the Spanish by Adele Josephine Godoy.

It is a beautiful and remarkable little book, written in a most religious and reverential spirit, and with a certain warmth of loving conviction not too common nowadays. It describes the events and persons surrounding the life of Christ, and imparts a reality to the sublime tragedy to which custom has rendered many persons indifferent. The book is in two volumes, and deserves a secure place among the historical and imaginative works on the Christian era. — The World, N. Y.

In Two Volumes.

Price, paper, $1.00. Cloth, $1.75.

Sent by Mail on Receipt of Price.

WM. S. GOTTSBERGER, PUBLISHER,
 11 MURRAY ST., NEW YORK.

RICHARD REALF.

I will soon publish the BIOGRAPHY and COMPLETE POEMS of the late Col. RICHARD REALF. The price of the volumes will be $2.00 each. Address: THOMAS D. SUPLEE, CORNWALL-ON-HIT BROOK, N. Y.

WANTED.

Position on Newspaper or Periodical as Book Reviewer or Literary Editor. Address, CRITIC, 85 Prospect Street, Cambridgeport, Mass.

FOR SALE.

A complete set of the "LITERARY WORLD," on reasonable terms. 12 volumes are bound. Address: Mrs. Henry M. Brooks, Salem, Mass.

OUR HOMES
 HOW TO HEAT & VENTILATE THEM

New Edition of 96 pages, with additional matter, and illustrations of 45 of the finest residences in the country. A complete Manual on the subject of Sanitary Heating and Ventilating, besides giving valuable suggestions to those who are building or furnishing a home. The book is exceedingly artistic, and will be mailed free on receipt of 6 cents in stamps. SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO., Boston, Mass.

For Sale—"Fewacres."

THE HOMESTEAD AT FARMINGTON, MAINE, so long occupied by the late Jacob Abbott and his sisters, is now offered for sale. The property consists of a roomy and rambling old-fashioned Cottage, with outbuildings, containing in all fifteen or more rooms, and something over two acres of land, charmingly situated just outside the village, and combining seclusion with convenience in an unusual degree. With a few trifling exceptions, the entire premises are in good order. The house is home-like and comfortable, and the grounds, richly endowed by nature, and tastefully improved by Mr. Abbott himself, are adorned with paths, terraces, groves, hedges, seats, arbors, and magnificent elms. The beauties of Farmington as a New England village, its excellent school privileges, the famed loveliness of the Nandy River Valley, and the proximity of the Rangeley Lakes, Old Blue, and other pleasure resorts in Western Maine, make "Fewacres," even apart from its associations, a singularly desirable estate for a family wishing a summer abode or a country residence all the year round. Price low. Address the executor,

EDWARD ABBOTT,
 11 Dana Street, Cambridge, Mass.

STONINGTON LINE. INSIDE ROUTE FOR NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6:30 P. M.
 Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.
 A. A. FOLSON, Supt. B. & P. R. R.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
 Other advertising pages, 16 "
 Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York,

HAVE NOW READY:

I. PROBLEMS AND SOCIAL STUDIES.

By Rev. R. HEBER NEWTON, author of "Philistinism," "The Use and Abuse of the Bible," "The Book of the Beginnings," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

CHIEF CONTENTS: A Bird's-Eye View of the Labor Problem—The Story of Coöperative Production and Coöperative Credit in the United States—The Story of Coöperative Distribution in the United States—Is the State Just to the Workingman?—Old-Time Guilds and Modern Commercial Associations—The Prevention of Intemperance—Moral Education in the Public Schools—The Free Kindergarten in Church Work—The Religious Aspect of Socialism and Communism.

II. LE ROMANTISME FRANÇAIS.

A selection from writers of the French Romantic School, 1824-1848. Edited for the use of schools and colleges, with an introduction and notes. By Prof. THOMAS F. CRANE, Cornell University. Being v. ii. of "French Classics" for Students. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

III. RAILWAY PRACTICE.

Its Principles and Suggested Reforms reviewed. By E. PORTER ALEXANDER. Being vol. 36 in the series of "Questions of the Day." Octavo, cloth, 75 cents.

IV. THE SILENT WORKMAN.

A Story. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"He brings to the narration an earnestness which is felt in every page, and the love-story which is involved is developed with equal strength."—Buffalo Express. "It is short, original, and striking, and told in excellent English. Mr. Ross has genuine talent."—Boston Advertiser.

V. RISIF'S DAUGHTER.

A Drama. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, author of "The Defence of the Bride," "Hand and Ring," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"The drama is written with much power."—Boston Zion's Herald. "It is rapid in its action, strong and powerful, and from a poetic point of view is of a high order of merit."—Buffalo Express.

VI. THE ROMANCE OF THE UNEXPECTED. By DAVID SKAATS FOSTER. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

VII. BALLADS OF THE REVOLUTION, AND OTHER POEMS. By GEORGE LANSING RAYMOND, author of "Poetry as a Representative Art," "A Life in Song." 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

VIII. POETRY AS A REPRESENTATIVE ART. By GEORGE LANSING RAYMOND. 8vo, cloth extra, $1.75.

"Its results are the most important ones yet attained in its department, and, we believe, the most valuable."—Boston Globe.

IX. A LIFE IN SONG.

By GEORGE LANSING RAYMOND. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"Mr. Raymond is a poet, with all that the name implies. He has the true fire—there is no disputing that."—Hartford Post.

* Putnam's New Classified Catalogue sent on application.

ANY PERSON wishing to acquire a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find "GERMAN SIMPLIFIED" eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions; (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.

FOUR NEW NOVELS.A YEAR IN EDEN.

A Novel. By HARRIET WATERS PRESTON, author of "Aspendale," "Love in the Nineteenth Century," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

AGATHA AND THE SHADOW.

The second volume in the "Old Colony Series" of novels. Uniform in size and style with "Constance of Acadia." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A QUESTION OF IDENTITY.

A new novel in the "No Name Series." 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

MABEL STANHOPE.

A Story. By KATHLEEN O'MEARA, author of "Madame Mohl," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

CARVING AND SERVING.

By Mrs. D. A. LINCOLN, author of "The Boston Cook Book." Square 12mo, illuminated board covers, 60 cents.

RIDING FOR LADIES.

With Hints on the Stable. By Mrs. POWER O'DONOGHUE, author of "Ladies on Horseback" and "A Beggar on Horseback." Very fully illustrated by Chantrey Corbould. Square 12mo, cloth, gilt, $3.50.

* Just published, and for sale by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS,

BOSTON.

Injuries received in
TRAVEL, SPORT OR BUSINESS
ALL Around the GLOBE
ARE INSURED AGAINST BY

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Original Accident Company of America,
Largest in the World.

Also, a Large and Sound Life Company,

With larger Assets in proportion to its Liabilities than any other Successful Company.

Ask Agents to show a copy of our
New Life Policy.

Lowest Rates of Any Liberal Policy Yet
Issued.

NO CONDITIONS OR RESTRICTIONS
WHATEVER AFTER TWO YEARS.

Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide
Travel.

Cash Surrender values, Paid-up Policy, or Special
Term Insurance, Plainly Stated
in Every Policy Issued.

Paid Policy-Holders over $11,500,000.

Assets, $8,417,000. Surplus, $2,096,000.

RATES AS LOW AS TWENTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE
WILL JUSTIFY.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, Pres. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst. Sec.

"In a nutshell, a world of philosophy."

THE MONARCH OF DREAMS

BY

THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

No previous work by this author has called forth warmer praise from the best private sources than this brief imaginative story.

One of the most eminent American critics speaks of "its clear and wholesome depths," and adds: "It is a charming allegory, as full of nature as of fancy."

Another says that it gives "in a nutshell a world of philosophy."

A distinguished writer of fiction says: "When I first read the little book which holds so much between its slender covers, I thought, It is Hawthorne over again; and I see that others have had the same idea; but afterwards it seemed to me of more far-reaching purpose and deeper insight than Hawthorne used, and much too bold and original to be compared with any other work."

The BOSTON TRANSCRIPT says of it: "This little book has but one fault—there is not enough of it."

The BOSTON TRAVELLER says: "The book is worthy to become a classic in American literature."

The CAMBRIDGE PRESS says: "It seems to us quite as original as anything evolved from the imagination of any English or American writer of the past or the present."

Cloth, 50 Cents.

Sold by all Booksellers, and sent by Mail,
Postpaid, on Receipt of Price.

LEE & SHEPARD, Publishers, Boston.

Books for Sale.

LAROUSSE. Grand Dictionnaire Universel du XIX^e Siècle. 16 vols., 4to, bound in full sheepskin, new contributions, 22,100 pages, printed in 4 columns. (Latest edition.) $150.00.

LITTRÉ, E. Dictionnaire de la langue française, with supplement. 5 vols., 4to, bound in full cloth, new. (Latest edition.) $35.00.

APPLETON. The American Cyclopædia, with Index, 17 vols. New series, 1876-82, 7 vols. Together, 24 vols., royal 8vo., bound in half morocco, with corners, marbled edges, new. (Latest edition.) $125.00.

JOHN DELAY, 23 Union Square,
NEW YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED:

EDITION DE LUXE.

A TRIBUTE IN MEMORY OF

HELEN HUNT JACKSON (H. H.).

LIMITED TO

100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on India Paper.....$2.75
100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on Satin Paper.....$3.50
Each with wide margins, gilt edges and embossed silver cover on Whatman's paper, in boxes.

AN ELEGANT SOUVENIR.

Mailed on receipt of price by

Frank S. Thayer, Publisher, Denver, Col.

QUERIES ANSWERED.

Set N. Y. DAILY (illustrated) GRAPHIC for sale
by A. S. CLARK, 34 Park Row, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 3. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 316. Publishers.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 5, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY.

Second Edition Ready.

(140TH THOUSAND.)

"Scribner's Magazine has made an instant and positive success. The sales of the first number were 140,000 copies, and those of the February number should be double this if the demand conforms to the quality. The opening article, with its illustrations on 'The Likenesses of Julius Cæsar,' is curious, and its author, Mr. J. C. Ropes, being not a pedant, but an enthusiastic searcher among antiques, writes in the easy style that suits popular taste. Ex-Minister Washburne's second installment of 'Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris' brings up vividly some of the terrible scenes, the artistic illustrations heightening the effect. Annie Cary Morris concludes her very entertaining digest of the diaries of her ancestor, Gouverneur Morris, while he was United States Minister to the Court of Louis XVI. In action this number of Scribner is strong. Mr. Bunner's 'Story of a New-York House' grows more dramatic. 'The Residuary Legatee,' by 'J. S. of Dale,' is a tale the first part of which makes the reader impatient for the second, which will disclose the results of the queer will made by John Austin. The new chapters of 'Seth's Brother's Wife' are a further development of a fine story. A complete but short tale by Duncan Campbell Scott, called 'The Ducharnes of the Baskatonge,' is a well-told drama of life among the French Canadians of the very far North. Mr. Brander Matthews's paper on Coquelin, the French actor, and Mr. Thomas Sergeant Perry's on Russian novels are well worth reading, while in poetry there are graceful and polished verses by Mr. Charles Henry Luders, a fine sonnet by Charles Edwin Markham, and one by Louise Chandler Moulton. This number of Scribner can well bear comparison with the best numbers of the older and more costly magazines."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Scribner's Magazine we have already begun to regard as we do those among our acquaintances with whom on our meeting we immediately feel en rapport—whom we can never meet again except as old friends entitled to a cordial welcome. The new February number is full of a interesting matter. In its opening paper we have a noteworthy article by Mr. John C. Ropes, in which the various portraits of Julius Cæsar are given, with a running commentary full of valuable facts in regard to them. In his reminiscences of Coquelin Mr. Brander Matthews quotes largely from personal interviews. . . . Of literature and poetry in this number we have a goodly array. 'J. S. of Dale' begins a story, 'The Residuary Legatee,' the scene of which is laid near Boston. That it interests one from the start goes without saying. Octave Thanet has one short story of St. Augustine, 'Half a Curse,' and Duncan Campbell Scott another in quite a different vein, 'The Ducharnes of the Baskatonge,' where the shadows of the great Northern wilderness with its glimmer of unnamed lakes form a background for his characters. 'Seth's Brother's Wife' is continued. There are installments also of E. B. Washburne's reminiscences of the Paris Commune, and a concluding paper by Miss Annie Cary Morris on the diaries of Gouverneur Morris. Mr. H. C. Bunner's serial, 'The Story of a New-York House,' proceeds leisurely through a second installment, accompanied by some very pleasing pictures. Mr. Bunner shows an intimate acquaintance with old New York, and applies to the pages of his story his customary graceful touch."—New York Star.

25 Cents a Number; $3.00 a Year.

For Sale by all Newsdealers.

Subscribe from the first (January) Number.

*Remittance should be sent by post money order or registered letter to

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, Publishers,
743 and 745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by F. A. ARNOLD, translator of Dr. Geisler's "History of the English Constitution."
HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderny, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.
GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.
WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophical order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. E. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FONSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPTE'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

*The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

A COMTIST LOVER,

AND OTHER STUDIES. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN, author of "The New Godiva," "A Tourist Idyl," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

CONTENTS: Part I.—A Comtist Lover: Being a Dialogue on Positivism and the Zeitgeist—The Extension of the Law of Kindness: Being an Essay on the Rights of Animals. Part II.—The Delphine of Madame de Staël—Some Immortality-Thoughts—Some Novels of William Black.

*"The main essays, on immortality and on the Rights of Animals and the Dialogue, are all of them splendid. The clearness with which you have grasped the problems at issue, the justice you deal to your opponents, and the masterly way in which you state your own high convictions are, to my thinking, quite admirable."—Frances Power Cobbe.

TWENTY-ONE YEARS' WORK IN THE HOLY LAND.

A Record and a Summary. June 22, 1865–June 22, 1886. Published for the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund. In 1 vol., large crown 8vo, with 50 illustrations, $1.25.

"Likely to prove of invaluable service to all those who are interested in work in the Holy Land."—Record.

"They are invaluable labors which the society has initiated, and one can but trust that a liberal degree of public support will be assured to their continuance."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE STONE LORE OF SYRIA.

Canaanite, Phœnician, Hebrew, Jewish and Samaritan; Greek, Herodian, Roman, Byzantine, Arabian, Period of Crusades. By CLAUD REGNIER CONDER, C. E. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

THE ANATOMY OF NEGATION.

By EDGAR SALTUS. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

CONTENTS: The Revolt of the Orient—The Negations of Antiquity—The Convulsions of the Church—The Disent of the Seers—The Protocols of Yesterday—A Poet's Verdict—Bibliography.

ABOUT THE THEATRE:

Essays and Studies. By WILLIAM ARCHER, author of "English Dramatists of Today." Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

PREPARING FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION.

VERDI:

An Anecdotic History of His Life and Works. By ARTHUR PONGIN. With Portrait and Facsimile. Translated from the French by James E. Matthew. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

NEW NOVEL BY DR. HAMMOND.

ON THE SUSQUEHANNA.

A NOVEL.

By WILLIAM A. HAMMOND,

Author of "Lal," "Doctor Grattan," "Mr. Oldmixon," etc.

• 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

"On the Susquehanna" is a novel of real life as it exists in the picturesque region of Middle Pennsylvania—a region hitherto neglected by writers of fiction. The local coloring, personal and topographical, is such as could only have been given through a minute acquaintance with the people in that part of the country in which the action takes place. The plot is absorbing and well maintained to the end of the story.

DR. HAMMOND'S PREVIOUS NOVELS.

LAL.

"The heroine is a distinct and vigorous conception."—Saturday Review, London.

DOCTOR GRATTAN.

"Doctor Grattan" is really a capital book."—Saturday Review, London.

MR. OLDMIXON.

"The book is well written, and in parts brilliantly."—New York Tribune.

A STRONG-MINDED WOMAN; or, Two Years After.

Although in one way a sequel to "Lal," "A Strong-Minded Woman" is an independent work, complete in itself.

In uniform 12mo volumes, cloth, price $1.50 each.

For sale by all booksellers; or any volume sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

IS A LITTLE WONDER.

THE POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD. A Comprehensive and Popular Series of Maps, illustrating Political and Physical Geography, prepared by JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F. R. G. S. Beautifully printed in 32mo, cloth extra, $1.00; full leather, $1.50.

"Is a most inviting little tome. . . legible and intelligible."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

"One of the most convenient little books ever published."—Chicago Tribune.

"A decidedly cute pocket atlas."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"Nothing more reliable and convenient in its way has yet appeared."—Boston Globe.

"Mr. Bartholomew as a geographer is a sufficient guarantee of its accuracy as well as value."—The Churchman.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ROMANCE

—OF A—

POOR YOUNG MAN,

—BY—

OCTAVE FEUILLET,

From the French by J. Henry Hager.

In One Volume.

Price, paper, 50c. Cloth, 90c.

Sent by Mail on Receipt of Price.

WM. S. GOTTSBERGER, PUBLISHER,

11 Murray Street, New York.

QUERIES ANSWERED.

Set N. Y. DAILY (Illustrated) GRAPHIC for sale by A. S. CLARK, 34 Park Row, New York.

Now Ready:

MRS. WISTER'S NEW TRANSLATION.

SAINT MICHAEL.

A Romance. From the German of E. Werner, author of "Banned and Blessed," etc. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

The novels of E. Werner are always readable and in the highest degree entertaining. Mrs. Wister's refined and pure taste never leads her amiss in making her selections, and the novel before us is more interesting than any of its predecessors. She is one of the best translators from the German in this country, and the felicitous manner in which the work has been done in the present volume adds to the charm of a truly agreeable novel.

MRS. WISTER'S PREVIOUS TRANSLATIONS.

12mo, extra cloth, each $1.25.

VIOLETTA.

THE LADY WITH THE RUBIES,

VAIN FOREBODINGS,

A PENNILESS GIRL,

Etc., Etc., Etc.

TAKEN BY SIEGE.

A Novel. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

"The story deals with the living forces and events of today, and is one of the most vital and strong and keenly interesting of late novels."—Boston Evening Traveller.

* For sale by all booksellers; or any volume will be sent by the publishers, postpaid, by mail, on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., Publishers,

715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

OUR HOMES

HOW TO HEAT & VENTILATE THEM

New Edition of 94 pages, with additional matter, and illustrations of 45 of the finest residences in the country. A complete Manual on the subject of Sanitary Heating and Ventilating, besides giving valuable suggestions to those who are building or furnishing a home. The book is exceedingly artistic, and will be mailed free on receipt of 6 cents in stamps.

SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO., Boston, Mass.

DELIGHTFUL READING.

AGATHA AND THE SHADOW.

The second volume in the "Old Colony Series" of novels. Uniform in size and style with "Constance of Acadia." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"This is the second in the 'Old Colony Series.' Agatha is represented as the daughter of Elder Brewster, and the wife of Bernard Anselm. The story is a series of pictures of the early life of this country, always with Puritans as the central figures. Indians have a large place in this record of Pilgrim life, and the book is crowded with romantic and dramatic material, with intense feeling, with brilliant descriptions."—Worcester Spy.

A YEAR IN EDEN.

Part I. Spring; Part II. Summer; Part III. Autumn; Part IV. Winter. By HARRIET WATERS PRESTON. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"This story by an American is so excellently told that it is hardly likely to have been a first venture. It is a New World romance, free from the commonplace of so much American fiction, yet true to life. They are real men and women whom we meet—personages in whom we can take a genuine interest, in their wrong-doings and weaknesses as in their virtues and heroisms."—London Academy.

A QUESTION OF IDENTITY.

Being the tenth volume in the third "No Name Series." 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"A Question of Identity" takes its title from the resemblance of girl twins to each other—a resemblance so strong that a lover of Rachel offered himself to Leah, calling her his beautiful Rachel. It is a story of New England life, with strong characterization and intense dramatic incidents which give coloring to the impression that it is very real. The locality might be a half-hour's ride from Boston by rail.

MABEL STANHOPE.

A Story. By KATHLEEN O'MEARA, author of "Madame Mohl," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

This is a French story, with both English and French characters. The author, Miss O'Meara, by a long residence in Paris, has become familiar with French life; and her delightful book, "Madame Mohl, her Salon and her Friends," is a foretaste of what "Mabel Stanhope" will be found to be.

RIDING FOR LADIES.

With Hints on the Stable. By Mrs. POWER O'DONOGHUE, author of "Ladies on Horseback" and "A Beggar on Horseback." Very fully illustrated by A. Chantrey Corbould. Square 12mo, cloth, gilt, $3.50. Special English edition.

So much interest is now being given to horseback riding that the publication of this book is very opportune. It is a collection of useful and practical hints on matters that pertain to the horse and his management. The instructions given are of the plainest and easiest description, and are the result of an experience which has in some instances been dearly bought.

ROBERTS BROTHERS,

Publishers, BOSTON.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, FEBRUARY 5, 1887. No. 3.

CONTENTS.

THE MONARCH OF DREAMS	35
TWO TALES BY TURGENIEFF	35
SIDNEY AS MAN OF LETTERS	35
THE SECOND CORPS	35
A STUDY OF MEXICO	36
CHARACTER PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON	37
WHIST SCORES AND CARD-TABLE TALK	37
RELIGIOUS READING:
The Story of the Four	38
The Picture of Jesus	38
A Manual of Christian Evidences	38
The Christian Platonists of Alexandria	39
MINOR NOTICES:
Symonds's Introduction to Browning	39
Dewey's Psychology	39
Years of Experience	42
Society in the Elizabethan Age	42
The Functions of the Brain	42
Etc., Etc., Etc.
BIOGRAPHY:
Hume	41
A Life of Benjamin F. Wade	41
Actors and Actresses	41
MINOR FICTION:
Mabel Stanhope	41
Dollars and Duty	41
The Golden Justice	41
A Mirage of Promise	41
The Trial of Gideon and Countess Almara's Murder	41
Etc., Etc., Etc.
ENGLISH OPINIONS	39
PARAGRAPHS	40
DAVID ATWOOD WASSON	40
ORIGINAL POETRY:
To John Greenleaf Whittier. S. V. Cole	40
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Lady Martin's "Shakespeare's Female Characters"	42
The "Passionate Pilgrim" in the "Quarto Reprints"	42
Cheap Reading in Elizabethan and Other Old English	43
Actors' Names in Early Stage-Directions	43
THE PERIODICALS	43
NEWS AND NOTES	44
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	47
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	47

THE MONARCH OF DREAMS.*

THIS booklet contains a story of the usual magazine length, but one far above the usual magazine level in its high artistic finish of style and the striking novelty of its theme. There is little writing done in America, and, for that matter, little in England, which has a higher claim than Col. Higginson's to rank as abiding literature.

In none of his compositions are his best qualities more visible and more charming than in this story of Francis Ayrault, who left his native State of Rhode Island—"the only State in the American Union where chief-justices habitually write poetry, and prosperous manufacturers print essays on the Freedom of the Will"—and took up his abode in a New England hill-town, there to gain, if he could, a full mastery over the dreaming faculty which he possessed in uncommon measure. He knew the recorded instances which go to show that a power of making our dreams coherent is at least conceivable, if not probable; and he arranged his circumstances so that they might favor the development of such control. He succeeded, at first, in procuring dreams that were consecutive, but soon they came to a fearful pause when the figures that filled them were realized to be but reduplications of himself, now pygmean, now gigantic, but ever a source of terror, to the enfeebled will of the dreamer which in a supreme moment they broke, robbing him of the one great opportunity of his life. The description of Ayrault's developing dreams is fascinating, though it does not enter into competition with De Quincey's marvelous painting of his opium visions.

The present interest in so-called "psychical research" will doubtless attract many readers to this brilliant tale; may they lay it aside with the impression on their wills of the homely wisdom of the farmer, Cyrus Gerry, whose one book was Lamartine's history which told of "Robyspierry and Virginnyard (Vergniaud!)" "Humanity, a-ploddin' over this planet, meets with consid'able many left-handed things. And the best way I know of is to summons up courage and put right through 'em."

TWO TALES BY TURGENIEFF.*

MR. GERSONI is very discerning in his choice of Turgénieff's tales for purposes of translation. His rendering of Mumu and The Diary of a Superfluous Man we remember as a painstaking performance which, in spite of serious defects in style, was serviceable through its simplicity and fidelity. This version of An Unfortunate Woman and Ass'ya is, on the whole, much better done, and is indeed highly creditable to the author who has attained to a reasonable command of English. Here and there we notice slips such as the expressions "donned in a livery cloak" (p. 7), "my mother died almost suddenly" (p. 56), "I . . . laid down on a flat warm rock" (p. 149), and the use of "will" for "shall" (p. 109)—but these are about all the serious errors to be observed in a hasty reading. Mr. Gersoni is a faithful interpreter, and his efforts deserve encouragement.

As for the stories themselves, they are both masterpieces of the faultless realism, the pitiless analysis, of which Turgénieff alone comprehended the possibilities. The first, An Unfortunate Woman, is unspeakably tragic. Susanna Ivanovna, the offspring of an alliance between a Russian nobleman and a Jewess, becomes stepdaughter to a brutal foreigner, a German, who has won a title by the meanest services; and in the sordid and debasing atmosphere of her home she famishes for companionship. By the schemes of her uncle she has been separated from the man she loves, and her stepfather uses all the means in his power to isolate her and make her existence a torture. From this she escapes by death, which may have been suicide or murder. The funeral scenes are portrayed with Rembrandtesque touches that leave no phase of horror unexpressed. The whole effect is oppressively somber. In its representation of the condition of the Russian nobility of a generation ago the work is a revelation.

In Ass'ya the theme is less gloomy and the method not so severe, although the logic of destiny has full sway in determining the conclusion. Ass'ya is a creation of extraordinary vitality, a remarkable type of perverted womanhood. She, too, is the daughter of a Russian nobleman, the mother in this instance being of the peasant class. Ass'ya has many fine qualities, but the shame of her origin acts as a continual irritant upon her proud, shy nature; "she was ashamed, . . . ashamed of that feeling of shame, and proud of it at the same time." An untrained mind, given over to the impulses of the moment, how could she be anything but a problem to others as well as to herself? When she falls in love with the vacillating young Russian in whose words the story is told, she is overwhelmed with the fervor of her passion, and when her advances are repulsed, she is like a wounded animal, seeking a hiding-place. Here again Turgénieff has aimed to depict the vices and shortcomings of the Russian nobility, and to foretell the results of their selfish and ignorant power. But in reading Turgénieff one ought not to push the allegory too far. The interest of his writings lies in their artistic power, and through that they speak to us in no uncertain way.

SIDNEY AS MAN OF LETTERS.*

WE cannot help thinking that this little monograph on Sir Philip Sidney would have fitted better into the series of "English Worthies" than it does into the "English Men of Letters." Sidney undoubtedly produced in Astrophel and Stella and the Defence of Poesy works of commanding and enduring renown, and the Arcadia, with all its defects, remains as a permanent name in the history of English literature; but Sidney was not, primarily, a man of letters; his writings were only a minor expression of a well-rounded and complex personality. No man, who has produced literary work of anything like the same order, ever gave less time and thought to literature as literature. "The typical English gentleman of the modern era," Mr. Symonds says of him, finding combined in his nature "chivalry and piety, courtly breeding and humane culture, statesmanship and loyalty." We do not, of course, mean to assert that these qualities debar a man

* The Monarch of Dreams. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

* An Unfortunate Woman, and Ass'ya. By Ivan Sergeyevitch Turgénieff. Translated from the Russian by Henry Gersoni. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.

* Sir Philip Sidney. By J. A. Symonds. [English Men of Letters.] Harper & Bros. 75c.

from literature; we know that they gave to Sidney's writings their lasting charm—but yet, in a sense, they also gave to his character a universality which refuses to be narrowed into any restricted sphere. Think as we will of Sidney as the man of letters, we find Sidney the courtier, the statesman, "the Elizabethan gentleman," usurping our attention and forcing upon us the conception of a nature which, as Mr. Symonds finely remarks, was "the essence of congruity."

Something of this Mr. Symonds must have felt in the process of composition. There is, necessarily, very little in the book about Sidney, the man of letters; a great deal about Sidney on his travels and at court. The Arcadia is disposed of in twelve pages; the sonnets, Astrophel and Stella, get forty pages of description and analysis; the Defence of Poesy is summarized in fifteen pages—the remaining one hundred and twenty pages of the volume are devoted to biographical details in which literature and the production of literature are considered incidentally and rarely. And yet Mr. Symonds has honestly made the most of his subject. He has gone over the existing published material regarding Sidney's career with care, his narrative is succinct, yet never dry or meager, and his interpretation of Sidney's character, while following with due moderation the traditional lines of heroic eulogy, offers in the way of original comment much that is suggestive and enlightening. The enthusiasm of the modern biographer of Sidney must necessarily be somewhat forced. It is not now altogether easy to understand why he was elevated in popular esteem to the rank of a demigod. Mr. Symonds confesses at the beginning of the story that the nature of Sidney when closely studied is "somewhat chilling" because of an essential "want of impulse—want, perhaps, of salutary humor," and one readily sympathizes with the suggestion that "a touch of recklessness would have made him more attractive." The prudence which tempered his precocity was not, however, due to lack of spontaneity. The tragic fate of his maternal relatives, the Dudleys; his position at court as a dependent on the favor of Elizabeth; and the responsibilities of a feudal epoch which he was early bred to comprehend and exercise—all had a restraining and sobering influence upon him. But the youth who informed his uncle's enemies that they "lied in their throat," and offered to enforce his words with his sword, who, in the queen's presence, could snub the great Earl of Ormond, and who threatened his father's secretary with the dagger, was not devoid of human impulses. Humor, certainly, Sidney did not possess, but the few recorded instances in which he gave way to natural passion should make us chary of ascribing coldness to one who, it may be, found safety for himself and others only in a rigid policy of self-repression.

In discussing Astrophel and Stella Mr. Symonds is at his best as a discerning critic and a lucid expositor. He commits himself at once to the opinion that the poems were composed—at least the greater part of them—after Lady Rich's marriage, and the view is supported with excellent logic. The points he makes are that "the poems would have no meaning if they were written for a maiden;" that they have come down to us substantially in the order in which they were written; and that they exhibit a natural development of sentiment from the beginning to the end of the series. All this, of course, by the way; it is more important to know that in Astrophel and Stella Mr. Symonds recognizes profound sincerity of purpose, very genuine emotion, which poetical exaggeration and wilful conceits of style are powerless to obscure. "Before the publication of Shakespeare's sonnets these were undoubtedly the finest love poems in our language." Thus regarded, their origin and inspiration become matters of secondary importance. Of the Defence of Poesy Mr. Symonds is eloquent in discriminating praise. "The model for such kinds of composition," he says of it—"a work which combines the quaintness and the blitheness of Elizabethan literature with the urbanity and reserve of a later period."

And then, in a final chapter, we come to the last years of Sidney—to glimpses of his father, "of somewhat limited capacity and stubborn temper, but true as steel;" of his mother who "emerges with pale luster from all the actors of that time to represent the perfect wife and mother in a lady of unpretending, but heroic, dignity;" of Sidney himself, ambition "of a steady, persistent, intellectual stamp" his leading quality—come, at length, to the sweetly familiar account of the worthy ending of that resplendent career:

Death, and the noble manner of his death, set seal to the charter of immortality which the expectation of contemporaries had already drafted. He was withdrawn from the contention of our earth before time or opportunity proved or compromised his high position. Gloriously he passed into the sphere of idealities; and as an ideal, he is forever living and forever admirable. Herein, too, there was something Greek in his good fortune; something which assimilates him to the eternal youthfulness of Hellas, and to the adolescent heroes of mythology.

THE SECOND CORPS.*

PUBLISHED at the close of 1886 this work has only just reached us. By reason of its subject, authorship, and quality it belongs in the front rank of war histories. As the Army of the Potomac held a foremost place in the defence of the Union, so the Second Corps held a foremost place in the Army of the Potomac. One of the original corps organized by President Lincoln in 1862, it alone maintained its organization and life unbroken until the end of the war in 1865, and during the three years and two months of its history participated in every engagement of note in the East—the battles of the Peninsula Campaign, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Bristoe Station, the terrible struggle through the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, Cold Harbor, and the final scenes at Petersburg and Appomattox. Its history is the Civil War biography of Sumner, Couch, Warren, Hancock, and Humphreys, who successively commanded it, and of Sedgwick, Richardson, Howard, French, Barlow, Birney, Miles, Mott, Gibbon, Webb, and Hays, who were the more famous of its division commanders. It was in turn one of the strong fighting arms of McDowell, McClellan, Burnside, Hooker, Meade, and Grant; Jackson, Longstreet, and Lee staggered under its blows; it captured forty-four Confederate colors before it lost one of its own; and in three States it left nearly forty thousand men wounded or dead upon the field.

This is the outline of the story which Gen. Walker tells in these 737 octavo pages, with full indexes, with lists of officers killed or mortally wounded, of both Union and Confederate officers mentioned and of localities alluded to, with portraits of 31 generals, and with 30 maps; its author, now the distinguished head of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and an acknowledged economist and statistician of eminence, having risen to the rank of brigadier-general of volunteers in this same Army of the Potomac, and filled the post of Assistant Adjutant General of the Second Corps from October, 1862, to January, 1865, when disabilities received in the service obliged him to resign.

The Adjutant General of an army or a corps possesses peculiar facilities for writing its history; he is its secretary, so to speak, its omnipresent spirit, its general's executive officer; all documentary materials are in his hands; and when to these official qualifications are added, as in General Walker's case, thorough scholarship, the frankness and impartiality of an honest mind, and a good literary style, we have about all that an historical writer needs in addition to a good subject, which is also here.

The writer of this notice was with the Army of the Potomac at Chancellorsville. How distinctly he remembers the coming up of Hancock's division of the Second Corps, on the plank road leading to Salem Church, on that fair May day morning that ushered in the battle, General Couch and his staff riding calmly at its head; and how vividly the following words of General Walker recall the landscape and the scene:

* History of the Second Army Corps in the Army of the Potomac. By Francis A. Walker. Illustrated. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

Nearly 50,000 men of the Second, Fifth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Corps were close on hand, while Sickles, with the Third Corps, was rapidly coming up from behind. These columns proceeded, against all the opposition the enemy were able to offer, until they gained a ridge which sweeps across the three roads mentioned, crossing the turnpike somewhat more than two miles from Chancellorsville. The position reached was one in every way easy to hold. It afforded room and range for a powerful artillery, and could readily have been crowned before night by ninety guns. The ground in front was largely open; the roads behind sufficiently numerous for a rapid reinforcement of the line or for a safe retreat. The field was exactly such a one as the men of the Army of the Potomac had always been crying out for—one on which they could see the enemy they were called to fight. Yet this position General Hooker, in an evil hour, determined to abandon, not for one further advanced, but for the low and wooded ground about Chancellorsville, relinquishing the very form and show of aggression, retreating before the enemy, and taking up a line which was completely commanded by the high ground already occupied. The act was little short of suicide.

Of the great fields of Antietam and Gettysburg, as well as of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, McClellan's opening campaign and Grant's closing campaign, the reader will find clear and spirited accounts in General Walker's pages, so far as the part borne by the Second Corps commanded the scene; and often descriptions of no small dramatic and pictorial power. The author writes without unaffectedness, with manly frankness; in censure kindly, in praise generously, not hesitating to condemn the distinguished and to exalt the obscure as he thinks deserved. A warm tribute is paid to the memory of McClellan. Pope was a "braggart." The chapter on Fredericksburg bears heavily on Burnside, as indeed the book does throughout, with an almost indignant severity. Towards Hooker at Chancellorsville General Walker is more lenient. A fine contrast is drawn between Sumner and Couch who succeeded Sumner in command of the Corps. At Gettysburg Sickles is censured, and Hancock, that "prince of soldiers," easily bears away the honors, with Humphreys not far behind him. Keeping himself wholly behind his subject, though no mean actor in it, General Walker has produced a solid, authoritative, interesting work, a model of its kind.

We notice a single error, on p. 204, fifth line from the bottom, "in it" for "it in."

A STUDY OF MEXICO.*

WE have had of late several books on Mexico, but in some respects this is the most satisfactory of them all. Not the most satisfying, for it does not flatter, it does not make us want to go and live in Mexico; but it evidently tells the truth about the country and the people; it looks at the subject in a hard-headed sort of way; it faces unpleasant facts and is not carried away by romantic fancies; it has all the exactness and fidelity of a government report, with much of the charm and interest of a traveler's note-book. If a man were to be selected on the part of the United States to go down into Mexico on an exploring expedition, and bring back to us a rigid statement and estimate of what he found there, we should be at a loss to name a more suitable commissioner than the Hon. David A. Wells.

Mr. Wells made the visit on which this book is based in his own private capacity as an American citizen traveling for health and pleasure; he rode, mainly in a special train, over the whole of the "Mexican Central Railroad," most of the "Vera Cruz and City of Mexico," and part of the "Mexican National;" stopping where he liked, were it at city, town, hacienda, mine, or desert, satisfying his curiosity fully at every point, and traversing in all a route exceeding 3,000 miles. The account of his observations first appeared in the Popular Science Monthly, and now is reprinted with additions in this modest volume of 261 pages.

And what is Mexico as Mr. Wells saw it? A country bordering on the United States for more than 2,000 miles, but almost as foreign to the latter as if it were in another planet; a republic of 29 States; a land where milk sells at 25 cents a quart, and native butter is almost unknown; a land of adobe huts, hideous cacti, dusty plains, cloudless skies, and blazing suns; whose laboring classes are mostly Indians; whose great land-holders make their homes in the City of Mexico or in Europe; a country which is one of the poorest and most wretched on the globe, susceptible of improvement, but not likely to grow rich and powerful. Its territory is an immense plateau, from whose frost and snow-covered heights one may descend in an hour to the tropics and naked Indians. There is not a navigable river in the country, and its fertility is about that of Arabia.

With a few rapid touches Mr. Wells sketches the unhappy history of Mexico, and comes to a summary of the population—some ten or twelve millions, to the despotism of the national church and the degradation and wretchedness of the people, the efforts of the government to educate, the insecurity of land titles, the deficiency of highways, the rudeness of agricultural methods and the sparseness of results, the scanty use of labor-saving machinery, the burdens of taxation, the obstacles to commerce, and the terrible sanitary state of the cities. We do not know that we can better give an idea of Mexico's hide-bound condition than by copying from Mr. Wells's pages this bill of the costs incurred by an American gentleman living in the City of Mexico, in 1885, for the importation from St. Louis of an ordinary cooking stove with its necessary furniture:

ORIGINAL INVOICE.
1 stove	weight 282 pounds.
1 box pipe	" 69 "
1 box stove-furniture	" 86 "
Total	437 pounds, or 199.3 kilos.
Cost in St. Louis, United States currency . . .	$26.50
Exchange at 20 per cent	5.30
Freight from St. Louis to City of Mexico (rail), at $3.15 per 100 pounds	15.75
Mexican consular fee at El Paso	4.85
Stamps at El Paso	.45
Cartage and labor on boxes examined by custom-house at El Paso	.50
Forwarding commission, El Paso	2.00
Exchange 16 2-3 per cent on $7.64 freight advanced by Mexican Central Railroad . . .	1.25
	$56.60
IMPORT DUTIES.
1 box, 128 kilos (stove), iron, without brass or copper ornaments, at 19 cents per kilo	$24.42
1 box, 31.3 kilos, iron pipe, at 24 cents per kilo	7.51
1 box iron pots, with brass handles, at 24 cents per kilo	9.48
Add 4 per cent as per tariff	$41.41
	1.65
Package duty, 50 cents per 100 kilos	$43.06
	1.00
Add 5 per cent as per tariff	$44.06
	2.20
Add 2 per cent municipal duty	$46.26
	.93
Add 5 per cent consumption duty	$47.19
	2.36
Dispatch of goods at Buena Vista station, City of Mexico	.38
Stamps for permit	.50
	$50.43
Cartage in City of Mexico	$107.03
	.75
Total	$107.78
RESUME.
Original cost of stove, with exchange . . .	$31.80
Freight, consular fees, and forwarding . . .	24.80
Import Duties	50.43
Cartage	.75
Total	$107.78

The above statement of facts is almost as ludicrous as any of Mark Twain's fancies. What is to be hoped for of a land which is living so far back in the dark ages as this customs process would imply? Mr. Wells thinks very little. The railroads, he says, are doing something for the country, but he does not consider the general outlook promising, and the English and Germans, he adds, always have the advantage over the Americans by reason of their more skillfully adapting trade to Mexican wants. Much depends on a stable government, which Mexico has never had, and a stable government depends largely on a sound financial system, which it has not. Taxes are enormous and the people are poor. The old regime are opposed to progress, jealous of foreign capital, joined to their idols.

Nevertheless, shall we let Mexico alone?

CHARACTER PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON.*

MR. BAKER has already edited and published a volume of the Engraved Portraits of Washington and another of Medallion Portraits, and of these two the present collection of Character Portraits is a companion. From some eighty different authors, ranging from John Adams, Gouver-

* A Study of Mexico. By David A. Wells. D. Appleton & Co.

* Character Portraits of Washington. Selected by W. S. Baker. Philadelphia: R. M. Lindsay. $5.00.

eur Morris, and Fisher Ames of Washington's time to George Bancroft, W. E. H. Lecky, and George William Curtis of our time, he has gathered a series of pen-portraits of the Father of his Country, some of them descriptions of his personal appearance, others delineations of his character. Each of the "portraits" is accompanied with a brief biographical note of its author, so that we have the standpoint, the "personal equation," of each view. From the series as a whole we derive a fresh and vivid conception of the physical, intellectual, and moral stature of the man.

Physically, Washington was a noble specimen of manhood. He was fully six feet in height, erect, strongly built, and of majestic bearing. His features were well-formed and regular, his eyes inclined to blue, his hair was brown and worn in a becoming cue, brushed back from his forehead and powdered. His face was pock-marked, his expression mild but dignified. His manner was grave and reserved, but easy; his temper even, his mood serious. He never "testified the least humor." He was not a talker, but was an attentive listener, his voice was subdued, his whole mien tranquil and serene.

Passing to the inner man and his habits, nobody ever questioned Washington's lofty and brilliant courage, his benevolent disposition, and his purity of thought and purpose. His tastes were simple and his appetites well regulated. He rose early, breakfasted lightly, drank moderately, entertained generously, and conversed sometimes diffidently, but always amiably. It is said that he was never seen to smile. Sound judgment, practical wisdom, unfailing sympathy contributed to his weight of character. Punctuality was one of his virtues, industry another, method another. He was fervent in spirit as well as diligent in business. He was a religious man. His integrity was incorruptible. No man dared approach him with a disreputable word or a dishonorable plan. He was self-centered without selfishness, and self-disciplined without subservience. He was, as Jefferson succinctly stated it, "in every sense of the word, a wise, a good, and a great man."

Mr. Baker's book is a luxurious quarto of 351 pages, with wide margins and uncut edges, and bound in a dignified simplicity as becomes its subject. The edition is limited to 350 copies.

WHIST SCORES AND CARD-TABLE TALK.*

ALL good people who love the recreation of a social evening around the card-table may find in this modest volume an ingenious combination of the useful, the instructive, and the entertaining. Its preparation was suggested by certain visiting cards shown by a hostess to her guests, and containing the record, or score, of games of whist played there on past occasions. From these came the idea that it would be practicable to combine a series of blanks, printed to receive such scores, with curious information and anecdotes about the history of cards in general, and the game of whist in particular. In the able execution of this design, by author and publishers, in the book before us, each left-hand page contains one of the blanks, ready for use at the table, while the pages opposite present a copious store of miscellaneous information and entertainment. We will try to give briefly some idea of the wealth of knowledge thus accumulated.

* Whist Scores and Card-Table Talk. With a Bibliography of Whist. By Rudolf H. Rheinhardt. Illustrated. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

Playing-cards, like gunpowder and printing, appear to have been used by the ingenious Chinese for some time before their origin in Europe; but there is little if any reason for believing that Western nations derived the idea of cards from that source. Their origin in Europe, probably about the fifteenth century, is believed to have been a development from certain picture cards called naibis or tarots. These were of unknown and possibly very remote derivation; and were twenty-two in number. They bore emblematic figures; two of which, an emperor and an empress, may have been the precursors of the modern king and queen, while others were partly individuals, including a hermit, a juggler, and even His Satanic Majesty, and partly scenic or symbolic, as the Last Judgment and Temperance. To these twenty-two tarots there were later added, in Venice, fifty-six numeral cards; the pack of seventy-eight thus formed being designed not only for amusement, but also to entice children and older persons from dice and gaming. According to Cavendish, the pack of fifty-two was formed by a copious pruning of this Venetian pack. The numeral cards were divided, as at present, into four suits—originally cups, money [i. e. coin], clubs, and swords, which are still in use in Spanish cards. Early German cards had hearts, leaves, bells, and acorns; French had hearts, diamonds [now called carreaux, not diamants], trefoil [or clover leaves], and spear heads; and these last are the suits in use among English-speaking people; but we call trefoil and spear-heads by names taken from Spanish suits, clubs and spades (espades, swords), which on Spanish cards are real clubs and swords. Thus our clubs are a French device with a translated Spanish name.

The earliest extant mention of cards is an item in a cash account of the treasurer of King Charles VI of France, in 1392—a payment for three packs "gilt and variously ornamented," for amusement of the king; who was somewhat deranged from a sunstroke.

Cards vary among different nations in material, shape, and design; Chinese cards being only about an inch wide, while Persian and Hindu cards are usually circular. Illustrations in the book show some of the varying designs evolved from the fertile Oriental fancy. The Apache Indians of Arizona have imitated the Spanish cards of Mexico, upon tanned buckskin, inscribed with figures whose rude outlines suggest the earliest attempts at drawing made by children.

Strange as it may appear, the use of visiting cards is said to have grown out of playing cards. These latter in England had generally plain backs, and it became customary in both England and America to use an old card or part of one for short notes and invitations, and hence for names in visiting. Among several lately discovered in an old house in London was one bearing the name of Sir Isaac Newton.

The earliest game at cards is stated to have been the Venetian tarocchi, played with the pack of seventy-eight already mentioned. As to the evolution of some modern games, euchre and also écarté are attributed to the French trionphe, and whist to an old English game called trump, or ruff-and-honors.

Nearly half of the text is devoted to whist, as the favorite game in England and the United States. From a vocabulary of terms we extract one or two curious derivations: Card, from carta or charta, has been traced back to the Sanscrit chatur, four (Latin quatuor), in reference either to the quadrilateral shape or to the four suits; deuce is of course the French deux, and not connected with Satan; so trey from trois.

Besides elementary rules for modern whist, instruction is given in certain varieties called German and Swedish whist, varieties which seem to possess merit; also in performing a few easy tricks with cards, and in fortune-telling or sortilege. Of the great variety of curious lore collected for the entertainment of players we will mention further only a description of a most mysterious mechanical figure, seated but movable, and capable of playing games of cards without any seeming connection with a human mind.

The bibliography prefixed to the volume is surprisingly full, both as to the history of cards and as to the game of whist.

RELIGIOUS READING.

I The Story of the Four.—II The Picture of Jesus. 2 Vols. By Rev. H. R. Haweis. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. Each $1.25.] These are the first two volumes of a series of five on the general subject of "Christ and Christianity." What forces will the lively, thoughtful, but always erratic and not always sound, incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone, London, bring to this "a new, and as far as possible a true, setting for the central figure of Jesus Christ?" The two books before us are substantially a popular exposition of the later criticism of the Four Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Apocalypse. They do not impress us with the author's eye for perspective or his sense of proportion. They do impress us with his general sympathy with the "new criticism," his contempt for Christian dogma, his disposition to remove the supernatural, or rather to dissolve it with the aids of reason, his utter indifference to what any one else thinks, his downright honesty, his sensationalism of manner, his essential truthfulness and sincerity, and his purity of purpose. "Orthodox" readers he will by turns offend and please; offend them by such free handlings as his explanation of the miracle at Cana of Galilee, please them by his ascription of the Apocalypse to St. John and his comparative conservatism with regard to the Fourth Gospel. Always vivacious, not always reverent, often striking, commonly vigorous, these books will enchain attention even when they do not carry conviction.

A Manual of Christian Evidences. By the Rev. C. A. Row, M.A. [London: Hodder & Stoughton. Half-a-crown.] This little book is the initial volume of a series of manuals which are meant to introduce the favorite "Primer" method into theology. They are to be wholly unsectarian, by recognized authorities, for theological students and the thoughtful laity as well; "a solid and trustworthy grounding in all branches of theological study" being their aim. As readers of Prebendary Row's previous volumes in this field of evidences will expect, he here places the moral evidence for Christianity before the miraculous attestation. The one miracle, indeed, to him is the Resurrection, and to this he devotes no small space. Mr. Row makes as fresh a treatment of his subject as it will admit, and opens the series very promisingly. He is surely wrong, however, in his statement that "Christianity differs from every other known religion in the fact that it is based on the person of its founder." Buddhism and Mohammedanism are sufficient refutations of this view; any one who will consult the Encyclopædia Britannica under Religion will find how unsupported Prebendary Row's assertion is.

The Christian Platonists of Alexandria. By Charles Bigg, D.D. [Macmillan & Co. $1.50.] Rev. Dr. Bigg's Bampton Lectures for 1886 form a good companion volume to Prof. A. V. G. Allen's Continuity of Christian Thought, which deservedly attracted so much notice two years ago. The author is in full sympathy with the philosophic Fathers, Clement and Origen, who drew so much of their nurture from Plato, and whose appreciative temper toward ancient thought contrasted admirably with the Roman bigotry and narrowness. "God shall be all in all;" these words, to Origen, as to his commentator, afforded a broad foundation of hope for the future of mankind:

Few among us would desire to bar the gates of heaven against the Unitarian Channing, against the Buddhist ascetic, against even the naked savage who, on his sea-swept coral reef, forsaken as he may seem of God and man, is yet just and grateful and kind to wife and child. Yet few would think that for these maimed souls no instruction is needed.

These lectures of Dr. Bigg are among the very best the Bampton foundation has produced. Scholarly, of course, they are eminently just and fair, to Celsus as to Origen, to Plato as to Clement, and they are to be commended to all students of theology.

MINOR NOTICES.

An Introduction to the Study of Browning. By Arthur Symons. [Cassell & Co. 75c.] Still they come, these introductions to Browning. No poet needs them more to explain, not so much his actual verse, as the situations and the character of the persons with which he deals, and which he presupposes, generally with little right to make the supposition, to be known to the cultivated reader. Mr. Symons's book, briefer than Mrs. Orr's, is much on the same plan. It begins with an admiring study of the general characteristics of the poet, and then takes up the poems in chronological order, giving the needful information to understand them as a whole, and explaining the more obscure passages occasionally, but the poems themselves are of course not given. The work is very well done, and when a Browningite has got well started under Prof. Corson or Prof. Rolfe he will find Mr. Symons an excellent guide.

Psychology. By John Dewey, Ph. D. [Harper & Bros. $1.50.] To the list of text-books of psychology, of which we have lately noted several, must now be added another by Prof. Dewey of Ann Arbor. It is the work of a thorough student, acquainted with the most recent work of foreign scholars, evidently one who is master of his learning, not mastered by it. But its author has no manifest genius for exposition. The style of the work is so condensed as to adapt it only to instruction in college classes; it is not so well fitted as Dr. McCosh's or Mr. James's for less advanced students or for general reading. His own judgment will enlighten the college professor in choosing his text-book. We incline however to believe that Mr. Dewey's treatment, while solid and able, lacks scientific clearness. The definitions should have more point. "Psychology is the science of the facts or phenomena of self." This definition is so broad as to be useless. The definitions of sensation, of the intellectual feelings, and of intuition are scarcely more satisfactory. That interest which a ripe teacher would lend to a work on mind is largely lacking; Prof. Dewey seems to us to have written too soon.

Lt. Wisser's small book on Gun Cotton, partly original and partly a translation, gives that mysterious and little known explosive a good character for safety, convenience, and efficiency, allows its demerits, and proceeds to a detailed account of the processes for its manufacture and the methods of its use. Gun cotton seems to be coming to the front in the present rapid development of the horrible arts of war. [D. Van Nostrand. 50c.]

Rose Porter's Literary Salad is not a book but a game, a game of guessing at the authorship of quotations; but the directions which go with it are absurdly incoherent and unmeaning, and the user is practically compelled to solve the problem of how to play it by his own wits. Most persons probably will hit on the right idea in time, and by means of these quotation slips may while away an evening hour entertainingly and with some profit. [Interstate Publishing Co. 50c.]

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

A severe fate has ordained that this choice product of American culture should write a book so hopelessly, so irredeemably dull, that the hearts of his enemies must be filled with rejoicing. Woe unto that unfortunate to whom at this season of multitudinous intellectual as well as gastronomical dainties is presented The Minister's Charge; deep will be his depression, dire his wrath, at the wasting of rare opportunities. — Wm. Sharp, in the Academy.

With Miss Harriet Preston's name I am unacquainted, nor do I know of any book of her authorship besides A Year in Eden. Probably her name is familiar to many readers in the United States, for this story by an American is so excellently told that it is hardly likely to have been a first venture. It is a New World romance, free from the deadly commonplace of so much American fiction, yet true to life. — Wm. Sharp, in the Academy.

The present volume is no exception in the proof it gives of Lord Tennyson's mastery of his art. For a writer who first published in the thirties to produce a great poem far on in the eighties is in itself a great achievement; but that this poem should be the continuation of one of the most popular poems of his youth is a still greater achievement. And it must be acknowledged that the Locksley Hall of today is not inferior in workmanship to the poem of forty years ago. There is the same ringing rhythm, the same strength and swing, the same ease and variety that delighted our fathers. — H. C. Beeching, in the Academy.

No one can feel any uncertainty about Mr. Habberton's powers; for in originality of motive, in freshness of treatment, and in a winning, pathetic grace, which is not a mere ornament of the story, but is wrought into its very fabric, Bruteton's Bayou stands alone among recent novels. — J. A. Noble, in the Academy.

With all its extraordinary interest, this sort of novel [The Princess Casamassima] is the novel of a writer who thinks all the world aimless, and loves to exaggerate that aimlessness in his own descriptions of it. The world is not an easy matter to understand; but we can at least see more of a clue and a plan in the world as it is, than in Mr. Henry James's pictures of it, in which the tangles are made more conspicuous than they are in real life, and the helplessness much more universal. — Spectator.

It cannot be said that Lord Tennyson has imagined an impossible pessimist. There are dangers abroad which may well alarm observers whose nerves are not yet relaxed by the influence of eighty years. — Saturday Review.

Oh, but this is really dreadful! This is blasphemy indeed; How can Christian poet cherish such a pessimistic creed? Since the day he heard the curlews calling over Locksley Hall,

Does he in the London purlieu no improvement find at all? Since the day his shallow-hearted cousin that young man forsook,

Think of all the Statutes we have added to the Statute-Book. Have we not a shower of blessings poured upon the human race?

Freed the nigger, raised the workman, made the landlord know his place,

Given the poor a loaf unburdened, and an untaxed breakfast-cup,

Fenced machinery, shortened hours, and made the capitalist "sit up?"

Do we hang the petty pilferer? No! we find the murderer mad.

With the bad corrupt the good? No! 'mongst the good we send the bad.

See! to all our needy widows School Board officers go their round;

Postage has been greatly cheapened, penny newspapers abound.

In the gain of his improvements now the happy farmer shares,

Harcourt's done his level best to extirpate the breed of hares.

— Saturday Review.

In writing last week on the most notable of these poems—the sequel to "Locksley Hall"—we said enough to show how fine a poem Tennyson has given us in his old age—one very different, indeed, as it ought, of course, to have been, from the poem written in youth in a similar mood, as different as the melancholy suggested by the grief of another is from the melancholy which springs directly from your own grief; but though different in kind, it is certainly not less worthy of its author. — Spectator.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 5, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

"We all, of our generation—excuse me, my dear! I am speaking roughly—talk Tennyson without knowing it. I dare say we do it in our sleep."
"Yes; that was such a clever remark of some English writer—Mr. Froude, I think—that all the serious minds of his day might be divided into those who were formed on 'In Memoriam,' and those who were formed on the 'Christian Year.'" — "Mr. RAYNOR," in A Year in Eden.

[Original Poetry.]

TO JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

With the calm patience of the woods I wait
For leaf and blossom when God gives us Spring!
—Whittier.

Surely, Great Heart, though leaf and blossom come,
And the long splendor of the May day suns,
Thy need is less: we are the needy ones
Whose hearts sing little and are mostly dumb.

They tell me—I have never seen thy face—
They tell me that thy days have somehow passed
Into November, that old age at last
Has stolen upon thee with its silent pace.

I do not know. It seems a little while
To thee, no doubt; a little while it were
Since in thy breast God's gift began to stir,
Since stretched the way before thee, mile on mile,

A little while to live, if counted years
Such as we spend in earthly toil and strife
Were taken as the measure of a life.
But God's great music trembles in our ears:

Who lives for truth will live as long as truth.
Thou hast grown old? If this be age, I ween
Of all the things which I have ever seen
It is the likeliest to immortal youth!

Like a great voice thy still increasing song
Goes trembling up and down the vales and hills
Of our New England, and forever thrills
The peoples' hearts to make them true and strong.

Thy need is less. Let varying seasons bring
Brown leaf or green, all seasons are thy own;
For from thy heart the birds have not yet flown:
Whate'er the time, God always gives thee Spring!

Andover, Mass., 1887.

SAMUEL V. COLE.

 Book-binding is a burning question at the present moment in the English papers. Some one has written to the Spectator an indignant protest against the "American" device of "wiring" books, and Mr. Buxton Forman, in the Athenaeum, objects to cutting and gilding the top of any book which "is not bound, but merely put up in a cloth case." The roughness of the top edges, which have been cut open with a paper knife, he thinks is "a very useful trap: it catches the dust on its way down and keeps it at the top till you remove it—an operation which is very simple."

 Mr. Martin Farquhar Tupper, who still lives, is congratulating himself in print across the water on "a most fortunate prophecy" uttered by him in one of "Three Hundred Sonnets" published more than twenty years ago, in which he paid homage to Queen Victoria under the title of "India's Empress." For the present Jubilee Year of the reign he has submitted a new and patriotic, but not very poetic, hymn.

 By the last report of President Eliot it appears that the Library of Harvard College numbers about 240,000 volumes and about 233,000 pamphlets. Nearly 90 per cent of the undergraduates now use the library, an increase of between 30 and 40 per cent in the past ten years. The cataloguing of the library is progressing so steadily that it is not impossible that the end of the present year will see a list of all the bound books, by authors, completed. In intelligence and hospitality of administration the Harvard College Library and the Boston Public Library stand easily at the head of the great libraries of the country; that of Columbia College, New York, probably not far behind.

 A certain American poet, whose standing is a point of contention among the critics, has received a characterization from an English hand which is at least ingenious and novel if not impressive. These are the terms of it: "He is a Hebrew bard translated to the American backwoods, where he has turned himself inside out, thence going on to study pantheism on the quays of New York." Let it be guessed, now, who is the poet?

 To the London Athenaeum Tennyson's "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After" is a "powerful" and "magnificent" poem.

 We read the London Spectator with great respect and unflinching interest, and seldom does it depart from the lines of profound, acute, and discriminating criticism, whether the subject be politics, literature, or religion. But when we find in it such a paragraph as the following on Miss Preston's new and powerful story, we are impressed with the fact that "amateur work" is not always confined to writers of fiction:

A Year in Eden would be much abbreviated, and also much improved, by the elimination of all the adjectives and of all the passages which have nothing to do with the action of a very thin story; but no cutting and hacking could make it anything else than an extremely tiresome, unnatural, and affected performance. The faults of the book, which are as plenty as blackberries, are rendered all the more provoking by various little indications that the author is not destitute of a certain cleverness, and perhaps of something even better than cleverness, though it must be said that these indications are least frequent in the passages where she is consciously aiming at being clever. A Year in Eden is, in short, as typical an example as we have lately seen of amateur work in fiction.

If a writer like Miss Preston and a book like A Year in Eden may receive this sort of treatment from a journal like the Spectator, some other sufferers should feel comforted.

 Mr. Browning's new volume is just out from the Riverside Press, under an authorization from its author dated as recently as January 10. Its title, in forty-seven words, is formidable, and its contents look still more so. Here, in short, is a large handful of fresh nuts for the Browning Societies to crack. Plenty of meat, certainly there is, but oh the shells!

 In his address at the dedication of the new Brooks Library Building at Brattleboro', Vt., the Hon. Mellen Chamberlain of the Boston Public Library said that "before 1700 there was not in Massachusetts, so far as is known, a copy of Shakespeare's or of Milton's poems; and as late as 1723, whatever may have been in private hands, Harvard College library lacked Addison, Atterbury, Bollingbroke, Dryden, Gay, Locke, Pope, Prior, Steele, Swift, and Young." Against such a background one may effectively paint the later progress of literary life in New England.

DAVID ATWOOD WASSON.

MR. DAVID A. WASSON, who died at his home in West Medford, Jan. 21st, was one of the ablest and most brilliant writers who are popularly associated as the "Transcendentalists." He was born in Brooksville, Me., near Castine, May 14, 1823. His father was a farmer, and a builder of small coasting vessels. Young David was an extremely refined, sensitive, and conscientious boy. Working his way in Bowdoin College, he increased by over-exertion that ill health which continued from his very boyhood, in one form or another, to be his life-long burden. He did not graduate, but entered a lawyer's office, where his practical acquaintance with politics gave him that distrust of working democracy which afterward showed itself in his essays. He turned from law to the ministry, and was graduated from the Bangor Theological Seminary. He was settled in Groveland, Mass., where his liberal opinions led to a rupture in the society. An independent church was established, to which Mr. Wasson ministered with growing radicalism for several years. He was obliged by a nervous disorder to give up preaching in 1856, and, with the exception of one year, was never settled again. A spinal trouble, caused by a physical strain in his youth, was the origin of the disease which baffled all medical skill; and for a number of years before his death he was partially blind, being unable to read; his death was the result of consumption of long standing. Under such disadvantages, Mr. Wasson did his finest intellectual work. He was one of the notable contributors to the Atlantic in its early years, writing essays, among others, on "Wilhelm Meister," "The New World and the New Man," and the "Law of Costs," which showed a rare union of subtle philosophic thought with a direct and practical cast of mind not common among close students. His poems were full of thought, and animated by profound religious faith. Such verses as "Bugle Notes," "Seen and Unseen," and "Ideals," are by some competent critics given a rank with the best poetry of Emerson, Matthew Arnold, and Arthur Hugh Clough. Mr. Wasson was probably nearer to equality with Emerson in the strong ethical bias of his writings, and in the originality of his genius, than any other member of the noted Radical Club. In later years he turned to discussions of society and government, and his only attempt at a book is a manuscript, unhappily not quite complete, on "Political Science;" one of the latest essays, and one of his best, was a treatment of "Carlyle on Happiness." We trust that a memorial volume, containing at least the choicest of Mr. Wasson's many papers and poems contributed to the Atlantic, the Radical, and the North American Review, will appear before long. It may be his fate to receive, like Amiel, a posthumous fame in some degree proportionate to his deserts as a philosophic writer on social mankind of the first order, and a religious poet whose fundamental optimism overbore all personal infirmities and the tragedy of his lot, to utter very nobly the trust and hope which were always his. Mr. Wasson's wife and devoted helper was Miss Abbie Smith of Bangor his one son is the marine artist, George S. Wasson.

BIOGRAPHY.

Hume. By William Knight, LL.D. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] The thoroughly excellent series of Philosophical Classics for English Readers has had no volume to which higher praise can justly be given than this on Hume, the latest issue, by Prof. Knight of St. Andrew's University, the editor of the series. Its pages are equally divided between the career and the philosophy of the historian, economist, moralist, and metaphysician, who was the very embodiment of the eighteenth century, alike in its strength and in its weakness. Hume was not a mere destructive; in his "honest doubt" there was neither an iota of scorn, nor that "vaunting of itself" which has been the bane of many a positive philosophy. . . . The sceptic's function is a necessary one in every age; it must always assert itself after a period of uncritical faith or dogmatic affirmation.

Yet Hume

in his later writings distinctly inclined toward a theistic belief of some sort, though its intellectual form was exceedingly airy, spectral, and nebulous.

Prof. Knight's volume may be specially commended to the readers of Prof. Huxley's very inadequate book on Hume in the "Men of Letters Series."

The Life of Benjamin F. Wade. By A. G. Riddle. [Cleveland, O.: W. W. Williams. $1.00.] Mr. A. G. Riddle's Life of Benjamin F. Wade is in some sense a tour de force, for the author was greatly restricted in available materials upon which to base an authentic and detailed narrative. Mr. Wade, we are told, kept no journal, made no diary, notes, or memoranda. At the end of a session or campaign, letters and papers of all descriptions, not in the form of printed books, were burned. Though a born warrior, no man so hated strife and every species of personal warfare. He never had any. If differences arose, he settled them at once in the most direct and decisive way. . . . This disposition to make a total final end of things was at the bottom of his destruction of papers.

So Mr. Riddle has had to depend largely upon traditional sources of information for his account of Mr. Wade's earlier years, and upon published speeches and general political history for the career of the legislator. He does not portray the personality of his subject very clearly, although one gets from the book views of Mr. Wade's character, as it were, by flashes of side lights in bits of reminiscences by his contemporaries at the bar and in the national senate chamber. Mr. Riddle's review of political movements is forcible, though uneven and at times bitterly partisan. With all its faults the book may be accepted as the final memoir of a man who deservedly stood high in the councils of the republic, who was of heroic if of rugged mold; a man above all faithful to his duty as he saw it, and truthful in word and deed, caring little for the praise or the censure of others, and in all things consistent, straightforward, fearless; a genuine son of the Puritans, an hereditary product whose life is worthy of honored remembrance.

Actors and Actresses of Great Britain and the United States. Edited by Brander Matthews and Laurence Hutton. 5th Series. The Present Time. [Cassell & Co. $1.50.] The subjects of this volume are Mad. Modjeska, Misses Mary Anderson, Clara Morris, and Ellen Tree; Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, Mr. and Mrs. Boucicault, Mr. and Mrs. Florence, Mr. and Mrs. Kendall; and Booth, Irving, Jefferson, Raymond, Lester Wallack, J. S. Clarke, Lawrence Barrett, and J. L. Toole. Mr. Barrett himself writes of Booth, and generously. The sketch of Jefferson is by Mr. Bunner; that of Wallack by William Winter. The same plan as in the preceding volumes is followed in this; each brief original sketch being supplemented by personal and critical notices, and anecdotes, gathered from a variety of sources. There are no pictures and the binding of the book is showy rather than tasteful.

MINOR FICTION.

Mabel Stanhope. By Kathleen O'Meara. [Roberts Bros. $1.25.] Though Mabel Stanhope is a young girl, and her story is largely one of school-girl life in Paris, we do not class the book among those for the young, but among novels, for it is not a profitable book for young people to read. It is moderately interesting, it is firmly written, there is a curious mixture of French in its dialogue, so that the reading of it would be an intermittent exercise for a student of that language. But its atmosphere, its indiscreet allusions to undesirable French novels, its episodes of flirtation and elopement, and the crowning incident of de Loric's shameful proposal to Mabel, forbid it, in our judgment, to fresh young minds. Older and steadier heads may read it with some enjoyment over its animated scenes, with proper detestation for Madame St. Simon, with true sympathy for the unhappy governess, Miss Jones, and with genuine interest in the simple and sincere account of Mabel's conversion to the Church of Rome.

Dollars and Duty. By Emory J. Haynes. [Boston: Jas. H. Earle. $1.50.] Mr. Haynes is the respected and efficient pastor of the Tremont Temple Baptist Church in Boston, where he occupies an honorable place among the earnest and able clergy of the city. But like too many other clergymen, he has been smitten with the disease of novel-writing, and the result in this story is a strange result indeed. It could not fail to have much life and fire, for these are in all Rev. Mr. Haynes's work, but it has altogether too much preaching, its characters are unnatural, its tone strained, and its plot simply laughable to one who has any proper conception of the nineteenth century life of New England which it attempts to portray. A spirit of crudity pervades the whole work, and the crudity is of such a kind that we must firmly but kindly remind its author of the proverb about the shoemaker and his last. Rev. Mr. Haynes as a preacher deserves our respect; but as a novelist he is an extreme transgressor of the rules of art and nature.

The Golden Justice. By William Henry Bishop. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] Mr. Bishop has broadened his perspective and given to his work in The Golden Justice a dignity and seriousness which are not new qualities in the fiction from his pen, but which are here heightened in effect, and marked out with the easy confidence of an artist who has mastered his subject, and who knows how to interpret it to the best advantage. The story takes us to the mid-west, to the flourishing city of Keewardin on the shores of Lake Michigan, and the characteristics of life in that prosperous center of population are depicted not by deliberate description, but in a straightforward, matter-of-course way that arouses admiration for Mr. Bishop's cool, evenly balanced realism. There is plenty of satire in the book—or what to many Eastern readers will seem like satire—yet this is never forced; for the author has the rare power of keeping his own personality wholly out of the picture. He looks at things with calm eyes, is quick to realize their just weight and measure, and he records his impressions with what at least seems like absolute impartiality. He has no romantic preconceptions, yet never loses sight of the romance of reality. The motive of The Golden Justice is in itself highly romantic. A man who has committed a crime writes out a confession and deposits it with other papers in the pedestal of a statue at whose setting up he is the chief orator. How he grew to fear that his secret might be revealed, and how at length the crisis came in a way he had not dreamed of, Mr. Bishop unfolds in a natural and dramatic sequence in which the fate of several interesting persons is involved. The general impression is quiet, and at times somber; the story has merit that distinguishes it from the mass of current fiction. It does not go very deep, but as far as it goes it is firm in manner and true in motive. Its sincerity constitutes its greatest charm.

A Mirage of Promise. By Harriet Pennawell Belt. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] Into this quiet, but firm-textured and deftly-woven romance, is introduced, as a leaven of interest, the epoch-making anti-slavery ferment, which in the first quarter of the present century was already working in leading minds both North and South. The author disclaims any direct historical purpose, yet she has studied her subject carefully, and she has not failed in making her story faithful to the times, and in retaining a warm human interest, which gives to her characters a distinct vitality. The plot is not without episodes that in other hands might have been sensational, but these are treated with becoming dignity. The humor of the book is gentle and all-pervading—Mrs. Brodie, the minister's wife, is a capital portrait—and one cannot read far without coming under its influence. Alma is a charming heroine, all purity and grace, and her love experiences are revealed with sympathetic delicacy. In these days, when fiction is so largely composed of factitious and debasing elements, it is pleasant to meet with a novel intrinsically so meritorious as is A Mirage of Promise, which appeals to cultivated readers, and deals in wholesome influences.

The Trial of Gideon and Countess Almara's Murder. By Julian Hawthorne. [Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.] These two stories by Mr. Julian Hawthorne, are of very unequal quality. The first is a piece of forced romancing that has no special claim upon the attention; the second is a clever bit of tragedy, rather original in conception and told with a matter-of-fact simplicity that heightens its power perceptibly. The secret of the Countess Almara's identity is well kept, and the climax is admirably planned, and comes upon the reader with a shock of surprise. Mr. Hawthorne is, as usual, somewhat careless in his style, after the manner of a man who writes against time; but his style probably expresses all that he cares to express; at any rate it comports very well with the average of his work.

Among recent additions to Harper's Handy Series of novels are Annie Edwardes's A Playwright's Daughter, a bright but light story of English society life with a Russian heroine and a tragical ending; Geo. Manville Fenn's The Chaplain's Craze, mysterious and sensational, dealing with a baronet's disappearance and a released convict; Amelia Barr's Between Two Lovers, a powerful Yorkshire love story of a girl choosing between love and duty toward a shiftless brother and the suit of the master of the mill in which she works; Robert Buchanan's That Winter Night, a Norman love scene in the late Franco-German War; Farjeon's The Bright Star of Life, relating the after fortunes in business and love of two English boys, in a style somewhat suggestive of Dickens; Mrs. Wilbur's Annie Barton's Journal, a village tale of a strongly emotional and religious type; and Marcella Grace, an intense and in a degree powerful Irish romance. [Each 25c.]

MINOR NOTICES.

Years of Experience. An Autobiographical Narrative. By Georgiana Bruce Kirby. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.] A varied life, such as falls to the lot of but few women, is here put on record; beginning with the birth of the author in Bristol, England, December, 1818, and running on through strange vicissitudes till her departure from New York to California in May, 1850, to be a nurse, and share in the general prosperity, where she abruptly takes her leave of the reader. She was a restless woman, of the extreme type of "advanced free thinkers" as to religious belief, a reformer and abolitionist, and perilously near being a communist; certainly eccentric and independent. Her experiences have interest, especially those relating to her connection with the Brook Farm families, and her sketches of different members of the Association, of whom she speaks with such unreserve as may not be wholly agreeable to the survivors who had part in that experiment. She was ready to adapt herself to any circumstances, willing to work for the unfortunate and bear opprobrium, and to take the consequences of her occasional officiousness and candor of speech.

Society in the Elizabethan Age. By Hubert Hall. Illus. [London: Swan, Sonnenschein, Lowrey & Co. $3.50.] With its eight colored and other plates, its excellent paper and type, and its rich blue cover, this handsome octavo of nearly 300 pages is inviting, but we have been disappointed in its contents. It seems to us that the author has missed a fine opportunity to make an interesting book, and has produced a commonplace and dull one. The ten character portraits which constitute its chapters are not ideals of "Landlord," "Tenant," "Merchant," "Courtier," "Churchman," "Lawyer," as might be supposed, but are rather so many biographies of actual personages taken as types of their respective classes. There is a great deal of material in the book relating to social organization and life in England in the 16th century, much of it interesting, some of it curious; but the presentation of it lacks vigor and vitality.

The Functions of the Brain. By David Ferrier, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. Second Edition, Re-written and Enlarged. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.00.] No recent work on the physiology of the human mind has excited more attention than Dr. Ferrier's Functions of the Brain, first published in 1876, in which he took the position that numerous cerebral functions can be distinctly localized in permanent quarters of the brain. A good summary of his arguments may be found in the appendix to Dr. Carpenter's Mental Physiology. Owing to the application of electricity to the study, says Dr. Ferrier, "the physiology of the brain has made greater advances during the last ten years than in all the previous years of physiology and pathology together," a statement which strikes the non-professional mind as rather extreme. Be that as it may, however, Dr. Ferrier has taken advantage of the great advance undoubtedly made, and has so far transformed his work that it is now a large octavo of five hundred pages which not only gives a full account of his own investigations, but also expounds systematically the functions of the brain and the central nervous system in the light of the latest research. While making a few modifications, the author has maintained his principal doctrines in respect to the localization of the cerebral functions unchanged in all essentials. These doctrines have no affinity with the fancies of phrenology, but are a thoroughly scientific attempt to work out the hypothesis that it is not the whole brain, but only a part of it, which is concerned in each distinct cerebral operation, as its center of activity. Definite local centers for sight, hearing, smell, and probably taste, Dr. Ferrier thinks, are now assured, and so far numerous psychologists would follow him. But as he goes on from sensation to the higher activities he becomes more uncertain, acknowledging very frankly the lack of facts in support of defined centers of proper thought. The twelfth chapter, on the hemispheres considered psychologically, is yet the most generally interesting of all, with its discussion of such subjects as aphasia and word-blindness. It is pleasant to note Dr. Ferrier's appreciation of Prof. William James's work in psychology in several passages. The Functions of the Brain, in its enlarged form, is indispensable to the medical man and the thorough student of mind.

Professor Hames's Elementary Treatise on the Theory of Determinants is a valuable collegiate text-book for the study of advanced methods of handling mathematical problems. It sketches the history of Determinants, and shows how marvelously Leibnitz's prediction as to them has been fulfilled. Lying almost unnoticed for a century and a half, they have now become an instrument of the highest practical utility. No discoverer of a new mathematical method is able to develop it with any fulness. A mathematical notation is a language; it can seldom be acquired by an old man, in such wise as to be handled like his vernacular. Our times are witnessing the development of new methods; and the young men of the present day will in a few decades show what new power these methods give them over the secrets of nature. Professor Hames's volume will be an excellent introduction to these higher walks. [Ginn & Co.]

Mr. E. P. Alexander has written a short essay on Railway Practice which discusses the questions involved in the interstate commerce bill for example, and some others related to the control of railroad traffic. Mr. Alexander believes that the pooling system has come to stay, and that there are benefits in it rather than evils, and his remarks on stock gambling are more rational and discriminating than are sometimes heard. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.]

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Lady Martin's "Shakespeare's Female Characters." We are glad to see that Messrs. Scribner & Welford of New York offer a new edition of Lady Martin's (Helena Faucit's) On Some of Shakespeare's Female Characters, at the reduced price of $3.60. Nothing so good on the subject has appeared since Mrs. Jameson's Characteristics of Women. It includes papers on Ophelia, Portia, Desdemona, Juliet, Imogen, Rosalind, and Beatrice, by one who has personated them all on the stage with a truth and grace unsurpassed if not unequalled in these latter days. In her modest preface she says:

What I have written has been written in a loving and reverent spirit, with the wish to express in simplest language what I feel deeply about these exquisite creations of Shakespeare's genius. That fuller justice might well be done to them I do not doubt. Still I have had the great advantage of throwing my own nature into theirs, of becoming moved by their emotions: I have, as it were, thought their thoughts and spoken their words straight from my own living heart and mind. I know that this has been an exceptional privilege; and to those not so fortunate I have striven to communicate something of what I have learned in the exercise of my "so potent art."

My best reward would be, that my sister-women should give me in return the happiness of thinking that I have helped them, if ever so little, to appreciate more deeply, and to love with a love akin to my own, these sweet and noble representatives of our sex, and have led them to acknowledge with myself the infinite debt we owe to the poet who could portray, as no other poet has so fully done, under the most varied forms, all that gives to woman her brightest charm, her most beneficent influence.

We would particularly commend the book to teachers, and especially to teachers of girls. It should have a place beside Mrs. Jameson's Characteristics in every school library.

"The Passionate Pilgrim" in the "Quarto Reprints." One of the most interesting of the series of fac-simile reproductions of early Shakespeare quartos, now in course of publication in London, is that of the first (1599) edition of The Passionate Pilgrim. The manner in which the pirate Jaggard made out the tiny quarto from the slender material he could get together is so well set forth by Professor Dowden in his introduction that we cannot do better than to quote a part of the opening paragraph:

Elizabethan lovers of song must have associated Shakspeare's poems with the White Greyhound in Paul's Churchyard, for at the house bearing that sign Venus and Adonis in 1593, and Lucrece in 1594, made their appearance; now, six years after its original publication, the demand for Shakspeare's earliest poem continued brisk, so that Leake, the owner of the Greyhound, deemed it necessary to issue the Venus in a new edition. . . . Any one with a fancy for writing a very Imaginary Conversation, yet with an undoubted foundation in fact, may choose this year 1599 for the time, and the Greyhound for the scene. Enter Master W. Jaggard, a visibly piratical person, who draws Leake mysteriously aside, and informs him that he, Jaggard, has come by certain of those "sugared sonnets" of Shakspeare, lately mentioned by Meres as existing among the writer's "private friends." Will Leake put his name upon the title-page and sell the pamphlet at the Greyhound, whither young amorists come to exchange their sixpences for passions in verse? A few pieces on the subject of Venus and Adonis may well pass for Shakspeare's, if indeed some of them are not really his; other scraps may be added from various quarters, and the name of the mellifluous and honey-tongued poet may be inscribed upon the title-page. Here the writer of our imagined Imaginary Conversation will do well to represent Leake as alarmed lest such a freedom may kindle the indignation of Master Shakspeare; whereupon Jaggard must protest that Will is a gentle spirit, and cite the words of one who had formerly given Shakspeare cause of offence, yet found his demeanor "no less civil, than he excelent in the qualitie he professes." Leake now looks into the manuscript, and finds it too scanty to make a quarto capable of beguiling even the most moonstruck and muse-loving fantastico into the expenditure of a doit. But Jaggard has thought of a novelty which must prove attractive—let us print on only one side of the page; this will double the bulk of the pamphlet.

We will not go on to quote the discussion of the title, "which must be pretty, but need not be very pertinent." Suffice it that The Passionate Pilgrim is finally decided upon, and the booklet goes to press. The matter is spun out by the further "dodge" of putting a headpiece and tailpiece on every page, so that a dozen lines of text sandwiched between these convenient pictorial devices make a decent show on the printed side of the leaf.

This chopping-up of the text, by the way, has proved a stumbling block to most of the editors. The last piece in the collection—Richard Barnfield's (not Shakespeare's) "As it fell upon a day," etc.—has been often reprinted as two poems. The 56 lines are scattered through four pages of the quarto, 14 on the first, 12 on the second, 14 on the third, and 16 on the fourth; and as early as the year 1600 the first 26 lines were copied into the volume entitled England's Helicon as a separate poem, though the editor, apparently feeling that it ended too abruptly, added a couplet of his own to round it off. As printed by the author, however, in his Poems: In divers humors, 1598, the 56 lines form a continuous "Ode," as Jaggard evidently meant they should in his little quarto.

A similar mistake has been made by all the recent editors—one W. J. Rolfe not excepted—in treating the five stanzas beginning "Good night, good rest" as two poems of two and three stanzas respectively; the second beginning "Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east." Dowden is certainly right in taking the five stanzas as a single piece. He gives plausible reasons for this conclusion, but, curiously enough, he overlooks one little typographical point which settles the question beyond a doubt, not only for this poem but the other to which we have referred. We see by the facsimile (and it is a good illustration of the value of such a facsimile) that, though a poem is in several instances strung out through successive pages, as already described, the first line of each poem is invariably printed with an initial letter of extra size. Now, the "Good night, good rest," begins with the big G; but the "Lord, how mine eies" has only the ordinary capital L. So in the other poem we find a big A in "As it fell vpon a Day," but no such distinction in the capital W of "Whilst as fickle Fortune smilde," which begins what has been taken by some as another poem. We think we may venture to urge that the credit of this discovery should offset the blunder we made in cutting the "Good night" poem in two, as former editors had done.

As we have before reminded our readers, these interesting and useful reprints are now published by Mr. Quaritch, and are sold at the low price of six shillings ($1.50) each to those who buy the full set.

Cheap Reading in Elizabethan and Other Old English. We often receive letters inquiring for the cheapest editions of certain Elizabethan and other books for school use; and in replying by letter we have repeatedly commended the excellent reprints in "Cassell's National Library," costing only a dime each in paper covers or 25 cents in cloth. Among the fifty or more numbers already issued are Walton's Complete Angler, a selection of Latimer's Sermons, Bacon's Wisdom of the Ancients, etc., Maundeville's and Hakluyt's Voyages, Cowley's Essays, Marco Polo's Voyages and Travels, Browne's Religio Medici, and Shakespeare's Hamlet, Macbeth, Merchant of Venice, and As You Like It. All have introductions by Professor Henry Morley, and some have valuable illustrative matter in the form of appendices. The introduction is of itself sometimes worth more than the cost of the book. A week or two ago we advised all the members of a class reading As You Like It in Rolfe's edition to buy Morley's also for the sake of his admirable comments on the moral lessons of the play. Teachers would do well to encourage the young folk in buying and reading these books out of school, if there is no place for them in school; and they are not bad pocket companions for older people in horse-car or steam-car.

Actors' Names in Early Stage-Directions. A correspondent in New York inquires whether our statement in the World for November 13th (p. 395), that Sinklo's name appears in a Hen. IV. is correct. He adds:

I set some of my young nieces to work, and they say the name Sinklo is not to be found in a Hen. IV. Did you ever strike Gabriel in the same way? and Humphrey? Both took part in this circle of plays, and got their names immortalized in the same way.

The name Sinklo is in the 1600 quarto of a Hen. IV., not the folio, as our statement suggests. We had in mind the occurrence of these names in the early eds. generally, and did not perceive that "the folio" alone had been mentioned in the preceding sentence. The matter is stated more fully in our edition of the T. of S. p. 127 (note on ind. i. 86) thus:

In the folio this speech has the prefix "Sinklo," the name of an actor in Shakespeare's company. Like other instances of the kind, it serves to show that the folio was printed from stage copies of the plays. Sinklo was also one of the actors in Hen. IV.; as the quarto of 1600 has in v. 4 the stage-direction, "Enter Sinklo and three or foure officers." Again in the folio, in 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. we find the stage-direction, "Enter Sinklo and Humphrey, with crosse-bowes in their hands;" and "Sink." "Sinklo," or

"Sin." is prefixed to the speeches of the 1st Keeper that follow.

In the ed. of 3 Hen. VI. p. 143 (note on i. 2. 47) we have the following note:

47. Enter a Messenger. The folios have "Enter Gabriel," which was probably the Christian name of an actor. There was a player named Gabriel Spencer in Henslowe's company in 1598.

On p. 154 of the same ed. (note on the beginning of iii. 1) referring to the stage-direction quoted in the note from T. of S. above, we say:

It is probable that Humfrey is the name of an actor—perhaps, as Malone suggests, Humphrey Jeaffes, who is mentioned in Henslowe's Diary.

Those notes answer all the queries in our friend's communication.

A Correction. The publishers of Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song remind us, in a courteous note, that we were wrong in stating, in the last number of the World, that "the ballad of Anne Hathaway" was "ascribed to Shakespeare" in the early editions of that standard anthology. In the first edition the poem is said to be "attributed to Shakespeare," while in subsequent editions we find: "This poem has sometimes, but surely without much reason, been attributed to Shakespeare." In the World for April 19, 1884 (vol. xv. p. 136) the facts are correctly given; but when we wrote the note a fortnight ago we had not time to hunt up the earlier one, and the reference to it was supplied by the editor-in-chief.

We may add that in Longfellow's Poems of Places (vol. iii. of "England," p. 198) the ballad is ascribed to "William Shakespeare" without comment or qualification.

PERIODICALS.

The Atlantic for February gives a good deal of space in one way and another to reviews of current literature; the pages thus used might be better devoted to a better purpose. Mr. Whitier has a tender and artless poem, "A Day," and Mr. Lowell has his say about that hackneyed theme, the materialism of the times, in five pages of verse that is not particularly impressive for point or originality. He contrasts the ideals of modern science with the inspiration of the church service of his youth:

Church gone and singers too, the song
Sings to me voiceless all night long,
Till my soul beckons me afar,
Glowing and trembling like a star.

Each, he tells us, has his little key to the "Great Mystery," tries it, and finds it of no use:

Yet better keep it after all,
Since Nature's economical,
And who can tell if some fine day
(If it occur to her) she may,
In her good-will to you and me,
Make door and lock to match the key?

Under the title of "Two Serious Books," Miss H. W. Preston reviews seriously the Baldwin of Vernon Lee and W. S. Lilly's Chapters in European History. Miss Susan Cooper contributes agreeable reminiscences of Cooper, depicting him, by the way, in the somewhat novel light of a maker of ballads. Mr. John Fiske, in pursuing his account of the evolution of constitutional government in this country, has a few strong words about the dangers of centralization, which he thinks have greatly increased since the war. Mr. Crawford, in Paul Put-off, continues to skim the surface of things with the bewildering ing agility of a prestidigitator. Mrs. Oliphant's The Second Son increases steadily in interest.

The February Harper's carries a varied freight of excellent quality. Mr. Warner, with the assistance of Messrs. Gibson and Kappes, makes a delightful excursion into "The Acadian Land," the Bayou Teche of Louisiana. Mr. Warner found the Acadians primitive in their ways, but not eccentric; a self-supporting community of athletic men and plain, sturdy women, all singularly free from the "hurry and worry and information of our modern life." Frank Millet continues his capital account of "Campaigning with the Cossacks;" and there is a sportsmanlike article on "Moose Hunting." These three papers are all beautifully illustrated. Mr. A. Lang celebrates "The Fairy's Gift"—short-sight!—in a few bright rhymes. One does not often meet with a story so silly as is Mr. Grant Allen's "Leonard Arundel's Recovery." A blind man is in love with a girl, recovers his sight, finds that she has red hair, shows his horror, and the girl cries out "with a breaking heart," "It is all over. . . . I can never marry you;" then she has a fever, during which her features are vastly refined, and her hair turns white. When Leonard next sees her, she has the "air of a Louis Quinze Marquise," and he renews his devotion as a lover, this time acceptably. Mr. Howells's new novel, "April Hopes," opens with a class day at Harvard. Mr. Howells has got hold of a nasty little social hypocrite in Mrs. Pasmer, and, as the phrase goes, he plays her for all she is worth. One cannot help thinking that for so mighty a hunter Mr. Howells wastes his ammunition on very small game. In the "Editor's Study," Mr. Howells discusses the short story, theoretically and specifically. He is inclined to the opinion that Americans beat the world in the writing of short stories, and cites many examples to support the claim, saying in passing, we are glad to see, a hearty word of praise for Mr. J. W. De Forest, "a novelist whose work has in some respects not only not been surpassed, but not approached, among us—a realist before realism was named, and an admirably equipped artist." The success in the short story here is due, Mr. Howells thinks, to the success of our popular magazines, and the consequent demand for this class of fiction.

Scribner's Magazine for February more than fulfills the promise of the first number, and amply vindicates the existence of this new and already popular periodical. The opening paper by Mr. John C. Ropes on "The Likenesses of Julius Cæsar" covers a good deal of ground, and the accompanying illustrations, of which there are nearly a score, are finely engraved, particular merit attaching to Mr. Closson's representation of the Chiaramonti bust. Our prediction that Scribner's Magazine would be strong in the department of native fiction we are glad to find amply realized. J. S. of Dale contributes the first part of a capital novelette which has some delicious passages in it; Octave Thanet's "Half a Curse" is a tale whose quiet intensity takes hold upon the reader; Mr. Bunner's "Story of a New York House" has a flavor and atmosphere quite its own; and Mr. Campbell Scott's story, "The Ducharmes of Baskatonge," takes us into the heart of a northern wilderness and reveals human passions untrammelled by the conventionalities of an artificial society. Mr. Washburn's reminiscences of the Paris siege are acceptably continued, and the same remark italicized will apply to the concluding "Glimpses at the Diaries of Gouverneur Morris." Prof. J. R. Soley writes of "Our Naval Policy" with candor and justice, favoring the establishment of a naval reserve and of a permanent administrative staff. Mr. Brander Matthews introduces M. Coquelin with felicity. Mr. T. S. Perry's paper on "Russian Novels" is inadequate and commonplace. We must speak once more of the exceptional typographical attractiveness of Scribner's Magazine and the unpretentious excellence of its engravings. Surely, here is a generous twenty-five cents' worth!

Lippincott's Magazine for February presents "a complete novel," filling ninety pages. "A Self-Made Man" is the title, and Miss M. G. McClelland is the author. The story has vigor, and deals with coarse types in a bold way. William E. Curtis gives us a pleasant glimpse of "A Day With the President" at the White House, emphasizing Mr. Cleveland's masterly simplicity and devotion to work and revealing his methods for ridding himself of bores. Under the title of "Mere Egotism" Mr. John Burroughs makes his literary confession. "As a youth," he says "I was a philosopher; as a young man I was an Emersonian; as a middle-aged man I am a literary naturalist; but always have I been an essayist." Incidentally he reveals his preferences among authors. Browning he cannot read. "His verse is like a springless wagon on a rough road. He is full of bounce and vigor, but it is of the kind that bruises the flesh and makes one bite his tongue." Admirable, too, is the comparison of Swinburne's verse to the lilt and flow of the sea, and the terse comment, "he sickens me." There is some sound literary advice in Mr. Burroughs's on authorship; it has been formulated many times, but rarely so well:

To give anything like vitality to one's style, one must divest one's self of a false or accidental or factitious mood or feeling, and get down to his real self, and speak as directly and sincerely as he does about his daily business or affairs, and with as little affectation. One may write from the outside of the mind, as it were, write and write, glibly and learnedly, and make no impression; but when one speaks from real insight and conviction of his own, men are always glad to hear him. . . . How rare are real poems—poems that spring from real feeling, a real throb of emotion, and not from a mere surface-itching of the mind for literary expression!

At the close of the magazine there is some pertinent criticism on the mannerisms of Charles Egbert Craddock.

Professor H. H. Boyesen undertakes to show "Why we Have no Great Novelists" in the Forum for February, finding the chief reason in "the fact that the American public, as far as the novelist is concerned, is the female half of it. The readers of novels are chiefly young girls, and a popular novel is a novel which pleases them." Hence the silence concerning all the vital things of life which Professor Boyesen believes to be the most serious defect in our contemporary fiction. He contrasts the freedom allowed to contributors to European periodicals with the restrictions enforced by editors of American magazines, and asserts that it is time our novelists ceased writing wholly for ingénues, and addressed themselves to men and women. President White tells how he was educated, and makes an interesting story of it. The other articles in this number of the Forum all deal with questions of the day in vigorous and incisive form.—The Hon. S. G. W. Benjamin, in the Magazine of American History for February, effectively disputes Mr. J. B. McMaster's argument concerning the weakness and inefficiency of the early American press. His review of the "Notable Editors Between 1776 and 1800" throws a full light on the conditions of primitive journalism in this country, and shows that it was primitive only in time and not at all so in quality and influence. A number of portraits and fac-similes of rare American periodicals contribute greatly to the value and interest of the article.—Science announces that the geographical department of that excellent review is hereafter to be in charge of Dr. Franz Boas, late of the University of Berlin. Twelve original maps of recent explorations are promised for the coming year. The issue for Jan. 28 contains a "History of the Agassiz Association," from the new official organ of the Association, the Swiss Cross.—The Century's recent revelation of "The Western Art Movement" has given rise to no less than three articles in L'Art, by M. Alexandre de Latour, who draws from his study of the subject "the irresistible conclusion" that American competition in artistic industry is likely to become soon of paramount importance to Europeans.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The estate of the late Helen Hunt Jackson was all personal, and has been appraised at $12,642.61. Her copyright account with her publishers, Messrs. Roberts Brothers, for six months from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886, is given as $2,119.75.

—The late Abbe Liszt assigned to the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein, his "universal heir," the examination and publication of his writings.

—In connection with the approaching American Exhibition in London Miss Marie A. Brown, known in this country as the translator of the Surgeon's Stories and Nadeshda, is arranging for an exhibit commemorative of the discovery of America by the Icelanders in the 10th century. The exhibit is to comprise an ancient Icelandic Viking-hall, Vikinga-skáli, reproduced in grand dimensions, and both exteriorly and interiorly with faithful historical accuracy, this through the personal superintendence of Mr. Magnússon, of the University Library at Cambridge; a full-size model of the famous Viking-ship exhumed in Norway in 1880; representatives of Vikings in costume of the age, of an Icelandic skald (bard), and relics, weapons, household things, etc., etc., belonging to the Viking period. A very choice collection of antiquities is expected from Iceland, and it is hoped that Denmark will permit the precious Icelandic manuscripts containing the accounts of the voyages of discovery to America to be included, and that Sweden and Norway will send contributions from their several museums.

—Dr. Benjamin F. Lossing has completed his popular history of the State of New York; the work will probably be published at an early date.

—F. Warne & Co., New York, will shortly publish a new and thoroughly revised edition of Nuttall's Standard Dictionary. The work is edited by the Rev. James Wood of Edinburgh, who has been engaged upon it for nearly three years; it will be an etymological as well as a pronouncing dictionary, containing numerous illustrations.

— A volume of reminiscences of Salem life by a former resident of that city, Mrs. Nathaniel Silsbee, is to be published Feb. 12 by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., with the title A Half Century in Salem.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons are about to publish The Conflict of East and West in Egypt, by Dr. John Eliot Bowen of the Independent. The book is made up of a series of articles which have appeared in The Political Science Quarterly.

— The death of Professor E. L. Youmans is a blow to the Popular Science Monthly which he established in 1872 and always, we believe, had edited, and a loss to the scientific world. Professor Youmans was less an original investigator than a reporter of the investigations of others, which he had skill in systematizing and presenting. Mr. Herbert Spencer has had few if any more intelligent and obedient disciples in this country. "The International Scientific Series" was one of Professor Youman's numerous literary children.

— Mrs. Forman of Lynn, Mass., a Nantucket lady originally, we believe, and recently from Chicago, has been giving a series of Browning Readings in Cambridge, which have been well attended and have excited some interest. Mrs. Forman has been an enthusiastic student of Robert Browning for some years, and her readings are interspersed with descriptive and critical comments and are intended to promote discussion of the poet.

— D. Appleton & Co. will publish immediately the third and concluding part of The Greville Memoirs, which has just appeared in London. This part will consist of one volume only, and covers the reign of Queen Victoria from 1852 to 1860.

— A work by General C. C. Andrews, formerly Consul General to Brazil, entitled Brazil: its Condition and Prospects, will be published by D. Appleton & Co. early in February. The same house has in press a new novel by Christian Reid, entitled Miss Churchill: a Study.

— Mrs. Fargus, the widow of "Hugh Conway," asserts that Bound by a Spell, a novel recently published by Munro & Co. of New York, purporting to have been written by her late husband, was not of his authorship. Munro & Co. say that their edition is simply a reprint of an English copy.

— The authorship of Towards the Gulf is claimed by Mrs. R. I. Buckner of New Orleans, who was formerly a Miss Morris of Madison Co., Miss. Mrs. Buckner is past forty, but the novel in question is her first published book.

— Frank S. Thayer of Denver, Colorado, has issued in an édition de luxe of 100 numbered copies A Tribute in Memory of Helen Hunt Jackson, containing a fine photographic portrait of Mrs. Jackson, and views of her residence at Colorado Springs, of Cheyenne Mountain, and of the grave in Pine Hill forest. An account of the home of H. H. by Mary Crawford and a brief biographical sketch by Louis Swinburne constitute the letterpress. The illustrations are on India paper proofs. It is to be regretted that the bibliography was not made complete.

Any admirer of Helen Jackson's genius will be glad to possess this tasteful memorial.

— A bill granting a pension to Walt Whitman has been reported to the House of Representatives at Washington. Mr. Whitman's services in the army hospitals during the war would seem to entitle him to some compensation from the government.

— By a printer's error in our Necrology of 1886 Jacksonville, Fl., instead of Jacksonville, Ill., was made the place of death of the late President Sturtevant of Illinois College. Dr. Sturtevant left an autobiography which his son, Rev. J. M. Sturtevant, Jr., of Cleveland, O., is revising for publication. It needs little except a process of condensation. It is a genuine story of life. Commencing with a picture of conversion brought about in part by the preaching of Lyman Beecher, it tells of a family migration to the Western Reserve (with an ox-team) in 1816, of pioneer settlement in Tallmadge, of three boys fitted for college in the woods, of their pilgrimage, mostly on foot, from Tallmadge to Yale College in 1822, of life in Yale College for four years, including the story of the famous Blue Skin Club of which Dr. Sturtevant was one of the founders, of the organization of the "Illinois Band," of the long journey of himself and wife to Jacksonville, Ill., of the founding of Illinois College in 1829, and then of life in Illinois till nearly the close of the civil war. It tells of the mental struggles and external conflicts through which Congregationalism had a beginning in the Mississippi Valley. Its pictures of the old time in politics, religion, and education, its incidents of personal life and character in which Abraham Lincoln, Lovejoy, the father of the famous John Brown, and many others had a part, are worth preserving. The book is not unlikely to excite general interest.

— We are pleased to learn through private sources of the improved health of Mrs. Katherine S. Macquoid, the English novelist, which is now better than it has been for several winters.

— The new Scribner's Magazine has taken very well in England, much better, it is said, than the new Murray's, which latter seems to have nothing special about it.

— A translation of Dr. Franz von Reber's History of Medieval Art is to be issued shortly by Harper & Brothers. The translator is Mr. Joseph Thacher Clarke, whose version of Dr. Reber's History of Ancient Art has been received with so much favor. The forthcoming volume will be abundantly illustrated; it presents a complete review of the artistic development of the Middle Ages.

— An important addition is about to be made by Charles Scribner's Sons to their theological books by the transfer to them of the entire list of Hebrew and Semitic text-books and other works heretofore published by the American Publication Society of Hebrew, of Chicago. The most notable of the publications secured by this transfer are the Hebrew grammars of Prof. William R. Harper, Ph.D., of Yale University, which have been everywhere accorded the highest praise by instructors and scholars. These books have been adopted in both Yale and Harvard Universities, and are used in sixty-seven of the principal colleges and seminaries of America, Canada, and England.

— A new volume by Ernest Renan, entitled Studies in Religious History, is about being published in England, and will be imported here by Scribner & Welford. It contains chapters on Francis of Assisi, Religious Art, Spinoza, Port Royal, a Word upon Galileo's Trial, etc.

— A portrait of Mrs. Julia C. R. Dorr, and a sketch of the author and her Vermont home, appear in the February number of The Book Buyer.

— More than 12,000 copies have been sold of the three popular translations of Plato: Socrates, A Day in Athens with Socrates, and Talks with Socrates about Life, published by Charles Scribner's Sons. The books are now to be brought out in English editions.

— Kuno Fischer's History of Modern Philosophy, an English translation of which will shortly be published by Charles Scribner's Sons, has already been translated into the Russian, French, Italian, and Hungarian languages. The English translation is by Prof. J. P. Gordy, Ph.D., a pupil of Prof. Fischer.

— New life seems to be infused into the valuable series of Bohn's Libraries, started so long ago by Henry G. Bohn, but now passed into other hands. Nearly a hundred thousand volumes of these libraries are annually sold.

— Mr. F. S. Ellis writes to the Athenaeum that very considerable progress has been made with the projected concordance-lexicon to Shelley's poetry during the seven months that it has been actually in hand. More than one half of the 32,026 lines of which Shelley's poetical works consist is indexed and revised. The work is being done by volunteers, and allotments are made to any who can give two or three hours a day to it.

— On the 20th ult., a joint resolution was laid before the Senate by Senator Hoar to authorize the Secretary of State to contract with Benjamin Franklin Stevens, a native of Vermont, now residing in London, for a descriptive catalogue index of such manuscripts or documents as may be found in the private and public archives of Great Britain, France, Holland, and Spain, relating to the history of America between the years 1763 and 1783, at a price not to exceed $100,000. A memorial signed by representatives of several historical societies and many eminent men of letters accompanied the resolution, with a letter from Secretary Bayard asking for the project the careful attention of Congress.

— Mr. Thomas B. Connery, formerly managing editor of the New York Herald, has been nominated by the President as Secretary of Legation at Mexico.

— A memorial has been submitted to the Library Committee of the California legislature urging the purchase by the State of the Bancroft historical library. The San Francisco Bulletin says that Mr. Bancroft purposed bequeathing the library to the State, but the disastrous fire which destroyed his publishing house and entailed a loss of $750,000 forced him to abandon his design. The library was appraised by experts, who decided that it was worth $250,000, probably a low valuation, as a large part of the collection can never be duplicated, while the rare books alone are thought to be worth fully half the sum named.

— Mr. F. D. Millet, the artist, is back again from his home on the Avon to his other home in New York, where he expects to remain for the winter. He has a new story on hand.

— To show its appreciation of the work performed by its employes during the past year, the Century Co. on Christmas day divided $20,000 among them; and that there might be no suspicion of partiality, gave to each man a certain per cent of his salary. Mr. Roswell Smith, the President of the Company, was recently tendered a dinner at Pinard's on Fifteenth Street by his associates to remind him, so the invitations stated, that the Company has just completed "the sixteenth and most successful season in the steadily-ascending record of its prosperity and influence." Pinard's beautiful dining-room was elaborately decorated with rugs, pictures, and growing plants, contributed for the occasion by the guests, including a number of well-known writers, who, for a long time, have been associated with the Century and St. Nicholas magazines. The dinner, which was presided over by Mr. Gilder, the editor of the Century, was enlivened throughout with speeches by Messrs. Frank R. Stockton, George W. Cable, E. C. Stedman, Cephas Brainerd (counsel for the Company), Washington Gladden, and Theodore De Vinne, the printer of the magazine.

— "Sydney Luska," who has spent much of his time of late in Paris, where his wife is studying vocal music, has material in hand for several new stories; and one of them, which is said to be a slight deviation from his former romances of Jews and music, has just been disposed of to a newspaper syndicate. Its title is The Yoke of Thorah.

— The superb édition de luxe of the Catalogue now in preparation by the American Art Association, of the A. T. Stewart collection of art works, is in a fair way to be exhausted immediately on its publication, notwithstanding its high cost. Etchings, photogravures, and phototypes from azeline negatives of the original paintings are scattered lavishly over the pages of the Catalogue, and do much to compensate the art lover for the scattering of Mr. Stewart's collection.

— The Winter Memorial Library at New Brighton, Staten Island, has recently received from Mr. Edwin Booth a contribution of 700 volumes. On the fly-leaf of each book the actor wrote, "For the Winter Memorial Library, with affectionate remembrance of little 'Artie,' from his father's friend, Edwin Booth." It will be remembered that Mr. William Winter's little son, Arthur, was killed while coasting; and that the library was founded in his memory shortly after the accident. Other contributions of books have been made by Messrs. Lawrence Barrett, Joseph Jefferson, and John Gilbert.

— There is just now a great deal of talk in New York concerning Major Walter's Memorials of Washington, illustrated with reproductions from the so-called Sharples portraits. The author complains that the report of the Massachusetts Historical Society's Committee deals rather with the literary blunders of his book than with the question at issue: the authenticity of the Washington portraits, toward which he intimates that "simple truth and justice" have not been done. On the one hand, Mr. Walter is defended by such men as D. Huntington, President of the National Academy of Design, New York, Eastman Johnson, J. Q. A. Ward, and Launt Thompson, who in 1882 signed their names to a card on which they wrote: "The authenticity of these paintings has never been questioned by artists, or others competent to form correct judgment;" on the other, the body of the Massachusetts Historical Society is against him, and Mr. George H. Moore asserts that "The New York Historical Society never endorsed Mr. Walter, nor any of his pictures." The publishers of the Memorials, Messrs. Scribner & Welford, are making every effort to determine the truth concerning the portraits.

— A New York literary man, who prides himself on the number of his discoveries of authors whose identities, concealed under a nom de guerre, have been the theme of much gossip, has come upon a letter written in Paris, which discloses the identity of that widely discussed author, "Count Paul Vasili." The writer of the letter affirms that the mysterious Count Paul "is none other than Mme. Juliette Adam, the versatile and vivacious directress of the Nouvelle Revue, whose salon is the center of all literary Paris. . . . When a Parisian editor wrote to ask Mme. Adam for an article the other day, she inadvertently sent him an unpublished manuscript by Count Paul Vasili. The editor charged her at once with being the 'man' whom all Europe was speculating about, and she sent him an answer which dodges without denying."

— There are now on exhibition at the Associated Artists' building, New York, a number of paintings by Mrs. Anna Lea Merritt of Philadelphia, who, during the past ten years, has had her studio in London. Chief among the portraits are striking likenesses of James Russell Lowell and Oliver Wendell Holmes. The coloring of these two paintings is thought to be exceptionally fine.

— Nearly all of the athletic clubs in New York are making active preparations for dinners, receptions, etc., which they propose tendering to Mr. Thomas Stevens, who has just returned from his trip around the world on a bicycle. Mr. Stevens's article for the February number of Outing will describe his experiences in the Persian capital.

— The Scribners have had a great success with their Cyclopædia of Painters and Painting. The edition, consisting of 500 copies, is nearly exhausted, only 50 copies remaining on the publishers' shelves, yet the third volume of the series has but just appeared, and the fourth is still to come. The price of the fifty copies of the first two volumes has been advanced to $37.50 each, bringing up the cost of the entire work to $150.00 to those who were not fortunate enough to send in their subscriptions early in the season.

— On April 15, the twenty-second anniversary of President Lincoln's death, Walt Whitman is announced to deliver his lecture on Lincoln before a New York audience, and at a later date, to give it in Boston. One who is in a position to know how the poet's financial affairs stand, says that they are in a distressing state, and that Whitman's return to the lecture platform is prompted solely by his great need of funds. As this Lincoln lecture netted him on a certain occasion in Philadelphia last year nearly $700, there is no immediate cause for concern among his friends.

— The author of A Tramp Trip: How to See Europe on Fifty Cents a Day, a little book which Harper & Bros. will publish this month, is Mr. Lee Merriwether, a young man connected with the Department of the Interior at Washington, who, through tramps at home and abroad, has familiarized himself with the condition of the laboring classes here and in Europe. The trip which he describes in his book was made on foot for the most part, and it goes without saying that his volume will contain much that is not found in the ordinary book of travel. Rural and manufacturing England, as seen by him, are treated at considerable length.

— An exquisitely engraved portrait of Louis Adolphe Thiers will be used as the frontispiece of Scribner's Magazine for March, in which number Ex-Minister Washburne, who owns the original of the portrait, will bring his series of articles to a close with a vivid and important account of the Commune of Paris, illustrated with eighteen engravings. Other elaborately illustrated articles are The Stability of the Earth, by Prof. N. S. Shaler, and the Bayeux Tapestry, by Mr. Edward J. Lowell.

— Mr. George Willis Cooke is prepared to give a course of six lectures on Woman in Literature, of which the several subjects are the Women of the Age of Elizabeth, Lady Montague and the women of her times, the "blue stockings" of Dr. Johnson's day, the English novelists of the early part of this century, Harriet Martineau, and George Eliot. These are central figures only. Mr. Cooke's address is West Dedham, Mass.

— We learn from the Athenæum that Mr. William Morris has finished the 12th book of his translation from the Odyssey, and that the 12 books have gone to press; that Mr. Spencer's health is somewhat improved; and that Prof. Mahaffy's Rambles and Studies in Greece, now out of print, are shortly to appear in a third edition.

— The Academy has a highly appreciative article on the first volume of Dean Plumptre's great work on The Commedia and Causoniere of Dante, which comprises a life of the poet and essays on his works.

— A new series of "Great Writers" has been started by a British publisher, the first brief biography in which is one of Longfellow by Eric S. Robertson.

— Browning's "Strafford" has been produced at the Strand Theater, London, under the auspices of the Browning Society. The presentation seems to have suffered in the acting.

— The famous Alice in Wonderland not only has a new companion, Alice's Adventures Under Ground, but has been dramatized and produced at the Prince of Wales's Theater, London.

— The title of Mr. T. W. Higginson's forthcoming booklet has been changed to Hints on Writing and Speech-Making.

— Macmillan & Co. announce a popular edition of the "English Men of Letters Series" in monthly shilling volumes. This step will help to displace the "shilling dreadful" by the "shilling grateful."

— Roberts Bros. have in preparation Sonnets in Shadow, by Arlo Bates, whose Berries of the Brier is now out of print.

— Admirers of that strong if unequal novel, Coronation, will doubtless be interested to know that the authorship of Constance of Acadia and Agatha and the Shadow in Roberts Bros. "Old Colony Series" is ascribed to the writer of the first-named work — Rev. E. P. Tenney.

— Mr. Lafcadio Hearn, in the preface to his forthcoming collection of stories, Some Chinese Ghosts, says that he has sought "weird beauty" as the chief characteristic of those productions

About their weirdness there can be no question; for in theme and method they are unique.

— Dr. Channing's Note Book, passages from the unpublished writings of William Ellery Channing, selected by his granddaughter, Grace E. Channing, is to be published before long by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

— The new edition of Prof R. T. Ely's Labor Movement in America, which T. Y. Crowell & Co. have in press, is to contain a much-to-be-desired index.

— A Week Away from Time is the taking title of a volume of stories to be published by Roberts Bros. They were written by a little coterie of literary amateurs who find in the sandy wastes of Cap Cod the scene of a new Decameron, and the literary qualities displayed by the collaborators, as well as their social position, are expected to give the book a decided vogue.

— On Tuesday, Feb. 1, Lee & Shepard of Boston passed the 25th anniversary of their partnership. In these times of changes such a permanency of connection is noticeable, and a wide constituency of friends will unite in congratulations upon the fact.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

- Almanacs, Literature of. Walford's Antiquarian, Jan.
American Mail Service, The. H. Neville Porter. Time, Jan.
Arnold (M.), A Note on the Poems of. Time, Jan.
A. T. Kent. Lippincott's, Feb.
Burroughs, John. ("Mere Egotism.") Lippincott's, Feb.
Carlyle's Cromwell's Letters. R. F. D. Palgrave.
Christianity, The Beginning of. R. A. National, Jan.
Proctor. Knowledge, Jan.
Cooper, J. F. ("A Glance Backward.") Atlantic, Feb.
Susan Fenimore Cooper. Atlantic, Feb.
Copyright Union, International. J. H. G. Law Quart., Jan.
Bergne. Law Quart., Jan.
Craddock, Charles Egbert, Some Hints to. Lippincott's, Feb.
Critics, Should [they] be Gentlemen? Lippincott's, Jan.
Edgar Fawcett. Lippincott's, Jan.
Editors, Notable, Between 1776 and 1800. Mag. Am. His., Feb.
S. G. W. Benjamin. Mag. Am. His., Feb.
Harvard, Social Life at. Barrett Wendell. Time, Jan.
Journalism in the United States. Time, Jan.
Language, Evolution of. Knowledge, Jan.
Literature, English, in Public Schools. J. of Education, Jan.
Literary Log-Rolling. J. Clayton Adams. Forum, Jan.
Locksley Hall and Liberalism. Mortimer Dyneley. National, Jan.
Mouvement, Le Intellectuel. R. Fray et P. Bourget. Nouvelle Rev., Jan.
Newspaper, The Sunday. T. W. Chambers. Homiletic Rev., Jan.
Novelist, Statesman and. H. E. Monroe. Lippincott's, Jan.
Novelists, Why We Have no Great. Forum, Feb.
H. H. Boyesen. Forum, Feb.
Périodiques Anglais, Revue de. Eugènes Fargues. Nouvelle Rev., Jan.
Russian Novels. T. S. Perry. Scribner's, Feb.
Shelley, Thoughts on Dowden's Life of. W. J. Courthope. National, Jan.
Stoic Terminology in Roman Law. Wolsley Emerton. Law Quart., Jan.
Stories, Short. W. D. Howells. Harper's, Feb.
Story, Two Ways of Telling. Robert Grant. Lippincott's, Feb.
Tennyson and Pessimism. J. Royce. Harvard M., Jan.
Tolstoi, The Writings of. B. Benson. Harvard M., Jan.
Turgeuniev's Briefe. Rundschau, Jan.

The Asiatic Quarterly Review.—China: the Sleep and the Awakening. The Marquis Tseng; The Empress of India. Col. Sir Owen T. Burne; The Greeks in Asia. Col. Sir Chas. Wilson; Famous Women of India. Col. Malleon; The Pacification of the Sudan. With Map. H. F. Harrison Smith; India Pacified and Purified. James Hutton; Early History and Legend of Gujarat. W. G. Pedder; The Indian Bourbons. Col. W. Kincaid; The Wellesleys in India. The Lord De Mauley; The Eastern Question. Asiaticus.

The Contemporary Review.—Thoughts about Party. By the Earl of Selborne; India: A Reply to Mr. S. Smith, M.P. By Sir M. E. Grant Duff; Paul Bert's Science in Politics. By Madame Juliette Adam; Is Constantinople Worth Fighting for? By an Old Resident; M. Zola as a Critic. By Frank T. Marzials; Railway Rates. By C. T. D. Acland, M.P.; Professor Dicey on Home Rule. By Canon MacColl; Dogs in London. By Sir Charles Warren; The Lower Education of Women. By Helen M'Kerlie; Jubilee-Time in Ireland. By T. M. Healy; Contemporary Life and Thought in the United States: University Education. By President Charles K. Adams; Contemporary Records: 1. Oriental History. By Professor Sayce; 2. Social Philosophy. By John Rae; 3. General Literature.

The Fortnightly Review.—Present Position of European Politics: 1. Germany; Last Words with General Gordon. By Lieut.-General Sir Gerald Graham, K.C.B.; M. Renan's Later Works. By Andrew Lang; Ireland Beyond the Pale. By Sir Arthur D. Hayer, Bart.; Benvenuto Cellini's Character. By J. A. Symonds; The Iron and Steel Trade. By Sir Lowthian Bell, Bart.; Womanhood in Old Greece. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton; The New Reformation. Part I. 1. By Rev. Charles Voysey. 2. By the Hon. and Right Rev. W. Clifford, R. C. Bishop of Clifton; Lord Randolph Churchill's Resignation. By the Editor; Correspondence: Aubanel and the Provençal Renaissance. By Edward Barker; "The Statistics of Morality." By Herman Adler; Prof. Huxley's Defence. By W. S. Lilly.

The London Quarterly Review.—Jewish Life in the Time of Christ; The Alternative to Socialism; A New French Moralism; Mr. Arnold's Report on Continental Education; The Religion of Burnah; The Turkish Advance and Retreat in Eastern Europe; Sir Francis Doyle's Reminiscences; Leigh Hunt; his Life, Character, and Work; Short Reviews and Brief Notices; Summaries of Foreign Periodicals.

Morley's Magazine.—Byroniana. I. Introduction to Lara. II. Recollections of Madame de Staël; Responsibilities of Power. C. A. Whitmore; Uses of Adversity. George W. E. Russell; An Irish Parish Priest; Amour Dure. (Part I.) Vernon Lee; Cosmopolitan Theories and Colonial Facts. Capt. Colomb, M.P.; Major Lawrence, F.L.S. (Chaps. 1-5.) Hon. Emily Lawless; What Germany is About. George von Bunsen; Our Library List; General Grant. (Part I.) Matthew Arnold.

The National Review.—Conservatism and Young Conservatives. George N. Curzon; Carlyle, the "Pious Editor" of Cromwell's Speeches. Reginald F. D. Palgrave; Jubilee Reigns in England. Arthur Burney; Thoughts on Dowden. "Life of Shelley." W. J. Courthope; Some Miscellaneous Cases of Thought Transference. A. H. Biggs and M. L. Hatchard; "Locksley Hall" and Liberalism. Mortimer Dyneley; The Colonial Conference and Imperial Defence. William Greswell; The Rachel-Cremieux Correspondence. Mrs. A. C. Kennard; Mr. Greg on the Marriage Code. Lord Grimthorpe; "Owen Meredith," Earl of Lytton. Alfred Austin; Politics at Home and Abroad; Correspondence.

The Nineteenth Century.—"Locksley Hall" and the Jubilee. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.; The Government of Ireland: a Reply. John Morley; Hill-Digging and Magic. Rev. Dr. Jessop; Physiological Selection. George J. Romanes; Thomas Dekker. Algernon Charles Swinburne; Bishops and Sisters-in-Law. Lord Bramwell; Schools as Prisons and Prisons as Schools. Lord Norton; The True Reform of the House of Lords. Lord Brasenose; Pure Beer. W. Cuthbert Quilter; Rural Russia. Lady Verney; The Zenith of Quakerism. Matthew Arnold.

The Quarterly Review.—1. Lord Shaftesbury's Life and Work; 2. The University of London; 3. Naucratis and the Greeks in Egypt; 4. Pictorial Arts of Japan; 5. The Canadian Pacific Railway; 6. Col. Yule's Anglo-Indian Glossary; 7. Church Patronage; 8. A School of English Literature; 9. Constantinople, Russia, and India; 10. The Coming Season.

The Scottish Review.—1. The Jurisdiction of the English Courts over Scotsmen; 2. Mr. Spencer's "Unknowable"; 3. Byzantinism and Hellenism. By D. Bikelas; 4. St. Magnus of the Orkneys; 5. The Fisheries Question from a Canadian Point of View. II. By W. Leggo; 6. Egypt on the Eve of the English Invasion; 7. Contemporary Literature; 8. Summaries of Foreign Reviews.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

DOROTHY WORDSWORTH. The Story of a Sister's Love. By Edmund Lee. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25
LIFE OF THOMAS HART BENTON. By Theodore Roosevelt. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

CHARACTER PORTRAITS OF WASHINGTON as Delineated by Historians, Orators, and Divines, Selected and Arranged in Chronological Order with Biographical Notes and References by W. S. Baker. Philadelphia: R. M. Lindsay. $5.00

NAPOLEON AND MARIE-LOUISE. A Memoir. By Madame La Generale Durand. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 35c.
IN MEMORIAM. Rev. Dr. Isidor Kalisch of Newark, N. J.

Essays and Sketches.

A HANDFUL OF MONOGRAPHS, CONTINENTAL AND ENGLISH. By Margaret J. Preston. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00
LAWYER'S CODE OF ETHICS. A Satire. By Valmaer. St. Louis: F. H. Thomas Law Book Co.

Fiction.

THE SQUIRE OF SANDAL-SIDE. A Pastoral Romance. By Amelia E. Barr. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00
SONS AND DAUGHTERS. By the Author of The Story of Margaret Kent. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

HOW AVARICE WAS CURED.

IT wasn't by using D. K.'s. But D. K.'s will cure DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION, which cause more suffering than does avarice. They will neutralize acidity of the stomach, cure heartburn and all stomach troubles. Dr. Mark R. Woodbury's

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS
Do their work perfectly, completely and quickly. They cost only 50 cents (25 cents for a trial box). DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, will send them to you by mail on receipt of price to any part of the United States.

ANY PERSON wishing to acquire a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find "GERMAN SIMPLIFIED" eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions; (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.95. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.

FOR SALE.

A complete set of the "LITERARY WORLD," on reasonable terms. 12 volumes are bound. Address. Mrs. Henry M. Brooks, Salem, Mass.

FOR SALE.

The unbound numbers of the Literary World, from 114 to 224 inclusive, excepting 115, 138, 140, 170, 171, 189, 190 and 211. Address Mrs. M. E. K. Ross, Rutland, Vt.

For Sale—"Fewacres."

THE HOMESTEAD AT FARMINGTON, MAINE, so long occupied by the late Jacob Abbott and his sisters, is now offered for sale. The property consists of a roomy and rambling old-fashioned Cottage, with outbuildings, containing in all fifteen or more rooms, and something over two acres of land, charmingly situated just outside the village, and combining seclusion with convenience in an unusual degree. With a few trifling exceptions, the entire premises are in good order. The house is home-like and comfortable, and the grounds, richly endowed by nature, and tastefully improved by Mr. Abbott himself, are adorned with paths, terraces, groves, hedges, seats, arbors, and magnificent elms. The beauties of Farmington as a New England village, its excellent school privileges, the famed loveliness of the Mandy River Valley, and the proximity of the Rangeley Lakes, Old Blue, and other pleasure resorts in Western Maine, make "Fewacres," even apart from its associations, a singularly desirable estate for a family wishing a summer abode or a country residence all the year round. Price low. Address the executor,

EDWARD ABBOTT,
11 Dana Street, Cambridge, Mass.

STONINGTON LINE. INSIDE ROUTE FOR NEW YORK, SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R.R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 p. m.
Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R.R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.
A. A. FOLSOM, Supt. B. & P. R.R.

WHEN YOU GO TO

TROY OR ALBANY

Take the EXPRESS TRAIN leaving Boston at 10.30 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted, via Hoosac Tunnel Route, arriving at Troy 6.55 A. M. and Albany 7.55 A. M., connecting with Morning Trains via D. & H. C. Co., West Shore and New York Central Railroads, for all points North and West. Palace Sleeping Cars, Passenger Coaches and Baggage Cars run through without change from Boston to Troy and Albany. For Tickets, Sleeping-Car accommodations and further information, apply at the Company's Office, 250 Washington St., Ticket Office Fitchburg Railroad, CAUSEWAY STREET STATION, BOSTON, or any authorized Ticket Agent in New England.

J. K. WATSON,
Gen. Pass. Agent.

A. V. FISHER,
Trav. Pass. Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 10 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s

NEW BOOKS.

A NEW BOOK BY MR. BROWNING.

PARLEYINGS WITH CERTAIN PEOPLE OF IMPORTANCE IN THEIR DAY, to wit: Bernard de Mandeville, Daniel Bartoli, Christopher Smart, George Bubb Dodington, Francis Furini, Gerard de Lairese and Charles Avison. Introduced by a Dialogue between Apollo and the Fates; concluded by another between John Fust and his Friends. By ROBERT BROWNING. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25; also uniform with the crown 8vo edition, gilt top, $1.25.

THOMAS H. BENTON.

Vol. XIV. of American Statesmen Series. By THEODORE ROOSEVELT. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Mr. Roosevelt's intelligent and adequate biography of this distinguished statesman, whose long and eventful political career covered a most important period in American politics, cannot fail to be of great value and interest.

AMERICAN STATESMEN.

Edited by JOHN T. MORSE, JR.

John Quincy Adams. By John T. Morse, Jr.
Alexander Hamilton. By Henry Cabot Lodge.
John C. Calhoun. By Dr. H. von Holst.
Andrew Jackson. By Prof. William G. Sumner.
John Randolph. By Henry Adams.
James Monroe. By Pres. D. C. Gilman.
Thomas Jefferson. By John T. Morse, Jr.
Daniel Webster. By Henry Cabot Lodge.
Albert Gallatin. By John Austin Stevens.
James Madison. By Sydney Howard Gay.
John Adams. By John T. Morse, Jr.
John Marshall. By Allan B. Magruder.
Samuel Adams. By James K. Hosmer.

Each vol. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

A Millionaire of Rough-and-Ready, and Devil's Ford.

Two characteristic new stories by BRET HARTE. Little Classic style. 18mo, $1.00.

ANDOVER REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY:

Hanke and His Method. J. H. W. Stuckenborg, D. D.
The Trustworthiness of Spiritual Apprehension. Rev. George F. Genung.
Neglected Factors in the Problem of Reform. Amory H. Bradford, D. D.
Politics in Japan. Rev. Edward A. Lawrence.
The Cherokee Experiment. William Barrows, D. D.
Editorial.—European Complications. The Call to the Christian Ministry. The Congregational Churches and their Foreign Missionary Society. How it Looks in India.—A Communication.
Theological and Religious Intelligence.—A General View of Missions. V. East Indian Archipelago. Chinese Empire. Rev. Charles C. Starbuck.
Book Reviews and Notices.—Farrar's History of Interpretation. Weizsäcker's Das apostolische Zeitalter der christlichen Kirche. Killen's The Ignatian Epistles Entirely Spurious. Kedzie's Speculations.
German Theological Literature.

85 Cents; $4.00 a Year.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

NEW YORK AND LONDON.

NOW READY:

THE CONFLICT OF EAST AND WEST IN EGYPT.

By JOHN ELIOT BOWEN, Ph. D. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.25.

CHIEF CONTENTS: Mehemet Ali to Ismail, Ismail's Designs, The Road to Ruin, Mehemet Tewfik, Egypt for the Egyptians, The Rebellion of Arabi, The Sudan and the Mahdi, The Mission of Gordon, The Eastern Sudan, Gordon at Khartoum and the Government in London, Wolseley's Expedition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE SUBJECT.

A clear and comprehensive summary of events in Egypt since 1832.

THE FALL OF MAXIMILIAN'S EMPIRE, AS SEEN FROM A U. S. GUNBOAT.

By SEATON SCHROEDER, Lieut. U. S. N. 12mo, with portrait and other illustrations, $1.00.

A graphic account of a curious and important episode in American History.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

THE STORY OF THE NORMANS.

By SARAH O. JEWETT. Being the twelfth volume in the STORY OF THE NATIONS Series. 12mo, fully illustrated, $1.50.

Full prospectus of the series and list of recent publications sent on application. Classified and analytical catalogue, 130 pp., sent on receipt of stamp.

JUST PUBLISHED:

EDITION DE LUXE.

A TRIBUTE IN MEMORY OF

HELEN HUNT JACKSON (H. H.).

LIMITED TO

100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on India Paper.....$2.75
 100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on Satin Paper.....$3.00
 Each with wide margins, gilt edges and embossed silver cover on Whatman's paper, in boxes.

AN ELEGANT SOUVENIR.

Mailed on receipt of price by

Frank S. Thayer, Publisher, Denver, Col.

Injuries received in
 TRAVEL, SPORT OR BUSINESS
ALL Around the GLOBE
 ARE INSURED AGAINST BY

THE TRAVELERS

OF HARTFORD, CONN.

Original Accident Company of America,
 Largest in the World.

Also, a Large and Sound Life Company,

With larger Assets in proportion to its Liabilities than any other Successful Company.

Ask Agents to show a copy of our
New Life Policy.

Lowest Rates of Any Liberal Policy Yet
 Issued.

NO CONDITIONS OR RESTRICTIONS
 WHATEVER AFTER TWO YEARS.

Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide
 Travel.

Cash Surrender values, Paid-up Policy, or Special
 Term Insurance, Plainly Stated
 in Every Policy Issued.

Paid Policy-Holders over $11,500,000.

Assets, $8,417,000. Surplus, $2,096,000.

RATES AS LOW AS TWENTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE
 WILL JUSTIFY.

JAMES G. BATTERSON, Pres. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.
 JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst. Sec.

"The True Story of a Great Life."

"Graphic and entertaining; as rich in incident as any romance, and sparkling with wise wit and racy anecdotes. It comprises a large mass of valuable and judiciously epitomized information."—Harper's Monthly.

"Careful and exact in details, where details are accessible... keeping always to the true historical perspective, and setting forth the person of Lincoln in high relief against the dark background of the times; summing up the evolution of political parties, the history of a military campaign, in a page or a paragraph; written in terse, clear-cut English; and intensely readable from beginning to end—Mr. Stoddard's, in our opinion, approaches closely to the ideal biography, and scarcely will be superseded by the efforts of any subsequent author."—Literary World, Boston.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: The True Story of a Great Life. By WILLIAM O. STODDARD, one of President LINCOLN's Confidential Secretaries. Cloth 8vo, illustrated, $2.75.

GOOD CANVASSEERS WANTED. Address
FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT,
 New York.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d St., New York,

HAVE NOW READY:

I. THE STORY OF THE NORMANS.

By SARAH O. JEWETT. Being the twelfth volume in the "Story of the Nations Series." 12mo, fully illustrated, cloth extra, $1.50.

CONTENTS: The Dragon Ships, Rolf the Ganger, William Longsword, Richard the Fearless, the Good, Robert the Magnificent, Normans in Italy, William the Conqueror, Across the Channel, The Battle of Val-en-Dunes, The Abbey of Bec, Matilda of Flanders, Harold of England, The Battle of Hastings, Kingdom and Dukedom.

Previously issued in the "Story of the Nations Series": Chaldea, Greece, Rome, Jews, Germany, Norway, Spain, Hungary, Carthage, Saracens, Moors in Spain.

"No series of the day deserves more praise than the 'Story of the Nations.'"—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"A clear, rapid, and entertaining account of the principal nations of the ancient and modern world."—New York Tribune.

"For students, whether young or old, there are few better books than these."—Lippincott's Magazine.

II. RECOLLECTIONS OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER.

By FRANK WILKESON. 16mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

"One of the few books out of the great mass of war literature that will survive and will make a lasting impression."—Rochester Post-Express.

"The author has done the country a real service in writing this book... which will be read with delight by every honest veteran."—Buffalo Express.

"The work of a writer of recognized ability, who possesses exceptional powers of observation and description, and who possesses also the courage of his convictions... His pictures are most graphic and his thrusts unerring."—Baltimore Sun.

III. YEARS OF EXPERIENCE. An Autobiographical Sketch.

By GEORGINA B. KIRBY. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Personal reminiscences of the members of the famous Brook Farm community and of other interesting circles.

"They are closely related to the social problems and discussions of the second quarter of the century, and they have a value at once genuine and important."—New York Times.

"Gives the reader a very good idea of the evolution and progress of the social, scientific and literary problems of the early part of this century."—Boston Times.

IV. AMERICAN PATRIOTISM. An Essay.

By PUTNAM P. BISHOP. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

CHIEF CONTENTS: Genesis and Growth, Marks of Creative Wisdom, Fruits of Patriotism, The Right of Suffrage, Vices and Difficulties, Free Partisanship, The Civil Service, The Anti-Reform Spirit, The Spoils System, The Mint System.

V. THE SILENT WORKMAN. A Story.

16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"He brings to the narration an earnestness which is felt in every page, and the love-story which is involved is developed with equal strength."—Buffalo Express.

"It is short, original, and striking, and told in excellent English. Mr. Ross has genuine talent."—Boston Advertiser.

. Putnam's New Classified Catalogue sent on application.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 4. { E. H. HAMES & Co., } BOSTON, FEBRUARY 19, 1887. { Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
WHOLE No. 317. Publishers. Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

PUBLISHED TODAY:

A NEW BOOK

BY

Robert Louis Stevenson.

"Mr. Stevenson is a master of language. . . . He rejoices in a train of exciting incidents. . . . His characters appear as real as his incidents."—George Parsons Lathrop.

THE MERRY MEN, AND OTHER TALES AND FABLES.

Cloth, $1.00; paper (yellow covers), 35 cents.

"Without question the most important event of the year in historical literature."—The Nation.

THE PROVINCES OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

From Cæsar to Diocletian. By THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated with the Author's Sanction and Additions, by William P. Dickson, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow. With Ten Maps by Professor Kiepert. 2 vols., 8vo, $6.00.

Since the completion of Professor Mommson's History of the Roman Republic, thirty years ago, the author's researches have made him the master of fresh and valuable facts concerning the subject races of the Empire, and all matters pertaining to the government of the provinces, their internal administration and their mutual relations. Previous historians have looked at the history of the Empire too exclusively from the point of view of the imperial city and the central authority, forgetting that, while the Empire was Roman in name, it was a world in fact, and that the provinces were as essential a part of it as the city itself.

HISTORY OF MODERN PHILOSOPHY.

DESCARTES AND HIS SCHOOL.

By KUNO FISCHER. Translated from the Third and Revised German Edition by J. P. Gordy, Ph. D., Professor of Pedagogics in Ohio University. Edited by Noah Porter, D. D., LL. D. 1 vol., 8vo, $3.50.

Kuno Fischer has the rare art of combining the French lucidity of exposition with German thoroughness and profundity, and for this reason his work is always readable and spirited as well as exhaustive. His account of the life and writings of Descartes, and his exposition of Descartes's doctrine, and its development by other philosophers, is universally conceded to be the fullest and ablest work on the subject.

REALISTIC PHILOSOPHY.

Defended in a Philosophic Series. By JAMES MCCOSH, D. D., LL. D., President of Princeton College. 2 vols., 12mo. Vol. 1, Expository; Vol. 2, Historical and Critical. Each, $1.50.

"These volumes are not unlikely to prove in the end the most useful, popular service which Dr. McCosh has rendered to the cause of right thinking, and to sound philosophy of life."—The Independent.

Charles Scribner's Sons, Publishers,
742 and 745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. AENWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A. THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 8 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIBDON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

"The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

VERDI:

An Aneudotic History of His Life and Works. By ARTHUR POUGIN. With Portrait and Facsimile. Translated from the French by James E. Matthew. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"We could easily linger over M. Pougin's charming volume, which is so full of matter worth quoting that the difficulty of the reviewer consists in knowing what to select. It is long since a more readable and fascinating book has come under our notice."—London Athenæum.

"This publication is very timely. It comes just when most wanted, and enables musical readers to study every stage of the fortunate career, which now is reaching its climax and consummation."—Daily Telegraph.

"This extremely interesting volume will be much appreciated in the musical world."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MODERN HINDUISM.

Being an Account of the Religion and Life of the Hindus in Northern India. By W. J. WILKINS, of the London Missionary Society, author of "Hindu Mythology—Vedic and Puranic." Demy 8vo, cloth, $5.25.

GENERAL CONTENTS:

EARLY LIFE.—Birth and Ceremonies—The Hindu Home—The Guna, and Initiation into Hinduism.

HINDU SMOKE.—Vedantism—The Vaishnava—Sakta—Saktas, etc.

CASTE.

WORSHIP.—Private—Temple—Festivals—Pilgrimages, etc.

WOMAN.—Her Position—Marriage Ceremonies—Widows—Sati.

MORALS.—Death—Shraddha, and Future Judgment.

STUDIES IN RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

By ERNEST RENAN. Post 8vo, cloth (481 pp.), $2.40.

CONTENTS: Experimental Method Applied to Religion—Paganism—Comparative Mythology—First Works on Buddhism—New Works on Buddhism—The Translations of the Bible—The Testaments of Peter—Joachim di Flor and the Eternal Gospel—Francis of Assisi—A Monastic Idyl of the XIIIth Century—Religious Art—The Congregations "de Auxilla"—A Word upon Galileo's Trial—Port Royal—Spinosa.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

CAMPAN'S MARIE ANTOINETTE.

The Private Life of Marie Antoinette, Queen of France and Navarre, with Sketches and Anecdotes of the Court of Louis XVI. By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. New edition, in one volume, with four portraits on steel. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

"Despite the stupendous mass of literature which exists in reference to the French Revolution and its antecedents, Madame Campan's 'Memoirs of Marie Antoinette' still supply the most vivid, and, as some writers say, 'matterful' collection of statements about the Queen. Perhaps there is still no single book of anecdotic history which may be read with such advantage."—Pall Mall Gazette.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.

A JOURNAL OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA, from 1853 to 1860. By the late CHARLES GREVILLE, Esq., Clerk of the Council. Being third and concluding part of THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS. One vol., 12mo, cloth, price $2.00.

The preceding volumes of THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS consist of "A Journal of the Reign of King George IV. and King William IV.," in two vols.; and "A Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, from 1837 to 1852," in two vols. Price in each case, per vol., $2.00.

The volume now published, in addition to personal anecdotes, deals with many important events, such, for instance, as the re-establishment of the French Empire, the Crimean War, the Indian Mutiny, and the Italian War.

II.

BRAZIL: ITS CONDITION AND PROSPECTS.

By C. C. ANDREWS, ex-Consul-General to Brazil, formerly U. S. Minister to Norway and Sweden. 12mo, cloth, 363 pages, price $1.50.

"I hope I may be able to present some facts in respect to the present situation of Brazil which will be both instructive and entertaining to general readers. My means of acquaintance with that empire are principally derived from a residence of three years at Rio de Janeiro, its capital, while employed in the service of the United States Government, during which period I made a few journeys into the interior."—From the Preface.

III.

A ZEALOT IN TULLE.

A NOVEL. By Mrs. WILBRICK. 12mo, price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

The scenes of "A Zealot in Tulle" are laid in Florida—the introductory part in Florida of seventy years ago, the main story in Florida of today. The plot turns mainly upon romantic incidents connected with a treasure buried in an old fort by the Spaniards at the time of their occupancy.

IV.

THE MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES.

A NOVEL. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN, author of "Double Cuning," etc. 12mo. Price, paper, 50 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

"The interest in the plot is skillfully kept up to the end."—Academy.

"The story is very interesting."—Athenaeum.

For sale by all booksellers; or any volume sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

In its notice of POST LAUREATE IDYLS the Boston Beacon says of the author:

"His little volume will give him a good place among the younger poets, and he will keep it; for he has something to say, he says it, and he knows how to say it."

The Glasgow Herald, Scotland, says of POST LAUREATE IDYLS:

"These 'POST LAUREATE IDYLS,' apart from the graceful and tricky spirit of parody, contain numerous passages of original beauty and tenderness. As sportive echoes of our Laureate they are surprisingly clever and delightfully humorous."

JUST PUBLISHED:

EDITION DE LUXE.

A TRIBUTE IN MEMORY OF
HELEN HUNT JACKSON (H. H.).
LIMITED TO

100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on India Paper.....$2.75
100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on Satin.....$3.00
Each with wide margins, gilt edges and embossed silver cover on Whatman's paper, in boxes.

The work comprises four page illustrations (Phototype proof prints) from original negatives: 1st—A portrait of H. H. 2d—Her late residence at Colorado Springs. 3d—Her grave on Cheyenne Mountain. 4th—The Mountain itself. Each is accompanied with descriptive text by Mary Simmons Crawford of Colorado Springs, and there is also a bibliography of her works by Louis Swinburne.

AN ELEGANT SOUVENIR.

Mailed on receipt of price by

Frank S. Thayer, Publisher, Denver, Col.

Derby Roll-Top Desks.

FIRST-CLASS IN WORKMANSHIP, MATERIAL, DESIGN AND FINISH.

While many are seeking trade by offering INFERIOR goods at lower prices than ours, we are, where possible, making our desks MORE PERFECT, and will not lower the quality to compete with LOW-PRICED workmanship and poor material. Several styles in stock adapted for physicians and home use.

Call and examine our

Derby Desks

In Antique Oak,

Red Cherry,

Black Walnut

And Mahogany.

Catalogues sent on application.

DERBY & KILMER DESK COMPANY,

55 CHARLESTOWN ST., BOSTON, MASS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Life and Works of the Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, K. G

By EDWIN HODDER, with portrait. 3 volumes, 8vo, extra cloth. Price $7.50.

The late Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, was the most famous philanthropist of his time. Before his death, he put all the material for his biography in the hands of a friend, and this assures us that the present work is a complete record of his beautiful life.

The Common Chord.

A Story of the Ninth Ward. By HENRY R. ELLIOT, author of "The Bassett Claim." One volume, 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

A well-known critic says of it, "Piquant, very original, and deeply interesting."

The Practical

Horsekeeper.

By GEORGE FLEMING, LL. D., F. R. C. V. S. One volume, extra cloth, $2.00.

Horsemanship has now become one of the necessary accomplishments of fashionable life, and this volume, written by the Veterinary Surgeon of the British Army, is therefore timely and of interest.

Cassell's Public School French Reader.

Grammatically graduated. By GUILLAUME S. CONRAD. One volume. Price $1.00.

Every student of the French language will acknowledge that this volume fills a long-felt want.

A Plucky One.

By Mrs. GEORGE E. SPENCER, author of "Salt Lake Fruit," "The Story of May," etc. 1 volume, 12mo, cloth extra. Price $1.25.

"Thoroughly American in its character, scenes, incidents, and descriptions—pure in tone and yet true to life. A vivid picture of mining life in Nevada at the present time, based on personal experience, and mainly on absolute facts."

As Common Mortals.

A Novel. 1 volume, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

"A strong story, the scene of which is laid in the city of Brooklyn, and will be read with the greatest interest and feeling."

Send for complete descriptive catalogue of Illustrated and Fine Art Books, Juveniles and Educational Works, which will be sent free to any address on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, FEBRUARY 19, 1887. No. 4.

CONTENTS.

ROBERT BROWNING'S PARLEYINGS	51
STEPHENS'S FRENCH REVOLUTION	51
MR. HAYWARD'S LETTERS	52
SONS AND DAUGHTERS	53
TWO VIEWS OF EVOLUTION	53
THREE OF TOLSTOI'S STORIES	54
DOROTHY WORDSWORTH	54
PURITAN MASSACHUSETTS	57
TWO COLONIAL NOVELS	58
MINOR NOTICES:
The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities	55
The Aztecs	55
The Education of Man	55
THE STORY OF THE NATIONS:
The Story of Hungary	58
The Story of Carthage	58
The Story of the Saracens	58
The Story of the Moors in Spain	58
The Story of the Normans	58
MINOR FICTION:
Happy Dodd	59
Doctor Cupid	59
ENGLISH OPINIONS	55
PARAGRAPHS	56
ORIGINAL POETRY:
Ad Musam. By Clinton Scollard	56
CORRESPONDENCE:
A Matter of Duty	56
MR. HOSMER'S RESEARCHES. By James K. Hosmer	56
THE PERIODICALS	59
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
"Concordance" and "Lexicon"	60
January Meeting of the Shakespeare Society of New York	60
Wall Street and the "Merchant of Venice"	60
NOTES AND QUERIES. 807	60
NEWS AND NOTES	61
NECROLOGY	62
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	62

ROBERT BROWNING'S PARLEYINGS.*

IT is safe to say that in these Parleyings the Browning clubs will find ample materials for a winter's work; and we wish them joy of it, for in imaginative power and philosophical profundity the best of the productions in this new volume have not been surpassed among his later works by the poet whose stamp and impress they bear. Imaginary conversations we have had in abundance, but it remained for Robert Browning to call "certain people of importance" into the witness-box, to question them sharply concerning their ideals of life, to defend or confute them amply, and to extract from the poetic conference vital truths bearing upon the problems that are perplexing the world today.

Thus, with Bernard de Mandeville, we learn once more the futility of man's attempt to grasp the infinite by the senses:

Sense, descry
The spectrum — mind, infer immensity!

In Daniel Bartoli's story of the duke we are told that:

Man's best and woman's worst amount
So nearly to the same thing, that we count
In man a miracle of faithfulness
If, while unfaithful somewhat, he lay stress
On the main fact that love, when love indeed
Is wholly solely love from first to last —
Truth — all the rest a lie.

Considering Christopher Smart's one fire-flight of song, we are taught the wisdom of learning to walk before we soar; seek not, says the poet, to know the meteor's birth till you have sought the secret of the rose:

Live and learn,
Not first learn and then live, is our concern.

From the unsavory memory of Dodgington the theory is deduced that man is swayed only by his fear of the supernatural. With Francis Furini we are led to see that the mission of art is to

Limn truth, not falsehood, bid us love alone
The type untampered with, the naked star!

With Gerard de Lairese we receive the sober, sound advice

That artists should decry abundant worth
In trivial commonplace. Beyond

The ugly actual, lo, on every side
Imagination's limitless domain — and, finally, from a forgotten march composed by Charles Avison, the Newcastle organist, the idea is illustrated that Truth remains ever the same, only her garb changes, and man deludes himself, seizing

Myth after myth — the husk-like lies I call
New truth's corolla-safeguard.

All this between a majestic prologue of "Apollo and the Fates" and a — shall we say grotesque? — epilogue "Fust and his Friends," recording the triumph of the invention of printing. Everywhere roughness and obscurity with free, inspiring sweep of outline and luminous penetration of grand thought showing through. We might quote from this book passage after passage of magnificent imagery, line after line of golden meaning fresh from the poet's mint — might quote also abundant confirmation for those who find the poet harsh and unintelligible. For one may in fanciful mood liken Robert Browning to some sculptor-architect who works in granite: huge and imposing the structure of verse towers beneath his hand, block heaped on block in seeming lack of purpose, yet all obeying a general law which leads to the expression of a great design; and all the time the sculptor's chisel is busy striking out bold configurations which we can but dimly understand, till, now and then, as if by magic, the cold gray stone beneath his touch turns to something precious and rare — jasper, sapphire, emerald, and topaz — and is wrought into forms of ravishing beauty, as it were, before our very eyes.

STEPHENS'S FRENCH REVOLUTION.*

THIS new narrative of a period "the most fascinating in its interest, and the most valuable for its political lessons in the history of the world," has been received with the warmest praise by all the English critics. In republishing it the Messrs. Scribners may be sure of as cordial a greeting for it on this side of the Atlantic, where the interest in its subject is very great, and where we are in a position to judge those stirring days and the actors in them with even more impartiality than Mr. Stephens claims for an Englishman. It is hardly possible, he thinks, for a Frenchman, whose grandfather may have taken part in the struggle, to describe it calmly and judicially. But such a tone is the characteristic of this volume. The absence of fine writing, which the author has systematically avoided, may prevent the work from taking rank as a literary masterpiece, but the direct and simple style wins the confidence of the reader, who has not to overcome any lurking suspicion that accuracy has been in some degree sacrificed to brilliancy. Mr. Stephens's style is rather open to an occasional charge of carelessness, as when he drops into a French idiom, or, in one case, omits the subject of his sentence altogether.

For its matter and its spirit this first volume of what promises to be one of the very best histories of the French Revolution is clearly remarkable. It does "not abound in surprises," and none of the actors in the great drama are set in lights startlingly new. But Mr. Stephens presents himself as the first English historian of the school of MM. Charles Vatel, Aulard, and Albert Sorel. These later writers claim no place with Carlyle, Thiers, Michelet, Louis Blanc, Quinet, or Taine; their object is not to trace philosophically the "origins" of the Revolution, or to picture it with wonderful dramatic power. But they set out with the more modest aim of using the immense mass of material accumulated in later years for the purpose of exhibiting a sober picture of actual events. The larger part of Mr. Stephens's original preface is given to enumerating these many sources of information, which have been opened by all classes of French students of the Revolution, and to investigating which he has devoted himself with enthusiasm. This material was largely unknown or inaccessible to Carlyle, and much has been published since he wrote.

The first chapter on the Elections to the States-General indicates the use which the author makes of his sources. Instead of writing as if Paris were France, or nine tenths of France, he treats very fully of the process and the results of the elections in the Provinces, emphasizing the lead taken by Dauphiné, under the guidance of Mounier, in asserting the rights of the tiers état. After he has recited the story of affairs to the first emigration, Paris receives its due of attention as "the workshop of the Revolution," where the taking of the Bastille was accomplished, the decisive step in the first stage of the struggle. Then Mr. Stephens turns again to the Provinces as they were in 1789, while the final chapter discusses their condition and that of the colonies in 1790 and 1791. From this full treatment of the share which the rest of the country had in the progress of events, one gets a very different view of the whole contest from that given by historians who confine themselves to the capital. But the balance is not shifted to the opposite side; the emphasis still belongs to the scene where the States-General met.

* Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in their Day. By Robert Browning. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* A History of the French Revolution. By H. Morse Stephens, Balliol College, Oxford. In Three Volumes. Vol. I. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

This first volume abounds in brief sketches of the lives and characters of the various actors as they come prominently to the front. These sketches will naturally diminish in number as the history advances—but, as a rule, they are very well done, and if extracted by themselves would constitute a portrait-gallery which would do credit, in justice of stroke and proportion of color, to any historian. For Marie Antoinette Mr. Stephens expresses that mingled sympathy and condemnation which her pathetic figure must ever command:

If the queen must be blamed who preferred her pleasures to the love of her husband and the esteem of her adopted country, the little princess must be pitied who had received no education to teach her better, and who at times showed the real generosity of a noble nature.

As an advisor to the king she was most obstinate and impracticable, and to her permanent distrust of Mirabeau must be ascribed most of the king's misfortunes.

Mirabeau if any one is Mr. Stephens's idol. At his first appearance in the tiers état he is pronounced the only man of real political ability who had yet appeared. Beside him Mounier, Malouet, and the rest were mere theoretical politicians and visionaries.

The greatness which fascinates Mr. Stephens's solid and balanced English mind, with its natural love of common sense in statesmanship, lies in the union in Mirabeau "of hot enthusiasm, eloquence, and vast historical learning with a practical purpose." This man, the one great statesman produced by the first years of the Revolution, was sadly debarred from doing his best work, and achieving the success which his sagacious and unselfish plans deserved, by the avenging immoralities of his early life that kept the bourgeoisie and the queen from confiding in him. Yet with the most turbulent passions, he never did anything small or mean; and though he sinned often, and, as he himself said, broke every commandment in the Decalogue, he was nevertheless a good as well as a great man. . . . The best proof of real goodness in a man is the number of his devoted friends, and no man ever had more friends. . . . It can never be too strongly asserted that Mirabeau was no Alcibiades, proud of his immoralities and his sins, but a man who repented bitterly when he perceived how greatly his evil deeds had injured his chance of doing France good service. The great moral to be derived from the life of the great statesman and orator is that immorality of life will affect success in politics as in everything else—a truth which no career ever illustrated better than that of Honoré Gabriel Riquetti, Comte de Mirabeau.

Lafayette was the opposite of Mirabeau in his purity of life; but, unfortunately for France, he was Mirabeau's opposite in too many other ways. Mr. Stephens pictures him as a young noble whose chivalric imagination led him to espouse the American cause, whose personal courage in our Revolution was undoubtedly great, but who gave no signs of any military ability. Washington's policy, however, was to honor him to the highest degree. He returned to France with his natural vanity extremely inflated. He hardly knew what he wanted, politically, but "his paramount desire was to be the most powerful man in France." He had very positive dislikes; with this absence of positive plans, the poorest equipment for a statesman. His greatest dislike was of Mirabeau, unhappily, and the result Mr. Stephens thus sums up:

Had he been able to think of France, or of Paris, before himself and his own glory, he might have obtained as great fame as George Washington did in America. No man with such great opportunities used them so ill.

It would be pleasant to quote much more from this admirable volume, but we must send our readers to the book itself, where they will find a preface specially interesting to Americans on the influence of American ideas on the Revolution. We may confidently expect that Mr. Stephens's two volumes, promised for early issue, will sustain the high character of the one before us, and that the three will form the most generally satisfactory history of the French Revolution in our language.

MR. HAYWARD'S LETTERS.*

IF actions could lie against deceased men of letters for breach of justifiable expectations, then Mr. Abraham Hayward's ghost might properly be made to suffer in heavy damages. Here was a man who was ranked with Lord Macaulay as one of "the two best-read men in all England," as far as knowledge of literature was concerned, "for the purpose of actual use in cultivated society," one of the ablest writers in the Reviews of his time, a man whose social opportunities were such that his biographer applies to him his own words in speaking of another, "almost from the commencement to the very close of his career the companion and counselor of the greatest and most distinguished of his contemporaries, the petted member of the most brilliant and exclusive of European circles;" the list of his acquaintances, more or less familiar, included nearly all the notabilities in political and literary life of fifty brilliant years of England. Mr. Hayward, again, was no insular John Bull; he was on familiar terms with many French statesmen and authors; one of the first Englishmen to study German literature, he made a translation of Faust which Carlyle and Matthew Arnold have pronounced the best, in prose at least.

We take up these two volumes, then, with the pleasurable anticipations thus derived, and find to our surprise that, as far as these letters are concerned, Mr. Hayward made very poor use of his splendid opportunities, unless his editor has edited very badly. Mr. Hayward was far from being a brilliant letter-writer. His letters are filled with details of the politics of the day, no more permanently interesting than last year's newspaper; they contain comparatively few remarks of consequence on the subjects which he was treating in the Reviews, and anecdotes or characterizations of the famous people he met are lacking to a remarkable degree. He would seem to have kept the best of himself for print; and few of his correspondents wrote to him below the surface of things. One may read a good many pages without finding as much agreeable reminiscence of men and books as even some of the dullest volumes of autobiography of recent years have supplied in the same space.

The judicious reader, with a talent for skipping, may yet find a few hours well spent in extracting the good things that, of course, could not fail, under any circumstance, to be here. Mrs. Norton's lively letters (would there were more of them) are the most entertaining part of the books; her description of Rogers, as well as that by Lady Dufferin, her sister, is of the first order:

No man ever seemed so important, who did so little, aye, and said so little (in spite of table-talk) for his fellow-men. His god was Harmony; and over his life Harmony presided, sitting on a lukewarm cloud; . . . he did not squander the affection of his seraglio, the Nine Muses, nor bet upon Pegasus. He did nothing rash. I am sure Rogers as a baby never fell down, unless he was pushed; . . . he must always have preferred a lullaby to the merriest game of romps. "I never," writes Lady Dufferin, "could lash myself into a feeling of affection or admiration for him. . . . There was a certain morality in him which repelled me. . . . He gave what he valued least—money; he never gave what he valued most—admiration. It seemed a positive pain to him to hear any modern poet praised."

The next correspondent of Mr. Hayward in ability, judging by the letters here given, was, strangely enough, Bulwer Lytton; his chatty letters about Mrs. Piozzi, and his severe judgment of Macaulay occupy some of the most satisfactory pages of this work. Macaulay's "beauty of style . . . has no modesty," he says it never consents to wear a veil. . . . Perhaps there is no writer in our language who suggests so little to a thoughtful or imaginative reader. . . . His history, his criticism, are both oratorical.

"A Mr. Thackeray," as Mr. Macrey Napier styled him, writes a delightfully manly letter to Mr. Hayward, on being black-balled at the Athenæum Club. One of Mr. Hayward's own judgments on literature is worth quoting. Balzac's novels don't improve on acquaintance. The fineness of observation and analysis of feeling are undeniable, but his descriptions, both of places and characters, are tediously spun out, his plots teem with improbability, and he has a vulgar fondness for wealth and rank.

* A Selection from the Correspondence of Abraham Hayward, Q. C., from 1834 to 1884, with an Account of his Early Life. Edited by Henry E. Carlisle. Two Volumes. Scribner & Welford. $7.50.

The best anecdote altogether in these Letters is one "from the contest for the Falkirk Burghs:"

Questioner. "Will Mr. Merry vote for an alteration of the Decalogue?"

Merry. (Aside to treacherous friend.) "What the— is that?"

Friend. "Flogging in the army."

Merry. "I beg to say, if elected, I will vote, and indeed I will move, for its total and immediate abolition."

SONS AND DAUGHTERS.*

THE Story of Margaret Kent was one of the really successful American novels of last year, and now we have in Sons and Daughters from the same pen a book that is equally sure of a large and enthusiastic group of admirers. The ethical theme in the later work is not so intense; it does not move on so high a plane of aspiration and endeavor; it has no heroic self-renunciation to chronicle; but it deals with actual, everyday life in a light and graceful manner; it depicts certain contemporary types with a rare felicity of artistic expression; it sparkles with wit, it astonishes with paradox, it leads the reader a wild dance through a labyrinth of cross-purposes; and it has a high intellectual tone, it soars into the æther of sentiment and dives into the depths of casuistry; it dazzles, amuses, stimulates, perplexes, and holds the attention fixed to the very close.

The action of the story takes place entirely within the circumscribed area of a small section of a Philadelphia suburb, Sycamore Hill, and the effects bear out the author's preliminary assertion that "a small area, carefully studied, may give as satisfactory results as hasty generalizations concerning a great continent." Here at Sycamore Hill lives Mrs. Reese, a rich, self-assertive, loud-voiced woman past middle life, and with her lives Miriam, her daughter, of a peculiar exotic attractiveness like that of an orchid which is more fantastic than beautiful and yet is not devoid of beauty; and here also dwells meek Mr. Reese, who resents dependence upon his wife's bounty and takes various futile opportunities to display his manliness. Then there are Mr. Redmund, the banker, with his three daughters— Nora, an investigator of "Spiritualism;" Madeline, a devotee of the mind-cure; and Lorraine with "serious and intense views" regarding the possibilities of feminine culture. Then Dr. Jasper, with his two sons— Edward, vacillating and aspiring; Herbert, hiding beneath a mask of indifference solid impulses and a firm ambition. Then the Chichesters, the rector's family, and first of all among them Polly, with her child-like blonde beauty and cultivated domesticity of temper. And, lastly, Mr. Paul Forbes, cultivated, poor, "sick of Europe," and on the outlook for new sensations; possessing, in spite of his thirty years and varied experience, a youthful vivacity of purpose which wins for him many friends.

With these dramatis personæ the comedy begins, and they all continue to play their parts to the end. Paul Forbes starts out with the settled intention to win Miriam and her fortune, and to forward his plans becomes the obedient slave of the whimsical and vulgar Mrs. Reese and arouses Mr. Reese's fierce jealousy. Miriam gives Paul her heart, but he finds a rival in Edward Jasper. Then Herbert Jasper is smitten with the charms of Lorraine—and Lorraine is simply delicious. Polly of course cannot be ignored; she is an innocently disturbing element, but her sweetness and purity of nature are elements that work only for good.

We will not spoil the reader's pleasure by foreshadowing further the outline of the plot, except to say that he would be indeed a cynic who would find fault with the conclusion. Nor have we the space at command to give a fair idea of the wit of the book, which is in fact a constant quantity. There is a Shakespeare Society whose proceedings are sufficiently mirth-provoking, and the mind-cure, "Spiritualism," and other popular crazes call forth flashes of keen satire. Mrs. Reese, when she at length gets access to the meetings of the Shakespeare club is awed, yet her native candor does not fail. "Why did not Shakespeare say what he meant?" is her query. She can understand the necessity for Browning societies; "just as one has a key to a Chinese puzzle—but Shakespeare wrote good English." After all, it is Lorraine's wooing which one remembers with the greatest enjoyment; it is a charmingly idyllic episode in a wholly delightful book.

TWO VIEWS OF EVOLUTION.

INTEREST in the subject of evolution may well be quickened, among both its advocates and its opponents, by the nearly simultaneous appearance of these two works from the same press. Mr. Curtis's polemic¹ is one of the ablest and fairest which has appeared for a long time from the hand of a layman in science, while Professor Cope's² is among the recognized masters in the discussion of evolution on this side of the ocean, and enjoys a trans-Atlantic reputation.

Mr. Curtis's preface, to be sure, raises no lively expectations; his result, as there announced, is sufficiently sweeping to satisfy the most strenuous theological opponent of evolution, though the author writes from a philosophical, not from a Scriptural, point of view:

The result of my study of the hypothesis of evolution is, that it is an ingenious, but delusive mode of accounting for the existence of either the body or the mind of man; and that it employs a kind of reasoning which no person of sound judgment would apply to anything that might affect his welfare, his happiness, his estate, or his conduct in the practical affairs of life.

This amusing estimate of that model of inductive reasoning, Darwin's Origin of Species, will probably repel many readers from pursuing Mr. Curtis's argument further, although he does afterward praise Darwin's "candor." But we advise them to go on. They will find much matter still more entertaining when the author poses as a man of science, as, for instance, where he shows how Darwin was entirely mistaken in drawing any analogy from artificial to natural selection. Wherever Mr. Curtis, in fact, attempts to handle a scientific question his ignorance and his equivalent dogmatism are simply comical. He considers, to take one more example, that the argument from distribution is exploded by his guess at what ought to take place under a reversed evolution, which, he says, would not take place; therefore Darwin is wrong, and Mr. Wallace should be ashamed of himself. Mr. Wallace is still living, and may yet take to law to learn how to observe and to reason rightly in natural science after the manner of Mr. Curtis. But we are sorry that Darwin's chief glory can only be his "candor!"

So much for Mr. Curtis's weaknesses, wherever he discusses facts. When he comes to discuss the speculative evolution of Mr. Spencer, he shows to much better advantage, and it is this part of his work which is really of value. There is, indeed, very much of a mixture here, and to such a great achievement in psychology as Mr. Spencer's reconciliation of the schools of experience and of intuition, Mr. Curtis is unable to do justice. But when in reply to Mr. Spencer's "high priori" proofs of evolution, Mr. Curtis (p. 165) alleges that the doctrine of special creation is the cause of much of our present civilization, he is following the true Spencerian logic. Both evolve the universe largely out of their own consciousness; and one theory thus obtained and thus defended is as good as another. Mr. Curtis has, in one respect, the superiority over his opponent, for he has no system to maintain through thick and thin. We are not saying that all that is of value in Mr. Curtis's book may not be found in previous and much abler criticisms of evolution, but there are advantages for many readers in the more popular form which he adopts.

Professor Cope's solid volume contains twenty-one essays, published independently during the last eighteen years. They are arranged under the headings of general, structural, mechanical, and metaphysical evolution. A full preface presents the history and the aim of each paper, and indicates those which are intended for specialists only. Somewhat less than half of the volume is thus beyond the range of common interest. The remainder contains, with many unavoidable repetitions and representations, a popular statement of Professor Cope's highly valuable original contributions to the discussion of evolution. The author is a follower of Lamarck rather than Darwin, and he has revived the former's theory of effort and use in the development of new types. Natural selection originates nothing; it is simply a choice between forms already produced. The fittest survives; but how did the fittest originate? This is the inquiry to which Professor Cope has devoted himself, and his work is therefore of special interest and value. He is, in fact, very independent of Darwin, saying that between Darwin's position that the variations on which natural selection works came by chance and the old-time creationist position that God made them, "science can perceive nothing to choose." According to Professor Cope, consciousness is primitive and a cause of evolution. New functions and "structures are due to the effect of effort, i. e., stimulus or use, exerted by the living being on its own body," while the design thus displayed is "an expression of the intelligence at some time possessed by itself." The total impression produced by Professor Cope's assiduous labors, thus brought together, is of an investigator and thinker of whom American science may well be proud. He has certainly strengthened the theory of evolution at some of its weakest points. We cannot at all accept his definition of consciousness as "an attribute of matter," but the value of his work does not depend upon this form of statement; a thoroughly spiritual doctrine of evolution could heartily accept the substance of his treatise.

* Sons and Daughters. By the Author of "The Story of Margaret Kent." Ticknor & Co. $1.50.

¹ Creation or Evolution? A Philosophical Inquiry. By George Ticknor Curtis. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

² The Origin of the Fittest. Essays on Evolution. By E. D. Cope, A.M., Ph.D. D. Appleton & Co. $3.00.

THREE OF TOLSTOÏ'S STORIES.*

THAT Count Tolstôï's genius remains in unimpaired vigor is easily to be comprehended from this collection of three of the latest productions of his pen. They include the much-talked-of "Death of Ivan Ilyitch," "The Romance of a Horse," and "A Poor Devil." The singular power attributed to the first-named story seems to us, from Mme. Tsakny's version, somewhat rough and hurried as it is, not to have been exaggerated. In it the author of Anna Karénina and My Religion shows his implacable realism, his pitiless satire, his subtle command of psychological analysis, his overwhelming sense of the vanity and deceitfulness of a life lived for the senses, in a manner truly terrifying. The career of Ivan Ilyitch is clearly marked out for our inspection. He is from boyhood capable, good-humored, agreeable in social intercourse, faithful to what he regards as his duty. His great aspiration is to get on in the world, and at the same time never to overstep the conventionalities:

With regard to duty he had always the same ideas as his superiors. Never servile, he was like a fly attracted by the light. His efforts were constantly exerted to raise himself to the level of those who occupied a position superior to his own—to assimilate their manners, to adopt their point of view, to show himself worthy of their friendship and confidence.

A man with such ideals secures what he desires. Ivan Ilyitch passes through the successive stages of worldly promotion. At the age of forty he holds an enviable position in the department of justice, he lives in apartments surrounded by all the objects which are sought by those "who, not being rich, wished to appear as if they possessed riches." He has a wife whom he hates, and who cares nothing for him, a daughter to whom he is indifferent, and who in turn is indifferent to him, a son who, only at the last, betrays any affection for his father.

One day an accident occurs. Ivan Ilyitch, while arranging some draperies in his apartments, slips and strains himself. From that moment the struggle with death begins. Insidiously the disease progresses, and Count Tolstôï spares us none of the dreadful details. There are interviews with physicians, who interest the patient by assuming the judicial airs which he is accustomed to assume with regard to matters of which he is ignorant. There comes at length a terrible moment when Ivan Ilyitch examines his emaciated form in a mirror and sees the change that has taken place in his condition. "I must not think of it, I must not think of it!" he cries, and seeks to evade the realization of his fate. But death presses closer and closer; he is solitary, with only the care of a faithful attendant to solace his pains; and he asks himself continually, "Why? why?" Then he sees that he has been living in an atmosphere of falsehood. Everything about him is a lie, and he the greatest lie of all; and there is no time left him to repair the error of his existence. Despair seizes upon him, and he sinks, amid fearful bodily and mental torment, into the dark abyss. His son comes to his side, clasps his hand, and wets it with tears. "Then Ivan Ilyitch from the depths of darkness beheld a ray of light, and realized that while his past life was a lie, there was a possibility of reparation." When the news of his death reaches his colleagues, they are conscious of a sensation of relief. "Once more they had escaped; another had been the victim; each whispered to himself joyfully, 'he, and not I!'"

"The Romance of a Horse" is a daring venture, but wholly successful and startling in its originality. It relates the experiences of a horse from colthood to his ignominious death at the hands of the executioner who, in his old age, finds him no longer of service. It can easily be imagined what opportunities the author finds for the expression of his ideas concerning the problems of existence, and no one will complain that Count Tolstôï's horses are very like human beings in their sentiments and opinions. One can appreciate also, from the horse's point of view, the saying that "the chief end of that strange animal called man is, not to do what he knows to be just and right, but to secure the possibility of applying the word mine to a greater number of objects."

The story of "A Poor Devil" relates to a serf who, after many thefts and many repentings, is entrusted by his mistress with the collection of a sum of money which he is to bring to her. He guards his trust faithfully, but on his way home he is overcome by sleep, and loses the precious package. He searches long for it, but in vain; and finally in despair hangs himself.

DOROTHY WORDSWORTH.*

IN the literary annals of later England the name of Dorothy Wordsworth holds an honored place, and yet to the majority of readers she who bore the name has been little more than a gracious satellite shining in the glory of her famous brother. Wordsworth himself spoke of her in no doubtful way, likening her to the spring that went before his steps and strewed his path with flowers. We find, too, affectionate tributes to her fine qualities of mind and heart in the pages of Coleridge and De Quincey. Principal Shairp, as late as 1874, edited passages from her journal recording the experiences of a tour in Scotland made with her brother and Coleridge in 1803, and to this work the editor prefixed a brief memorial of the author. And in the writings of many who have dealt with the so-called lake school and the lake country Dorothy Wordsworth is the subject of suggestive reflection and affectionate remembrance. It has remained for Mr. Edmund Lee, an ardent Wordsworthian, to gather up these scattered threads of biography and weave them together into an agreeable and valuable narrative. He has done his work with sympathy and good taste, and has amply justified the high esteem which he places upon the native talent of Miss Wordsworth, and her significant influence upon the development of Wordsworth's genius.

In this little volume, which is about the size of the monographs dedicated to the "English Men of Letters," the life of Dorothy is effectively outlined. We see how indispensably her personality must be considered in forming an estimate of Wordsworth's intellectual development. It is not alone that she served as a sympathetic stimulus, guiding the uncertain steps of her brother at the outset of his entrance upon the poet's career, but she was bound to him by a profound and enduring tie of absolute unity of purpose. They saw with the same eyes, experienced the same emotions, and their imaginations, different as they were in degree, answered to the same impressions and sought utterance in the same ideas. "Her journals are Wordsworth in prose, just as his poems are Dorothy in verse," says a discerning critic; "the one soul kindled at the other." Descriptions of this admirable woman vary. Coleridge found her "exquisite" — "a woman indeed" — "simple, ardent, impressive." De Quincey enters more into detail. As he saw her she was small in stature, ungraceful in bearing, with a face of "Egyptian brown;" her eyes were "wild and startling," her speech hurried and agitated, her manners quick and ungoverned, but "the subtle fire of impassioned intellect" burned within her and could not be restrained; intellectually, "she was a person of very remarkable endowments." The most truthful and attractive portrait of her mental qualities is, however, to be found in her letters and journals, and these Mr. Lee quotes freely. They have a literary value which will preserve them from the ravages of envious time.

* Comte Léon Tolstôï — Dernières Nouvelles. Traduites par Mme. Eléonore Tsakny. Paris: Nouvelle Librairie Parisienne. Boston: C. Schönhof.

* Dorothy Wordsworth: The Story of a Sister's Love. By Edmund Lee. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

Mr. Lee has naturally much to say of the lake country, and although his material is mostly selected, his notes and remarks indicate only too clearly the changes which are fast taking place in that once-favored region. Near the head of Thirlmere, on the right-hand side of the road from Grassmere to Keswick, stands an upright block of stone, bearing the following letters:

W. W.
M. H.
D. W.
S. T. C.
J. W.
S. H.

It is hardly necessary to state [says Mr. Lee] that the initials are those of William Wordsworth, Mary Hutchinson (afterwards his wife), Dorothy Wordsworth, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, John Wordsworth (the poet's brother), and Sarah Hutchinson (the sister of Mrs. Wordsworth). It is greatly to be regretted that on the completion of the projected reservoir of the Manchester Corporation, this rock, unless steps are taken for its preservation, will be submerged in its waters. Seldom did half-a-dozen more poetic and fervent natures meet and leave a more unique and attractive memorial. It is to be hoped that means will be adopted not only to have the rock removed to a place of safety, but also to preserve it from further mutilation. Although these initials have withstood the storms and blasts of more than four-score winters, they are yet perfectly distinct and legible, and their original character is preserved.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Rise and Early Constitution of Universities. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.] This third volume of the "International Education Series" relates briefly, but in good proportion, the story of higher education, beginning with the Romano-Hellenic schools and coming down to the University of Prague, the first university founded as such in 1348, A.D. Prof. Laurie recognizes the narrowness of the Christian conception of education in mediæval times, which yet did not prevent the church from encouraging and protecting the higher schools of learning. The Renaissance received these from the church (the church alone could have preserved them), and transformed them into the modern universities. Prof. Laurie's work is sufficiently full for all but special students, as it does justice to both the external and the internal history of the higher education in its early days.

The Aztecs. From the French of Lucien Biart by J. L. Garner. [A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.00.] This volume is a compilation, or rather a composition, out of the works of those who saw the Mexico of the Aztecs in its splendor — Cortez, Diaz, Ojeda, with additions from the accounts of later historians, such as Tezozomoe, Acosta, Gomara, Ramirez. The Aztecs, the reader will understand, were not the aborigines; before them in succession came the Otomites and the Mayas, the Aztecs appearing only toward the close of the 12th century. They were a nomadic people, of medium stature, strong passions, grave manners, intelligent and active minds, and manifold skill. Settling at last in what is now the Valley of Mexico, they founded their capital, Tenochtitlan; under their kings, Acamapictli, Huitzilhuilitl, Quimalpopoca, and Itzacoatl, they entered on a fairly historic period; and here, in the reign of the second Montezuma, or Moteuczoma as M. Biart spells his name, Cortez and his followers found them in the zenith of their national glory. To the tracing of these historical events M. Biart's first five chapters are devoted; the remaining twelve, or the bulk of the book, being a description of their theology, worship, politics, domestic life, schools, judicial and military systems, trades, literature, and arts. They had a curious mythological cosmogony, a good assortment of gods and goddesses, and divided their year into 365 days and 18 months of 20 days each. They worshiped by means of prayers and prostrations, and they were the first of the Mexican peoples to introduce human sacrifices, which were conducted under the administration of six ministers of sacrifice and were occasions of refined cruelty. Their kings were elected. Titles of nobility were hereditary. New-born children were treated to a form of baptism. Marriage was observed with a certain reverence and much formality. Cremation was common. The young were taught and trained with care in the principles of a severe morality. The public laws were a mixture of wisdom and severity. Punishment was often brutal. Slavery existed in mild forms. The profession of arms was held in high esteem. Agricultural science was rude, but some of the industrial arts were practiced with a good deal of ability. The language was "rich, exact, and expressive." Poetry was fashionable and the theater popular. The people were not musical, but were fond of dancing. The descriptive part of M. Biart's book is full of interesting information, but there is nothing more graphic than the opening chapter with its account of the impressions of a visitor approaching the City of Mexico from the east. This passage, however, striking as it is, belongs rather to the Mexico of the present, and we must leave it to the reader. The book has some twenty wood-cuts, including pictures of the Aztec calendars, representations of deities, ruins, statues, and weapons, and a curious plan of Tenochtitlan, executed soon after the Conquest. There is also a sketch-map and an index.

The Education of Man. By Friedrich Froebel. Tr. by Josephine Jarvis. [A. Lovell & Co. Boards, 60c.] This, Froebel's first, treatise was published in 1827, and is now offered in boards at a greatly reduced price. It is addressed to mothers, and is eloquent in its exposition of the principles which its author conceived to be at the basis of all true education, and which indeed have been accepted largely as the basis of modern pedagogical science.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

One great charm of Chaucer's poetry is its boyish, almost infantile, character. This is no doubt due in some measure to his language, which for us has something of the ineffable charm which belongs to the lisp of children. Yet the spirit of his poetry corresponds entirely with the language, and hence we cannot agree with those who regard him as one "born out of his due time." No other language than that which he wrote would have suited so exactly his character and temperament. Chaucer combines the innocent frankness and gayety of the child with the prudent reserve and serious reflection of the man of the world; and even when he utters naughty things, we feel, as he himself so naively says, that "no villainy is it." He is deeply pathetic at times; yet his smiles, like those of the child to whom we have compared him, seldom fail to shine through his tears. — Spectator.

It may be an impracticable wish, but, none the less, it seems much to be desired that those of our divines who possess the poetic gift in any measure should endeavour to bend their talent into paths of fancy which should be less markedly devotional than those which it usually haunts. What is wanted is, not that they should exclude the religious spirit in any way from their poetry; but that they should shake off the clergyman, of whatever denomination, if they have the noble ambition to survive and take rank among the poets of the world. — H. B. Garrod, in the Academy.

The original Gander — he of Todger's and the Sunday papers — must certainly have departed this life these many years. But his seed still flourish; and in the matter of those sparkling pleantries, each one of which was wont to make the round of the social circle presided over by the stately Jinkins as "Gander's last," they are not unworthy their renowned ancestor. When, as is sometimes the case, they sit in high places, and have power to prevail against the public, they produce some curious effects. One — and not the least distinguished — of the breed is just now tenant-at-will of the "Editor's Study" attached, for occult reasons, to an American magazine; and his "last" is good enough to be worth publishing abroad. . . . There is but one American novelist, and Gander is his prophet. — Saturday Review.

Roland Blake is a novel which every cultivated person will read with pleasure. It is not in any way remarkable; but its well-considered composition — using the word in the pictorial sense — and its finely finished literary workmanship set it in a place apart from the sprawling and slipshod average English novel. — J. A. Noble, in the Academy.

There are plenty of readers who will doubtless be fascinated by Mr. Symonds's well-written narrative, which rightly treats Sidney as something more than a man of letters, and the critical expositions of Sidney's writings will certainly be of service to those who do not possess Sidney's books. But the biography is little more than a résumé of Mr. Fox Bourne's well-known work, and irresistibly recalls the words of Bacon: "As for the corruptions and moths of history, which are epitomes, the use of them deserveth to be banished, as all men of sound judgment have confessed." We are quite aware that Mr. Symonds, owing to untoward circumstances, has not the access to materials that a biographer of Sidney should possess, and, that being the case, it may be doubted whether it was wise in a writer of his reputation and accomplishments to undertake the responsibility of producing this volume. — Athenæum.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 19, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

[Original Poetry.]

AD MUSAM.

Thou before whose threshold I
Oft have knelt in days gone by,
Asking alms, and seldom sent
An unwelcome suppliant
From thy sight, give ear once more
To the beggar at thy door.

Have I not been true to thee,
Loyal in my fealty?
Have I not thy gifts repaid
By my worship, gracious maid,
Scorned the lover's gentle art,
Holding only thee in heart?

Now that hills are wan around,
And the wind is like a hound
Whining at his master's gate,
Must I mourn a bitter fate,
Having neither love nor thee,
Left in lonely misery?

CLINTON SCOLLARD.

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 31, 1887.

. In the Century Magazine for February the interesting announcement is made of the proposed endowment of the American School at Athens, by calling upon the general public for contributions to establish a permanent fund of one hundred thousand dollars. The school now has the assistance of sixteen colleges, but the rapidly increasing demands upon its resources require more substantial aid. Its record of four years is one to be proud of. It has depended almost entirely upon annual subscriptions for its support, and now has an honorable, world-wide reputation. The Greek government presented a building site on Mt. Lycabettus; a fine building to cost twenty thousand dollars is under way; and the school has a choice, if small, library. Eighteen students have availed themselves of the privileges extended, and one of these, Dr. Sterritt, has done great service to scholarship by his researches in Asia Minor and collection of historical inscriptions. The proposed endowment involves an invitation to Dr. Charles Waldstein, the American archaeologist, now connected with the University of Cambridge, to assume the directorship of the institution. A better choice could not be made; and, we may add, there are few scholastic undertakings as worthy of encouragement as is that of the American School at Athens.

. M. Napoléon Ney, who accompanied the delegation from France to be present at the dedication of the Bartholdi Statue, is giving in the Nouvelle Revue an amusing account of his five days' sojourn in the New World. He was much impressed with the elevated roads; with the Hudson River steamers (which he calls "ferries boats"); with the canine majesty and good nature of the police; with the reply to his query, "Do you have any anarchists?" "No; we hang them;" and with the "characteristic Americanism" of the Wall Street citizen who, on greeting M. de Lesseps, remarked, "This hand is worth $15,000,000." But M. Ney's greatest admiration is reserved for a clerk at Tiffany's who, he was assured, made and won a bet to answer all questions put to him during a given period, with a quotation from Shakespeare. "I tried," says M. Ney, "to imagine how many of my compatriots would be able to win a similar wager with the assistance of any of our great poets, even of Victor Hugo. Ah! these Americans have sturdy minds (sont de robustes esprit). The day when, for good and all, they enter the literary arena, they will strike with no uncertain hand!"

. The American Bookseller of February 1 contains some interesting statistics of the book publishing business in this country during 1886. Its full list of all the books issued for the general trade during that period includes 3,708 titles, of which 115 come under the head of biography, 117 pertain to art, 123 to history, and 127 to poetry and the drama; while travels are represented by 179, education by 398, religion by 471, and fiction by 482. The Bookseller also gives the lists of the popular "Libraries," twenty-six in number. The volumes thus enumerated reach a total of 1,551, and of these all but 69 are fiction. Not all of the paper-covered literature was pirated, however, for we find that 508, of the dime novel order, were the product of native or naturalized energy. Still, the existence of the 1,043 pirated volumes remaining ought to weigh heavily on the national conscience.

. Some of the stuff that gets itself circulated nowadays as English is certainly fearfully and wonderfully made. A correspondent calls our attention to a charming example of mixed metaphor from a recent issue of the North American Review, which speaks of "A scheme so crude and ill digested that the wiser heads of your party feel it necessary to give it the coup de grace while it was yet in its swaddling clothes." An "ill digested" scheme in "swaddling clothes" receiving the "coup de grace" would be a sight worth witnessing!

. By the death of Philip Bourke Marston a sad gap is made in the ranks of the younger school of English poets. He was indeed a genuine singer, to be classed in many qualities with Swinburne, Morris, and Rossetti, yet having distinct individuality of thought and originality of form in his verse-utterances which in his own field gave him a place apart. Through a life of a little more than a third of a century — a life in which blindness was perhaps the least of his afflictions — he found in poetry a fitting expression for all the moods and impressions of his sensitive and imaginative nature. In all his verse there is a tender melancholy which often rises into a cry of pain. The intensity of his passion, when it obtained full voice, as it did in some of his brief lyrics, strikes the most vibrant chords of song. His poetry is intensely subjective, inspired by true feeling, and its method is inevitably artistic. In the narrow limits of the sonnet he moved with strength and grace; some of his productions in this form are almost unrivaled in dignity and power. In prose Mr. Marston produced criticism of a high order, and fiction which abounds in fine descriptive touches and significant revelations of character. But it is by his poetry as represented in Song

Tide and Other Poems (1871), All and All (1874), and Wind-Voices (1883), that he will be remembered, and his position in literature — surely no very lowly one — be finally adjudged.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Matter of Duty.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

In your last issue you reprinted from the Hon. David A. Wells's Study of Mexico the items of cost and duties in getting a stove from St. Louis to Mexico. It is certainly barbarous, but our own civilized country has little to boast. I had occasion not long since to import a fabric from London. The original cost of the cambric (two pieces) was £2.10. When I at last received the package, the bill rendered, over and above the cost price and expressage to Philadelphia, was as follows:

To London charges	$2.85
Duty of $12.00 @ 40 per cent	4.80
Duty of 4 lbs. @ 35 per cent	1.40
Entry and brokerage	1.50
Public store storage	.35
Cartage, etc.	.25
	$11.15

But even that was not as vexatious as a recent charge of twenty-five cents' duty on a book of my own Englishing sent me by the London publisher!

NATHAN HASKELL DOLE.

Philadelphia, February 12, 1887.

MR. HOSMER'S RESEARCHES.

It will be remembered that Professor James K. Hosmer of St. Louis spent last summer in England prosecuting researches for the life of Sir Henry Vane on which he has been engaged for some time. Knowing that his experiences must have been interesting, we wrote to him a few days since for the story of them, and here it is:

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 29, 1887.

I WORKED very hard in London, in the British Museum, and also in the Record Office in Fetter Lane, where the archives of the government are deposited. I met a number of distinguished historians; besides Mr. Bryce, who is engaged upon a work relating to America, I met James Sime, author of the excellent life of Lessing and a history of Germany, E. A. Freeman, whom I visited at Wells, and Samuel Rawson Gardiner, author of the great ten-volume history of the Stuart period, from 1603 to 1640, and of the history of the Civil War, a continuation of the former work, the first volume of which has just appeared. With all these gentlemen I talked freely of my subject and my plan for treating, and from all I got ideas and advice. Mr. Gardiner, in particular, the highest living authority as regards the XVIIth century, showed me great kindness. I visited him at his home in Kent, and worked side by side with him at the Museum and the Record Office. He recommended to me books and lines of investigation, and gave me inspiration by his example. I felt that it was a great thing to be admitted to the intimacy of a great scholar, and to see, as I was able to do, his methods of work. The officials, also, at the Museum and the Record Office, gave me every possible help, and I must not forget to mention Mr. Lowell and Mr. Phelps, who showed me kindness; the former, in particular, was a valuable friend.

Before I went to England I had studied as thoroughly as I could everything relating to my subject to be found in America. I was diligent in London, and I think may honestly claim to have gone as deeply into that period as any American student has ever done. I examined with care the manuscript records of the "Committee of the Two Kingdoms" and the "Council of State," the executive bodies of the Long Parliament during the important years, of both of which Vane was a leading member. I found autograph letters of Vane, which I think have very seldom been read. I studied the parliamentary journals and histories, and made investigations in the "Thomasson Tracts," a great collection of 2,000 volumes in the Museum, which contains all the fugitive literature of the Civil War period—news-sheets, pamphlets, squibs, ballads, sermons, broadsides, placards, and what not. I also consulted manuscript diaries of members of the Long Parliament, D'Ewes, Whitacre, and Yonge, men who sat side by side with Vane, jotting down without thought of publication the course of proceedings. I also studied carefully localities, being often at Westminster, at Tower Hill, where Vane was beheaded, and also visiting Marston Moor and Naseby, great fields, where, to be sure, he did not fight, but had nevertheless a great hand in the victories that were there won. The Duke of Cleveland, Vane's descendant, informed me that there were no manuscripts of Vane in possession of the family; but he gave me a permit to see Ruby Castle throughout, and I had a charming excursion thither just before I came home.

I have, as you may suppose, a great pile of notes, and I am now trying to digest my material into a book. What interests me in Vane is that in all his political ideas he was so thoroughly an American, living and dying in the premature effort to bring about in England government of the people, by the people, and for the people. He would have had all the power in the hands of the representatives of the people, elected by practically manhood suffrage. No king, no house of lords, no established church, no barriers of caste or privilege—the broadest toleration to all shades of religious belief. He was not alone, in his time, in holding these views, but he is the best type of English republicanism. I think he ought to be an interesting figure at the present hour. England is now fast growing into the shape Vane liked. His broad suffrage is already secured. I heard Sir Wilfrid Lawson in Parliament shout out that he "belonged to a society for the abolition of the House of Lords," and there were loud cheers. Few doubt that disestablishment is near. As England grows more and more like us, her great dependencies, Australia, New Zealand, the Cape, and Canada, already being like us, what is to hinder the coming together of the English-speaking world sometime into a great federation? Dependence was once a good thing; without it colonial America would have fallen to France. Independence was and is a good thing, for us and for England too. But interdependence is something yet finer, and I think it is not unreasonable or Utopian to anticipate a time when ancient prejudices will be mitigated, and a desire to come together into a brotherly bond manifest itself. Vane is a name to come together under. I wrote the life of Sam Adams, the main agent in splitting England and America apart. I am glad, also, to write the life of Vane, under whose name we may come together again.

JAMES K. HOSMER.

PURITAN MASSACHUSETTS.

AT the celebration of Forefathers' Day by the Congregational Club of Boston, last December, a Baptist divine is reported to have expressed his regret that the Boston of Gov. Winthrop's time was no more. The unconscious humor of this declaration could only have been surpassed had some eminent member of the Society of Friends joined in the plaint. Of what particular blessing of those intolerant times the reverend speaker deplored the loss, he did not say; but as a simple matter of history the polite attentions paid to Baptists, as to Quakers, by the early Puritans were such as whipping, branding, and banishment.

This darker side of early New England, familiar to every reader of Massachusetts history, has been set in the boldest relief in the two works named below.

Mr. Hallowell's book¹ is simply an expanded lecture. Most of the ground it traverses had already been covered in his Quaker Invasion of Massachusetts, published in 1883; that work, however, closed with the year 1677, which marked the cessation of the cruel treatment of the Quakers, while this one continues the story down to 1724, when they were freed from the tax for the support of the clergy. Mr. Hallowell here, as elsewhere, holds a brief for the Quakers, who, to him, seem incapable of wrong. Of every statement which discredits them he is incredulous; while every assertion made by them, or their historians, is accepted as gospel truth. It follows, as a matter of course, that none of the standard histories of New England suits him. The only book on the subject which pleases his judicial mind is Mr. Brooks Adams's recent volume, in which there is a much fuller treatment of the Quakers than Mr. Hallowell himself gives.

Mr. Adams² has certainly the merit of novelty to draw attention to his formidable indictment of Massachusetts before the Revolution. No such wholesale condemnation of early New England has yet been made, we believe, by a New Englander. We are glad, indeed, that it has been made, and by a son of the soil, for it marks with sufficient plainness the entire decay of the Puritan theocratic idea in the very State where it had its most rigorous expression and its most triumphant reign. Happily its unchecked career was short. The attempt to build up in America, in the seventeenth century, an Old Testament State, founded on the letter of the Pentateuch and the virtual autocracy of the clergy, was doomed to inevitable failure. The barbarities and the cruelties which it logically embraced condemned it in every breast where humanity was strong, while the very foundation of the theocracy was exploded as soon as free thinking was allowed an entrance. Mr. Adams recites in pitiless detail the wretched story of the persecutions and tortures inflicted on Anabaptists, Quakers, and other sectaries, and the whole horror of the witchcraft delusion. Of his facts, drawn from the original sources, no question can be made. The story is painful to the extreme, but it cannot be made too familiar to all in whom there lingers a trace of the odium theologicum.

But there is an odium anti-theologicum as well, which is also discreditable to human nature. Of this feeling, which is apt to masquerade as scientific impartiality, Mr. Adams's volume is an exhibition which would be exasperating, if it were not at once more painful and more amusing. The mention of a Massachusetts clergyman (whom he persists in calling a "priest," though no name could be less appropriate) seems to act like a red rag upon him. The New England "hierarchy" could do no good thing, according to this passionate anti-theologian. The clergy deserve, he says, not praise for building Harvard College, for they "were actuated by no loftier motive than intelligent self-interest;" it was purely hatred of the English power, which had previously crushed the theocracy, that made the ministers of New England zealous for independence, "a bitter theological jealousy," "a rapacious lust for power," "a furious detestation of rival priests." And this is what Mr. Brooks Adams supposes to be scientific history, deducing the civilization of New England from such base passions.

The writer of this notice belongs, in Mr. Adams's words, to "the great liberal secession from the Congregational communion" which "broke the ecclesiastical power forever." But we can have no sympathy with such a mere travesty of the ecclesiastical history of New England as Mr. Adams would have us accept. He has utterly failed to do justice to the nobler traits of the Puritan character, which, enlightened by culture, have brought to life the best elements of American civilization.

Let any one who is so unfortunate as to suppose Mr. Brooks Adams capable of appreciating the Puritan spirit or the Puritan heroism, turn to Mr. T. W. Higginson's essay on "The Puritan Minister" (Atlantic Essays). Mr. Higginson has departed widely from the Puritan creed, but he has retained a controlling love of fair play for ¹The Pioneer Quakers. By Richard P. Hallowell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

²The Emancipation of Massachusetts. By Brooks Adams. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

all, even for theologians holding "a creed outworn." Thus he writes:

Toleration was a new-born virtue in those days, and one which no Puritan ever for a moment recognized as such, or asked to have exercised toward himself. . . . They objected to the church of England, not that it persecuted, but that its persecution was wrongly aimed. . . . What was great in them was their heroism of soul, not their largeness. They sought the American wilderness, not to indulge the consciences of others, but their own. . . . Their worst penalties were borrowed from the English laws. In what respect has the work they left behind them proved, after the testing of two centuries, less solid or durable than Roger Williams's?

TWO COLONIAL NOVELS.

UNDER the general title of the "Old Colony Series" have appeared two novels which demand, because of their subjects and manner, something more than casual notice. Both are, manifestly, by the same author, and both are the product of a fervid, strong, comprehensive mind, working with material with which it is in entire sympathy, and over which it has a complete and ready mastery. With Constance of Acadia,¹ we traverse once more, and to good purpose, the northern Atlantic shores where romance was quick to set foot, and has ever since maintained her kingdom. The heroic deeds of Constance La Tour, and the events that centered about the early struggle for empire in the maritime provinces, are familiar to most readers, but few have been able to see clearly through the mists of time the actual personality of this wonderful Constance, who is here depicted with tender, vivid, sympathetic touches, and brought before us in all essentials as she must have seemed to her contemporaries. A simple, practical, energetic woman, holding firmly to her faith, sparing herself in nothing, living with the savages, and inculcating among them by example the blessings of a higher civilization, having to all intents and purposes but one object in view, the building up by the aid of French colonists of a Protestant power in the new world—this Constance La Tour is indeed of heroic proportions, and whether training her cannon upon the enemy, combatting the intrigues of the Jesuits, or forwarding by all possible means the material prosperity of her husband, she remains always simple, sturdy, and commanding. With her as the leading personage in a historical drama which can never lose its freshness and zest, the author has succeeded well in portraying the very essence of the times, and in making all of his characters flesh and blood creations. From wilderness to French court he takes us, and back to wilderness again, and thence to the precincts of primitive Boston, the peculiarities of whose inhabitants and rulers supply the theme for many a pointed jest. All through the book we find displayed a keen knowledge of humanity, an enthusiastic love for the varied phenomena of nature, an intense appreciation of the grand, the beautiful, the pathetic, and a wholesome sense of humor quick to respond to any reasonable stimulus to expression.

In *Agatha and the Shadow it seems to us that the author has not assimilated his material so completely as in the preceding work, and there are not a few unseemly breaks in the current of the narrative. The strength of the story is again in the portrayal of the heroine. Agatha is a finely studied example of Puritan womanhood; and the author, in accordance with a wisely chosen method, makes her individuality known, not by long and elaborate descriptions, but by swift dramatic strokes which outline her character clearly and firmly, without obscuring its underlying dignity and primitive force. Agatha is the daughter of Elder Brewster and the wife of Bernard Anselm, whom she is nursing back to life in the little hamlet of Plymouth when the narrative opens. There is a shadow upon the marital happiness of the two in the person of Rachel the Jewess, loved and wronged by Bernard when he was a youth in Amsterdam. The scene changes from Plymouth to Nauset, then to Nantucket, across the ocean to Holland, back to Marblehead, across the wilderness to New Amsterdam, then to New Haven, and finally to Boston; and everywhere the shadow pursues, everywhere Agatha's boundless devotion to a man who has sinned deeply and bitterly repented, exorcises the spell, and at last wins the hardened, misguided Rachel to goodness and peace. There are many episodes in the book that stand forth boldly in the memory and will not soon fade, and the color of the early colonial era is reproduced with the skill of an antiquary and an artist. Indeed, the author will have it that early Puritanism in New England was not marked by that universal reign of decorum and psalm-singing which we are wont to associate with the times in question. We are assured that the average Puritan woman was "fussy" in her ways, much given to gossip, and not above grudges against her neighbor. The Pilgrims had the prime English qualities of belligerency and virility. "The young people of Plymouth had a good time. Innocent pleasures, frolics without end, crop out of the old records. And if they went beyond rule, their elders—if not their betters—had rare enjoyment in bringing to terms the lads and lasses, and men not manly." But while showing this side of Puritanism plainly, the author has not failed to catch and transmit the essential nobility of its spirit, although intolerance plays a large part in the movement of the narrative. The story of Agatha is well done; amply fortified with learning, enlivened with a cheery strain of humor, and actuated by a generous and elevating purpose. And on this background of history Agatha herself stands forth an inspiring and luminous figure, worthy in all ways of tender and reverential regard.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.

The Story of Hungary. By Prof. Arminius Vámbéry, Assisted by Louis Heilprin. Illustrated. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

The Story of Carthage. By Alfred J. Church, M.A., with the Collaboration of Arthur Gilman, M.A. [Do., Do. $1.50.]

The Story of the Saracens. By Arthur Gilman. [Do., Do. $1.50.]

The Story of the Moors in Spain. By Stanley Lane-Poole, B.A., M.R.A.S., and Arthur Gilman, M.A. [Do., Do. $1.50.]

The Story of the Normans: Told Chiefly in Relation to their Conquest of England. By Sarah Orne Jewett. [Do., Do. $1.50.]

Readers of preceding volumes in this handsome and useful series will remember that a leading feature of this plan has been to make the presentation of history picturesque—to give the lights and shadows of period after period, as in a set of dissolving views. It seems to us a merit of Prof. Vámbéry's writing that he has followed this method a little less exclusively; that his story is more distinctly a history. Yet it does not fail to present the many great characters and stirring scenes in which the history of Hungary abounds. The author brings to his work a very pleasing style, and a certain moral and almost religious tone, which is always refined and elevating. In the all-important matter of clearness, however, the narrative leaves something to be desired. The book opens with a description of the geographical position and characteristics of Hungary; the value of which is impaired by the smallness and defectiveness of the single map given of the country; which fails to show some of the places named in the narrative, and furthermore includes very little of the surrounding territory. The origin and early applications of the Hungarian nation are the subject of many legends, but Prof. Vámbéry places the cradle in the Altai Mountains between Siberia and China. He begins the historical narrative in the 9th century, A. D., tracing the migration from the valley of the Volga to that of the Danube, describing the gradual conversion to Christianity, and grouping the reigns of the kings into three great periods. The 16th century brought the subjugation of the people to Turkey, which continued for nearly two hundred years. Sobieski, Rákoczy, Szechenyi, and Kossuth are among the later Hungarian patriots, and their noble figures illuminate the author's closing pages. Hungary now enjoys a constitutional government, and the crown is hereditary in the house of Hapsburg.

In the story of the nations Carthage occupies a minor place, and one naturally thinks that one volume would suffice for Phœnicia and her greatest colony. The tale of the city of Dido must be told, too, as Prof. Church reminds us, "without sympathy and from the standpoint of her enemies." It is a story of incessant wars in Sicily, Spain, and Africa, which would become fearfully monotonous were it not relieved by the wonderful campaign of Hannibal, a general whose achievements have never been surpassed in military history. Three chapters in the body of the work interrupt the constant narrative of bloodshed to describe the discoveries, the revenue and trade, the constitution and the religion of the great commercial city. Prof. Church, with the aid of Mr. Gilman's skillful hand, has done the best that could be done with a story in itself far from attractive, while the illustrations of Carthaginian antiquities drawn from Perrot and Chipiez are many and excellent.

¹ Constance of Acadia. A Novel. Roberts Bros. $1.50.

* Agatha and the Shadow. A Novel. Roberts Bros. $1.25.

Mr. Arthur Gilman contributes to the story of the nations the The Story of the Saracens. Substantially his book is a biography of Mohammed and a history of Mohammedism from the birth of the Prophet near the close of the sixth century, down to the conquest of Bagdad by Jengis Khan and the Tartars early in the thirteenth century. The part played by Islam in Asiatic and European history during this period of 500 years is covered by Mr. Gilman with a carefully studied, compactly framed, well-written, and often picturesque narrative. The subject is recondite and difficult, authorities are scattered, not always accessible, and often contradictory, and it is not always easy to disentangle the proper thread from its complicated connections. We do not think Mr. Gilman exactly clears up the beginning of his theme; he has us under way before we fairly see where we are and what are our surroundings; we start in the night, so to speak. But he paints a striking picture of the Arabian interior in which the empire of the Saracens originated, he makes plain the professed link between Mohammedanism and ancient Judaism, he is lenient in his judgment of Mohammed, and presents him and his faith in an apologetic light, he passes lightly over the horrors which attended the spread of the new religion, and writes habitually with refinement and delicacy of feeling. The crusades, though five of them at least fall within the period covered by this volume, are barely referred to. An additional chapter summarizing this important relationship would not have been out of place, though the reader will understand that "Saracens" was originally a tribal and not a religious name. We notice two obvious misprints: one on p. 128 in the last line but one, the other in the first line of p. 192.

The events narrated by Mr. Poole and Mr. Gilman in their joint volume on The Moors in Spain appeared in part in a previous volume in the same series on Spain, and also hinges on to the foregoing volume on the Saracens. An introductory chapter recounts briefly and clearly the causes which led to the Saracen invasion. The period covered by the narrative extends from these incursions, in 710-712, to the final expulsion of the invaders, in 1570. It is a romantic but chequered history—of growth, of splendor, and of decay; and the compilers have related it in a manner worthy of the theme, though in our judgment the quality of clearness is impaired by occasional violations of the order of time. Though not strictly within their subject, the authors chronicle the Mohammedan attempt to conquer France, and their total defeat by Charles Martel at the decisive and memorable battle of Tours in 733.

One of the most picturesque stories of the Moorish dominion in Andalusia is that of Prince Abd-er-Rahman, heir of the Omeyyad line of Khalifs, whose bold omen into Spain in 755 the writer compares to the landing of "the younger pretender" in Scotland nearly a thousand years later, and who speedily made himself master of the government; in which he showed himself a sagacious and powerful ruler, and at last assumed the title of Khalif, religious as well as political in import. Under him the Khalifaté of Cordova attained great power and renown, which culminated, after the reigns of some less able descendants, in a still higher degree of prosperity and splendor under Abd-er-Rahman, III, and the shrewd usurper, Ibn-Ami-Amir, surnamed Almanzor. The growing power of the Christians in the north was kept in check; and Cordova was adorned with gardens, palaces, baths, and the great mosque, which were justly the wonder of the world; and at a time when our Saxon ancestors dwelt in rough huts, semi-barbarians, Cordova was a center of learning, beauty, and art. From the death of Almanzor, in 1002, begins the gradual fall of the Moorish power. In a chapter narrating the growth of the Christian states we have an account of the exploits of the Cid, the national hero of Spain—who, however, did not confine his prowess to fighting on the side of the Christians. The whole history is enriched by romantic episodes, and illustrated with representations of the exquisite architecture and lesser specimens of art by which the gifted Moorish race was worthily distinguished.

The Story of the Normans is told by Miss Jewett with grace and dignity, with a clear hold upon the tangled threads of history that must be straightened out from the legends and chronicles that record the source and growth of the Norman power. She has confined herself to accounts of the first seven dukes as "men typical of their time, and representative of the various types of national character;" indeed, the tendency to portray the characteristics of an epoch in the traits of its leading personage is very marked, and gives a vitality and unity to a narrative which might otherwise, compressed within limits so narrow, have been, even in Miss Jewett's hands, dry and unprofitable. Miss Jewett has, wisely we think, made no attempt to solve debatable points, concerning which historians are, and always will be, at loggerheads. She uses her authorities—they are all good ones—most effectively, and her occasional quotations are always happily selected. What we like best about the book is its steady recognition of the noble qualities that went to make up the Norman character; its lofty judgments upon the chief actors in the great drama that began with the wooing of Harold Haarfager and ended with the battle of Hastings; its firm faith in might only as guided by right; and its clear tracing of the hereditary impulses which make the Norman, the Englishman, and the American of today the united possessors of a "rich inheritance," living under the inspiring dominion of "the closest of kindred ties."

MINOR FICTION.

Happy Dodd; or, "She hath Done what She Could." By Rose Terry Cooke. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] This story was published some eight or nine years ago as "a Sunday-school book," and has, we believe, met with a good deal of favor, due perhaps to its intensely religious, not to say pietistic, tone. Happilona Dodd is the daughter of a village tailoress, and the account of her trials and triumphs in living a Christian life are set forth in detail. She teaches a Sunday-school class of young girls, and, one by one, brings them under her good influences. At first the way is hard, for she finds that people "don't like to be done good to," but she learns in time that the true reward for well-doing does not depend upon the approbation of others. There is rather more Sunday-school phraseology in the book than the generality of readers will relish, but the religion inculcated is one of justice, truth, purity, generosity, and kindness. We wish, however, that Mrs. Cooke had not killed off Happilona with a quick consumption in the last chapter. It gives an opportunity for a funeral sermon which is admirably improved, but it lends color to the traditional fate of precocious and unmitigated goodness which we are sorry to see coming from such a source. Mrs. Cooke could not write a story of New England without depicting certain phases of New England life in a vividly realistic manner that is wholly her own. It is not without reason that one of the severest trials which comes to Happilona Dodd is the necessity which obliges her "to go out to service." "Theoretically, she considered herself a great sinner and an humble follower of Christ; but . . . she could not bear the idea of being a servant."

Doctor Cupid. By Rhoda Broughton. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.] New English, small talk, a confused group of characters, some slang, a generally artificial style, and no particular interest of any kind characterize this story of English society life, which concerns John Talbot's perplexities and difficulties between Peggy Lambert and Lady Betty Harborough, both of whom he loved, the latter not rightfully. On this story its indulgent American publishers have wasted a pretty library binding.

PERIODICALS.

The February Century has two articles on Father Taylor, one a somewhat extended analysis of his character and personality by Dr. C. A. Bartol; the other a brief consideration of Taylor as an orator by Walt Whitman. "Of all eminent Americans he was the most original and inimitable in his genius and style," says Dr Bartol, but "he shivered from hand to foot at the sight of an inkstand and pen . . . no scrap of his writing is to be found." Whitman says that he was the "one essentially perfect orator," and relates his impressions as a hearer. W. C. Church describes the Bahamas as "A Midwinter Resort" in a way not particularly calculated to turn travel in that direction, although "for those not compelled to live there," he confesses that "the Bahamas have their charms." The illustrations, after water color studies by Winslow Homer, manifestly lose much in the process of engraving. The "hurricane" pictured on page 501 is a tame affair. Prof. Lanciani's paper on "Recent Discoveries of Works of Art in Rome" is welcome and is pleasingly illustrated. The Lincoln biography treats of "Lincoln in Congress and at the Bar," bringing the story down to Lincoln's fortieth year. A magnificent gallery of portraits continues to adorn the narrative. John van Cleve writes affectionately of President McCosh, whose benign features are admirably depicted in a frontispiece portrait. Mr. Atkinson makes manifest the weakness of the nations in skillfully arranged diagrams. Mr. Cable's strong novelette, "Carancro," comes to a conclusion. There is a finely written story on the fate of Angelo and Francesca by James Lane Allen, and a capital moonshiner story, "S'phiry Ann," by Mat Crim. A poem by Mr. Stedman, "Souvenir de Jeunesse," adds a distinct flavor to an excellent number.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

"Concordance" and "Lexicon." Just as we were writing the notice of Schmidt's Lexicon we received a postal card from Prof. F. A. Leo, of Berlin, in which he quotes from the World of Nov. 27, 1886, the remark that "we know of no complete Concordance to the plays except Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's;" and he adds: "Then you do not know the Shakespeare-Lexicon, a complete dictionary of all the English words, phrases, and constructions in the works of the poet, by Alexander Schmidt," etc. But the Lexicon is not a "complete Concordance." Under words that are used a moderate number of times, it refers to all the passages in which they occur; and under all words it refers to passages illustrating all their different senses; and, as we have said above, it intends to give all the instances of idiomatic or peculiar uses of a word or phrase; but it does not refer to every instance of words that are used very often, and the great majority of the references are simply to act, scene, and line, without quotation. Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's and Mrs. Furness's Concordances, on the other hand, enable one to find at once any and every passage in the plays or poems in which a word occurs. The Lexicon is to a considerable extent a substitute for the Concordances, besides serving many useful purposes which they are not meant to serve, but it cannot entirely supersede them. The teacher and the critical student cannot well dispense with either.

January Meeting of the Shakespeare Society of New York. The society met on the 27th of January, the President, Appleton Morgan, Esq., in the chair. On motion of W. H. Wyman, Esq., a non-resident member, Mr. Samuel Timmins of Hill Cottage, Arley, Coventry, England, was elected an honorary member in the room of Dr. C. M. Ingleby, deceased. Mr. A. R. Frey read the paper of the evening, on "The Taming of the Shrew." Mr. Frey said that two years ago he should not have ventured to declare that the old comedy of The Taming of a Shrew was (as Capell had asserted) by William Shakespeare; but that after considerable critical study of both, he certainly was of that opinion now. He believed, moreover, that if the author of The Taming of a Shrew was not William Shakespeare, he was a man well acquainted with Stratford-on-Avon, with Wilmeccote, with the Sly family, with the tinker himself; that if this author was not Shakespeare, he (Shakespeare) must have pirated an enormous number of lines from some other writer, not (as was Shakespeare's wont) adorning and vivifying what he borrowed, but absolutely purloining the exact material in its exact dress—good, bad, or indifferent. And when he borrowed not only lines and passages, but entire scenes, it is hardly probable that, surrounded by enemies as Shakespeare was (or at least, by envious rivals, eager always to annoy and accuse him), some of them should not have recognized the piracy, and raised a hue and cry again about the "upstart crow," beautified with another's feathers. Again, Busby in 1606-7, sold three plays to Ling, all of which were then recognized as Shakespeare's, and one of them was this older comedy. Neither buyer nor purchaser in this transaction was blind or careless, as we happen to know. They knew very well what they were buying and selling. If the play as it now stands was not written before 1609 and after November 19th, 1607, all the contemporary evidence of Greene, Dekker, Henslowe, Kyd, Beaumont, Fletcher, and Rowlands must be considered as worthless; we must assign an earlier date to Hamlet than the one now usually received, and ignore the remarkable circumstance that Southwick bought the old play in 1607 and lent the proprietors of the first folio an improved version of it in 1622 or 1623.

Mr. Frey was aware that these propositions were novel, and (since whatever is once supposed settled about Shakespeare ought reasonably not to be disturbed) perhaps revolutionary; but they were the result of his own convictions, and he respectfully submitted them. That the Induction to the present play was by Chettle assisted by Fletcher; the first act by Cyril Tourneur assisted by Shakespeare; the second by Marlowe assisted by Dante or the ghost of Hamlet's father, and so on, he did not believe. We must draw the line somewhere, even with the analytical tests which modern criticism has so liberally supplied us, perfectly in hand.

Mr. Reynolds being in the chair, Mr. Price deprecated the tendency to poke fun at the verse tests—the run-on lines, stopped and unstopped endings, etc.—and thought we had better wait a bit before pronouncing upon their entire absurdity. He had been very highly gratified by Mr. Frey's paper, however, and moved its reference to the Committee on Publication. The motion was seconded and carried. Mr. Morgan was very glad to hear Mr. Price speak as emphatically as he had in favor of the verse tests. He (Mr. Morgan) confessed that he saw nothing in them whatever of practical value; but he recognized the tendency in himself, and in his own methods, of going too far, and he was glad that in this society each gentleman should feel it his duty to check the other. When in St. Paul, Mr. Ignatius Donnelly said to the speaker, "Mr. Morgan, there is a cipher in the Shakespeare plays, and I have it." He replied, "There are two distinct propositions: first, that there is a cipher; and, second, that you have it correctly and exactly." Just so I answer Professor Price. Doubtless the style of a writer changes by lapse of time; but can we be sure that we know how, and on what lines? Take a capital instance. Here is Locksley Hall, written by Alfred Tennyson of fifty years ago. Here is Locksley Hall written by Baron Tennyson. If Professor Price and I were alive in the year 2100, and I should submit these two to him, would he be able from mere verse tests to say which was written first, and how far apart they were written? The first Locksley Hall is much more highly polished, and more accurate in its scansion than the second. In the Shakespeare Plays, the critics seem to think that care and polish betoken maturity. Mr. Price said that the president's question was a subtle one; but that without preparation for debate at this time, he must still adhere to his belief that chronology could be settled by verse tests. Mr. Hibbe, President of the Cleveland Shakespeare Society, who was present as a guest, addressed the chair and hoped that this society would be able to perfect a scheme by which all the societies on this side of the Atlantic might be put into a close correspondence. The chair announced that on the fourth Thursday in February, the society would have the pleasure of listening to a Paper on Shakespeare's Sonnets: Some New Inferences from Old Facts, by Mr. W. J. Rolfe of Cambridge. If he should be able to read his paper in person on that evening, due announcement would be made of the fact. The society then adjourned.

Wall Street and the "Merchant of Venice." A friend in New York sends us the following, which is too good to keep out of print, though it may have been printed somewhere already:

I have just heard the following story, which I think you will appreciate. A young man doing business in Wall Street, and moving in at least what calls itself good society, was overheard saying to his sister: "O, there was the best play performed the other night. I can't remember the name of it, or who wrote it, but it was all about an old Jew who wanted to get a pound of flesh. The heroine of the piece acted the part of judge. She was very handsome. I haven't got the story all straight, but anyhow it was splendid! One of the best things I ever saw!"

Wall Street ought to be better posted on literature in its own special line. Could this be matched on State Street, think you?

Personal. We were grieved to see a reference to "Prof. Rolfe" in the last number of the World. In the outside world it seems impossible to escape the "Dr." and "Prof.," but they should not be thrust upon one in the house of his friends. The only collegiate degrees we have received are a couple of "A. M.'s"—from Harvard in 1859, and from Amherst in 1865—and we have never held any collegiate chair. Neither can we claim a professional skill in boot-blackening, hair-dressing, or other fine arts the experts in which hang out their shingles as "Professors;" and we have no ambition to be numbered with them.

While referring to these petty personal matters, we may say in reply to sundry requests for photographs, that we have long felt that our face was "not worth sun-burning"—as Henry said to Katherine (Hen. V. v. 2. 154) when she hinted that she would like his photograph—but lately we have yielded to certain importunities and boldly faced the camera. "For further particulars inquire at New England Conservatory of Music, Boston."

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

807. The Characters in "Parleyings." I very much fear that Mr. Browning's present and future poems will each require a commentary attached, if any one is to come at his actual meanings. Can you tell me anything about Christopher Smart? Who was he, and what did he write or do, of which the world has known nothing until now? I was referred to Johnson's Lives, but my edition (London, 4 vols., 8vo, 1781) has no mention of the man. You might, if so disposed, oblige very many others, beside myself, if you were to give in your next issue a brief exposé of each celebrity in Parleyings.

T. B. M.

Portland, Me.

A half-dozen standard books of reference would have provided T. B. M. with the information subjoined below:

Mandeville, Bernard de, 1670?-1733, a Hollander who settled in London, and won wide repute as an author. The work by which he is now best known is The Gambling Hive; or, Knaves Turned Honest (1714), enlarged into The Fable of the Bees (1723-1728). See Boswell's Life of Johnson, Macaulay's Essays, I, Schlosser's History of the Eighteenth Century, and Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors.

Bartoli, Daniel or Daniele, 1608-1685, a learned Italian Jesuit, the great historian of his order. Besides his monumental history, which includes an account of the acts of the Jesuits in all parts of the world, he wrote a Life of St. Ignatius and a treatise on The Man of Letters. His Narrations Varie di Fatti Storici Antichi is probably the work to which Mr. Browning refers. There are several editions of Bartoli's works, including that printed at Firenze, 1829-1837, 50 v., 8vo.

Smart, Christopher, 1722-1770, English author, reckless, improvident, and intemperate, at one time the inmate of an insane asylum. He wrote a satire, The Hiliad (London, 1753, 4to), translated the works of Horace and Phædrus, and made a versified translation of the Psalms and Parables of Our Lord. A Song to David (London, 1763, 4to), written in a mad-house, was his masterpiece. See Chalmers's English Poets and Boswell's Johnson.

Bubb, George (on his marriage took the name of Dodington, and later became Lord Melcombe), 1691-1762, an Englishman, "the most shamelessly corrupt and venal politician of a corrupt and venal age." His posthumous Diary, for its candid revelation of a wholly immoral nature, is without a parallel in literature.

Furini, Francis or Francesco, 1604-1646, a Florentine painter, whose drawing is remarkable for its ease and elegance, particularly the forms of women and children, his favorite subjects. Two of his pictures are the "Three Graces" and "Nymphs Carried off by Satyrs." Lanzi observes that he sometimes painted Magdalens which were not much more veiled than his nymphs.

Lairesse, Gerard de, 1640-1711, eminent Flemish painter. His style was grand and poetical, and his subjects were chosen by preference from history and fable. He became blind in his fiftieth year, but continued to impart his ideas on art to his associates, who provided the material for the treatise on Design and Coloring published after his death.

Avison, Charles, an English musician of the eighteenth century, organist at Newcastle, author of an essay on musical expression. Five collections of his compositions are extant. "The music of Avison," according to one critic, "is light and elegant, but it wants originality."

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Matthew Arnold's monograph on General Grant in Murray's Magazine will be brought out by Cupples, Upham & Co. in book form. The same house has in press a new edition of Turgénief's Poems in Prose translated by Mrs. T. S. Perry.

—The Life and Works of Giordano Bruno, a new volume in the "English and Foreign Philosophical Library" will be published on the 25th inst. by Ticknor & Co., who promise for the same date Forced Acquaintances, a novel by Edith Robinson; a fifth revised and enlarged edition of Arthur Bent's Familiar Short Sayings; and, in new and cheaper forms, Wheeler's Course of Empire and Familiar Allusions, and Dr. James Freeman Clarke's Events and Epochs in Religious History.

—Among the new books which Roberts

Brothers have in preparation are A Bachelor's Home and The Alkæst; or, the House of Clæës, by Balzac; The Kernel and the Husk, letters on "the worship of a non-miraculous Christ," by the author of Philochristus; Susan Coolidge's long-promised Short History of Philadelphia; and Dante: a Study of his Life and Works, by May Alden Ward.

—Tactics of Infidels, by Rev. L. A. Lambert, whose Notes on Ingersoll is said to have had a sale of 125,000 copies, is announced by Peter Paul & Brother, Buffalo, N. Y.

—Ten Years of Song, a volume of poems by Horatio Nelson Powers, is to be published by D. Lothrop & Co.

—Lee & Shepard have in press Danton in the French Revolution, by Laurence Gronlund, author of The Coöperative Commonwealth: An Exposition of Modern Socialism.

—A priced catalogue of Odds and Ends (No. 23) is issued by A. S. Clark, 34 Park Row, New York. It enumerates under classified headings many decided bargains for collectors.

—Miss Charlotte Fiske Bates is giving on successive Wednesdays at 16 Newbury Street, a series of "Illustrative Readings" from Crabbe, Rogers, Campbell, and Byron.

—Progress from Poverty, by Giles B. Stebbins, is announced by Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago. It is a critical review of Henry George's Progress and Poverty and Protection or Free Trade.

—The new edition of W. W. Story's Roba di Roma, which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have ready, has been revised by the author, and the story of Roman transformations brought down to the present year.

—The firm of Cleaves, Macdonald & Co., booksellers, at 131 Tremont Street, Boston, has been dissolved, Mr. Emery Cleaves retiring to give place to Mr. A. T. Laughton. The new house, Laughton, Macdonald & Co., will continue to give special care to supplying books for libraries and book clubs.

—Prof. James K. Hosmer of Washington University, whose researches in the British archives are described elsewhere, has been giving at Memorial Hall, St. Louis, a series of three lectures on "The Attempt in the Seventeenth Century to Make England a Republic." Those familiar with Prof. Hosmer's intellectual range and fascinating style can imagine how attractive the theme must be under his treatment.

—The March number of The Popular Science Monthly will contain a portrait of the late Professor E. L. Youmans, engraved on steel by Schlecht.

—Principles of Art, by J. C. Van Dyke, at one time editor of The Studio, will shortly be issued by Fords, Howard, & Hulbert, New York. The work is divided into two parts; the first treating of "Art in History," its causes, nature, development, and different stages of progression; the second treating of (modern) "Art in Theory," its aims, motives, and manner of expression.

—Mr. O. C. Auringer of Queensbury, N. Y., whose contributions have occasionally appeared in the Literary World, is collecting his poems for publication through D. Lothrop & Co. The volume may be expected in the early spring, if not before.

—Albert Lighton, who died at Portsmouth, N. H., on the 6th inst., was a poet whose writings, while having no wide repute, have attracted thoughtful admirers, who found in their refined grace of form and serious and ennobling purpose something distinct from the verse of the day. A volume of his poems appeared in 1858, and, twenty years later, a second edition dedicated to his cousin, Mrs. Celia Thaxter.

—The new and cheap edition of the Memoirs of Marie Antoinette, by Madame Campan, about to be brought out by Scribner & Welford, in conjunction with the London publishers, is to be superior to the English edition in that it will have a number of additional portraits.

—Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole is to give in Philadelphia and before the Mermaid Club of Germantown during Lent a course of six lectures on "Russia and Russian Literature," subjects and dates as follows: March 1, "Russian History in its Poetical and Dramatic Aspects;" March 8, "The Rise of Russian Literature;" March 15, "Russian Fiction;" March 22, "Russian Poetry and Music;" March 29, "Turgénief;" April 5, "Tolstôï."

—Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co. hope to soon publish the Memoirs of Pope Leo XIII., that the fiftieth anniversary of the Pope's ministerial labors may be worthily celebrated by his American subjects, who are expected to exhaust the first edition—100,000 copies—of the "jubilee" work as soon as it shall be offered them. The entire manuscript is now in the publishers' hands, and it is being set in type as rapidly as possible. The cover of the book is to be embellished with the Pope's coat-of-arms representing his miter, beneath which St. Peter's golden keys are crossed. His motto, "The light in the heavens," is suggested by a brilliant star, and above these emblems are a branch of olive, a sprig of evergreen, and a fleur-de-lis, symbolical of peace, constancy, and the Pope's lineage. While in Rome last summer Mr. Webster secured the Pope's signature, a fac-simile of which will be placed below the portrait of His Holiness which is to form the frontispiece of the Memoirs. The name of the Reverend Bernard O'Reilly, D.D., who has edited the work with the personal coöperation of the Pope, will appear on the title-page; and the subject of the Memoirs endorses the editor's labors in a paragraph stating that the volume "is sent forth with the encouragement, approbation, and blessings of the Holy Father." Cardinal Gibbons, to whom the book is dedicated, has written a proper acknowledgment of the honor, and recommends the volume to Roman Catholics the world over.

—Mr. James Redpath, the active editor of the North American Review, has been confined to his bed for the past month at the home of some intimate friends residing in the upper part of New York. His illness, which is declared by the three Bellevue physicians in attendance to be entirely due to overwork, necessitates a journey Southward as soon as his health will permit. During his absence from the office, since Mr. Allen Thorndike Rice is hibernating in Florida, the editorial part of the Review will be conducted by Mr. Redpath's private secretary, who has already prepared the March number for the press.

—Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons have almost ready Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson's latest book, entitled, The Merry Men, and Other Tales and Fables. The story which lends its title to the collection describes the seaman's life, and is divided into five chapters. "Will o' the Mill," "Markheim," "Thraven," "Janet Olalla," and "The Treasure of Franchard" complete the book.

— Another publishing house has just sprung up in what is now a great publishing center in New York. Mr. William Evarts Benjamin, the well-known dealer in rare books, old prints, and autographs of famous personages, and who, by the way, is a son of the late Park Benjamin, has entered into a partnership with Mr. William Haywood Bell. Under the firm name of Benjamin & Bell they will hereafter conduct a general publishing business, making specialties of limited editions, fine bindings, and volumes intended to adorn the bibliomaniac's shelves.

— The shams and foibles of New York society are about to be again shown to the world by Mr. Edgar Fawcett in a novel, the title of which is not yet decided upon, although the story is nearly completed. It will be published in the Brooklyn Magazine.

— In the April number of Scribner's Magazine will be begun the publication of the eagerly-awaited unpublished letters of Thackeray. It is understood that, taken together, they will form a connected narrative of that portion of the novelist's life which, heretofore, has been shrouded in mystery, the first (April) installment consisting of letters written in 1847 and the few years following.

— A portrait of the Rev. Edward Eggleston will appear in the March number of the Book Buyer.

— Mr. Brett, a son of George E. Brett, the manager of the American house of Macmillan & Co., started last week for Australia for the purpose of investigating the state of the book market there. Australia consumes, yearly, more books than the innocent observer might imagine, and many of them of the most expensive sort. Messrs. Cassell & Co. find that their house in Melbourne has been one of their most profitable branches. The American branch of the same firm has increased its business 33 1-3 per cent, and often 50 per cent, each year under the progressive management of Mr. O. M. Dunham, who is arranging more and more for American publications.

— The first number of the Epoch, a new weekly periodical whose publishers apparently intend that it shall appeal to a very wide circle of readers, has just been sent out from 36 Union Square, New York. It will be devoted to the discussion of politics, finance, literature, science, art, music, the drama, and social topics, say the managers, and its most important articles will be signed by the writers of them. Mr. De Witt Seligman, the Jewish banker, who owns the paper, backs it with a fortune reaching into the millions. Among the Epoch's editors, Mr. George Parsons Lathrop is understood to have a foremost place, Mr. John Foord, who was reported to be editor-in-chief, holding the rather unique position of "consulting editor." The former dramatic critic of the New York Times, Mr. G. E. Montgomery, will attend to the dramatic department.

— At last there appears to be an immediate prospect of the establishing of branches of the New York Free Circulating Library, whose President, Mr. Benjamin H. Field, has long cherished the hope that a sufficient number of contributions might be received to enable the Library to dot the city with free reading-rooms. Now that Miss Catherine W. Bruce, who, by the way, is a daughter of the late George Bruce, the millionaire type-maker, has donated $50,000, and Mrs. Charles Woerishoffer and Mr. William Ottendorfer have each given $10,000 toward the work, the site of at least one new building will be soon selected.

— Mrs. Oliphant's new long story, "The Land of Darkness," with which Blackwood begins the new year, "delineates," according to the Athenaeum, "a novel idea of the Inferno, differing, it said, entirely from all other conceptions of the same subject which have been formed by writers, whether in jest or earnest, from Dante downwards. The punishments, the sufferings, the situation, are new; mechanical modes of torture are for the most part supplanted by acute, mental anguish; individualities are preserved, and the vices which had characterized humanity are found playing more fiercely and freely in the doomed spiritual nature. The story forms one of Mrs. Oliphant's series of essays in the fiction of the higher supernatural, of which "The Open Door" and "Old Lady Mary," in Blackwood will be remembered, and so, we suppose, will be reprinted here by Roberts Bros.

— Lamirault of Paris announces the publication of a Grande Encyclopédie, in twenty-five volumes, after the manner of the German Conversations-Lexicon and the Encyclopædia Britannica. Controversial articles will be avoided in the Grande Encyclopédie, the publishers aiming to present simply an inventory of human knowledge as it existed in the year 1886. The list of contributors includes leading names in science, the arts, and letters. Two volumes of the work are ready; it is issued in weekly livraisons.

NECROLOGY.

- Crawford*, Isabella Valancy, Toronto, Can., Feb. 14; "one of the best known of Canadian writers."
Elliott, Dr. William Greenleaf, Christian, Miss., Jan. 23, 75 y.; President of Washington University, St. Louis.
Francis, Francis, Twickenham, Eng., Dec. 24, 64 y.; literature of angling.
Laighton, Albert, Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 6, 58 y.; poet.
Mann, Mary Peabody, Jamaica Plain, Mass., Feb. 11; biographer and essayist.
Marston, Philip Bourke, England, Feb. —, 36 y.; poet, novelist, and essayist.
Patterson, R. H., London, Dec. —, 65 y.; journalist.
Wasson, Rev. David A., West Medford, Mass., Jan. 21, 63 y.; essayist and poet.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

- Allemagne, Mouvement Littéraire en. Nouvelle Rev., Jan.
 M. Hennequin.
 Caverly, Charles Stuart, Some Recollections of. Temple Bar, Jan.
 Dostofewsky and his Work. John Lomas. Macmillan's, Jan.
 Hayward (Mr.) and his Letters. Blackwood's, Jan.
 Indian Education in the South-West.
 H. O. Ladd. Century, Feb.
 Journalism as a Profession. E. J. Carpenter. Education, Feb.
 Lamb, Charles, The Letters of. Macmillan's, Jan.
 Rev. Alfred Ainger. Quarterly, Jan.
 Literature, A School of English. Edinburgh, Jan.
 Literature of the Streets, The.
 McCosh, James, President of Princeton College. Century, Feb.
 "Sardello." R. W. Church. Macmillan's, Feb.
 Sévigné, la Famille de Mme. de, en Provence. Deux Mondes, Jan.
 Marquis de Saporta.
 Taylor, Edward Thompson. C. A. Bartol. Century, Feb.
 Taylor, Father, and Oratory. Walt Whitman. Century, Feb.
 Van Dyck, the Historian. Macmillan's, Feb.

THE LEGISLATURE OF 1887

SHOULD have enough D. K.'s to furnish each member with a box. Dyspeptics and sufferers from stomach troubles are capable of passing

Indigestible Laws.

Dr. Mark E. Woodbury's

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS

will put them all in a condition of good digestion. It costs only 50 cents for a box (trial boxes for 25 cents) sent by mail to any part of the U. S. on receipt of price by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

MARCH ATLANTIC,

Now ready, has the following articles:

Our Hundred Days in Enropa.

The first paper of a series by

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Fancy, or Fact?

A Charming Poem by

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The Second Son. IX.-XII.

By M. O. W. OLIPHANT

AND T. B. ALDRICH.

Paul Pateff. V.-VII.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

The Lady from Maine. II.

By LAWRENCE SAXE.

Curiosities of Criticism.

By AGNES REPPLIER.

Longfellow's Art.

By HORACE E. SCUDDER.

Poems.

By MRS. L. C. MOULTON, ANDREW HEDBROOKE, BLISS CARMAN.

Other Essays, Poems, Contributors' Club, etc.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a number.

NEW BOOKS.

A HALF CENTURY IN SALEM.

By MARIANNE C. D. SILSBEE. In one volume, tastefully printed and bound. 16mo, $1.00.

The readers of this charming book will find the Salem of fifty years ago living anew in its pages; its schools, churches, shops, "fair women and brave men," are all graphically sketched by one who lived among them.

DR. CHANNING'S NOTE-BOOK.

PASSAGES FROM THE UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPTS OF WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING. Selected by his Granddaughter, GRACE ELLERY CHANNING. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.00.

These selections cover a great variety of subjects, treated with that elevated seriousness and lofty purity of mind by which Dr. Channing was distinguished.

ROBI DI ROMA.

By WILLIAM W. STORY. New and revised edition, from new plates. 2 vols., 16mo, $2.50.

This is one of the best and most interesting of works written about Rome. Mr. Story's long residence there enables him to write from full observation of all the distinctive features of Roman art, architecture, society and character. This edition has been carefully revised and corrected to correspond with the changes in Rome since the work was originally written.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "BEN-HUR."

THE FAIR GOD.

A TALE OF THE CONQUEST OF MEXICO.

By LEW WALLACE. 600 pages, $1.50.

"We do not hesitate to say that the 'Fair God' is one of the most powerful historical novels we have ever read. The scene where in the sunrise Monteruma reads his fate, the dance-scene, and the entry of the Spaniards to the capital are drawn in a style of which we think few living writers capable; and the battles are Homeric in their grandeur."—London Athenæum.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Messrs. Roberts Brothers

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

1.
A VALUABLE HISTORICAL WORK.

Franklin in France.

From original documents, most of which are now published for the first time. By EDWARD E. HALE and EDWARD E. HALE, Jr. With a steel portrait from a painting by Van Loo, two portraits on wood by Chapman and De Carmon-telle, and medallion portrait by J. B. Nini, together with numerous vignette portraits of noted contemporaries. One volume, 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00.

When Benjamin Franklin died, in 1790, he left to his grandson, William Temple Franklin, the largest collection of his papers. This collection, which had been supposed to be irrevocably lost, was found, a few years since, on the top shelf of an old tailor's shop in St. James, be-came the property of Mr. Henry Stevens, and finally of the United States. From this collec-tion, and from other original documents, this life of "Franklin in France" has been written.

2.

The Country Doctor.

By HONORE DE BALZAC. Uniform with "Père Goriot," "The Duchesse de Langeais," "César Birotteau," "Eugénie Grandet," and "Cousin Pons." 12mo, half morocco, French style, $1.50.

3.

Diana of the Crossways.

A Novel. By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Evan Harrington," "Harry Richmond," "Sandra Belloni," "Rhoda Fleming," "Vittoria," in our new and handsome uniform 12mo edition, bound in English cloth, uncut, $2.00.

4.

Margaret of Angouleme.

Queen of Navarre. By A. MARY F. ROBINSON, author of "Emily Brontë." Being the fourteenth volume in the "Famous Women Se-ries." 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

5.

New Connecticut.

An Autobiographical Poem. By A. BRONSON ALCOTT. Edited by F. B. SANBORN. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

After his eightieth year Mr. Alcott conceived the idea of writing an autobiographical poem, and had partly executed it when he was stricken with apoplexy. Three parts of this poem were completed, and are here published. The fourth part is incomplete, and has been edited from material prepared by Mr. Alcott.

6.

Through the Gates of Gold.

A Fragment of Thought. 16mo, limp cloth, 50 cents.

The book deals with problems of the future life in an unusual manner, and it is believed that it will make as much of a sensation as did "The Gates Ajar." Its simultaneous publication in London has been arranged for.

7.

The Pigeon Pie.

A Tale of Roundhead Times. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, author of "The Heir of Redclyffe," etc. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

This popular story has for some time been out of print. A new edition has now been prepared, printed on large paper, and bound in an attractive manner.

BOSTON: 8 SOMERSET STREET.

DOROTHY WORDSWORTH.

A Biographical Sketch of the Sister of the Poet.

By Edmund Lee. 12mo, cloth, gilt tops, $1.25.

A writer in "Blackwood's" has described the relation of the sister to the brother in the very expressive terms: "It was not that she visibly or consciously aided or stimulated him, but that she was him—a second pair of eyes to see, a second and more delicate intuition to discern, a second heart to enter into all that came before their mutual observation. This union was so close that it becomes difficult to discern which is the brother and which is the sister. She was part, not only of his life, but of his imagination."

"This charming book is exceedingly graceful in style, abounds in interest from the first page to the last; in fact, it is one of the most delightful biographies written for many a day."—Utica, N. Y., Press.

THE SQUIRE OF SANDAL SIDE.

By Amelia E. Barr, author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "A Daughter of Fife," "The Bow of Orange Rib-bon." 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Mrs. Barr has given us a pastoral story, charming and many colored, with delightful pictures of the home life of the Cumberland dalesmen, of their strange superstitions which have come down to them from the days of the Vikings, of their pastoral occupations, their pride and their integrity. It is refreshing to fall upon such a book as this. It has an idyllic charm that soothes and subdues, and amid the roar and stir of our restless life we catch, while reaching it, glimpses of the sights, and echoes of the sounds, of a vanished Arcadia."—Philadelphia Record.

Dodd, Mead & Company,
NEW YORK.

GRAY'S BOTANIES.

GRAY'S BOTANICAL SERIES, By Prof. ASA GRAY, of Harvard University, provides the best and most complete equip-ment for all classes or for special students.

GRAY'S HOW PLANTS GROW.

For Introduction $0.80

GRAY'S SCHOOL AND FIELD BOOK.

For Introduction 1.80

GRAY'S MANUAL. For Introduction . 1.62

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Two lenses 2.00

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Three lenses 2.50

Write for circulars and terms for introduction of other works in the series.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & CO.,

PUBLISHERS, 753 & 755 Broadway, New York.
149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

POEMS.

The Lady of Dardale and Other Poems.

By HORACE EATON WALKER.

BOOK 6½ x 9 inches, contains 25 illustrations, original and selected, with portrait of author, 300 poems, 688 pages, seven long poems, varying from 300 to 6,000 lines. Price $2.00. Address the publisher,

GEORGE W. BROWNE, Manchester, N. H.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUAINT a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without un-necessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of

A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

JOHN F. STRATTON,
49 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF ACCORDEONS.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT COMPANY

OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Pro-fessional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Rail-road Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and imme-diately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

FORTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE CO.

Office: Nos. 346 and 348 Broadway New York.

January 1, 1887.

Amount of Net Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1886, ... $63,512,618.00

REVENUE ACCOUNT.

Premiums.....	$16,306,957.99
Less deferred premiums, Jan. 1, 1886.....	878,161.65	$15,507,996.04
Interest and Rents, etc. (including realized gain on securities sold).....	4,187,796.62
Less interest accrued Jan. 1, 1886.....	435,384.18	3,752,502.24	$19,230,493.28
			$39,743,998.96

DISBURSEMENT ACCOUNT.

Losses by death, including reversionary additions to same.....	$2,787,826.97
Endowments, matured and discounted, including reversionary additions to same.....	669,976.81
Dividends, annuities and purchased policies.....	4,311,119.11
Total Paid Policyholders.....	$7,807,290.89
Taxes and reinsurances.....	243,143.94
Commissions, brokerages, agency expenses and physicians' fees.....	2,529,357.67
Office and law expenses, salaries, advertising, printing, etc.....	623,672.30		$10,922,402.90
			$71,919,698.46

ASSETS.

Cash in bank, on hand, and in transit (since received).....	$3,633,306.13
United States Bonds and other bonds and stocks (market value, $43,134,973.98).....	30,833,443.99
Real Estate.....	6,630,974.22
Bonds and Mortgages, first lien on real estate (buildings thereon insured for $14,000,000, and the policies assigned to the Company as additional collateral security).....	15,228,775.00
Temporary Loans (market value of securities held as collateral, $5,913,741).....	4,450,000.00
Loans on existing policies (the Reserve held by the Company on these policies amounts to over $3,000,000).....	408,619.44
Quarterly and semi-annual premiums on existing policies, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1887.....	1,941,988.15
Premiums on existing policies in course of transmission and collection. (The Reserve on these policies, included in Liabilities, is estimated at $1,050,000).....	646,437.14
Agents' Balances.....	181,906.31
Accrued interest on investments, Jan. 1, 1887.....	436,497.16		$71,819,633.48
Market value of securities over cost on Company's books.....			$3,601,869.99

* A detailed schedule of these items will accompany the usual annual report filed with the Insurance Department of the State of New York.

CASH ASSETS, January 1, 1887, ... $75,421,453.37

APPROPRIATED AS FOLLOWS:

Adjusted losses, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1887.....	$202,346.43
Reported losses, awaiting proof, etc.....	365,636.28
Matured endowments, due and unpaid (claims not presented).....	37,000.70
Annuities due and unpaid (uncalled for).....	9,318.74
Reserved for re-insurance on existing policies; participating insurance at 4 per cent. Carlisle net premium; non-participating at 5 per cent. Carlisle net premium.....	62,525,599.00
Reserved for contingent liabilities to Tontine Dividend Fund, Jan. 1, 1886, over and above a 4 per cent. Reserve on existing policies of that class.....	$3,123,742.77
Addition to the Fund during 1886.....	1,320,530.00
Total.....	$4,444,273.46
DEDUCT—
Returned to Tontine policy holders during the year on matured Tontines.....	267,948.21
Balance of Tontine Fund, Jan. 1, 1887.....	$4,176,425.25
Reserved for premiums paid in advance.....	33,726.72
Total.....			$47,240,296.19
Divisible Surplus (Company's Standard).....			6,000,597.35
			$75,421,453.37

Surplus by the New York State Standard, at 4 1-2 per cent. (including the Tontine Fund) $15,549,319.53.

From the undivided surplus of $3,000,527.25 the Board of Trustees has declared a Reversionary dividend to participating policies in proportion to their contribution to surplus, available on settlement of next annual premium.

Death claims paid.	Income from Interest	Insurance in Force.	Cash Assets.
1882, $1,954,592	1882, $2,798,018	Jan. 1, 1883, $171,415,097	Jan. 1, 1883, $50,800,307
1883, 2,263,692	1883, 2,712,363	Jan. 1, 1884, 196,746,043	Jan. 1, 1884, 55,542,902
1884, 2,257,176	1884, 2,971,624	Jan. 1, 1885, 229,382,586	Jan. 1, 1885, 60,283,763
1885, 2,999,109	1885, 3,399,969	Jan. 1, 1886, 259,674,500	Jan. 1, 1886, 66,294,331
1886, 2,767,936	1886, 3,722,502	Jan. 1, 1887, 304,373,540	Jan. 1, 1887, 75,421,453

Number of policies issued during the year, 22,027. Risks assumed, $85,178,294.00.

TRUSTEES:

WM. H. APPLETON, WILLIAM H. BEERS, WILLIAM A. BOOTH, Hon. BENJ. H. BRISTOW,	HENRY BOWERS, JOHN CLAFIN, ROBERT B. COLLINS, E. SUYDAM GRANT,	ELIAS S. HIGGINS, WALTER H. LEWIS, EDWARD MARTIN, RICHARD MUSER,	GEORGE H. POTTS, C. C. BALDWIN, JOHN N. STEARNS, WILLIAM L. STRONG,	ALEX. STUDWELL, HENRY TUCK, A. H. WELCH, L. L. WHITE.
THEODORE M. BANTA, Cashier.
D. O'DELL, Superintendent of Agencies.
A. HUNTINGTON, M. D., Medical Director.
				WILLIAM H. BEERS, President.
				HENRY TUCK, Vice President.
				ARCHIBALD H. WELCH, 2d Vice President.
				RUFUS W. WEEKS, Actuary.

NEW ENGLAND BRANCH OFFICE,

RIALTO BUILDING, - - Corner Milk and Devonshire Streets, Boston.
BEN. S. CALEF, Manager.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 5. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 318. Publishers.

BOSTON, MARCH 5, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

NOW READY.

Scribner's Magazine

FOR MARCH. (Vol. 1, No. 3.)

25 Cents a Number. $3 a Year.

CONTENTS:

Portrait of M. Thiers. Frontispiece.
Engraved from the painting by HEALY.

The Stability of the Earth. By Prof. N. S. SHALER of Harvard University. With illustrations drawn by Meeker, Davis, Turner, Gibson and Robinson.

Aunt Fountain's Prisoner. (A Story.) By JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris. By ex-Minister E. B. WASHBURN. THE COMMUNE. With illustrations by Howard Pyle, T. de Thulstrup, Maynard and others.

Seth's Brother's Wife.—Chapters X.—XII. By HAROLD FREDERIC.

The Story of a New York House.—III. By H. C. BUNNER. Illustrated by A. B. Frost.

An Interlude. (Poem.) By R. ARMYTAGH.

The Bayeux Tapestry. By EDWARD J. LOWELL. With illustrations from Photographs of the Tapestry.

The Residuary Legatee; or, The Posthumous Jest of the Late John Austin. Part Second.—THE CODICIL. By J. S. OF DALE.

Ballade of the Penitents. (Poem.) By ANDREW LANG.

What is an Instinct? By Prof. WILLIAM JAMES of Harvard University.

Father Andrei; The Story of a Russian Priest. By ROBERT GORDON BUTLER.

"Cordon!" (A Story.) By T. R. SULLIVAN.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

* Remittances should be sent by post money order or registered letter to

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
742 and 743 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference.
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
667 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JONES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Apennines. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. BOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONIUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOAWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Supler). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

CAMPAN'S MARIE ANTOINETTE.

The Private Life of Marie Antoinette, Queen of France and Navarre, with Sketches and Anecdotes of the Court of Louis XVI. By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. New edition, in one volume, with four portraits on steel. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

"Despite the stupendous mass of literature which exists in reference to the French Revolution and its antecedents, Madame Campan's 'Memoirs of Marie Antoinette' still supply the most vivid and, as some writers say, 'matterful' collection of statements about the Queen. Perhaps there is still no single book of anecdotic history which may be read with such advantage."—Pall Mall Gazette.

VERDI:

An Anecdotic History of His Life and Works. By ARTHUR POUGIN. With Portrait and Facsimile. Translated from the French by James E. Matthew. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"It is long since a more readable and fascinating book has come under our notice."—London Athenaeum.

"This publication is very timely. It comes just when most wanted, and enables musical readers to study every stage of the fortunate career, which now is reaching its climax and consummation."—Daily Telegraph.

CAPITAL.

A CRITICAL ANALYSIS OF CAPITALIST PRODUCTION.

By KARL MARX. Translated from the Third German Edition by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and edited by Frederick Engels. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $12.00.

THE SOCIALISM OF TO-DAY.

By EMILE DE LAVELEYE. Translated by G. H. Orpen, together with an Account of Socialism in England, by the translator. 12mo, $2.40.

A COMTIST LOVER,

And Other Studies.

By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN, author of "The New Godiva," "A Tourist Idyl," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"Of these miscellanies, the first and most important . . . is of singular value. Miss Chapman's mind is largely occupied with ethical and social questions, and to the consideration of them she brings a judgment always sympathetic and never harsh, a clear apprehension and a noble emotion. . . . The note of heartbreak which runs through the conversation deepens its sacredness to the point of tragedy."—Bradford Observer.

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of a inserted price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed & desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

A New Novel by Christian Reid.

MISS CHURCHILL:

A STUDY.

By CHRISTIAN REID,

Author of "A Daughter of Bohemia," "Morton House," "Bonny Kate," etc.

12mo, cloth, price $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

The author calls "Miss Churchill" a study, for the reason that it consists so largely of a study of character; but there is no little variety of scene in the story, the action taking place partly in the South and partly in Europe, while the experiences and vicissitudes of the heroine are of great interest. The contrasts of place and character make it a very vivid picture.

CHRISTIAN REID'S PREVIOUS NOVELS.

VALERIE AYLMEYER. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
MORTON HOUSE. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
MABEL LEE. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
ERB-TIDE. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
NINA'S ATONEMENT, AND OTHER STORIES. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
A DAUGHTER OF BOHEMIA. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
BONNY KATE. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
AFTER MANY DAYS. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
THE LAND OF THE SKY. 8vo, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.25.
HEARTS AND HANDS. 8vo, paper, 50 cents.
A GENTLE BELLE. 8vo, paper, 50 cents.
A QUESTION OF HONOR. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.
HEART OF STEEL. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.
ROSLYN'S FORTUNE. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.
A SUMMER IDYL. 18mo, paper, 30 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

FORCED ACQUAINTANCES.

A Novel of Boston suburban life. By EDITH ROBINSON. $1.50.

"A very charming and well-told story, original and infinitely amusing. The elaboration of the narrative, which winds along through the household duties and the neighbors' peculiarities, is after the style of Miss Austen."

FAMILIAR SHORT SAYINGS OF GREAT MEN.

By S. ARTHUR BENT, A. M. Fifth Edition. $2.00.

A collection of short sayings such as are constantly referred to, but not in other books of reference. A sketch of each speaker and each remark is given. It is brought down to the latest time, containing over 300 new sayings from Agassiz, Choate, President Cleveland, Emerson, Evans, Carlyle, Gladstone, Farnell, etc.

FAMILIAR ALLUSIONS.

A Handbook of Information. By W. A. WHEELER and C. G. WHEELER. $2.00.

A unique and precious companion to the "Dictionary of Noted Names of Fiction." It includes terse and piquant descriptions of thousands of things continually met with in reading newspapers or books, but not to be found in gazetteers or encyclopedias, and often unfamiliar even to well-informed persons.

EVENTS AND EPOCHS IN RELIGIOUS HISTORY.

By JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D. D. Illustrated. $2.00.

Catacombs; Buddhist Monks; Christian Monks; Augustine, Anselm, Bernard; Jeanne d'Arc; Savonarola, Luther, Loyola; Mystics; Neo-Platonists; Fénelon, Swedenborg, Emerson; George Fox; Huguenots, Waldenses, Albigenses; John Wesley; Moravians and Methodists.

THE COURSE OF EMPIRE.

Outlines of the History of the World. By C. J. WHEELER. 12mo, $2.00.

A magnificent treasury of history. 25 full-page colored maps, showing the governments of Europe and Asia, in every century since 500 B. C.; with chronological table, list of great men, and 500 pages of history, with copious and vigorous quotations from Guizot, Macaulay, Milman, Lecky, Hallam, Gibbon, Livy, Grote, Buckle, Carlyle.

Sold by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Ticknor & Co., Boston.

Derby Roll-Top Desks.

FIRST-CLASS IN WORKMANSHIP, MATERIAL, DESIGN AND FINISH.

While many are seeking trade by offering INFERIOR goods at lower prices than ours, we are, where possible, making our desks MORE PERFECT, and will not lower the quality to compete with LOW-PRICED workmanship and poor material. Several styles in stock adapted for physicians and home use.

Call and examine our

Derby Desks

In Antique Oak,

Red Cherry,

Black Walnut

And Mahogany.

Catalogues sent on application.

DERBY & KILMER DESK COMPANY,

55 CHARLESTOWN ST., BOSTON, MASS.

RECENT BOOKS.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

By VICTOR HUGO. Translated by Prof. Melville B. Anderson. 8vo, price $2.00.

This is pre-eminently the most characteristic, the most intensely Hugoesque, of all the author's prose works. "The splendid eloquence and heroic enthusiasm of Victor Hugo," says Swinburne, "never found more noble and sustained expression than in this volume."

"All history, all theology, and all philosophy are grasped and handled with Titanic force, the bard of Avon furnishing the pretext for magnificent speculation."—Bulletin, Philadelphia. "It would be difficult to name a book with so many unforgettable sayings upon art and literature, so many paragraphs rhythmic with passionate enthusiasm for progress and justice."—Boston Transcript. "To read it is an education, to reflect upon it is an inspiration."—The Keystone, Philadelphia. "Few prose works of the great French novelist and poet have a greater interest for English readers than this volume."—The Book-Buyer, New York. "The genius of Victor Hugo has never shown more resplendently than in his book named 'William Shakespeare.'"—Chicago Tribune. "No man but will live and breathe more generously, nobly and hopefully, for reading Victor Hugo's book."—Boston Herald.

THE AZTECS.

Their History, Manners and Customs. From the French of LUCIEN BIART. Authorized translation by J. L. Garner. Illustrated, 8vo, price $2.00.

"We can cordially recommend this book."—New York Sun. "The volume is absorbingly interesting, and is as attractive in style as it is in material."—Saturday Evening Gazette, Boston. "It is a good example of thorough and abundant knowledge put into a compact form and written readably."—Boston Congregationalist. "The man who can rise from the study of Lucien Biart's invaluable work, 'The Aztecs,' without feelings of amazement and admiration for the history and the government, and for the arts cultivated by these Romans of the New World, is not to be envied."—The Advance.

HOME LIFE OF GREAT AUTHORS.

By HATTIE TYNG GREISWOLD. 12mo, price $1.50.

"The authoress has well fulfilled her purpose towards those who are novices in literature, and has also done a service to those who have read and studied much with regard to the world's great authors; perhaps a greater service to the latter than to the former."—Christian at Work, New York. "For popular reading we know of no better book. The quotations are all well chosen, and give the uninformed reader a very clear idea of the style of the writer under discussion."—George Parsons Lathrop, in New York Sun.

THE STANDARD ORATORIOS.

Their Stories, their Music and their Composers.

A Handbook. By GEORGE P. UPTON. Uniform with "The Standard Operas." 12mo, yellow edges, price $1.50; full gilt, $2.00.

"Nothing in musical history is so interesting to the general reader as the story of the great oratorios, the scenes and incidents which gave them rise, how they were composed, and how first performed. These things are all told in Mr. Upton's volume with a grace and charm commensurate with the character of the subject."—Observer, New York. "The book is in every way a model of what such a volume should be."—Literary World, Boston.

WHIST SCORES AND CARD-TABLE TALK.

By RUDOLF H. RHEINHARDT. With Illustrations, and a Bibliography of Whist. Gilt top, 12mo, 310 pages, $1.50.

"A work which not only whist-players, but all who enjoy quaint and unique things, will enjoy."—Congregationalist, Boston. "It is not a repetition of anything that is included in card literature; it fills a place that no other volume has pre-empted."—Citizen, Brooklyn.

* For sale by all booksellers, or forwarded, prepaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

A. C. McCLURG & CO.,
CHICAGO.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, MARCH 5, 1887. No. 5.

CONTENTS.

THE SELF-REVELATION OF GOD	67
BALZAC'S COUNTRY DOCTOR	67
EUROPE ON FIFTY CENTS A DAY	67
A MODEL TOWN HISTORY	68
RECOLLECTIONS OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER	69
JOHN BERNARD'S RETROSPECTIONS	69
MINOR NOTICES:
I Am That I Am	70
An Historical Atlas	70
Alice in Wonderland	70
The Lawyer's Code of Ethics	70
The Poison Problem	71
Some Problems of Philosophy	71
Social Studies	71
Præterita	71
The Chief Periods of European History	71
Divisions of a Book-Worm	74
Life of Benton	74
Textual Criticism of the New Testament	74
The Geographical and Geological Distribution of	74
Animals	74
The Prince of the Flaming Star	74
Before an Audience	74
His One Fault	74
Tableaux for Amateurs	74
German Simplified	74
Etc., Etc., Etc.	74
SERMONS:
Christ at the Door of the Heart, and Other Sermons	73
Twenty Sermons	73
The Life of Christ in the World	73
MINOR FICTION:
The Squire of Sandal-Side	73
A Millionaire of Rough and Ready	73
Karma	73
ENGLISH OPINIONS	74
PARAGRAPHS	74
ORIGINAL POETRY:
Poetic Voices. By Jeanie Oliver Smith	72
A LETTER FROM LONDON. A. M. F. R.	72
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Wm. Hamilton Gibson	73
THE PERIODICALS:
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Explanatory	75
Mr. Lowell on "Richard III."	75
The Philadelphia "Shakespeareana"	75
Revised Edition of Schmidt's "Shakespeare-Lexicon"	76
NOTES AND QUERIES. 808-811:
NEWS AND NOTES	76
NECROLOGY	78
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	78
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	78

THE SELF-REVELATION OF GOD.*

PROF. HARRIS of Yale published in 1883 a noble volume on the Philosophical Basis of Theism, to the great merits of which we called the attention of all thinkers. He now sends forth a companion volume which covers the more familiar ground of natural theology and the evidences of Christianity. Recognizing in the theistic and anti-theistic thought of today "an earnestness, vigor, and depth, and a breadth of range . . . never before surpassed," Dr. Harris sees the inefficacy of Paley and the Bridgewater treatises to meet the doubts of modern men. Pure thought, as well, exerting itself in supposed independence of experience, discovers nothing and profits nothing. To "the solid ground of nature," known in human experience, Dr. Harris trusts himself in his attempt "to build for aye." Human nature is yet supernatural, above the nature of plant and animal, capable of accessions of knowledge and power from the Divine Being who cannot rest in lone self-communion but must go forth to strengthen, to uplift, and to save the sons of men, most of all by and through the great Son of man. If Dr. Harris's defence of physical miracle, not only as possible, but as probable and actual in connection with new revelations of the Spirit, will not satisfy all who heartily go along with him in his defence of theism, theists and atheists alike must acknowledge the candor and ability with which the author maintains the difficult ground in the presence of a philosophy and a science hostile to such conceptions of the supernatural.

Dr. Harris believes that evolution restores more than it destroys "in showing the evidence of intelligent direction in the progressive development of the cosmos as a whole." In common with all clear thinkers of the day, he exposes the inconsistencies of the Spencerian agnosticism which logically should proceed to a complete theism, as it does with many of its disciples. One of Dr. Harris's best points in this field is his definition of the absolute:

The absolute is falsely defined to be that which exists out of all relations, whereas it is that which exists unconditioned by relations independent of itself. The universe which is in relation to the absolute is always dependent on it for its own existence. It is conditioned by the absolute, but the absolute is not conditioned by it in any necessary relation.

As a system of natural theology in the light of modern science, and of Christian evidences under the criticism of modern philosophy, Dr. Harris's volume finds no superiors and few equals. Our brief space allows us only to commend it heartily to the notice of theologians and anti-theologians of every sect.

BALZAC'S COUNTRY DOCTOR.*

THE Country Doctor does not rank among the greatest of the novels which Balzac wrote to make up his microcosmic human comedy; but for the thoughtful reader it has charms that do not appear in the more elaborated, and therefore sophisticated, tales upon which Balzac's reputation is based. The Country Doctor is especially noteworthy for its absence of what Mr. James has happily designated as bric-à-brac, and for the strict subordination of the feminine rôles. The influence of woman plays a prominent part in the story, is, in fact, its primary motive, but the reader is brought into contact with neither of the two women who so vitally affected the lives and characters of Dr. Benassis and Captain Genestas. What information we get of them comes at second-hand through the favorite novelistic device of mutual confession. And yet how clear and definite is the presentation of Evelina, all her maiden impulses coyly revealed beneath the repression of a Puritanical training! Balzac's tone, in treating of the relations of Benassis and Evelina, is somewhat forced at times; such a character as Evelina was, as we should say, not exactly in Balzac's line; and perhaps for this reason she is depicted wholly in the words of her rejected lover. The Fosseuse, a specimen of what the contemporary French novelist would call a "névrose," is more in Balzac's vein, and she is portrayed with a master hand.

It is with Dr. Benassis and his work that we have mostly to do in this book, and in treating of this spontaneous and noble career Balzac kept an elevating purpose always in view. Benassis, having led for a time the corrupt life of the capital, and having been rejected by the woman he loved (there is something melodramatic in his adoration, still in the main it is genuine), at thirty retires to the country, and in a valley near the Grande Chartreuse finds opportunity for working out his repentance and assuaging his sorrow. The reader who knows Balzac's method can readily imagine the ardent enthusiasm with which the author enters into the details of rural existence. The book is practically a treatise on the development of profitable industry, and the advancement of luxury among a benighted and heathenish population. Balzac gives us the whole picture. He takes us with Dr. Benassis on his rounds from cottage to cottage, describing indefatigably till the whole region and its resources show out clearly in our mental vision. Through it all it is curious to observe how intensely modern Balzac is; how firmly he grasps and solves problems that are now perplexing society. He saw the uprising of socialism before it came, and in The Country Doctor we have his conception of the remedy—that those who are strong and intelligent, and in control of wealth, must use their powers and advantages for the elevation of their less fortunate fellows, not by eleemosynary means, but by clearing the way and inculcating the saving virtues of self-reliance and self-help. In this way, he says in substance, those who have the power may retain it because they will continually exert it for the good of humanity.

EUROPE ON FIFTY CENTS A DAY.*

JUDGING by the frontispiece Mr. Lee Meriwether is a good specimen of Young America; a well-knit, bright-faced fellow of twenty or twenty-five, with wavy hair and curling moustache, with animation in his countenance and vigor in his attitude, with a flannel shirt for coat, a knapsack on his back, and a staff in his hand. Thus accoutered he spent a year in a pedestrian trip through Europe and the nearer East, writing

* The Self-Revelation of God. By Samuel Harris, D.D. Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3.50.

* The Country Doctor. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Brothers. $1.50.

* A Tramp Trip. How to see Europe on Fifty Cents a Day. By Lee Meriwether. Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

letters home to the New York World, the Philadelphia Press, the St. Louis Republican, and other papers, making some reports on labor and wage questions to Col. Wright's Bureau of Statistics at Washington, and dedicating the present book of his adventures to "the dearest of mothers and fathers." The "dearest of mothers and fathers" have reason to be proud of their handsome, gallant, and plucky "affectionate son."

Mr. Meriwether took a steerage passage from New York direct to the Mediterranean, entering the Strait of Gibraltar by moonlight on the night of the thirteenth day, touching at Marseilles and Genoa, and on the morning of the twenty-second day gliding into the Bay of Naples. At Naples he plunged head foremost into the common life of Europe which it was his aim to see. He found quarters with a mason, whose single room was on the ground floor.

With his large family he was not able to rent a room higher up. In the center of the room was a pan of smoking embers; near by sat a little girl knitt'ng, and with her feet rocking a cradle. A dog in one corner was suckling a kid—the poor thing is not allowed to have its mother's milk, that being reserved for the family, or sold in the market. A piece of salt pork was hanging from one of the rafters, and as we entered, the foreman's wife was on the point of cutting a slice to fry with the artichokes—a dish much relished by those who can afford it. "Il Signore è un Americano," said the husband, smiling, and pointing to her, as if showing off a dime museum curiosity; "he comes from his country to find out what we have and how we live. He stays with us tonight." The wife bustled up to me with a "ben venuto [welcome] Signore," the children crowded around to stare, and another slice of bacon was cut, and two extra artichokes put in the pan.

After an evening of talk the family mattresses of straw were unrolled, and all lay down together for the night in the common room.

From Naples Mr. Meriwether ascended Vesuvius, visited Pompeii, where he fell asleep and was lodged in jail the next morning for his trespass, and then crossed to the happy island of Capri, where he found an American artist who had lived there twenty years, having married and brought up children. The streets of Capri are crooked, says Mr. Meriwether, but the women are beautiful. On his walk from Naples to Rome he fell in with a noted brigand, and had another disturbing collision with the police, who everywhere regarded him with a suspicious eye. Some other people did the same, as witness this incident which took place on the summit of the leaning Tower of Pisa:

A party came up, consisting of four blooming young girls and an elderly lady of rather stern and disdainful aspect. The young ladies made a rush for the railing and the view, but the elderly lady cast a furtive glance at me, then deposited a luncheon basket, parasol, and other etceteras on the floor, and plumped herself down beside them. "Why, auntie, what's the matter?" exclaimed one of the girls. "Come to the railing for the view." "Never mind me, girls," was the grim response. "Good gracious, aunt, why climb up this dreadful tower if you don't intend to see the view?" "Hush!" said the old lady, with a grim glance at me. "Do you not see that villainous-looking Italian? I must stay by the things." "Madam," I said in my best English, "as I have seen the view, I am happy to afford you relief by descending." The old lady wilted, and the young ones stared.

So our adventurous young American tramped on, through the Roman Campagna, called on the famous "Ouida" whose romantic life he sketches in a paragraph, saw the sights of Florence, Venice, and Milan, crossed by the Simplon into Switzerland, scaled the Grimsel by night (though how on his "way over" that celebrated and somber pass he "stopped at Interlaken" we fail to understand), and so passed on into Germany. Here by turns he hobnobbed with scarred and beer-drinking students and inspected mines; in Vienna he "hired out" as an opera "supe" at 40 kr. the night; in Bulgaria he found himself out of money and looking for work; at Constantinople he dined from a bill-of-fare in four languages, enjoyed the hospitalities of a Damascus silk-merchant, and had an interview with a Mormon missionary; then crossing the Black Sea in spite of passports and custom officers, he made his way through Russia, with occasional arrests for writing in his notebook, and so came on to Berlin and Amsterdam, Brussels and Paris, and finished up with London and Liverpool.

In all his story of this year of pedestrianism Mr. Meriwether seldom fails to be entertaining. He certainly got into many an out-of-way place, met many an unconventional character, and had his full share of scrapes and scimmages. He has a lively recollection, and perhaps an over lively imagination. He does not always impress us with his sincerity, and by his own confession was not always truthful. The trouble with this sort of a traveler and raconteur is that we are not quite sure how far we may depend on him. His tabular reports on laborers' ways of living are valuable; his free-trade observations are more enthusiastic than convincing. Mr. Meriwether will be wiser in some things when he is older; but he can hardly be more entertaining. It was a jaunty trip, and he has a jaunty way of telling of it; and among the current books of travel this one inserts itself with the freshness and flavor of a dish of new strawberries set unexpectedly upon a table filled with the best canned goods that the market supplies.

A MODEL TOWN HISTORY.*

TOWN histories, of which there is now a multitude, many of them monuments of industry, do not generally invite inspection as literature. Beyond their special interest in their own locality, they are usually attractive only to antiquaries and to historians to whom they are memoires pour servir. Most of them, while thus indispensable, exhibit no charm of style and little power of reproducing the "rustic murmur" of these small commonwealths, so that we may recognize it as a part of the "great wave that circles round the world." It is as an excellent example of what a town history may be at its best that we call attention to Mr. Chaffin's work. The early annals of Easton have not the interest that attaches to those of many other towns in Massachusetts. North Easton, however, its principal village, in this century enjoys a unique distinction as the seat of the famous shovel works. This industry, sending out a million and a half of shovels in a year, with the sufficient guarantee of "Ames" stamped on them, has enriched a large family whose generosity has adorned North Easton with a group of public buildings, most of them designed by H. H. Richardson, unexcelled in any other New England town. The Memorial Hall, the library, the church, and the railroad station (heliotypes of which are given), together with numerous funds for schools, roads, etc., illustrate the generous use of private wealth for the public welfare. A full history of the shovel industry and of the family that created it, with several portraits of its more eminent members is one of the two or three matters of very general interest in this volume. But another, which we should especially commend to Mr. Brooks Adams and his sympathizers, is the ecclesiastical history, related throughout with great impartiality. "The memorable church controversy," about the location of the meeting-house, which divided Easton from 1750 to 1762 into hostile factions, the later Unitarian controversy, and the story of the more quiet years, are told with a felicity that makes the actors live and move before us. Nothing could be plainer than that the ministers were identified with the community, and were properly their representatives, so that blame and praise must be apportioned to both together; least of all did these ministers deserve the name of "priests" or the reproach of "ecclesiastical hatreds." The essential humanity of early New England is shown in the balls that sometimes ended an ordination and the liquor that flowed freely at the "raising" of the meeting-house!

Mr. Chaffin sets out the forefathers of Easton as they were, with all the lights and all the shadows. They were, contrary to the usual notion of early New England, penurious to their schools; from their records they evidently considered spelling a matter in which private judgment should have free sway; they were quarrelsome in church affairs, which were then one with state affairs, and their reputation as a town was none of the best. But they were stalwart, industrious, patriotic men. How they gradually established great manufactories and transformed their town into one of the best municipalities in New England, Mr. Chaffin has recited with a literary skill and a frequent humor which distinguish his work as extremely readable; while untiring diligence has made it a cyclopædia of those details in which the natives of a town are more peculiarly interested; genealogy and minute biography, however, are reserved for a later volume.

* History of the Town of Easton, Massachusetts. By William L. Chaffin. Cambridge: John Wilson & Son. $5.00.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A PRIVATE SOLDIER.

WAR as seen by an officer and war as seen by a private are probably two different things; and a private's account of a battle would certainly differ from an officer's, not necessarily in statement of fact, but in the picturings of fact and the element of personal experience. In a late issue we had to do with Gen. Francis A. Walker's History of the Second Corps. The book before us is the narrative of a private soldier in that same army corps. It is a good book, then, to read after Gen. Walker's. That gave the outline; this adds the filling in. If one wants to see the horrors of war, the actual horrors of it, to understand the fatigues of the march and the hardships of the camp, to feel the excitement of the skirmish line and the thrill of the attack, to hear the shriek of shells and the whistle of bullets, to listen to the groans of the wounded and to look on the distortions of the faces of the dead, then let him read Mr. Wilkeson's book. A more matter-of-fact, unshrinking (shall we say cold-blooded?), story of battle-field experiences we do not remember. There is something almost brutal in the seeming unfeelingness with which Mr. Wilkeson describes some scenes; nothing in words could be more realistic; yet his coolness in the most trying moments is contagious; and the reader with a moderate taste for the sensational will find himself soon fascinated in a story in the telling of which there is nothing sensational at all, but only in the materials.

Mr. Wilkeson joined the army in 1863. He was then only sixteen. He ran away from his father's farm on the Hudson River, enlisted at Albany, and after a wretched delay in barracks there was sent to join his battery in Virginia. He served through the Wilderness Campaign, and his chief battle experiences were at Spottsylvania, the North Anna, Cold Harbor, and around Petersburg. "How Men Die in Battle" is the title of one of his chapters, and we copy this paragraph from it:

During the first day's fighting in the wilderness I saw a youth of about twenty years skip and yell, stung by a bullet through the thigh. He turned to limp to the rear. After he had gone a few steps he stopped, then he kicked out his leg once or twice to see if it would work. Then he tore the clothing away from his leg so as to see the wound. He looked at it attentively for an instant, then kicked out his leg again, then turned and took his place in the ranks and resumed firing. There was considerable disorder in the line, and the soldiers moved to and fro—now a few feet to the right, now a few feet to the left. One of these movements brought me directly behind this wounded soldier. I could see plainly from that position, and I pushed into the gaping line and began firing. In a minute or two the wounded soldier dropped his rifle, and, clasping his left arm, exclaimed: "I am hit again!" He sat down behind the battle ranks and tore off the sleeve of his shirt. The wound was very slight—not much more than skin deep. He tied his handkerchief around it, picked up his rifle, and took position alongside of me. I said: "You are fighting in bad luck today. You had better get away from here." He turned his head to answer me. His head jerked, he staggered, then fell, then regained his feet. A tiny fountain of blood and teeth and bone and bits of tongue burst out of his mouth. He had been shot through the jaws; the lower one was broken and hung down. I looked directly into his open mouth, which was ragged and bloody and tongueless. He cast his rifle furiously on the ground and staggered off.

At Spottsylvania, while serving his battery against a line of Confederate skirmishers, one of his comrades spoke to him across the gun, saying: "Grant and Meade are over there."

I turned my head and saw Grant and Meade sitting on the ground under a large tree. Both of them were watching the fight which was going on in the pasture field. Occasionally they turned their glasses to the distant wood, above which small clouds of white smoke marked the bursting shells and the extent of the battle. Across the woods that lay behind the pasture, and behind the bare ridge that formed the horizon, and well within the Confederate lines, a dense column of dust arose, its head slowly moving to our left. I saw Meade call Grant's attention to this dust column, which was raised either by a column of Confederate infantry or by a wagon train. We ceased firing, and sat on the ground around the guns watching our general, and the preparations that were being made for another charge. Grant had a cigar in his mouth. His face was immovable and expressionless. His eyes lacked luster. He sat quietly and watched the scene as though he was an uninterested spectator. Meade was nervous, and his hand constantly sought his face, which it stroked. Staff officers rode furiously up and down the hill carrying orders and information. The infantry below us in the ravine formed for another charge. Then they started on the run for the Confederate earthworks, cheering loudly the while. We sprang to our guns and began firing rapidly over their heads at the edge of the woods. It was a fine display of accurate artillery practice, but, as the Confederates lay behind thick earthworks, and were veterans not to be shaken by shelling the outside of a dirt bank behind which they lay secure, the fire resulted in emptying our limber chests, and in the remarkable discovery that three-inch percussion shells could not be relied upon to perform the work of a steam shovel. Our infantry advanced swiftly, but not with the vim they had displayed a week previous; and when they got within close rifle range of the works, they were struck by a storm of rifle-balls and canister that smashed the front line to flinders. They broke for cover, leaving the ground thickly strewn with dead and dying men. The second line of battle did not attempt to make an assault, but returned to the ravine. Grant's face never changed its expression. He sat impassive and smoked steadily, and watched the short-lived battle and decided defeat without displaying emotion. Meade betrayed great anxiety. The fight over, the generals arose and walked back to their horses, mounted and rode briskly away, followed by their staff. No troops cheered them. None evinced the slightest enthusiasm. The enlisted men looked curiously at Grant, and after he had disappeared they talked of him, and of the dead and wounded men who lay in the pasture field; and all of them said just what they thought, as was the wont of American volunteers. This was the only time that I saw either Grant or Meade under fire during the campaign, and then they were within range of rifled cannon only.

Horrible is the only word we can apply to Mr. Wilkeson's account of the barrack life at Albany, and the journey with a transport load of "bounty-jumpers" from Albany, by way of New York, to Alexandria. Some of the details seem incredible. Similarly shocking are certain touches in the picture of the Military Prison at Elmira, N. Y., where the author was on guard over captured Confederates. Mr. Wilkeson writes with no love and little respect for the officers of the Potomac Army. He is evidently one of those soldiers who believe that that army was ruined by its officers. There is a touch of bitterness in his voice at times, though his honesty and sincerity we cannot question. But are not some of his colors exaggerated? Cannot his harsher lines be softened a little? With no professed literary art, his book is full of unstudied literary power; it is a brave man's blunt story of what he saw and heard on the field, with nothing left out because it would depreciate somebody's reputation or wound the sensibilities of a gentle reader. One must have nerve to go through such a book as this, and sleep after it. Still it is a vital part of history, though one must remember in weighing its judgments of men and measures that while the private soldier may see the thickest of the fight he can know little of the plan of a campaign.

JOHN BERNARD'S RETROSPECTIONS.*

DURING the first twenty years of this century John Bernard was one of the prime favorites of the American stage. He was born in Portsmouth, England, in 1756; he entered early upon his career as an actor, and was successful from the start as a brilliant and versatile comedian; in 1797 he came to America and remained until 1819, traversing the country as actor and manager from Boston to the Ohio, from Vermont to Virginia, and finally returning to his native land where he committed the retrospections of his busy life to paper. His Retrospections of the Stage, published in London in 1830, two years after his death, and with the Boston reprint of 1832 long out of print, is a work much sought after by collectors of theatrical literature. The present volume, of which only fragments have appeared in print in the pages of magazines, has been made up by various hands from Bernard's manuscript memoirs, and is admirably prepared for American readers by Messrs. Hut-ton and Matthews, who have contributed a number of serviceable notes concerning by-gone stage celebrities in addition to a brief but interesting introduction.

* Recollections of a Private Soldier in the Army of the Potomac. By Frank Wilkeson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.

* Retrospections of America: 1797-1811. By John Bernard. Edited from the Manuscript by Mrs. Bayle Bernard. With an Introduction, Notes, and Index, by Laurence Hutcheon and Brander Matthews. Illustrated. Harper & Bros. $1.75.

The book itself, with all its shortcomings, is fascinating. The reader quickly perceives that this John Bernard was a keen-witted, liberal-minded observer, possessed of a never-ending fund of humor, delighting in racy anecdotes and lightly satirical reflections, but capable of serious thought, quick to detect the better qualities of those with whom he came in contact and to glorify them, a sympathetic admirer of genius, and a clear-headed student of affairs—in a word, a typical gentleman of the era of Sheridan and Fox, endowed with more than the ordinary literary capacity. His pages present an enticing epitome of shrewd observation and sparkling wit. Nothing of interest escapes him. He turns from the account of his dramatic experiences at his first appearance in Boston, to discuss the characteristics of the New England stage and stage-driver, and the qualities differentiating the three pertinacious Yankee types: the swapper, the jobber, and the peddler. At New York he collects anecdotes of the Revolutionary War; at Philadelphia he makes it a point to gather reminiscences of Franklin; in his excursions southward he assisted Washington to right a capsized chaise by the roadside, and was a guest at Mount Vernon; he knew Carroll of Carrollton, was intimate with Jefferson, heard and recorded diverse anecdotes concerning the military heroes of the Revolution, and did not fail to derive infinite entertainment from the negroes, whom he regarded with a kindly eye, and he quotes Washington as saying, "not only do I pray for it, on the score of human dignity, but I can clearly foresee that nothing but the rooting out of slavery can perpetuate the existence of our Union, by consolidating it in a common bond of principle." About the only class for whom Bernard could profess no sympathy were the Quakers, remarking his regret "that a people so distinguished for many virtues, should exhibit, ordinarily, such a repugnance to cultivate their mental faculties." Bernard heard of but one jest by Washington, and this he had from Colonel Humphreys, the general's aid-de-camp. Humphreys, while riding, challenged his chief to follow him over a certain hedge. The challenge was accepted, and Humphreys led the way, landing in a quagmire.

The general either knew the ground better, or had suspected something, for, following at an easy pace, he reined up at the hedge, and, looking over at his engulfed aide, exclaimed, "No, no, colonel, you are too deep for me!"

In Philadelphia Bernard met Charles Brockden Brown, of whom he writes with the friendliest feeling. "Brown," he says, "gave very little idea of an imaginative writer in appearance. He was short and dummy, with light eyes, and hair inclining to be sandy, while the expression of his countenance told rather of ill-health than of intellect." He said but little; was a sympathetic listener; and wrote with great facility. At Bernard's suggestion he wrote two acts of a tragedy in verse, which Bernard condemned as devoid of dramatic intensity.

He said it was but an experiment, and he should burn the manuscript as soon as he went home. I observed that I doubted his resolution to do that, knowing that the destruction of one's offspring, human or literary, was equally an outrage to the feelings. He smiled, put away the doomed one, shook my hand, and departed. A few days afterwards I invited him to dinner, when, as he was leaning against the mantel-piece, he extended his snuff-box to me. Opening it, I perceived that it was filled with some black dust or tinder. "What's that?" said I. "The remains of my tragedy," he replied, "which I carefully preserved after its combustion in the grate, for you to look at, since you doubted my resolution to destroy it."

Thus the narrative flows along, carrying a great deal that is good, some rubbish, and now and then a piece of garbage, on its swiftly-changing surface; the first is easily found, the second may be avoided, the third is flung out with such absolute good-nature that even the fastidious will be slow to take offence. Taken for all in all, this is a book worth reading and worth owning.

MINOR NOTICES.

I Am That I Am. A Metrical Essay. By E. A. Warriner. [Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.00.]

This highly metaphysical production differs from Paradise Lost in more respects than one. No mathematician would find fault with it that it did not, at least, try to "prove something." Mr. Warriner's style as a poet is fairly indicated in these three lines:

I, Am, and That are Subject, Esse, Mode —
Noun, Verb, and Adjective, and these express
The limitless and all ideas of God.

Mr. Warriner's rhymes, like this of "mode" and "God," are as faulty as his exegesis (I=God, Am=the Spirit, That=the Son) is fanciful and precarious. The margin of the Revised Version, which is well understood to represent the scholarship of the Revisers, on Exodus iii: 14, quite takes away the logical foundation of this so-called "metrical" essay.

Alice's Adventures Under Ground. Being a Fac-Simile of the Original Book, Afterward Developed into Alice in Wonderland. By Lewis Carroll. [Macmillan & Co. $1.50.]

There is a decidedly comical element in that calm complacency of self-admitted genius with which Mr. Lewis Carroll presents his public, by way of a new joy, with the fragmentary paragraphs which were afterwards expanded into the delightful Alice in Wonderland; reproduced in his own handwriting, and made into a book.

"The profits, if any, will be given to children's hospitals and homes for convalescent children," he tells us, but why should there be any profits? The handwriting is a neat little round one to be sure, but not quite so easy to read as print; and why should people elect to pay over again for a part when they already possess the whole, and why should the less and less easily read, even when enriched with fewer and poorer pictures, possess any advantage or attraction over the completed and perfected Alice, which for years has been the delight of our children? We get a glimpse of the state of mind which has led the author into this mistake (for such it appears to us) in the preface of the book. In this he quotes largely from a sentimental correspondence held with certain lady visitors to a children's hospital. We seem to see him the central figure in a group of adorers, all presumably of the gentler and more zealous sex. All eyes are centered on him, and he is softly entreated to do this or that, to use his influence—such influence!—in leading the youthful mind upward, to mingle salutary instruction with the entertainment—ah, what entertainment! which only he knows how to provide in perfection for childish readers. He turns his eyes, wet with the dews of gratified emotion, from one spinster countenance to another, his heart swells with something of the feeling which made the Glasgow baillie say to his constituents, "Oh sirs, remember that after all I am only a man, of like passions wi yerselves!" But there is something in this attitude of mind (irrespective of sex), which is not manly, and we fear that conditions like these may, in part at least, account for the disappointing quality of all that Mr. Lewis Carroll has written since the appearance of Alice's Adventures and Through the Looking-Glass.

New Historical Atlas and General History. By Robert H. Labberton. [New York: Townsend MacCoun. Cloth, $2.00.]

We have heretofore given a brief notice of an earlier edition of this admirable work; which combines, in a single quarto volume of moderate size and weight, a short review of the world's history, from the earliest dawn of that science in Egypt and Mesopotamia through the late civil war in the United States, and a series of original historical maps, the number of which is increased in this edition to nearly two hundred. The writer's aim in the narrative has been "to place central facts in such relief that the student may learn the most by learning the least." The accompanying maps vary much in size, and are beautifully engraved, generally in colors. The device of giving to each nationality the same color in successive maps makes plain to the eye the changes of its territory. Classification is made into Oriental, Greek, Roman, mediæval, modern and American; each class having from seventeen to fifty-one maps. At the end are twenty-nine valuable genealogical charts, which the quarto size has allowed to be drawn large enough for distinctness. Among them are shown the Mohammedan dynasties, the nature of the disputed Spanish succession in 1700, and the sovereigns of England and of France. These are followed by an alphabetical index of the history.

The Lawyer's Code of Ethics. A Satire. By Valmaer. [St. Louis: The F. H. Thomas Law Book Co.]

"Valmaer" dedicates his lively prose satire on the ways of lawyers to the two men "who were admitted to the bar with the author. One of us was sent to a State's prison for embezzlement; one was sent to a State legislature—why, I do not know." The index is as unusual as the dedication; it is about as long as the book itself. "Brevity is no object. My idea is to furnish an elaborate index commensurate with the contents of the work." The tone of the book may be inferred from these quotations. It passes easily from obvious satire, clothed in familiar language, to serious advice. Lawyers, and many others, will find it entertaining.

The Poison Problem; or, the Cause and Cure of Intemperance. By Felix L. Oswald, M.D. [D. Appleton & Co. 75c.]

If there is any one reform of the present day in which there is the utmost need of earnestness, patience, and discretion, it is the temperance reform. The evil of intemperance is at once so subtle and so gigantic, that the greatest sobriety of mind is demanded to reduce it by means which shall be most effectual, not only for today but for all future time. Dr. Oswald has command of a large range of pertinent facts, and his earnestness in the good cause is great; but the impetuosity of judgment and the lack of sobriety in the expression of his opinions, which we have observed in his other works on different subjects, reach an extreme in The Poison Problem. The friends of temperance might well ask to be delivered from so hot-headed a partisan as the writer of these absurd sentences: "The advocates of moderate drinking might as well recommend moderate perjury. Our lager-beer enthusiasts might just as well advise us to introduce a milder brand of rattlesnakes."

Some Problems of Philosophy. By Archibald Alexander, Professor of Philosophy in Columbia College. [Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.00.]

In this brief volume of a hundred and seventy narrow pages, Professor Alexander discusses seventeen great problems of ethics, philosophy, and theology, sixteen of the problems being despatched in a hundred pages. It goes without saying that the treatment possible in such limits can be satisfactory to very few. The style is extremely direct and condensed, the effect produced being similar to that of an extended syllabus. Occasionally very acute, Professor Alexander is too often bound by a dogmatic method, which seems to have no medium between flat denial and full affirmation. "If the soul is," for example, "it is either mortal or immortal. . . . If the soul is immortal, that immortality must be either known or unknown. . . . If it is known, it must be known directly or indirectly," etc. This method is not the method of philosophic persuasion; there is too much formal logic in it, as there was too much formal mathematics in Spinoza's Ethics; moral probability arises from quite different reasoning.

Social Studies. By R. Heber Newton. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.]

Among the works on sociology which have proceeded from the clergy of late years, and they are many, Rev. Dr. Newton's Studies stand in the front rank. Like Rev. Dr. Gladden, Dr. Newton has long been a patient student and a practical worker in the field of social reform, and while the two are men of very different stamp, their conclusions are often in close agreement. Dr. Newton's earnestness and eloquence speak from every page of this series of discussions of the Labor Question in all its phases, intemperance, moral education, and the free kindergarten; but each chapter is packed with information, and the manly rhetoric does not exclude close reasoning. Many will think that Dr. Newton rates Henry George too high, and considers the land question as more pressing than it actually is, but with this qualification we freely say that for fullness of information and force of inspiration these Studies have hardly an equal in the economic literature of today. Rev. Dr. Newton is a worthy successor of the Christian Socialists, Frederick Maurice and Charles Kingsley.

Præterita: Outlines of Scenes and Thoughts Perhaps Worthy of Memory in My Past Life. By John Ruskin. Vol. II. Chapters VI, VII, and VIII. [John Wiley & Sons. 25 cents each.]

Chapter VI of Volume II of Præterita is, after the author's method of titles, called "The Campo Santo;" Chapter VII, "Macuguaga;" Chapter VIII, "The State of Denmark." In the first he masters the principles of Turner's Liber Studiorum, arrives at the conclusion that he had been "a blind bat and puppy" all through Italy, determines with his new knowledge to set out again, and does so in the spring of 1845. In his rambling narrative he stops to pay tribute to the servants of his father's house, declaring "I have never seen a fillet of veal rightly roasted, nor a Yorkshire pudding rightly basted, since Mary Stone left us to be married in 1836;" grows enthusiastic over the poems of George Herbert, who, he says, has been useful to him beyond every other teacher; and throws in the suggestion, "If I get tiresome, the reader must skip; I write, for the moment, to amuse myself, and not him." He is in raptures over Lucca, and says that what he found in the Campo Santo was, "Briefly, the entire doctrine of Christianity, painted so that a child could understand it." Chapter VII describes idyllic days in Florence, and a month's sojourn at Macuguaga, where he spent his time reading Shakespeare; then a visit to Venice, where he met Mrs. Jameson, of whom he writes that she was absolutely without knowledge or instinct of painting; and had no sharpness of insight for anything else; but she was candid and industrious, with a pleasant disposition to make the best of all she saw, and to say, compliantly, that a picture was good, if anybody had ever said so before.

A nervous fever seizes him on his way home—memorable for the reason that in his peril he seems to have found out for the first time that there is "a direct relation with Heaven" through prayer. This brings us to Chapter VIII, and to his family on Denmark Hill, where he settles down to reflections on some of his acquaintances, and to working on the second volume of Modern Painters.

The Chief Periods of European History. By Edward A. Freeman. [Macmillan & Co. $2.50.]

This volume contains Mr. Freeman's second course of lectures at Oxford as Regius Professor. Six lectures treat of Europe before the Roman power, Rome as the head of Europe, the New Nations, the Empire in its Division and its Survivals, and the World Romeless. A paper is added on Greek cities under Roman rule. We have found the volume quite as interesting as its predecessor on the Methods of History, fully noticed here a few weeks back. To Mr. Freeman, the Roman power is the central point of all European history; this idea he illustrates and develops in a masterly fashion. He continually enforces here, also, his favorite thesis of the unity of ancient and modern history, finding in the modern nation the parallel of the ancient city; "the highest use of the discoveries of natural science has been to raise large states to the political level of small ones."

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

There will always be two classes of lovers of poetry—the happier ones who can appreciate what is good in all kinds, and the less but still happy ones who appreciate what is good in kinds specially sympathetic—who will go to Rossetti for something that neither finds elsewhere. Not a few whole poems, great parts of almost all, contain this curious charm—a charm generally complex, frequently rather morbid, never quite reaching the simplicity and directness and universality of the highest poetry, but "his own," and by no means "a poor thing" at any time; while to certain natures in certain moods it is probably better adapted to procure the special poetic rapture, and to procure it neither unhealthfully nor unworthily, than the work of any other man. — Saturday Review.

We gladly say at once that there is much in Mr. Haweis's treatment of his subject which we admire and that, with his general aim to give a living, personal interest to the records of Christianity and the words and acts of Christ, we heartily sympathize. . . . It is as a critic and an interpreter that Mr. Haweis seems to us to fail conspicuously. He is not furnished with the necessary apparatus of knowledge. He has read, it is evident, a great many books about the New Testament, and even brought an acute intelligence to bear upon his reading; but he lacks a sound, well-equipped faculty of judgment. — Spectator.

Mrs. Walworth's novel is a spirited and animated description of an original set of people living amongst unusual surroundings. The story will repay the patience required to bear with its long-winded sentences, its occasional pomposity, and the over-abundance of nigger dialect, which is probably most faithfully represented in these pages, but to the ordinary English reader is provokingly unintelligible, and not worth the trouble of trying to understand. Yet, with these few drawbacks, The New Man of Rossmore is worth knowing. — Saturday Review.

Mr. W. D. Howells is well known to hold a poor opinion of English novelists, and, indeed, of most other English men and things. This should not prevent Englishmen from treating him with candor, and it must be candidly admitted that he moulds his performance in accordance with his principles sufficiently to write novels of a different sort from those which, as a critic, he has felt it his duty to condemn. The aim of the old-fashioned masters of English fiction has been, in a general way, to write novels which it shall be interesting to read. This feature in their work Mr. Howells has striven not to imitate. He has enjoyed a reasonable measure of success, and his success has seldom been more complete than in The Minister's Charge. Of course there are many ways of interesting. The misguided George Eliot sought to interest by being a little difficult, and making her romances contribute to the solution of serious questions of ethics, and occasionally of metaphysics, to say nothing of incidental excursions into physiology and psychology. The deluded Thackeray wrote stories in which remarkable events occurred in the fictitious lives of persons who satirically illustrated the qualities and foibles of upper-middle-class society in London. The abject Dickens was alternately funny and sentimental. By these different methods the thoughtful, the worldly, and the frivolous were respectively entertained. Mr. Howells triumphantly avoids all these and all other ways of interesting anybody. — Saturday Review.

Were it necessary to label Count Tolstōi as an author, we should have to call him a realist. But he is not realistic with the repulsive realism of the modern French school, which seems to consist largely in dragging forward and exposing to the light that shameful side of human nature which it should rather be our interest and duty to conceal. — Spectator.

Those who narrate improbable truths are proverbially in an invidious position. But Mr. Rider Haggard enjoys an exemption from this rule. However improbable his true stories, they compel belief. — London Times.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, MARCH 5, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

[Original Poetry.]

POETIC VOICES.

I.

Like wraiths of sound they float o'er shore and sea
These songs that woo the hours to rapid flight.
Like far, soft chimes upon the air of night,
Which flood our midnight dreams with melody,
Each voice distinct, each voice the heart revealing
By marvelous intuitions surely known,
And finding in some soul its antiphone
Which wakes swift tears, but only tears of healing.

One voice upon the wings of morning sent,
From out the Orient, makes the day divine.
One brings the fragrance of the western pine,
With all the largesse of the Occident.
While one on almost polar silence breaks,
And one beneath the Southern Cross awakes.

II.

The voices blend, and melody intense
This work-day earth to lower heaven transmutes
(Voiceless to some), but these are Nature's mutes.
Alas! how bid them know their missing sense!
Deny who will—the world is full of those
Who care not for the flowers—and yet they bloom;
Nor heed the birds, and yet God gives them room
He loves, and sweetest care about them throws.

All Nature has her melodies, and all
To poet hearts, yield never sounds of woe,
Woods, streams, and winds, an oratorio.
'Tis but in Being that the octaves fall,
And yield too oft the dissonance of pain,
Unless to harmony love lifts the strain.

JEANIE OLIVER SMITH.

Johannstown, N. Y.

Realism in magazine literature promises to be of great benefit to manufacturers and landlords, if we may judge by recent contributions to two leading periodicals. When a renowned literarian pauses in his chronicles of a foreign journey to recommend a certain asthma-cure and a specified "make" of razor, we know that he is sincere and that he speaks for the public good; and when a distinguished novelist guides the trail of his characters to a certain seaside resort and a certain hotel (both mentioned in guide-books), and expatiates on their charms, we are sure that he is inspired by the loftiest principles of art. Still, the system is obviously open to abuses, and we are sorry to see it countenanced by writers of such repute. Sooner or later the lesser fry, governed by no unselfish motives, will "catch on," and then we shall find the latest new novel merely a glorified snare for the unwary tourist, or a glowing tribute to Jenkins's soap. Realism is dull enough anyway, but if it is going into the walking advertisement business, it has a future from which the most active fancy shrinks abashed.

"Journalism as a Profession" is the subject of a brief article by Mr. E. J. Carpenter in the February issue of Education. In dignity and power Mr. Carpenter ranks journalism with the so-called learned professions; when he comes to the question of training, however, he says very properly that "journalism is not theory but wholly practice," and in this respect may be regarded as a "trade." Mr. Carpenter is a little hasty in his assertion that it is "the reporter, alone, among the followers of all branches of the journalistic profession, who may hope for public recognition of his genius." Ideas of "public recognition" differ. But here is the life a reporter must be willing to lead if he would win the approbation of his employers and the praise of the multitude; it is not an attractive picture, and some aspirants for journalistic honors may shrink from it:

He goes from the blood-smeared room, where has occurred the latest horror, and from the sight of a ghastly corpse to a fashionable crush at the Paint and Clay Club; he leaves the solemn services at the tomb before the last tear of the mourner is shed, that he may be in season to see the first act of "Adonis." If he wishes to excel in his chosen occupation, he must, to a great degree, crush out sensibility and school himself to look upon the result of a dreadful accident or crime with at least an assumed indifference. He must forget that he has a nervous system; he must have absolute presence of mind. He must be possessed of a physical constitution capable of enduring hardship, the extremes of cold and heat, the loss of sleep, irregular meals, and all the discomforts incident to a reporter's life. More than all, he must preserve an equable temper, a suavity of manner, and yet maintain a dogged persistence which may be termed polite impertinence.

A LETTER FROM LONDON.

LONDON, February 11.

THE extraordinary success of Mr. Rider Haggard's She is somewhat disconcerting to the lover of literature. A few months ago a masterpiece of pure style, of natural adventure, of truth of character was given to the public. One chapter at least in Kidnapped, that of the quarrel between David and Alan, rivalled in simple excellence the best of Scott, the best of Dumas, with an added point of modern psychology. And Kidnapped sold well, was well reviewed, had its own circle of admirers, did very well, in short, when one day another masterpiece, a triumph of slipshod and vulgar writing, the perfection of revolting metamorphosis, a sickening physical detail appears; it also being a book of adventure. Kidnapped had a success, but what was that to the wildfire of injudicious enthusiasm awakened by the last work of Mr. Rider Haggard? A popular preacher in Italy, a moralizing playwright in France, have always seemed to us the types of popular success; and they are nowhere by the side of Mr. Rider Haggard. Impossible in any house to attempt any conversation which is not interrupted by the abominable introduction of She. "By the way, have you read . . ." at that point it is generally safest to rise and flee. Artist, author, pedant, politician, man of science, man of the world, there is only one book that all of them just now are likely to ask if you have read; and that one book, one reader (Mr. Editor), one pair of eyes out of the millions in England and America, at least, will never finish!

The worst of it is that, however one may disapprove this ridiculous contagion of unjustified enthusiasm, one cannot proceed against it in a right crusading spirit, for alas, there is no doubt that Mr. Haggard possesses the spell of a singular and wild imagination; and indeed King Solomon's Mines was an excellent book for boys.

But why should you and I not be allowed to talk of something else? 'Tis a long time, probably, since you were a boy, and I was never one at all. Shall we ring for the peg-top, and fetch the marbles out of the nursery? A peg-top is a very pleasant toy, and one may while away an hour easily enough over King Solomon's Mines; but She with its indigestion of nightmare imagination, She with its pretentious allegory and ridiculous essays in Greek prose composition, She with its atmosphere of horror and vulgarity—let us and the schoolboys alike be given a more wholesome and simple mental diet.

Mr. Stevenson announces a new book, The Merry Men, of which the eponymic heroes are not, as one would suppose, the followers of Robin Hood, but the waters of an eddy off the Hebrides. This collection, which comprises most of Mr. Stevenson's contributions to Cornhill, contains one of the most poetic and fanciful of his stories, "Will of the Mill."

The next number of "English Men of Letters" will be Mr. Sydney Colvin's Keats. Mr. Colvin has collected some new matter for his book; a specially interesting point is his discovery of the original germ of "Endymion" in Sweet Michael Drayton's "Man in the Moon." Keats, the dear friend of Leigh Hunt, the youngest member of the neo-romantic "Cockney School," was so well read in the contemporaries of Shakespeare that it is very likely he knew this little read and seldom quoted work of the poet laureate of Shakespeare's day.

American readers who care for European politics should read the exceedingly able and interesting series of papers on the Foreign Affairs of Contemporary Europe which are now appearing in the Fortnightly Review. They are anonymous; but it is known among politicians that their author is a Member of Gladstone's Cabinet, one of the three men in England who know most of foreign politics, but whom a private catastrophe has exiled from public affairs. The papers, though extraordinarily ill-written, are acute, to the point, and given from a full mind. They have only one drawback; they are not quite up to date. We believe that Mr. Grant Allen is the author of the much-quoted burst of optimism in the February Fortnightly entitled "Our Noble Selves."

The American sympathizers with, the wise trans-Atlantic admirers of, the haunting music and the tender pathos of Mr. Philip Bourke Marston's melancholy poems, will be grieved to learn that the blind poet lies at death's door, stricken with paralysis. It is not likely that he will recover. At thirty-six years of age we are to lose one of the sweetest, the most genuine, the least appreciated of modern English singers. Few, indeed, of the men whose names are on all our lips, have written anything as delicate, as naturally fantastic and beautiful, as the "Garden Secrets" of Mr. Marston. And yet, in London, this true poet is very little known. You at a distance have seen things with clearer eyes and in a fairer proportion. In America Mr. Marston has always met the sympathy and recognition insufficiently meted out (so far as his literary attainments are concerned) by those of his own country. A new book of his at this moment is going to press; a volume of prose stories, most of which have been published in America, to be called For a Song's Sake, melancholy and lyrical little stories which years ago he used to call, half in fun, his Prose Bitters. They reflect the sadness of his life; and are not therefore quite so true and real as his poems which express the unaltered delicacy and beauty of his spirit. A. M. F. R.

World Biographies.

Wm. Hamilton Gibson. Wm. Hamilton Gibson, the artist-author, whose sketches of woodland scenery and small animal life have beautified more than one American magazine, is a young man, still in the thirties, and by birth, we believe, a Brooklyn boy. Much of his love of nature, his familiarity with thickets, wild flowers, brooks, squirrels, and forest birds, was acquired while at school in Connecticut, under a master whose passion for out-of-door life almost surpassed his devotion to books, and who, when the day's task was done, led forth his flock for many a ramble over hill and dale. Young Gibson's education was unhappily interrupted by the financial failure and sudden death of his father, a Wall Street broker, and he was thrown on his own resources at an age when many boys are still adding to their outfit for the future. His first recourse was to the life insurance business, but he could do nothing with it. His courses at the Brooklyn Polytechnic had elicited his talent for drawing, and notwithstanding the dissuasions of his friends he found himself strongly moved towards the artist's profession. At last a collection of his sketches was made up, and he was taken with them to the head of the illustrating department in a leading New York publishing house. The result was a discouraging verdict. "These sketches are no good," he was told; he would better try his hand at some other way of getting a living. But he was not daunted. He knew what was in him. He could handle the pen as well as the pencil. He conceived the idea of writing an article on the cotton plant, and drawing the illustrations for it on the wood, all ready for the engraver. This article, with the accompanying "blocks," was accordingly prepared, and offered to a publisher. The idea was novel, it "took," and the young man's future was made sure. He went on for some time preparing these illustrated articles and disposing of them wherever he could find a purchaser. It was not long before his gifts were recognized, and in no quarter has he found more generous support than in that where his first efforts were so summarily rejected. It is the old story of self-reliance and perseverance triumphing over obstacles. "All things come to him who waits." No finer work than some of Mr. Gibson's has been seen in America; but his best work, in new directions, we may believe, remains to be done if his life is spared.

SERMONS.

Christ at the Door of the Heart, and Other Sermons. By Morgan Dix, Rector of Trinity Church, New York. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.75.]

Twenty Sermons. By Phillips Brooks. Fourth Series. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.75.]

The Life of Christ in the World. Sermons by the Rev. Arthur Brooks, Rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York. [Thomas Whitaker. $1.50.]

Rev. Dr. Dix's sermons remind us more of the discourses of the able preachers of the Established Church of England belonging to the so-called "High" Church, than any others of American authorship that occur to us. The similarity is in the careful and finished style, and in the fundamental assumptions of the thought, which, certainly in Dr. Dix's case, is quite untainted with Broad Church heresy. The author even allows himself to use the text "God manifest in the flesh," where "God," as the revised version tells us, "rests on no sufficient ancient evidence." Dr. Dix's bias is evidently toward dogma, while his strength lies rather in the elaboration of a Scripture metaphor, as in the image of Christ at the door; but here his rather narrow view of religion sometimes goes too far, as when, in the "Parable of the Catacombs," he compares the unreligious world to that charnel-house. Pulpit rhetoric too often sins against justice in this way. Nor can we accept Dr. Dix as good authority when he takes a common parallelism in the Psalms as the ground of distinction between "work" and "labor."

It would be interesting to know by what curious psychological or other process the former reluctance of the popular rector of Trinity Church, Boston, to have his sermons printed has been overcome. Perhaps he has awakened to the necessity of furnishing a counter-irritant to the floods of "catholic" literature which some of his fellow churchmen of an opposite advanced type are pouring over the land. Nothing could be stronger than the voice of these Twenty Sermons on the side of a "liberal" Christianity. There is nothing "English," nothing "mediaeval," nothing "traditional" about them. They are intensely American, modern, independent. Some of them are fanciful, or would be so regarded, if they came from a preacher of humbler place; but everything is accounted golden which drops from this pulpit. None of these sermons is commonplace. Such as the missionary sermons, "Disciples and Apostles," and "The Earth of the Redemption," are most manly. There is in others a delightful ingenuity that arrests the attention at once with a striking text or a novel subject, and captivates both eye and ear as this preacher of exhaustless resources unrolls his imagery. Who would not like to hear what Mr. Brooks would have to say about "The Giant with the Wounded Heel," or "The Sword Bathed in Heaven," or "Make the Men Sit Down?"

The twenty-five discourses by Rev. Arthur Brooks, a younger brother of Phillips Brooks, are devoted to the one fine aim of translating doctrine into spiritual life; they take the gospel story, not as so much material for a hard and fast creed to be professed from the lips outward, but as the symbol of the soul-life which is to be erected in the believer, through loving contemplation of the Master. The resurrection and the ascension, for instance, are to be verified again in the Christian consciousness. The mystical element, never absent from the best preaching, is evidently strong in Mr. Brooks's mind, but not too strong:

So the conviction of the oneness between heaven and earth . . . has grown. To trace all the process would be to review all the growth of man in every direction. . . . God has been in all this increasing tendency of thought.

The emphasis of the preacher returns often to character, but it is to character in which the spiritual element rightly predominates. Mr.

Brooks is a preacher whose generous spirit and real power of edification should be familiar to all the churches.

MINOR FICTION.

The Squire of Sandal-Side. A Pastoral Romance. By Amelia E. Barr. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.]

Mrs. Barr seems equally at home among the burghers of New Amsterdam, the primitive folk of the Hebrides, and the pastoral people of the dales of Cumberland. Each novel from her busy pen is a revelation of her versatility. The present story is, take it all in all, as delightful as anything she has written; in no case has she drawn her characters with more vigor and discrimination, or shown deeper insight into human nature. The old Squire of Sandal-Side is of a type worth knowing, and in her gallery of charming young girls she has pictured none fresher and fairer than Charlotte. It is simple, pastoral life among the dalesmen that she narrates, with what befel two leading families, the Sandals and the Satriggs. As in all Mrs. Barr's stories, the domestic virtues and sweet home charities are exalted; she sets a crown on womanhood, and brings justice, truth, and righteousness to the front. Few novels as wholesome as hers come from the American press; they are helpful books for the household library, sound to the core, and as captivating in style and treatment as they are excellent in purpose.

A Millionaire of Rough-and-Ready, and Devil's Ford. By Bret Harte. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.] The many admirers of Bret Harte will find in this "Little Classic" coupling of two short stories only a part of what they look for. The scenery of the mining towns and camps is here, the somber mountains, the gulches, the sluices, the ore. The strange rough characters of the mining country are here, the diggers suddenly rich, the whiskey-soaked teamsters, the bedizzened women, the gamblers, the one or two pure sweet personalities in the midst of vice and vulgarity. But the writer's finest art, the cunning mixture of all this into telling dramatic form, the old magician's touch which converted the dull rock into glittering gold, are missing. This is not the Bret Harte of "The Luck of Roaring Camp" and the "Two Men of Sandy Bar;" or even of "In the Carquinez Woods." The first of the two stories, "A Millionaire of Rough-and-Ready," dealing with the doubtful ownership of a valuable mine, and the domestic complications that grew out of the doubt, we have found rather an effort to read; the second, "Devil's Ford," is much the better of the two. We have here the rough mining camp, the coming of two lovely girls into its rude life, the mischief they play with true and manly hearts, and the bare escape from a tragedy which settles the happy result. But neither story has great purpose, or shows extraordinary power.

Karma. A Novel. By A. P. Sinnett. [Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.] The novel is the form of literature which every enthusiast today adopts, doubting not that there he will find an easier entrance for his scheme. If we were obliged to choose between reading Mr. Sinnett's Occult Buddhism and this story of theosophy and clairvoyance, we should much prefer Karma; it has a liveliness foreign to that pseudo-profound treatise, and its absurdities of superstition are at least amusing. But if we were obliged to finish Karma, we should earnestly inquire of ourselves in what state we had so grievously sinned that our own Karma (the inevitable consequences of our past actions) should have taken shape in such a penance for the intellect as the reading of this farrago!

MINOR NOTICES.

The Diversions of a Book-Worm. By J. Rogers Rees. [George J. Coombes. $1.25.]

Mr. Rees is an amiable and loquacious book-worm, and in this little volume of Diversions which Mr. Coombes has so charmingly printed, he has a great deal that is pleasant to say of the book-worm's study and the ideal study, the two or three choicer spirits that are admitted to the sacred precincts of his library, his dreams and his books, and about the books that have been loved by some other folks. In the matter of a study Mr. Rees has of course his ideal. It must be an airy apartment, yet not too large, "for I have always considered that an extensive apartment of this kind encourages the mind to wander; in smaller space it is more concentrated, bound down, as it were, to the work it sets itself to accomplish." The objects around must not be too many, they must be loved for their beauty and their associations, and they should always be subservient to the main purpose of the apartment. The books should be arranged entirely to suit the whim of the occupant. Two things are absolutely indispensable: there must be an open fire-place and a window looking out "upon water of some kind." About books per se and book-men Mr. Rees chats with unflinching sagacity. Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau are dear to his heart, and upon their haunts and lives and works he offers sundry gratifying reflections. Although not inordinately covetous Mr. Rees confesses that there are a few select books which he would like to own, among them the copy of Tom Jones annotated by Leigh Hunt now in the possession of Mr. Lowell; the single odd volume of Cotton's translation of Montaigne's Essays which remained to Emerson from his father's library; the copy of Richardson's Pamela that belonged to Charles Lamb—and so on. A discursive, winning, bright-witted book, this of Mr. Rees, full of the odd fancies and quaint conceits that all bookish people love.

Life of Thomas Hart Benton. By Theodore Roosevelt [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

Mr. Roosevelt did not have in Benton one of the most famous of American Statesmen for a subject, but he has written a very interesting biography of "the most typical representative of the statesmanship of the middle West at the time when the latter gave the tone to the political thought of the entire Mississippi Valley." Benton, self-made, was one of the best-informed men that ever sat in Congress, "he was a slaveholder, but as advanced as a slaveholder could be;" he was a firm opponent of the spoils-system on its introduction into national politics by Jackson, though always Jackson's best friend; he was an incorruptible Union man; he was morally far greater than Webster. And he grew the more and more of a man and a statesman to the end of his life. Mr. Roosevelt's account of the absurd distribution of the surplus revenue among the States is very timely reading just now; and his account of the fatuity of the abolitionists as a political party emphasizes a record which is too often forgotten in indiscriminate praise of their philanthropy.

An Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament. By the Rev. B. B. Warfield, D.D. [London: Hodder & Stoughton.]

Professor Warfield follows Rev. Mr. Row in the series of theological primers the plan of which we noted some weeks since. His little treatise is "a primer to the art of textual criticism rather than to the science," and thus differs from most other works in our language on textual criticism. It will serve admirably as an introduction to the use of such works as Dr. Hort's Introduction and Dr. Gregory's Prolegomena. While few students of theology enter much into the actual processes of New Testament text-criticism, Dr. Warfield's primer will give all who use it an excellent view of the principles involved and the methods used; and we know nothing at all its equal for this purpose.

The Geographical and Geological Distribution of Animals. By Angelo Heilprin. [D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.] This fifty-seventh volume of the "International Scientific Series" is a handy encyclopædia of the more prominent facts concerning the distribution of animal species in space and time. Prof. Heilprin follows Prof. Wallace's well-known works to a great extent, while making use also of all else that has been written on the subject. His principal departure from his predecessors is in making a single region (the Holarctic) of the two known as the Palearctic and Nearctic realms of the globe. Like nearly all later zoologists, Prof. Heilprin finds in the development theory the only rational foundation for an explanation of the phenomena of animal distribution; at the same time he is obliged, as Darwin was, to emphasize the imperfection of the geological record.

Mrs. Lydia Hoyt Farmer's operetta, The Prince of the Flaming Star, is intended for use of children. It contains some rather graceful music of a very light variety, and if well set on the stage, with a selection of pretty little boys and girls to represent the various groups of fairies and grass and flower sprites, we should imagine that it might furnish some effective tableaux. As a book, it is less successful. Nothing could be more commonplace than the rhymes, except the illustrations, which are barely up to the level of the ordinary valentine. The fays and sprites, beside being the reverse of pretty, are the reverse of fanciful, being, in fact, no more than rather ill-drawn mortal children with a scant allowance of clothing, and sensible, rather aged faces, which suggest an over-plus of high school instruction and Sunday-school picnic, rather than the realm of fantasy to which they are supposed to belong. [D. Lothrop & Co. $1.50.]

Before an Audience. By Nathan Sheppard. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00.] We advise every public speaker to read at least the opening chapters of this book. They are sensible, practical, helpful. No public speaker can read them without learning something of the secret of voice management. Mr. Sheppard's ideas that the speaker, instead of "forgetting himself in his subject," shall remember himself; that he must be a hearer and critic of his own voice; that he must have something to say if he expects to say anything, are vigorously and effectively expressed. In fact Mr. Sheppard is nothing if not vigorous in his way of putting things; and sometimes he puts a thing in a way that it will be hard to forget, as, for example, where he bids the man who finds he is sleeping with his mouth open, "to get up and shut it."

Mrs. Sanborn Tenney's Young Folks' Pictures and Stories of Animals are in six volumes, relating to insects, shell fish, other fishes and reptiles, birds, and quadrupeds; conveying information in pleasant talks, with occasional anecdotes. Children may make easy acquaintance with leading facts in natural history by means of these well-made books. [Lee & Shepard. Each 30c.]

His One Fault, by J. T. Trowbridge, is, like all of the author's writings for young people, a capital story. Christopher Downmiede's one fault was forgetfulness; he forgot where he left the farm tools, he forgot to feed the calves, and finally in locking the stable door one night he forgot to take away the key. Of course a sprightly thief makes an entrance and gets off with Uncle Gray's horse; and the history of Christopher's adventures in pursuit of the stolen animal fills a volume of 275 pages. [Lee & Shepard. $1.25.]

With the title Poems of Florus B. Plimpton, a fine memorial of a hard-working, conscientious, broad-minded journalist, is given to the public by Mr. Plimpton's widow. The book contains in addition to the poems—which are inspired by lofty aspirations and expressed with delicate felicity of phraseology—tributes of esteem from the author's associates on the staff of the Cincinnati Commercial. Miss Edith M. Thomas contributes some dedicatory verses. [Cincinnati: Mrs. F. B. Plimpton.]

Illustrated Tableaux for Amateurs, by Martha Coles Weld, Nos. 1 and 2, contains clear and comprehensible directions for setting, dressing, posing, and lighting a variety of Tableaux Vivants of the sort with which we are all familiar. "The Wedding Banquet," "Invoking the Muse," "The Billet Doux," "Cinderella's Sisters Dressing for the Ball;" which of us has not seen and assisted at such? We could wish that the author of this little work had hit upon some more original devices than those she indicates. With a whole world of history, fiction, and art to choose from it would seem no impossible task; but such as the book is, those who have such exhibitions in charge and are content to do as their mothers and grandmothers have done, will find its directions explicit and helpful. [New York: Harold Roorbach.]

Professor Knoflach's aim in German Simplified like all of the nursery methods in linguistic training is to introduce the student as early as possible to a practical use of the language, leaving the fullness and precision of a complete grammar for a later time. His method seems to us to be excellently carried out, and among books which have a view to the saving of time and labor in acquiring a surface knowledge of German, this deserves a place. The treatment of pronunciation is good, while the pamphlet edition, with its brief keys, is well adapted to self-instruction. [New York: A. Knoflach. $1.25.]

—Mrs. Helen Campbell, whose labors among the poor of New York have attracted attention, has written an account of her observations and conclusions in a book to be called Prisoners of Poverty: "Women Wage Workers; Their Trades and Their Lives," which Roberts Brothers will publish.

PERIODICALS.

The Atlantic for March is assuredly a red-letter number; its table of contents piques the interest; one settles down with it to a leisure hour of confident enjoyment. Mr. Lowell contributes a brief poem whose ethereal motive and gracious imagery are in pleasant harmony. Dr. Holmes begins with amiable garrulity the story of his recent hundred days in Europe, and we are all glad to hear how he prepared for the voyage, how kind A, B, and C were, what razor he shaved with, how delightful a hot water bag is on a steamer's deck, and how difficult it was for his secretary to answer all the invitations that poured in upon him in London. He has naturally not much to say of English scenery; but he was disappointed in the size of the trees, and he likens the cathedral at Chester to an old cheese, and its lowly servitors to "larvæ of angels," although he is pained to carry the comparison so far. Mr. Perkins's article on Théophile Gautier is a good specimen of the descriptive essay and leaves a definite impression. Miss Agnes Repplier writes with point and acumen of the curiosities of criticism, finding American reviewers as a general thing too kindly and indulgent—hence the toleration of literary rubbish. One could not ask for a more scholarly and elegant presentation of a classical theme than that made by Mr. Lawton in his analysis, with copious translated extracts, of the "Hippolytos" of Euripides. Mr. H. E. Scudder gives a fine exposition of Longfellow's art, which he aptly likens to that of Claude Lorraine. "He was first of all a composer, and he saw his subjects in their relations rather than in their essence." Mr. Lawrence Saxe's "Lady from Maine" culminates in an absurd melodrama. The review of recent poetry is cloying in its sweetness; if only bards would demand something else than honey as a steady dietary!

Dwelling in Paris is the subject of an article by Theodore Child in the March number of Harper's, Mr. Child noting as a striking sign of the times "that while you seek in vain in the Parisian newspapers for three lines of honest criticism on a new book, you will find columns of letter-press devoted to the daily chronicle of the race-courses and the salles d'armes." Mr. Child narrates a number of celebrated encounters, including the Gambetta-Fourton affair, and seems to think that the practice is by no means dying out among Frenchmen. This article is illustrated, as is also Richard Wheatly's account of the New York police department, whose wonderful resources and complex duties are fully described. Alfred T. Heard, writing of contemporary Russia, finds salutary and wholesome influences at work in the territorial and municipal assemblies and the village commune, but observes, aside from nihilism, signs of popular ferment which the weighted safety-valves of autocracy may not long be able to restrain. Charles Gayarré has a delightful picture of a Louisiana sugar plantation of the old régime, with its patriarchal administration under the rule of Eitenne de Boré, who was the first successful manufacturer of sugar in the colony. Incidentally, Mr. Gayarré laments the old creole cooking, which he claims has now vanished utterly from the earth, and indeed would have no meaning "for this coarse-feeding generation." Mr. Warner remarks, as the most significant of the impressions got from his recent tour of the South, that "everybody was at work;" he observes a decided increase in the Hebrew element; and, as a political straw, asserts that the sentiment in favor of "protection" is constantly growing. Mr. Howells in this number discusses recent poetry in a kindly spirit, but acknowledges that he finds it to be mighty hard reading. He even goes so far as to suggest that it no longer expresses life, and that it does not even represent literature. Evidently the poet must go!

Mrs. Lillie's story of "Kenyan's Wife" in the March number of Lippincott's is a tame affair. Mr. Robert Burdette presents his confessions as a "reformed humorist," expressing, we are glad to see, his "honest regret" that he ever wrote his Life of William Penn. Henry C. Lea in a concise argument advocates legal suppression of the fire-insurance system, which he says is worse than the lottery for fostering a gambling spirit in the community, and is, in fact, a direct incentive to crime. Since the insurance agencies were expelled from New Hampshire a few years ago, he says that the losses by fire in that state have diminished by about thirty per cent. In a sharp review of the results of rent and taxes, Mr. F. P. Powers sums up the land question thus: "the question is whether the people shall pay rent to private parties and taxes to the State, or rent to the State and no taxes." A story by Barnett Phillips, "Was it Worth While?" is a clever bit of romance.

The stability of the earth is made the subject of a general exposition of the causes of earthquakes, by Professor N. S. Shaler, in Scribner's for March. Professor Shaler, to the nervous reader, will seem to say more of the earth's instability than of its stability. He discusses such seismic phenomena as have occurred in this country, and concludes that we cannot reckon on an earth as stable as that of northern Europe. It is equally clear, he says, that our method of building should be modified to meet this conclusion. Mr. Edward J. Lowell tells the story of the Norman Conquest from the Bayeux tapestry in an attractive manner. This article, like the preceding, is finely illustrated. Professor William James contributes a fascinating study of instinct as manifested in the lower animals and as related to reason in man. The theory of the successive sway of instincts in the human being is carefully worked out, and deserves more attention than it has yet received. But Professor James is going rather far when he asserts that "outside of their own business, the ideas gained by men before they are twenty-five are practically the only ideas they shall have in their lives." Just one half of this number of Scribner's is occupied with fiction. Mr. Frederic's serial continues to manifest a vigorous if somewhat somber power, and Mr. Stimson's "Residuary Legatee" loses none of its piquant originality with a new instalment. Of the short stories Mr. R. G. Butler's "Father Andrei" is easily the best from the artistic point of view.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co. have also in preparation Sigríð: an Icelandic Love-Story, translated from the Danish of Jon Thordssøn Thoroddsen, who, in a style remarkable for its quiet force and poetical charm, depicts almost every phase of life in contemporary Iceland.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Explanatory. The reference, in the note on "Concordance and Lexicon" in the last number, to "the notice of Schmidt's Lexicon," was to the notice printed here, which was in type a fortnight ago, but was laid over to make room for other matter.

Mr. Lowell on "Richard III." The newspaper reports of Mr. Lowell's lecture at Chicago on Richard III. do not give the details of his argument against the authenticity of the play. No doubt he stated his reasons more at length than these imperfect abstracts indicate. The critics generally have been disposed to accept the play as an early production of Shakespeare's, while he was still under the influence of Marlowe, but as giving promise of his coming power as a dramatist; in the words of Oechelhäuser (in his Essay über Richard III. in the Jahrbuch, vol. iii. 1868), "the significant boundary-stone which separates the works of Shakespeare's youth from the immortal works of the period of his fuller splendor." Furnivall in the introduction to the Leopold Shakespeare says:

The weakest part of the play is the scene of the citizens' talk; and the poorness of it, and the monotony of the women's curses, have given rise to the theory that in Richard III. Shakespeare was only rewriting an old play, of which he let bits stand. But though I once thought this possible, I have since become certain that it is not so.

Fleay, when he wrote his Manual (1876), had "no doubt that it was originally written by G. Peele, left unfinished by him, completed and partly corrected by Shakespeare as we have it in the quartos, and that Shakespeare afterwards altered it into the shape in which it was printed in the folio." In 1881, in a contribution to Dr. Ingleby's Shakespeare, the Man and the Book, Part II., he described it as "begun by Peele and Marlowe, 1592, after the True Tragedy; recast and finished by Shakespeare as in the quarto, 1594-5." The folio text, he believes, follows in the main "the acting version in use in 1622," but, "it is not known who made" this version. In 1886, in his Life of Shakespeare, he comes to the conclusion that "Shakespeare derived his plot and part of his text from an anterior play," which was "Marlowe's, written for Lord Strange's Company in 1593, but left unfinished at Marlowe's death, and completed and altered by Shakespeare in 1594."

Dowden believes the play to be Shakespeare's, and not later in date than 1593. The poet, he thinks, "was indebted little, if at all, to the old play The True Tragedie of Richard III., and certainly not at all to Dr. Legge's Latin play upon the same subject," as some critics have supposed him to be.

We may recur to the subject when we have seen the full text of Mr. Lowell's lecture.

The Philadelphia "Shakespeariana." This magazine begins the new year in greatly improved form typographically, and with corresponding improvement in matter and management. We hope to be able to speak of it more at length hereafter. It is still published at 1104 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, at $1.50 a year.

Revised Edition of Schmidt's "Shakespeare-Lexicon." We are indebted to Dr. Schmidt for a copy of the new (1886) edition of his Shakespeare-Lexicon, first published in 1874. As the work was stereotyped, he has made only such corrections and additions as could be inserted in the original plates; but the revision appears to have been very carefully done. No one who has not had experience in book-making can appreciate the difficulty of eliminating all the slips of pen and type that inevitably occur in a great work like this, with its tens of thousands of quotations and references to act, scene, and line. Dr. Schmidt, in his new preface, assures the reader that now "the correctness of the quotations will be found all but absolute;" but, though he has made hundreds, if not thousands of corrections, we venture to "guess" that more than one hundred yet remain to be detected. In using the lexicon for the past twelve years we have noted some two hundred errors and misprints in the articles to which we have had occasion to refer. We find that about five sixths of these have been set right in the new edition, but the following remain:

Page 19 (under advertisement), the quotation from Much Ado, v. i. 32, reads, "my griefs are louder," etc., in-tead of "cry louder."

Page 39 (angel), 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 187 should be 2 Hen. IV., etc.

Page 98 (behave), "how have I then behaved" (Oth. iv. 2. 108) should be "been behaved."

Page 131 (bosky), "you bosky hill" (1 Hen. IV. v. i. 2) should be "yon," etc.

Page 168 (canonize), reference to K. John, iv. 52 should be iii. 4. 52.

Page 269 (cure), "one desparate grief" (R. and J. i. 2. 49) is uncorrected.

Page 283 (death), to the illustrations of "to do to death," add 3 Hen. VI. ii. 1. 103 and iii. 3. 103. Dr. Schmidt evidently intends to give all the instances of such idioms.

Page 283 (duck), 1 Hen. IV. iv. 2. 21 should be added to ii. 2. 108.

Page 346 (earnest), the obvious "quibble" in W. T. iv. 4. 656 is not noted, according to the author's custom.

Page 382 (exhalation), K. John, ii. 4. 153 should be iii. 4. 153.

Page 416 (file), dele the is in "his tongue is filed" (L. L. L. v. i. 12).

Page 426 (flesh), L. L. L. iii. 1. 156 should be iii. 1. 136.

Page 450 (frame), "chid I for that a frugal nature's frame" (Much Ado, iv. 1. 130) should be "at frugal," etc.

Page 490 (eye), "gracious in the people's eyes" (3 Hen. VI. iii. 3. 117) should be "eye;" the reading of the folio and of all the editors.

Page 501 (grow = accrue), C. of E. iv. 1. 18 should be iv. 1. 8.

Page 667 (look = expect), add 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 49: "I looked a' should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin."

Page 691 (many), to the one example of the possessive muny's (Sonn. 93. 7: "In many's looks") add R. and J. i. 3. 91: "in many's eyes."

Page 692 (many, under a many), Hen. V. iii. 7. 179 should be iii. 7. 79.

Page 695 (marriage), to examples of the word as a trisyllable, should be added T. of S. iii. 2. 142: "Twere good, methinks, to steal our marriage;" and Per. ii. 3. 30: "By Juno that is queen of marriage."

Page 770 (news), Dr. Schmidt says that the word is "dissyllabic and spelt newes in Rich. III. iv. 4. 536." As we have noted in our ed. of the play (p. 236), the word is spelt newes in the folios, but there is no reason for making it dissyllabic. The line reads, "Is colder news, but yet they must be told." The quartos have "tidings, yet," and Dr. S. probably overlooked the insertion of the but in the folios.

Page 845 (Paul), Rich. II. i. 2. 30 should be Rich. III.

Page 861 (piece), "Elizabeth" should be "Elizabeth."

Page 899 (prick, verb), the "quibbles" in 2 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 122 and Sonn. 20. 13 are not noted.

Page 938 (rank), "rank of gross diets" (A. and C. v. 2. 212) should be "diet." The folio has "ranke of grosse dyet."

Page 1020 (see), to the examples of "When shall we see again?" (that is, see each other), should be added T. and C. iv. 4. 59.

Page 1034 (Spanish), "my Span'sh word" (A. W. iv. 1. 52) should be "sword."

Page 1231 (timeless), "the bloody office of his timeless death" (Rich. II. iv. 1. 5) should be "timeless end."

Page 1307 (vain), "humourous youth" (Hen. V. ii. 4. 28) should be "humorous."

On the same page, vagram (M. W. iii. 1. 25) is omitted in the vocabulary. If Dr. S. regarded the word as a misprint of fragrant, he would of course have referred to the passage under that word, where he gives the example in M. W. iii. 1. 20.

Page 1338 (water), "lukewarm" in the quotation from T. of A. iii. 6. 99 is not corrected.

Page 1353 (water), "what thing it is that I never did see man die!" (Cymb. iv. 4. 35) should be "is it." The folio has "is't."

Page 1424 (Appendix, under "The whole relation of ideas inverted") Rich. II. v. 106 should be iv. 1. 106.

In these corrections we have used our own abbreviations of the names of the plays, etc. (to which our readers are accustomed), instead of Dr. Schmidt's, but this will not cause any confusion in verifying them by reference to his pages. It is improbable that, in dipping into the book here and there, we have detected one out of ten of these trivial errors. If our readers come across any of the others, we are sure that Dr. Schmidt will be grateful for a memorandum of them, sent either directly to his address (Alexander Schmidt, LL.D., Königsberg, Prussia) or through the columns of the World.

To the value of the Lexicon to teachers and students we have borne testimony so often that we need not add a single word here. Our own obligations to it may be inferred from the evidence indirectly given above of the use we have made of it in our editorial work.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

808. Clare Doria Forey. In Mr. Lang's Letters to Dead Authors occurs this passage: "Or, in fiction when Colonel Newcomb said adum, or over the diary of Clare Doria Forey." Who was Clare Doria Forey? T. & P.

Providence, R. I.

A character in George Meredith's earlier and perhaps greatest novel, The Ordeal of Richard Feverel, a book which we cannot forbear to say ought never to fall into the hands of a boy or girl, or of any one in sickness or depression of mind. The result will inevitably be bad.

809. A Question of Nationality. Will you please say something in regard to the nationality of Mr. Edwin L. Bynner, and also of Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, author of Jan Vedder's Wife.

Columbus, Ohio.

M. A. M.

Mrs. Amelia Edith Huddleston Barr is by birth an Englishwoman. Mr. Bynner, we believe, is a genuine American.

810. To "R. J." The Moon Hoax was first published in the New York Sun, and afterwards as a pamphlet of sixty-three pages (New York: W. Gowans. 1859). Its author is Richard Adams Locke. There is a mention of it in the note appended to Poe's Adventures of Hans Pfall. A copy ought to be easy to find. Try David G. Francis, 17 Astor Place, N. Y., or A. S. Clark, 34 Park Row, N. Y.

811. Prince of Naphthali. Could you give me some information about a book which I think is called The Prince of Naphthali? I don't know the name of the author, nor am I positive of the title itself, but the book treats of the siege of Jerusalem and is written in the form of an autobiography. It is divided into two parts. The second part begins thus: "In that dungeon I lay two years."

NEWS AND NOTES.

— The publishing house of D. Lothrop & Co. underwent a transformation on March 1, when the corporation was enlarged by the entrance of Mr. E. S. Brooks of the editorial staff of the Century Co., Mr. W. H. Arnold, for the last seven years manager of the book business of John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, and Mr. E. H. Pennell, for many years in the employ of D. Lothrop & Co. The new firm is to be known as the D. Lothrop Company. If commercial sagacity and literary acumen count for anything, great things may be expected from it.

— On page 29 of the current volume of the Literary World, Botta's Handbook of Universal Literature was inadvertently spoken of as published by Osgood at $2.50. The publishers are Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and the price is $2.00.

— William Evarts Benjamin, New York, has published part one (A—H) of a catalogue of Rare Books and Fine Prints, which offers many treasures for the bibliophile. Among the interesting entries we note a copy of Robert Greene's Never Too Late, both parts (London, 1607), priced at $75, and John Heywoode's Workes (London, 1576), offered for $90. Both books are bound by Rivière. What purports to be a complete set of the first editions of Dickens's writings in "about ninety volumes" is priced at "about $12.00."

— A very pleasant "At Home" given in London the middle of February by Mrs. Katherine S. Macquoid—who, we are glad to hear, continues to keep well this winter—brought together an interesting company of artists and literary people. Among them (one who was there writes to us) were Miss Alice Corkran, whose Down the Snow Stairs has been so popular this season, Miss A. Mary F. and Miss Mabel Robinson, the widow of Anthony Trollope—a charming old lady with lovely white hair which was quite white before she was old, and Mrs. Bram Stokes, wife of Mr. Henry Irving's man of business, "looking like an exquisite flower." Two Royal Academicians, Mr. John Burgess and Mr. H. Thorneycroft, were there, as well as the funny Mr. Anstey Guthrie (have you seen his story in the last Macmillan, reader?); the clever editorial secretary of the S. P. C. K., who is revolutionizing the work of that society, employing some of the first authors of the day to write for it;

Alfred Parsons the artist, Francillon the novelist, Mr. William Sharp, the poet-editor, and last but not least the editor of the Athenæum.

— Miss A. Mary F. Robinson, our English correspondent, is translating the Ileplammeron.

— Mr. Gerald Maxwell, a son of Mrs. Brad-don, the novelist, who has been connected as an actor with an American dramatic company, has been placed in the Cincinnati Sanitarium on a certificate of insanity.

— The late Mrs. Henry Wood, the English novelist, succumbed to an attack of bronchitis. She had been ailing, and had been confined to the house, for months past. We learn through a private source that, besides her novel now running in the Argosy, she left a completed 3 vol. novel in MS., and several short stories. She was an extraordinarily prolific writer, and a great favorite in England among the "people." Of her East Lynne there have been issued 150,000 copies.

— The Overland Monthly has engaged Gen. O. O. Howard to furnish a series of Indian War Papers. The first, to appear in April or May, will be upon the "Piate and Bannock War of 1878," the first detailed account of that campaign.

— The Athenæum says that Mr. T. Adolphus Trollope is writing out his reminiscences of the eminent men and women whom he has known during his long and busy life; that Mr. Edwin Hodder is at work on a life of the late Mr. Samuel Morley; that Mr. Charles Ollivant has finished his life of Capt. Mayne Reid; and that Prof. A. Barrén is shortly to publish through the Chiswick Press a French and English argot and slang dictionary, devoted to the cant words, quaint expressions, slang terms, and flash phrases used in the high and low life of old and new Paris.

— The interesting articles in the Forum bearing the title "How I Was Educated," are to be followed by a series entitled "Books That Have Helped Me." The first paper, by Edward Everett Hale, appears in the March number.

— The Academy says that more than 200,000 copies of different translations of Faust have been sold in London since Mr. Irving produced his play at the Lyceum Theatre.

— A new cheap edition (10,000 copies) of Professor Drummond's Natural Law in the Spiritual World was almost wholly disposed of in London to the trade the day before publication. The Academy mentions it as one of the curiosities of literature that the MS. of this work, "one of the most successful religious books of modern times," was twice declined by London publishers.

— Some talk has been occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Julian Hawthorne from the Authors' Club, New York. It has been foolishly said that at the only time when Mr. Hawthorne visited the club rooms since the Lowell interview, he was treated in such a manner by his fellow members that a resignation was necessary to his own comfort. It need hardly be said that the members of the Authors' Club are gentlemen, and that nothing of the sort occurred. The rather scathing newspaper criticisms did, however, affect Mr. Hawthorne until he has become super-sensitive.

— Mr. F. Marion Crawford has a new book in the press of Macmillan & Co., which, however, may not appear before the autumn. His new serial, "With the Immortals," which will be begun in the next number of Macmillan's, has much literary criticism interspersed throughout its romance, and the manuscript of his other serial, Paul Patoff, is entirely finished and in the hands of Mr T. B. Aldrich, who was among the first to recognize Mr. Crawford's ability, and who invited him to contribute to the Atlantic Monthly long before his reputation was established.

— Apropos of the coming ocean race between the "Dauntless" and the "Coronet," the Harpers announce a book of sea adventures entitled From Forecastle to Cabin, by Capt. Samuel Samuels, the commander of the former vessel, who relates his experiences from the time of his running away to sea at the age of eleven, until the present day, in an uncommonly breezy manner. The same publishers have also in press, Harfu; or, Life in Modern Palestine, by Mr. Laurence Oliphant; and a new volume on the use of the microscope, dealing especially with the common forms of animal and vegetable life to be found in highways and ditches. It is written by Alfred C. Stokes, M.D., and is entitled, Microscopy for Beginners.

— It is reported that already there has been trouble in the office of the new New York weekly, The Epoch. Mr. George Parsons Lathrop resigned his position of editor last week only to resume it a day or two after at the request of Mr. DeWitt Seligman, the owner and publisher of the paper, who, by the way, is not a banker, as reported in these columns a fortnight ago.

— The unpublished Thackeray letters which will soon appear in the pages of Scribner's Magazine have been in the hands of Mr. James Russell Lowell, who has gone over them, word for word, with the greatest possible care and the liveliest interest and enthusiasm. Mr. Lowell was for years, like Thackeray himself, a warm personal friend of the Brookfields, to whom Thackeray wrote these letters, and it was probably through Mrs. Brookfield's wish that Mr. Lowell was led to practically edit them for publication. Mrs. Brookfield herself, however, assumes all responsibility for what is printed, and Mrs. Ritchie, the novelist's daughter, has expressed her great gratification that this autobiographical material should be published, revealing for the first time portions of Thackeray's private life. Mr. Brookfield was exceedingly popular, not only among his church people and those with whom he came in contact through his profession, but also with many noted authors of his time, not least among them Lord Tennyson, who wrote a touching sonnet on his friend's death, which is given in one of his latest books.

— Dodd, Mead & Co., in all probability, will publish the new novel upon which Mr. E. P. Roe is now busily engaged at his picturesque retreat in Santa Barbara, and, before long, novel readers may look for another romance with Lower California for a background.

— The Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks was in Philadelphia and not in New York last week, arranging for the publication of his recent lectures in book form.

— Mr. Lowell was announced to address a Chicago audience on "American Politics" on Washington's birthday, but selected as his subject "The True Criticism of Shakespeare," and illustrated it with an argument that Shakespeare did not write "Richard III." A Chicago correspondent says: "Mr. Lowell's audience first learned that he would lecture on Shakespeare when he arose to speak and announced it himself. The news was received with disfavor, and the lecture made much less impression than it would have done under other circumstances."

— The Bishop Welles Brotherhood of Nashotah, Wis., announce the publication of an extended exposition of the doctrines of the primitive church by John Harvey Treat; the title is Catholic Faith.

— Mr. Clarence Cook manages his paper, The Studio, in a wholly original way, and one that must be extremely convenient for him. Whenever some art matter of unusual interest comes up, a number of The Studio appears, and discusses the question at issue so ably that one wishes a furore in the artistic world might be created periodically, if only to call forth a number of Mr. Cook's magazine. Rajon has been commissioned to execute an etching for The Studio, and five hundred copies of it will be issued on India paper, but just when artists may expect this treat is, of course, uncertain.

— The New York Shakespeare Society has now in press the second part of its Digesta Shakespeareana, which completes its topical index of the great mass of Shakespearean literature, including books, pamphlets, and magazine and newspaper notices of importance, and brings the work down to Jan. 1, 1887. Hereafter the society will issue every twelvemonth a supplementary year book, in which the titles of each publication relating to Shakespeare and his works will be printed.

— The Brooklyn Magazine, having outgrown its title, will shortly appear completely metamorphosed. In the first number of the new American Magazine Mr. William H. Rideing, as if to prove that Boston has not lost her literary prestige, in spite of Mr. Lathrop's recent article in Harper's, will write on "Literary Life in Boston." A number of portraits of the younger Bostonian authors, whose faces are not yet familiar to many readers, have been prepared to accompany Mr. Rideing's paper, which is concerned more especially with the rising literarians than with those who have been Boston's pride for so many years.

— As an offset to the Pope's Memoirs which they are about to publish, Charles L. Webster & Co. have arranged with the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher to bring out his autobiography this year, or after the finishing of the second volume of his Life of Christ which is now nearly completed. Like Leo XIII, Mr. Beecher has given fifty years of his life to public service. We understand that he will receive $25,000 for the manuscripts of his Life of Christ, and his autobiography, beside a royalty on each copy of either of the works sold.

— The second annual report of the Boston School of Expression gives an attractive summary of results achieved and resources demanded. An offer of an endowment of $100,000 was made to the institution during the year on condition that the school be removed to another city. The summer session this year will open at Saratoga, July 5.

— Miss Annie T. Howard is to supply the Tulane University at New Orleans with a fine library building, which will hold 100,000 volumes.

— A fine new building was dedicated in Buffalo, N. Y., Monday evening, Feb. 7, containing quarters for the Buffalo Library, the Academy of Fine Arts, the Society of Natural Sciences, and the Historical Society.

— Dante Gabriel Rossetti's book on Dante and His Circle, which has been for some time out of print, is to be republished here by Roberts Brothers, who some time ago imported a remnant of the English edition and sold it out at once, although the price was $3.50. The same house has in preparation The Collected Works of Rossetti, in two volumes, edited with preface and notes by William M. Rossetti, and an edition of Rossetti's Complete Poetical Works, in one volume.

— A translation of Edmondo de Amicis's Cuore, by Miss I. F. Hapgood, is to be published by T. Y. Crowell & Co. in April. The book purports to be the journal of an Italian lad who writes down his school experiences, the stories told him by his teachers, the letters of his parents, and so on. For the originality of its form, the intensity of its style, and for the skill displayed in its delineation of character, Cuore has been highly praised by Italian critics.

— The Atlantic Monthly for April will contain an etched portrait of Dr. Holmes, and a poem, "On the Big Horn," by Mr. Whittier.

— Edmund Kirke will tell in the April Atlantic "A Suppressed Chapter of History," an account of a diplomatic mission made to Richmond early in the war at the suggestion, or at least with the tacit consent, of President Lincoln. The object of the mission was to arrange with Jefferson Davis terms for the purchase of the slaves by the federal government, but Mr. Davis declined to entertain the project. Not long after Mr. Kirke wrote out the first part of the narrative for publication in the Atlantic, and proof-sheets of it were submitted to Mr. Lincoln, who expressed a desire that the article should not be published. It was therefore cancelled, and until now no account of the affair has been put in print.

Publishers' Announcements.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons: The Story of Ancient Egypt, Prof. Rawlinson; The Story of Alexander's Empire, Prof. J. P. Mahaffy; The Story of Assyria, Z. A. Ragozin; The Story of Persia, S. G. W. Benjamin; The Balkan Peninsula, Emile de Lavelaye; Memorials of Half a Century, Bela Hubbard; Two Years in Europe, Prof. Rodney Glisan; Scotland as it Was and Is, the Duke of Argyll; Half Hours with the Stars, Prof. R. A. Proctor.

— Belford, Clarke & Co.: Life of General John A. Logan, George Francis Dawson.

— S. C. Griggs & Co.: Masters of the Situation; or, "Some Secrets of Success and Power," W. J. Tilley, B.D.; Theophilus Trent; or, "Old Times in the Oak Openings," Benjamin F. Taylor; Poetry and Philosophy of Goethe, essays before the Milwaukee Literary School, edited by Marion V. Dudley.

— Thomas Whittaker: A Hebrew Grammar, Rev. W. H. Lowe, M.A.; A Manual of Church History, Rev. A. C. Jennings, M.A.; A Grammar of New Testament Greek, Rev. W. H. Simcox, M.A.; An Introduction to the Old Testament, Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D.; An Introduction to the New Testament, Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D.; The Thirty-Nine Articles, Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A.; The Creeds, Rev. J. E. Yonge, M.A.; The Prayer-Book, Rev. Charles Hole, B.A.; Preaching, Rev. Canon S. Reynolds Hole, M.A.; A Guide to Theological Literature, Rev. Marcus Dods, D.D., and Rev. W. R. Nicoll, M.A.

— Cassell & Co.: A History of Music, Emil Naumann; Quiet Observations on the Ways of the World, Erasmus Wilson; The Twilight of Life, John Ellerton, M.A.; The Romance of Invention, James Burnley; A Manual of Oil Painting, John Collier; Yachts and Yachting, Capt. R. F. Coffin, and others.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co.: The Feud of Oakfield Creek, a novel, Josiah Royce; His Star in the East, Rev. Leighton Parks; Satchell Guide for 1887; The Golden Legend (Riverside Literature Series).

— Cupples, Upham & Co.: A Handbook of Psychology, Prof. J. Clark Murray, of McGill College, Montreal; The Andover Defence, "in the Matter of the Complaint against Egbert C. Smyth, and others."

NEOBIOLOGY.

Taylor, Benjamin Franklin, LL.D., Cleveland, O., Feb. 24, 65 y.; journalist and poet.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

Burns, Robert.	Eng. Illus. M. , Feb.
Byron's Last Verses.	Murray's , Feb.
Byron, Letters to, from Gifford and Scott.	Murray's , Feb.
Criticism, Curiosities of. Agnes Repplier.	Atlantic , Mar.
Editors, Notable, between 1776 and 1800.	Mag. Am. Hist. , Feb.
S. G. W. Benjamin.
Euripides, the Hippolytos of.	Atlantic , Mar.
W. C. Lawton.
Fiction, the Commonplace in. G. W. Curtis.	Harper's , Mar.
Gautier, Théophile. J. B. Perkins.	Atlantic , Mar.
Longfellow's Art. H. E. Scudder.	Atlantic , Mar.
Novellists, Why we have no Great. H. H. Boyesen.	Forum , Feb.
Poetry, Recent. W. D. Howells.	Harper's , Mar.
Ranke and his Method. J. H. W. Stuckenberg.	Andover R. , Feb.
Shakspeare, le Roman au Temps de. J. J. Jusserand.	Deux Mondes , Feb.

January.

The Westminster Review.—State Education in America—The Ancient Wild Animals of Britain—Diderot and the Art of Acting—What Woman is Fitted For—The Art of Government—The Bishop of Chester's Oxford Lectures—Plato's Moral Mission—The Rent Question in Ireland—Independent Section: 1. London Government. 2. Government and Commerce.

February.

The Edinburgh Review.—English Land, Law, and Labor—The Literature of the Streets—The Ancient Laws of Wales—Thomas Hobbes—Rural Life in Italy—The House of Douglas—The Adventures of Hobart Pasha—The Third Part of the Greville Memoirs—The Works of Handel—Two Roman Novels—The Late Crisis and the Coming Session.

The Contemporary Review.—Ireland: 1782 and 1886. Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice—About Fiction. H. Rider Haggard—India. II. Sir M. E. Grant Duff—Theology as an Academic Discipline. A. M. Fairbairn, D.D.—An Old Couple. Michael Field—Kerry: a Plea for Home Rule. Rev. H. S. Fagan—The People's Palace. Walter Besant—The Navy and its Rulers. Sir R. Spencer Robinson—Contemporary Life and Thought in Italy. G. Boglietti—Contemporary Records.

The Fortnightly Review.—The Present Position of European Politics. II. France—The State of our Trade. George Howell, M.P.—Our Noble Selves—Small Farms. Lord Wantage, V.C.—The Mir and the Police. Stepiak—Infection and Disinfection. Robson Roose, M.D.—Earthquakes. Professor G. H. Darwin, F.R.S.—The Province of Physics: A Rejoinder to Professor Huxley. W. S. Lily—The Transcaspian Railway. Professor Arminius Varnbørg—Correspondence: Democracy in New South Wales. Augustus Nash—The Nāls Slöjd. Adeline Pullar—Houseless at Night. Chas. C. Bethune and Harold E. Boulton.

The National Review.—The Earl of Idlesleigh: (1) A Tribute from a Colleague. Viscount Cranbrook—(2) Sonnet: In Memoriam. Alfred Austin—The Church and Dissent. Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard, M.P.—A Lawyer's Love Letters. Charles Archer Cook—The Rivalry of England and Russia. Colonel G. B. Malletson—Robert Southey. John Dennis—Imperial Migration and Settlement. Major-Gen. Hon. W. Fielding—The Eclipse of Esprit in France. Arthur Tilley—Old "Young England" and New. T. E. Keibel—William Barnes. By the Professor of Poetry at Oxford—The Military Frontier of France—Politics at Home and Abroad—Correspondence.

The Nineteenth Century.—Notes and Queries on the Irish Demand. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.—Scientific and Pseudo-Scientific Realism. Professor Huxley—Notes on New York. G. W. Smalley—Astronomical Photography. A. A. Common—The Scientific Basis of Anarchy. Prince Kropotkin—Local Government in the Rural Districts. George Slater Booth, M.P.—Artisan Atheism. William Rossetti—Fair-Trade Fog and Fallacy. George W. Medley—Revelations of the After-World. Father Ryder—The Government of Ireland: a Reply. II. John Morley, M.P.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Art.

HISTORY OF MEDIEVAL ART. By Franz von Reber. Tr. by Joseph Thacher Clarke. Harper & Bros. $5.00

PRINCIPLES OF ART. Part I. Art in History. Part II. Art in Theory. By John C. Van Dyke. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25

THE USE OF MODELS. A Teacher's Assistant in the Use of the Frang Models for Form Study and Drawing in Primary Schools. Boston: The Frang Educational Co.

Biography.

A MEMORIAL OF THE LATE JAMES ALEXANDER DUPRE. With a Short Life. Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.00

LENG TSO. The Chinese Bible-Woman. A Sequel to The Chinese Slave-Girl. By the Rev. J. A. Davis. Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25

MARGARET OF ANGOULEME, QUEEN OF NAVARRE. (Famous Women Series.) By A. Mary F. Robinson. Roberts Bros. $1.00

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS. (Third and Concluding Part.) A Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria. From 1851 to 1860. By the Late Charles C. F. Greville. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

RETROSPECTIONS OF AMERICA, 1797-1811. By John Bernard. Edited from the Manuscripts by Mrs. Bayle Bernard. With Introduction by Laurence Hutton and Brander Matthews. Harper & Bros. Illustrated. $1.75

LIFE OF GORDANO BRUNO THE NOLAN. By S. Frith. Revised by Professor Morris Carrière. Ticknor & Co. $4.50

PLUTARCH'S LIVES OF PERICLES AND FABIUS MAXIMUS, DEMOSTHENES AND CICERO. Cassell's National Library. Paper 10.

Essays and Sketches.

QUIET OBSERVATIONS ON THE WAYS OF THE WORLD. By Erasmus Wilson. Illus. Cassell & Co. $2.00

Fiction.

GEOFFREY STIRLING. By Mrs. Leith Adams. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.

THAT OTHER PERSON. By Mrs. Alfred Hunt. J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.

HAPPY DODD. By Rose Terry Cooke. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

IRENE. By the Princess Olga Cantacuzene-Altieri. Tr. by J. E. Simpson. Frederick Warne & Co. Paper 35c.

EDMER. By Georges Ohnet. Frederick Warne & Co. Paper 35c.

HELENE. By Leon De Tineau. Tr. by J. E. Simpson. Frederick Warne & Co. Paper 35c.

THE ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG MAN. By Octave Feuillet. From the French by J. Henry Hager. William S. Gottsberger. 90c.

ALICE'S ADVENTURES UNDER GROUND. Being a Facsimile of the Original MS. Hook, Afterwards Developed into Alice's Adventures in Wonderland. By Lewis Carroll. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

A STRANGE INHERITANCE. By F. M. F. Skene. Harper's Handy Series. 25c.

THE MATRIMONIAL AGENT OF POTSDAM. A Humorous Social Romance. From the German of A. Von Winterfeld, by Els Rapha. Thomas R. Knox & Co.

A MILLIONAIRE OF ROUGH-AND-READY AND DEVIL'S FORD. By Bret Harte. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

DEVON BOYS. A Tale of the North Shore. By George Manville Fenn. Harper's Franklin Square Library. 25c.

A CHILD OF THE REVOLUTION. By the Author of "The Atelier du Lys," etc. Illus. Harper & Bros. Paper 25c.

JAPANESE FAIRY TALE SERIES. Eight Numbers: Momotard; Shitakisi Suzume; Saru-Kani Kassen; Kachi-Kachi Yama; Kobutori; Nedzumi ne Yome-Idi; Hanasaki Jiji; Washima.

CROCHET CASTLE. By Thomas Love Peacock. Cassell & Co. Paper 10c.

DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS. A Novel. By George Meredith. Roberts Bros. $2.00

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR. By Honoré De Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50

THE MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES. A Novel. By George Manville Fenn. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 50c.

A ZEALOT IN TULLE. A Novel. By Mrs. Wildrick. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 50c.

BORDERLAND. A Country Town Chronicle. By Jessie Fothergill. Henry Holt & Co. Paper 30c.

THE VIRGINIANS. A Tale of the Last Century. By William Makepeace Thackeray. Two vols. Smith, Elder & Co. Each 50c.

REGIMENTAL LEGENDS. By John Strange Winter. Harper's Handy Series. Paper 25c.

ON THE SUSQUEHANNA. A Novel. By William A. Hammond. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

YEAST. A Problem. By Charles Kingsley. Harper's Handy Series. Paper 25c.
 SAINT MICHAEL. A Romance. Tr. from the German of E. Verner by Mrs. A. S. Wister. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25
 UNCLE MAX. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.
 PHILIP. By William Makepeace Thackeray. Two vols. Smith, Elder & Co. Each 50c.
 LA BELLE NIVERNAISE. Par Alphonse Daudet. William R. Jenkins. 25c.
 L'OMBRA. Par A. Gennevraye. William R. Jenkins. 60c.
 THROUGH THE GATES OF GOLD. A Fragment of Thought. Roberts Bros. 50c.
 FORCED ACQUAINTANCES. A Book for Girls. By Edith Robinson. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
 THE WHOLE TRUTH. By J. H. Chadwick. Cassell & Co. $1.00
 MIGNON'S SECRET, AND WANTED A WIFE. By John Strange Winter — LUCY CROFTON. By Mrs. Oliphant. — CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell. Harper's Handy Series. Each 25c.

History.

THE BISHOPS IN THE TOWER. By Herbert Mortimer Luckock, D.D. T. Whittaker. $1.50
 THE RISE AND EARLY CONSTITUTION OF UNIVERSITIES, WITH A SURVEY OF MEDIEVAL EDUCATION. By S. S. Laurie, LL.D. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50
 HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF EASTON, MASS. By Wm. L. Chaffin. John Wilson & Son. $5.00
 THE NATION IN A NUTSHELL. A Rapid Outline of American History. By George M. Towle. Lee & Shepard. 50c.
 A HALF CENTURY IN SALEM. By M. C. D. Silsbee. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00
 THE FALL OF MAXIMILIAN'S EMPIRE. As Seen from a U. S. Gun-Boat. By Seaton Schroeder. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

Philosophy.

INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGICAL THEORY. By Morden P. Bowne. Harper & Bros. $1.75
 THE CONCEPTION OF THE INFINITE, AND THE SOLUTION OF THE MATHEMATICAL ANTIOMIES: A Study on Psychological Analysis. By George S. Fullerton. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

Poetry.

THE GOLDEN LEGEND. By Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. With Notes by Samuel Arthur Bent. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 40c.
 LOCKSLEY HALL SIXTY YEARS AFTER. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Harper & Bros. 60c.
 THE SLEEPING WORLD, AND OTHER POEMS. By Lillian Blanche Fearing. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00
 PARLEYINGS WITH CERTAIN PEOPLE OF IMPORTANCE IN THEIR DAY, ETC. By Robert Browning. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
 LOCKSLEY HALL SIXTY YEARS AFTER, ETC. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Harper's Handy Series. 25c.
 I AM THAT I AM. The Philosophic Basis of the Christian Faith. A Metrical Essay in Three Parts and Nine Cantos. By E. A. Warner. Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.00
 BALLADS OF THE REVOLUTION AND OTHER POEMS. By George Lansing Taylor. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25
 POEMS OF FLORUS B. PLIMPTON. Illus. Cincinnati: Mrs. F. B. Plimpton.

Political Studies.

AMERICAN PATRIOTISM. An Essay. By Putnam P. Bishop. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.
 THE CONFLICT OF EAST AND WEST IN EGYPT. By John Eliot Bowen. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

Religious.

AN AMERICAN COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT. Edited by Alvah Hovey. American Baptist Publication Society.
 THE TWILIGHT OF LIFE. Words of Counsel and Comfort for the Aged. By John Ellerton. Cassell & Co. $1.00
 YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER-MEETINGS. On Theory and Practice. With Fifteen Hundred Topics. By Rev. F. E. Clark. Funk & Wagnalls.
 THOUGHTS FOR THE DEVOUT. Ash Wednesday to Easter. From the MSS. of the Rev. William Thomas Seacock. E. & J. B. Young & Co.

CHRIST UNVEILED. His Heavenly and Earthly Appearance. By Anna J. Johnston. James N. Johnston.
 THE SELF-REVELATION OF GOD. By Samuel Harris, D.D., LL.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.50

Science and Philosophy.

SOCIAL STUDIES. By R. Heber Newton. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00
 SOME PROBLEMS OF PHILOSOPHY. By Archibald Alexander. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
 COMPRESSED GUN COTTON FOR MILITARY USE. Tr. from the German of Max Von Förster, with an Introduction on Modern Gun Cotton, by Lieut. J. P. Wisser, U. S. A. D. Van Nostrand. 50c.
 RAILWAY PRACTICE. Its Principles and Suggested Reforms Reviewed. By E. P. Alexander. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.
 CREATION OR EVOLUTION? A Philosophical Inquiry. By Geo. Ticknor Curtis. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00
 THE POISON PROBLEM. On the Cause and Cure of Intemperance. By Felix L. Oswald, M.D. D. Appleton & Co. 75c.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL AND GEOLOGICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS. By Angelo Heilprin. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00

PRIMARY LESSONS IN LANGUAGE AND COMPOSITION. By W. H. Maxwell. A. S. Barnes & Co.

WEAR AND TEAR; OR, HINTS FOR THE OVERWORKED. By S. Weir Mitchell, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

TALKS ABOUT LAW. A Popular Statement of What our Law is and How it is Administered. By Edmund P. Dole. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00

THE HISTORY OF MUSIC. By Emil Naumann. Tr. by F. Praeger. Ed. by Rev. Sir F. A. Gove Ousley. 2 vols. Illus. Cassell & Co. $10.00

Text-Books.

LESSONS IN ENGLISH-COMPOSITION, GRAMMAR AND RHETORIC COMBINED. By W. W. Gist. Chicago: Geo. Sherwood & Co.

PRINCIPLES OF GENERAL PHARMACY, ETC., ETC. ETC. Compiled by Charles T. P. Fennel, Ph.G. Robert Clarke & Co. $1.50

A TREATISE ON ALGEBRA. By Profs. Oliver, Wait, and Jones of Cornell University. Dudley F. Finch.

Travel and Observation.

WANDERINGS IN SOUTH AMERICA. By Charles Waterton. With Introduction by Norman Moore, M.D. Cassell's National Library. 10c.

BRAZIL. Its Condition and Prospects. By C. C. Andrews. D. Appleton & Co.

A TRAMP TRIP. How to See Europe on Fifty Cents a Day. By Lee Meriwether. Harper & Bros. $1.25

ROMA DI ROMA. By William Wetmore Story. 2 vols. New Edition. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50

ABOUT MEXICO PAST AND PRESENT. By Hannah More Johnson. Presbyterian Board. $1.50

Miscellaneous.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By John Keble. Cassell's National Library. 10c

LITERARY SALAD. A Game of Instruction and Entertainment. By Rose Porter. Interstate Pub. Co. 50c

LE ROMANTISME FRANÇAIS. A Selection from Writers of the French Romantic School, 1824-1848. Edited by T. F. Crane. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

THE DIVERSIONS OF A BOOK-WORM. By J. Rogers Rees. George J. Coombes. $1.25

CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN. A Second Reader. Stickney, Ginn & Co. 50c.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL. By Sir Walter Scott. Ed. with Notes by W. J. Rolfe. Illus. Ticknor & Co. 75c.

A JOURNEY TO THE WESTERN ISLANDS OF SCOTLAND. By Samuel Johnson, LL.D. Cassell & Co. Paper 10c.

AN ALMANACK FOR 1887. By Joseph Whitaker. London: 12 Warwick Lane.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL AND THE CHIMES. By Charles Dickens. Cassell & Co.'s National Library. Paper 10c.

CARVING AND SERVING. By Mrs. D. A. Lincoln. Roberts Bros. 60c.

LES MALHEUREUX DE SOPHIE. Par Mme. La Comtesse de Ségur. Illus. W. R. Jenkins.

READINGS AND STORIES FOR READINGS WITH MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENTS. By Ezekiah Butterworth. John Church & Co.

APHORISMS OF THE THREE THREES. By Edward Owings Towne. Charles H. Kerr & Co.

ILLUSTRATED TABLEAUX FOR AMATEURS. By Martha Coles Weld. No. 1 and 2. Harold Roobach. Paper. No. 1 30c., No. 2 25c

HOME RULE; OR, THE IRISH LAND QUESTION. Facts and Arguments. By Charles Higgins, M.A., F.R.S.L. Rand, McNally & Co. $1.00

FAMILIAR SHORT SAYINGS OF GREAT MEN. By S. A. Bent. 5th ed. Ticknor & Co. $2.00

MODERN METHODS OF ILLUSTRATING BOOKS. By H. Trueman Wood. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S FIFTY-SEVEN RULES OF BEHAVIOUR. With an Historical Preface. By William O. Stoddard. W. H. Lawrence & Co. 40c.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, ETC., ETC. Vol. I. Compiled and Edited by John Bigelow. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by

LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY BUNK SHOP" of

A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS DO

For the people.
 The story told (in one inch of space) about

D. K.'s

SAVED in one day, by the records of sales, 864 people from further torture and suffering from

DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION.

DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, who furnish these statistics, will mail to sufferers in any part of the U. S. a large box of the D. K.'s for 50 cents, or a trial box on receipt of 25 cents.

A PUNGENT BIT OF ENGLISH.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S

ESTIMATE OF GENERAL GRANT.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS. PRICE 25 CENTS.

CUPPLES, UPHAM & CO.

333 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 AND 29 WEST 23D STREET, NEW YORK,

HAVE NOW READY

THE STORY OF PERSIA. By Hon. S. G.

W. BENJAMIN, lately United States Minister to Persia. Large 12mo, fully illustrated, $1.50. (No. XIII. Story of the Nations.)

"The present volume is a history of Persia as it has been, presenting a narrative of the most noteworthy characters and events of that ancient empire from its foundation in prehistoric times. The work differs from other histories of Persia, in giving more proportionate attention to the legendary period of her history than is usual with those who have dealt with this subject, as well as to the great career of the House of Sassan, which, in the opinion of the author, has never received full justice from those Christian historians who have undertaken a connected history of Persia."—From Author's Preface.

THE STORY OF THE NORMANS. By

SARAH O. JEWETT. Large 12mo, fully illustrated, $1.50. (No. XII. Story of the Nations.)

"Miss Jewett has studied her subject thoroughly, and gives in this volume the cream of larger and more comprehensive works."—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

"The subject is every way inviting, offering the happiest combination of history and romance. . . . The author has shown good judgment in reaching her conclusions and combining her material."—Independent.

Volumes previously published in "The Story of the Nations": Harrison's "Greece"; Gilman's "Rome"; Hosmer's "The Jews"; Kagozin's "Chaldea"; Baring-Gould's "Germany"; Boyesen's "Norway"; Hale's "Spain"; Vambéry's "Hungary"; Church's "Carthage"; Gilman's "Sarcens"; Lane-Poole's "Moors in Spain." Each one volume, illustrated, $1.50.

SOCIOLOGY. By JOHN BASCOM, President of the University of Wisconsin. Octavo, cloth, $1.50.

CHIEF CONTENTS: Custom—Government—Economics—Religion—Ethics—Ethics in its Relation to Custom and Economics—Ethical Law in Connection with Government and Religion—Social Problems—The Goal.

STUDIES IN MUSICAL HISTORY. By

LOUIS S. DAVIS. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS: A Standard of Music—Spirit of Jewish Music—The First Christian Hymn—The Mass—The Transition Period—Choral—The Organ—Outline of the Organ—Use and Influence of Bella—Color and Thought in Music—The Modern Song—Teachers and Taught—Folk Lore—The Common and Commonplace.

* Putnam's New Classified Catalogue sent on application.

Uncovering the Mummy of Rameses II.,

King of Egypt and Persecutor of the Jews in the time of Moses. Three portraits, from photographs taken on the spot, of the Great Pharaoh after he had been swathed in mummy-cloth 3,200 years; together with the full text of M. Maspero's official report, and of Brugsch-Bey's letter to the Illustrirte Zeitung, translated into English. A BROADSIDE 24 x 15 in. Post-paid, 15 cents. Cupples, Upham & Co., Publishers, BOSTON, MASS., U. S. A.

FIRST EDITIONS

Of American and British Authors. Also choice miscellaneous books. Delivered free at EXCEPTIONALLY LOW PRICES. Catalogues ready. Theo. J. Taylor, Taunton, Mass.

THE HISTORY OF MUSIC.

By EMIL NAUMANN. Translated by F. PRÄGER. Edited by the Rev. F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Mus. Doc., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford. With numerous illustrations, including reproductions of many famous manuscripts. Two large octavo volumes. Price, per set, $10.00.

"The history of music is carefully traced from unclassical times to the music of the future. No such elaborate work has heretofore been attempted."

QUIET OBSERVATIONS ON THE WAYS OF THE WORLD.

By ERASMUS WILSON. 1 vol., large 12mo, illustrated, price $2.00.

"A series of matter-of-fact, commonplace topics, treated in a philosophical manner. The style is flowing and journalistic, and the observations shrewd, as might be expected."

THE TWILIGHT OF LIFE.

Words of Counsel and Comfort for the Aged. By JOHN ELLERTON, M. A. 1 vol., 12mo, (large type), price $1.00.

THE WHOLE TRUTH.

A novel by J. H. CHADWICK. 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

"The style is crisp and unaffected, and the author holds the reader's attention to the end."

A MANUAL OF OIL PAINTING.

By the Hon. JOHN COLLIER. 1 vol., extra cloth, price $1.00.

"A practical Handbook on the Practice and Theory of Oil Painting."

THE ROMANCE OF INVENTION.

Vignettes from the Annals of Industry and Science. By JAMES BURNLEY. 1 vol., 12mo, with illustrations, price $1.50.

"The story of the many inventions that have electrified the world are here set forth, robbed of their often wearisome technicalities, and are laid before the reader in their most attractive form."

LIFE AND WORKS OF THE SEVENTH
EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K. G.

By EDWIN HODDER, with portrait. 3 vols., 8vo, extra cloth, price $7.50.

The late Anthony Ashley-Cooper, Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, was the most famous philanthropist of his time. Before his death he put all the material for his biography in the hands of a friend, and this assures us that the present work is a complete record of his beautiful life.

THE COMMON CHORD.

A Story of the Ninth Ward. By HENRY R. ELLIOT, author of "The Bassett Claim." 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

A well-known critic says of it: "Piquant, very original, and deeply interesting."

Complete Catalogue sent free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,
739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED: EDITION DE LUXE.

A TRIBUTE IN MEMORY OF
HELEN HUNT JACKSON (H. H.).

LIMITED TO

100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on India Paper.....$2.75
100 Numbered Copies, with Proofs on Satin.....$3.00
Each with wide margins, gilt edges and embossed silver cover on Whatman's paper, in boxes.

The work comprises four page illustrations (Phototype proof prints) from original negatives: 1st—A portrait of H. H. 2d—Her late residence at Colorado Springs. 3d—Her grave on Cheyenne Mountain. 4th—The Mountain itself. Each is accompanied with descriptive text by Mary Simmons Crawford of Colorado Springs, and there is also a bibliography of her works by Louis Swinburne.

AN ELEGANT SOUVENIR.

Mailed on receipt of price by

Frank S. Thayer, Publisher, Denver, Col.

POEMS.

The Lady of Dardale and Other Poems.

By HORACE EATON WALKER.

BOOK 6 1/4 x 9 inches, contains 25 illustrations, original and selected, with portrait of author, 300 poems, 606 pages, seven long poems, varying from 300 to 5,000 lines. Price $2.00. Address the publisher,

GEORGE W. BROWNE, Manchester, N. H.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

THE TRAVELERS
HARTFORD CONN.
INSURANCE COMPANY
ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT
COMPANY
OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

NEW FRENCH BOOKS.

GOOD, PURE, INTERESTING FRENCH READING.
Just Published:

LA BELLE-NIVERNAISE.

By ALPHONSE DAUDET. 18mo, 25 cents.

This charming little story, with its graphic portrayal of life on the Seine, its delicate character touches, its delightful humor and pure sentiment, is likely to render it one of the most popular of the series of Contes Choisis, of which it forms the eleventh number. It has just appeared in Paris, where it has been one of the most popular of the holiday books.

L'OMBRA.

By A. GENÈVEYRE. 12mo, 80 cents.

This is an interesting romance by an author little known in America, but well and favorably known to French readers abroad. The scene is laid in high life both in Italy and England, and the story is full of incident with strongly drawn characters—the heroine being an Italian countess who possesses a superb voice, and who is induced to use it in opera on several occasions, under the name of "L'Ombra."

LES MALHEURS DE SOPHIE.

By Mme. la Comtesse DE SEOUR. 12mo, paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.00.

This amusing child's story, which has become a classic to French children, comprises the initial number of a series to be known as Bibliothèque Choisie pour la Jeunesse, and which teachers and mothers will find excellently adapted for the entertainment or instruction of their little ones.

Catalogue of both series and full catalogue of important French books sent free on application by the publisher,

WILLIAM R. JENKINS,

500 Sixth Avenue, New York.

"Where there is a will there is a way."

The Will Power; its Range and Action.

By J. M. FOTHERGILL, M. D. Price $1 00.

"Dr. Fothergill treats of the Will in relation to the inherited character, and to self-culture, of Will and circumstance, of the Will fight, and of the Will in disease. On all the points the author writes in a very popular and instructive way."—Christian World.

"Invincible determination; a purpose once fixed and then death or victory. This quality will do anything in this world."

"It is an inspiring book, teaching persons who are doubtful or unconscious of will power how to use it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

JAMES POTT & CO., Publishers,
14 & 16 Astor Place, New York.

GRAY'S BOTANIES.

GRAY'S BOTANICAL SERIES, By Prof. ASA GRAY, of Harvard University, provides the best and most complete equipment for all classes or for special students.

GRAY'S HOW PLANTS GROW.

For Introduction $0.80

GRAY'S SCHOOL AND FIELD BOOK.

For Introduction 1.80

GRAY'S MANUAL. For Introduction . 1.62

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Two lenses 2.00

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Three lenses 2.50

Write for circulars and terms for introduction of other works in the series.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & CO.,

PUBLISHERS, 753 & 755 Broadway, New York.
149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

JOHN F. STRATTON,

Importer of all kinds of Mouth Harmonicas.
49 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 6.
WHOLE No. 319.

{ E. H. HAMES & Co., }
Publishers.

113 BOSTON, MARCH 19, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

A ROMANCE OF MOUNT DESERT.

The Jesuit's Ring.

By AUGUSTUS ALLEN HAYES.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"Mr. Hayes has certainly well fulfilled one of the first duties of a romance writer, which is to tell an interesting story. He has ingeniously combined antique legend and modern reality by a thread of connection between the Jesuit missionary settlement of Saint Sauveur and the contemporary life of Bar Harbor, and by a device, which is fanciful, but not too fantastic, he has managed to carry the romantic quality all through the diversified narrative."—N. Y. Tribune.

A Child of the Century.

By J. T. WHEELWRIGHT.

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

This novel is one of the most thoroughly enjoyable that has been published for many a year. It is in every way a story of today, of American life and character; not that portentous and ever impending event, "The Great American Novel," but a typical story of political and social life, free from cynicism or morbid realism, and brimming over with good-natured fun which is never vulgar or merely farcical. It is a full-fledged novel, too, with a well-developed plot, ending happily and satisfactorily.

The scene is laid principally in Washington, though the action begins in Boston, and is transferred to an ocean steamship, and to one or two European localities before all the characters are brought together on the stage in the national capital.

A NOTABLE WORK.

An Addition to Theodor Mommsen's History of Rome.

THE PROVINCES OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. From Caesar to Diocletian. By THEODOR MOMMSEN. Translated with the author's sanction, and additions by William P. Dickson, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Glasgow, with ten maps by Professor Klepert. 2 vols., 8vo, $6.00.

"It is the first work, in any language, which gives a perfectly clear, connected account of the vast provincial dependencies of Rome from the time of Caesar to that of Diocletian. It is a complement to every book hitherto produced about ancient Rome."—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

"It stands next to Gibbon's immortal work. . . . It is a notable historic work."—Chicago Times.

"From these volumes we can gain the most exact conception of the work performed by Rome, which we are likely to obtain at the present generation. In a word, this book goes further than any other extant, or now looked for, to provide us with a key to the mediæval history of the Mediterranean world."—N. Y. Sun.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
PUBLISHERS,
743 and 745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference.
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
881 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

HANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Nordey, and Book of Idylls, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANÇOIS STORZ. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. E. SHILLITO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan. The Sheikh of Alexandria. The Inn in the Spensart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREY'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN FIGURES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

"The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

POPULAR TALES and FICTIONS.

Their Migrations and Transformations. By W. A. CLOUSTON. Two volumes, post 8vo, upwards of 1,000 pages, half roxburgh, $10.00.

CONTENTS—Introduction: Origin and Diffusion of Popular Tales, etc.—Invisible Caps and Cloaks—Gold-Producing Animals—Adventures with Giants—Dragons and Monstrous Birds—Bird-Maidens—The Hare and the Tortoise—Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp—The Hunchback and the Fairies—The Enchanted Horse—Demon Enclosed in a Bottle; Contracts with the Evil One, etc.—Whittington and his Cat—The Three Travellers and the Loaf—Llewellyn and his Dog Gellart—The Three Knights and the Lady; The Three Hunchbacks, etc.—Chaucer's "Pardoner's Tale"—The Lucky Impostor—The Miller's Son; or, Destiny, etc.—Appendices—Full Complete Index, etc.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "IDEAL" SERIES.

"THE LAZY MINSTREL."

By J. ASHBY-STERRY. Printed on hand-made paper, with charming vignette, 16mo, vellum cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

"Quaint and droll, perfect in design and diction, light, bright and musical, these poems are the most cheerful verses we can meet with in latter-day literature."—Sheffield Weekly Telegraph.

A LOOK ROUND LITERATURE.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN. 12mo, cloth, $2.25.

"He surveys the literary field from Æschylus to Tennyson. Mr. Buchanan's pronouncements are, as might be expected, an agreeable mélange of praise and blame. His attitude is that of antagonism to what he deems the 'authorized' criticism of the day. It is gratifying to meet with the critical work of a man at once so enthusiastic and so independent. It would, indeed, have been a pity had Mr. Buchanan not given a permanent form to essays so thoughtful and so stimulating."—London Globe.

VOCABULARY OF PHILOSOPHY.

Psychological, Ethical, Metaphysical; with Quotations and References. By WILLIAM FLEMING, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of Glasgow. 4th Edition, revised and largely reconstructed by Henry Calderwood, LL. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of Edinburgh. 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.'S CHOICE BOOKS FOR EASTER PRESENTS.

THE LILY AND THE CROSS.

By E. NASSIR. 16 pages, quarto, 7x9 inches, with 8 full-page illustrations, card covers, only 75 cents; in satin covers, in box, $1.50.

SEASON SONGS AND SKETCHES,

SO POPULAR AT CHRISTMAS,

SPRING, SUMMER, AUTUMN AND WINTER.

Four volumes, small quarto, 6½ x 7½ inches. Each volume contains 32 pages of exquisitely printed monoliths, with verses appropriate to the season, and artistically printed colored cover. Each book put up in an envelope, and sold separately.

"There is scarcely a page throughout the series that does not present some design on which the eye fastens with a pleasure that often kindles into delight."—Literary World.
"Many cozier things are offered, but none fairer or more enjoyable than these."—Churchman.

EASTER THOUGHTS FROM GEORGE HERBERT.

With beautiful crayon illustrations. Square 8vo, 75 cents.

THE GATE OF PARADISE.

A Dream of Easter Eve. A new edition. Square 12mo, 50 cents.

EASTER JOY.

Cross shaped, with illuminated covers, 25 cents.

SONG OF HOPE.

By ERNEST W. SHUTLEFF. In cross shape, with illuminated covers, 25 cents.

EASTER WREATHS.

Beautifully illuminated and bound in white calf. 50 cents.

THE LILY CENSER.

Easter selections by Mrs. WALKER. 75 cents.

FAIR THOUGHTS FOR HAPPY HOURS.

Selections by Mrs. WALKER. 75 cents.

THE DAISY SEEKERS.

By W. M. L. JAY. With illustrations on each page. Square 12mo, 75 cents.

LIFE'S SUNNY SIDE.

By W. M. L. JAY. Scripture Selections and a Poem for each day of a month. 50 cents.

COMFORT CRUMBS.

A Book of Choice Extracts. 75 cents.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

Illustrated. Square 12mo, 75 cents.

THE UNKNOWN WAY.

By WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. With illustrations on each page. 12mo, 75 cents.

FRIEND TO FRIEND.

Scripture Selections and Hymns. 24mo, 50 cents.

THE CELESTIAL COUNTRY.

From the Rhythm of St. Bernard. Translated by the Rev. J. MASON NEALE, D.D. 24mo, 50 cents.

WORDS OF LOVE AND CHEER.

Scripture Selections and Hymns for each day for a month. 50 cents.

THOUGHTS FOR COMPANIONS.

Selections from Ancient and Modern Authors. 32 pages, printed in red and black. 50 cents.

SILVER STREAMS.

Illuminated Texts and Hymns for a Month. By FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. 25 cents.

SUNSHINE FOR LIFE'S PATHWAY.

Illuminated Texts and Hymns for a Month. 25 cents.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., Publishers,
31 WEST 23d ST., NEW YORK.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

MRS. WISTER'S NEW TRANSLATION.

SAINT MICHAEL.

A Romance. From the German of E. WERNER, author of "Banned and Blessed," etc. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

"Abounds in many poetical and dramatic situations; is full of military fire and energy, and has many spirited scenes, and maintains the interest of the reader."—Boston Journal.

"Werner's latest story, and the best which has been brought out in this country. It is full of life. Many of the incidents are exciting, and the characters in themselves become interesting as the romance progresses."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

TAKEN BY SIEGE.

A Novel. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

"The story deals with the living forces and events of today, and is one of the most vital and strong and keenly interesting of late novels."—Boston Evening Traveller.

UNCLE MAX.

A Novel. By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY, author of "Not Like Other Girls," etc. 16mo, half cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

"Like all the previous stories by this author, 'Uncle Max' is refined, artistic, and decidedly fascinating. The situations are strong, the plot skillfully developed, and, above all, there is a purity of style and substance which makes the book elevating as well as interesting."—Baltimore Evening News.

ON BOTH SIDES.

By Miss FANNY COURTENAY BAYLOR. Containing "The Perfect Treasure" and "On This Side," the whole forming a complete story. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

"No such faithful, candid, kindly, brilliant and incisive presentation of English and American types has before been achieved. The wit of the story is considerable. It is the best international novel that either side has hitherto produced. It is written by an American woman who really knows both countries, and who has shown that she possesses powers which ought to put her in the front rank of fiction."—New York Tribune.

"A novel entertaining from beginning to end, with brightness that never falls flat, that always suggests something beyond the mere amusement, that will be most enjoyed by those of most cultivation, that is clever, keen, and intellectual enough to be recognized as genuine wit, and yet good-natured and amiable enough to be accepted as the most delightful humor. It is infinitely good as a rendering of the peculiarities of British and of American nature and training, while it is so perfectly free from anything like ridicule that the victims would be the first to smile."—The Critic.

MY RECITATIONS.

By CORA URQUHART POTTER (Mrs. James Brown Potter). 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00; cloth, gilt edges, $1.25.

One of the most famous women in America at present is Mrs. James Brown Potter; and her book, "My Recitations," is one of the best selling books of the season, not only because its author's name is a household word in our midst, but also because she is known to be the best of American in elocutionists, and a collection of pieces which have obtained her approval must be a valuable one to all readers, either amateur or professional.

"Some of the old standard favorites appear, but the poems are largely those that are rare, or which are rendered so because rather difficult of access. The book will make itself a standard favorite."—Boston Traveller.

"It is seldom that a reader intrusts her selections to public use, and Mrs. Potter, in doing so intentionally, merits the public's appreciative thanks. The poems have been gathered with a taste that makes each of both elocutionary and literary value."—Boston Globe.

* For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Pub'rs,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

HALF-HOURS

WITH THE Best American Authors.

Selected and arranged by Charles Morris.

Four Crown Octavo Volumes. Cloth, Gilt Top,
$6.00. Half Morocco, $10.00. Three-quarters calf, 12.00.

The best samples from every American author of note in history, poetry, art and philosophy are grouped here, so that the reader can take up any one of the four volumes, and, turning at random, find something particularly meritorious to entertain him.

Extracts from the Press.

"A more complete collection of gems from the works of the best authors cannot be imagined than is contained in these four volumes. The selections are well chosen, and it is just the book to be popular, because it gives an idea of the best style of our many popular authors."—Baltimore American.

"Among the most successful publications of the times are works of compilations, and of the works of this character none was ever better fitted to meet the public demand than 'Half-Hours with the Best American Authors.' It is a book over which every American book-lover must rejoice. Gems have been gathered from every department of literature, and have been edited with a taste and refinement fitting their own high character."—Meadville Chautauquan.

"Here the brightest story-tellers, the cleverest descriptive writers, and the most musical poets all find a place. It is needless to point out that the cream of many books is here, and that the volumes are a mine of entertainment to one fond of good literature."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Also an Edition De Luxe,

LIMITED TO 100 COPIES.

FOUR OCTAVO VOLUMES, PRINTED ON RICH ANTIQUE PAPER, WITH WIDEMARGINS AND UNCUT EDGES.

* For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, transportation paid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, MARCH 19, 1887. No. 6.

CONTENTS.

AN INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGY	83
TWO WORKS ON BRAZIL	83
CATHEDRAL DAYS IN SOUTHERN ENGLAND	83
A NEW EDITION OF FRANKLIN	84
THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS	84
THE MILWAUKEE CATALOGUE	85
MINOR FICTION:
The Merry Men, and Other Tales and Fables	85
Some Chinese Ghosts	85
MINOR NOTICES:
Roba di Roma	86
Etc., Etc., Etc.
ENGLISH OPINIONS	87
PARAGRAPHS	88
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	88
THE LATE MRS. EWING	89
ORIGINAL POETRY:
To a Fop By Edgar Fawcett	89
Place au Rossignol? By H. S.	89
LITERATURE IN BRAZIL	90
A ROMAN MAGAZINE	90
OTHER PERIODICALS	91
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Sundry Notes and Queries	91
NOTES AND QUERIES. 812-817	92
NEWS AND NOTES	92
NECROLOGY	93
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	93

AN INTRODUCTION TO PSYCHOLOGY.*

THIS latest work of the acute and vigorous professor of philosophy in Boston University is an exposition of the principles of psychology, not a compilation of the facts of the science. Much less is it a treatise on "the new psychology" of the physiological laboratory, for which Prof. Bowne expresses much less admiration than is just now the fashion. Psychology is an affair of the human consciousness, and one of the author's best characterizations is that of the "anthropomorphism in biology," which deludes itself with the idea of great light upon the human mind, gained in studying animal intelligence. Prof. Bowne first attends to the factors of the mental life separately, discussing the self, the subject of that life, sensation, the mechanism of reproduction, and other familiar matters. Part second handles the factors in combination in perception, the forms of reproduction, and the thought process. Two chapters on the interaction of soul and body, and sleep and abnormal mental phenomena, close the work.

Prof. Bowne's judgment on spiritism, telepathy, and kindred phenomena may interest our readers:

We have never known a single case of these extraordinary powers, processes, and events which on examination did not resolve itself either into vulgar trickery, or into a thoughtless magnifying of the commonplace into the marvelous.

This introduction is one of the best pieces of work yet done in psychology by an American writer of the intuition school, and may especially be commended to the disciples of Mill and Spencer as one of the keenest discussions yet made of their prevailing doctrines. Prof. Bowne's vivacity, which makes his books on philosophical subjects such easy reading, though much reduced from its degree in his earlier works, sometimes carries him too far; and he has too much bias against Spencer to do justice to the latter's best work in psychology; but for all who wish to read both sides, and know what the school of intuition has to say for itself through one of its ablest writers, this introduction will be highly profitable.

TWO WORKS ON BRAZIL.

SOME people know a thing. Some other people only know about it. This radical difference in the principle of knowledge is to be noted to the advantage of both of the authors whose works on Brazil are now in hand. Both of them know the country not only by actual residence but by careful and close observation. Their works have been made not in libraries out of other men's works, but out of personal immediate acquaintance and study under peculiar advantages. And yet there was difference enough in the position of the two men, in their relation to their common subject, in their way of approaching it, to make a difference in their ways of treating it, and to give individuality and character to each. Furthermore there is a considerable difference in bulk, and the two works are therefore to be contrasted rather than compared.

Mr. Wells¹ is an English engineer. Some seventeen years ago he was sent out to Brazil on professional service in the interest of projected railway lines, and spent a long time in the thorough and adventurous exploration of the interior, traversing a route of something like 3,000 miles in length, and collecting, besides the materials for a highly picturesque narrative, a great mass of statistics and data respecting geography, climate, agriculture, mines, manufactures, finance, and commerce, all of which are here presented in solution, so to speak, the vehicle being an extremely readable account of his experiences from Rio to Maranhao, as on horseback or on foot he scaled the mountains and threaded the valleys, now boating it on a favoring river, now pushing through a swampy forest, and dealing by turns with Indians, mules, rattlesnakes, bees, gipsies, mosquitoes, wild cattle, untrustworthy servants, fevers, heat, floods, storms, squatters, anacondas, cockroaches, jaguars, Jesuit priests, Protestant missionaries, sand flies, and alligators. The landscape is almost Central African; the experiences are almost Livingstonian. The interior of Brazil has, of course, a civilization, but nature is still rank and life is rude; the explorer's progress is hindered by a tangle, and his story is made always romantic and sometimes thrilling by the dangers and hardships through which he passes.

Mr. Andrews,* on the other hand, is an ex-Consul General from the United States to Brazil, who, on arriving in Rio in 1882, set himself diligently to work to study up the land to which he had been sent, and its people; and his single volume of 344 pages is the result. Mr. Andrews did not abide in Rio. He too penetrated the interior, as far at least as to personally inspect a coffee-plantation, and his twenty chapters are crowded with information respecting life in Rio, the difficulties and enjoyments of house-keeping, the Emperor and his administration, public instruction, literature and religion, agriculture, stock-raising, and the inducements to immigration.

Mr. Wells's two volumes of nearly 800 pages perhaps do not cover more ground as respects the social and political condition and prospects of Brazil, but they tell the reader a much longer and more picturesque tale with a greater element of personal interest; and the maps and numerous illustrations, from sketches and photographs, with the generally beautiful typography (the work is of English manufacture though bearing a Philadelphia imprint), give the work an uncommonly inviting aspect. One needs time for two such volumes, but they are well worth the expenditure.

Both Mr. Wells and Mr. Andrews agree in the impressions they give us of Brazil; as being a vast and fertile land, full of unworked resources, burdened with many disabilities belonging to an unenlightened civil and ecclesiastical rule, but beginning now to feel the awakening touch of the times, offering many promises to capital, intelligence, and energy, and opening her doors widely to the enterprise of England and the United States.

¹ Brazil: its Condition and Prospects. By C. C. Andrews. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

CATHEDRAL DAYS IN SOUTHERN ENGLAND.*

IT is some time since a more thoroughly delightful book of its kind than this has fallen into our hands. It is one of the unexpected books, too, and the surprise of it heightens its charm. We have known nothing of its author previously, yet she writes with a matured and finished style, with firmness and delicacy, and under a reserve of power. The subject, of course, is not new, but Mrs. Dodd has handled it with freshness, and few readers, with a taste for rambles among the picturesque, the venerable, and the historic, will be able to resist the spell which pervades the book from beginning to end, a spell to which the lovely

* Introduction to Psychological Theory. By Borden P. Bowne. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

¹ Exploring and Traveling Three Thousand Miles through Brazil from Rio Janeiro to Maranhao. By James W. Wells. Illustrated. 2 vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $4.00.

* Cathedral Days: A Tour through Southern England. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Illustrated by E. Eldon Deane. Roberts Brothers. $2.00.

English landscape, cathedral architecture, the interest attaching to old towns, and the romantic pleasures of a drive with one's own hired pony and trap have all contributed.

Mr. and Mrs. Dodd are Americans. They were in London, in the latter end of June, when the idea came to them of making a six weeks' carriage tour through the cathedral towns of Southern England. The resolution was soon taken. A swift train bore them to Arundel, that most beautiful of the Sussex towns, and at Arundel, with its pretty river, its ancient Elizabethan streets, its splendid castle, its fine old parochial church, and its new little Roman Catholic cathedral, the excursion proper began.

The route of the happy pair (was it their wedding journey?) lay through Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Somerset, into Devon, taking in Chichester, Winchester, Salisbury, Wells, and Exeter for cathedral towns, and Slindon and Bognor on the Sussex coast, Goodwood with its racing courses, Romsey with its grand old abbey, Stonehenge, Bath, and Glastonbury among the points of minor interest. Their horse, whom they christened "Ballad," was no unimportant member of the expedition, and his eccentricities and weaknesses, his difficulties in getting down hill and his reluctances in getting up, are depicted with a good deal of humor. Next to "Ballad" in point of picturesqueness stand the landlords and the landladies, the butlers and the barmaids, the hostlers and the trades people whom our excursionists encounter by the way, some of whom Mrs. Dodd sketches to the life. There is everywhere a genuine and spontaneous love of nature, a joy in forest drive and meadow pathway, an ear for the gurgling river and an eye for the wayside flower; and there are not many books which put so vividly before the imagination the realities of English scenery, whether it be the bleak monotony of Salisbury Plain, the rich farms of Somerset, or the somber dales of Devon. The villages and hamlets are lovingly portrayed, the quaint old inns are entered with sympathy and respect, and throughout the book there is a genial spirit of appreciation towards what is good and best in rural England, with patience and kindness of feeling towards faults and evils. It is a picture which makes one long to look upon the reality; rose-colored, a little? Perhaps so; but after all there is no land just like Old England.

The five great cathedrals mentioned, in their architecture, atmosphere, and history, are, of course, the foremost objects in these pages, and seldom have they been more intelligently, sympathetically, or eloquently described. No one who has not seen Durham, York, and Canterbury can be said to have seen the cathedrals of England; still Winchester and Salisbury, Exeter and Wells, have each their grandeur and beauty, their own individual character and recognized claim on our admiration; and even Chichester pleads a unique variety in design and presents alone among English churches the distinction of a campanile on which to base a title to rank. Mrs. Dodd combines architectural sense, historical knowledge, and æsthetic feeling in good proportions, and withal describes so prettily, so pleasantly, so brightly, all that she saw, as to make her companionship most delightful. Her single departure from good taste is on p. 319; but we can easily pardon that to the general high refinement and otherwise unblemished beauty of the book, upon the publication of which we congratulate our readers.

A NEW EDITION OF FRANKLIN.*

NOTE.

Principal Collections of Franklin's Writings.

- 1771. Letters on Electricity to Peter Collinson. Pamphlet form.
- 1752. The same enlarged.
- 1754. " " "
- 1766. " " " into a quarto volume of 500 pp.
- 1799. Political, Miscellaneous, and Philosophical Pieces. Edited by Benjamin Vaughan, and containing titles included in Collinson's collection. London.
- 1793. The Works of Franklin. London: 2 vols. 8vo. Containing a fragment of the autobiography translated from a French version (Paris: 1791).
- 1794. A German edition, substantially a translation of the preceding. Weimar.
- 1798. A French collection, including fragments of the memoirs.
- 1806. A London edition of the works, more voluminous than any preceding. Edited by Marshall.
- 1817-19. The Wm. Temple Franklin Edition. London: 3 vols. 4to. Reprinted with additions in Philadelphia, in 6 vols. 8vo.
- 1836-42. The Jared Sparks Edition, Boston. 10 vols. 8vo. "The most meritorious and thorough specimen of book-editing which, up to that time, had been executed in this country" [Bigelow].
- 1887. The John Bigelow Edition.

IT is easy to be persuaded that Mr. John Bigelow's new edition of the Works of Benjamin Franklin, of which the first volume is now published, is to be the most nearly complete, the most scholarly and accurate, the definitive edition. Mr. Bigelow is confessedly the foremost living authority on Franklin. Beside all the material now in print, carefully collated for the present purpose, so far as possible, with the original manuscripts, he has had free use of the supplementary Franklin MSS. purchased by our State Department in 1881, and not published heretofore, and the autobiography has been printed for the first time in any collected edition of Franklin's Works, from the original manuscript, which is in Mr. Bigelow's possession. Mr. Bigelow promises upwards of 350 letters and documents which have never appeared in any previous collection, beside a thorough revision of the text throughout, and a new, chronological, arrangement of matter. The notes and other editorial additions are limited strictly to the illustration of the text. The following paragraph from Mr. Bigelow's is too good not to be quoted:

* The Complete Works of Benjamin Franklin. Edited by John Bigelow. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Vol. I. $5.00.

Though a voluminous writer, and one of the great masters of English expression, Franklin wrote habitually with a single eye to immediate practical results. He never posed for posterity. Of all the writings to which he mainly owes his present fame, it would be difficult to name one which he gave to the press himself or of which he saw the proofs. Yet he never wrote a dull line nor many which a century of time has robbed of their interest or value. Whatever he wrote seems to have been conceived upon a scale which embraced the whole human race as well as the individual or class to whom it was specifically addressed, the one evidence of true greatness which never deceives nor misleads. If he wrote to his wife, it was more or less a letter from every husband to his wife; if to his daughter, it was a letter that any daughter would be pleased to receive from her father; if to a philosopher or a statesman, there was always that in the manner and the matter of it which time cannot stale, and which will be read by every statesman and philosopher with the sort of interest they would have felt had it been addressed personally to them.

The form selected by the publishers for this edition is a large octavo, with gilt tops, and uncut edges at front and bottom. The binding is a back of dark-brown leather or "leatherette," and sides of wine-colored cloth, a library style of elegant simplicity, substantial and attractive. This first volume contains a steel engraving by Hall of the Duplessis portrait, and 523 pages of text, of which nearly the first 300 are filled with the autobiography. The miscellaneous papers which follow include the "Articles of Beliefs and Acts of Religion," the "Rules for a Club Established for Mutual Improvement," a number of essays and letters, a disquisition on "Causes of Earthquakes," which is pertinent reading at this moment, and the curious description (with drawings) of the "New Invented Pennsylvania Fire-Places," or Franklin stoves, as they are more commonly now called.

The edition is printed from type, and but 600 copies are offered for sale. It will probably be taken up as quickly as the Hamilton.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.*

THIS concluding installment of The Greville Memoirs is not at all equal to the first two parts in interest and value. It covers, it is true, an important period in English history. The relations with France at the re-establishment of the empire; the Crimean War; the Indian Mutiny; the war in China; and the Italian War—all these momentous events came within the range of the last eight years of Mr. Greville's journalizing. But the bulk of the book is taken up with the seamy side of politics—with the making and unmaking of cabinets, with comments on men and measures, with gossip concerning the progress of this and that diplomatic negotiation. Of course some light is thrown on points that have hitherto been concealed from the public eye. We get new views of several leading statesmen. The memory of Lord John Russell, for instance, is likely to benefit a good deal by Mr. Greville's revelations; and that of Lord Aberdeen is to some degree cast into shadow. Yet we find, as the chronicle goes on, that the author is withdrawing more and more from active political life. He gives us little of his own impressions; many of his opinions are drawn from hearsay. Here and there we come upon passages of great merit; these are mostly obituary notices, but they are, as all readers of the Memoirs will recollect, models of style and marvels of condensed expression. But taken together, they form only a small portion of the whole volume. The author himself felt this keenly. In 1857 he notes his "total ignorance of all political subjects," owing to the cessation of social relations with friends from whom he had been in the habit of drawing information, and from then onward the narrative is more and more broken by long gaps of silence.

* The Greville Memoirs (Third and Concluding Part): A Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria from 1852 to 1860. By the late Charles C. F. Greville, Esq. Edited by Henry Reeve. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.

One of the best things in the book is the notice of Frederick Lamb (p. 30); it is too extended for quotation here. We have a glimpse through Lady Lyttelton's eyes of the Queen as "very fond" of her children, but "a strict disciplinarian in her family," and of the Prince of Wales (1853) as "extremely shy and timid, with very good principles, and particularly an exact observer of truth." The King of Sardinia, on his visit to Windsor Castle, is depicted as "a great, strong, burly, athletic man, brusque in his manners, unrefined in his conversation, very loose in his conduct, and very eccentric in his habits." In 1857 Mr. Greville heard Mr. Spurgeon preach, and found him to be "certainly very remarkable, and undeniably a very fine character; not remarkable in person, in face rather resembling a smaller Macaulay." On the death of the poet Rogers, Mr. Greville writes:

He was an old man when I first made his acquaintance between thirty and forty years ago, or probably more. He was then very agreeable, though peculiar and eccentric; he was devoured by a morbid vanity, and could not endure any appearance of indifference or slight in society. He was extremely touchy, and always wanted to be flattered, but above all to be listened to, very angry and mortified when he was not the principal object in society, and provoked to death when the uproarious merriment of Sydney Smith or the voluminous talk of Macaulay overwhelmed him and engrossed the company: he had a great friendship, nevertheless, for Sydney Smith, but he never liked Macaulay. I never pretended, or could pretend, to be a rival to him, but I was not a patient and attentive listener to him, and that was what affronted him and caused his dislike to me as well as to any one else of whom he had the same reason to complain. . . . He was undoubtedly a very clever and accomplished man, with a great deal of taste and knowledge of the world, in the best of which he had passed his life. He was hospitable, generous, and charitable, with some weaknesses, many merits, and large abilities, and he was the last survivor of the generation to which he belonged.

The notice of Macaulay is eulogistic, although he is blamed for his failure to modify his harsh judgment of Penn in the face of irrefragable evidence.

Nothing was more remarkable in Macaulay than the natural way in which he talked, never for the sake of display or to manifest his superior powers and knowledge. On the contrary, he was free from any assumption of superiority over others, and seemed to be impressed with the notion that those he conversed with knew as much as himself, and he was always quite as ready to listen as to talk. "Don't you remember?" he was in the habit of saying, when he quoted some book or alluded to some fact to listeners who could not remember, because in nineteen cases out of twenty they had never known or heard of, whatever it was he alluded to. I do not believe anybody ever left his society with any feeling of mortification, except that which an involuntary comparison between his knowledge and their own ignorance could not fail to engender.

THE MILWAUKEE CATALOGUE.

Systematic Catalogue of the Public Library of Milwaukee. [Milwaukee: 1885-86. 8vo, 1x pp., 1,672 columns, 34 pp.]

Mr. Linderfelt's Systematic Catalogue of the Public Library of Milwaukee (1885) deserves a more extended examination than can be here given. It is of portly, almost of august, appearance; the type is attractive, and the errors are only numerous enough to prove again that it is human to err, especially in the making of catalogues, a profession in which the most one can hope to accomplish is to reduce his percentage of misdoings to a minimum. It is no new thing to attempt the classification of human knowledge, but it always evidences an immense courage and self-confidence. Most of the larger libraries of this country, where the public utility of books has been brought to its highest development, have rejected nice theories of classification, and have fallen back upon the simpler and less pretentious dictionary system. We should like to reason together with Mr. Linderfelt on the merits of the two methods, but we can open the case only to close it by taking up one point of comparison. Suppose that somebody wants a book on military hygiene. If he is an educated person he will know the name of the author. In the dictionary catalogue he will find what he wants directly under that heading in its alphabetical order; he cannot, of course, do this directly in a classified catalogue. Perhaps the title only is remembered; in a place like the Boston Public Library there will very likely be a title-entry; in the other system this is out of the question. The "general reader," however, will know neither title nor author. In a dictionary catalogue he will turn, if he is wise, perhaps straight to military hygiene, and will be rewarded. If not so expert, he will look under hygiene whence he will be referred immediately to the allied subject. There is a chance that army hygiene will be looked for; in that event, the searcher will be told to see military hygiene. This is all, and very simple it is. What does Mr. Linderfelt do for this reader? In his synopsis of classification, without which guide the way would be murky enough, there is no recognition of either military or army hygiene. Under hygiene the reader is referred to column 613, turning to which he finds that hygiene is division third of medicine and surgery, which in itself is division second of useful arts, which is division VII in the general schematization. This is as bad as the "begats" in Chronicles. He has not yet found his book; for that he must look under a subdivision of hygiene entitled "Men, Women, and Children," and at last, multo jactatus, the exhausted man finds one book on the subject he is after. This is Mr. Linderfelt's way; some other man would have classified this subject of military hygiene in some other way, perhaps not so simply. Cataloguing, like true medicine, is an empirical science, its theories must never come before its facts. The wise librarian and the wise physician will not hesitate to try the humblest methods if such will give the best results. It is but justice to Mr. Linderfelt to say that his volume has an author index, and a synopsis of classification; but however excellent and complete they may be, they do not give information at first hand, as will a well-constructed dictionary catalogue. Dr. Billings, who has been deservedly honored of late by a Doctorate of Laws for his eminence in bibliography and in medicine, prefers to adhere to the dictionary system in his immense Index Catalogue of the Library of the Surgeon-General's Office, United States Army, although here, if ever, a scientific classification would seem desirable.

MINOR FICTION.

The Merry Men and Other Tales and Fables. By Robert Louis Stevenson. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.]

Six tales are collected in Mr. Stevenson's new volume, and only one of them, the first one, "The Merry Men," will satisfy the expectations of readers of Kidnapped and Treasure Island. Even that one is an incomplete satisfaction, since after exciting the imagination and raising curiosity to a high pitch it breaks off suddenly and ends nowhere. But the power with which it is written is singular and immense; the picture of the Island of Aros, of Grisapol and Sandag Bay, is weirdly impressive, and the old wrecker and the wrecks are so managed as to lay the foundations for a story of exceptional fascination. The scene is among the craggy islands on the west of Scotland; the "Merry Men" are a group of breakers that have tossed their arms in exulting phrensy over many a brave ship's loss. Mr. Stevenson has drawn no figure more effective than that of Uncle Darnaway going crazy over his part in the tragedies that have been enacted on his iron-bound shore. As for the other five stories in the book, "Markheim" has appeared before, and once was enough; "Thrawn Janet" is a capital ghost story in Scotch dialect; "Will o' the Mill" is an unsubstantial German phantasy; "Olalla" is a Spanish horror of madness and fruitless affection; and "The Treasure of Franchard" is a French comedy with little or no meaning.

Some Chinese Ghosts. By Lafcadio Hearn. [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.]

Mr. Lafcadio Hearn of New Orleans has been roaming in the lands of Chinese fancy, and brings back (in this little book) a half dozen specimen flowers of the plants that grow there. Curious flowers they are, unlike anything we are accustomed to, odd in form and highly colored, and with a perfume which is heavy rather than agreeable. There are magnolias and magnolias; these Chinese ghost stories may be magnolias, but they are not of the pleasant variety. To drop the figure, there is some beauty to these stories, but we do not like them. Their beauty is in their style, rather than in their subjects or sentiments. There is a community between the first and the sixth, and between the second and the fifth; the third and fourth stand by themselves. In the first, "The Soul of the Great Bell," the metals employed in casting a great bell refuse to unite "until the flesh of a maiden be melted in the crucible; until the blood of a virgin be mixed with the metals in their fusion." And the daughter of the bell founder, knowing that her father's life depends upon his success, flings herself as a sacrifice into the seething molten sea. In the sixth, "The Tale of the Porcelain God," a potter, baffled in a hundred trials to produce "a vase having the tint and aspect of living flesh," throws himself in a similar spirit of consecration into the firing oven. Here, certainly, is a poetic moral. In the second and fifth tales, "The Story of Ming-Y," and "The Tradition of the Tea Plant," we are taken into the penetralia of the temple of voluptuous delights; the compositions are such as should not have been admitted into a book intended, as this is, for popular reading. Neither one is suitable for inspection except as a curiosity of literature. The third and fourth stories in the series, "The Legend of Tchi-Niu" and "The Return of Yen-Tchin-King," are the purest and sweetest of all, the former relating a marriage between a human and a spirit wife, and the latter a subject's heroic fidelity to his king. Some high ideals appear in these fanciful tales, accompanied with conceptions of refined and gilded animalism; the whole dressed in language often of exquisite beauty. But the book as a book is hardly a profitable one.

MINOR NOTICES.

Roba di Roma. By William Wetmore Story. 2 vols. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.]

This book of walks and talks about Rome, by an American long resident there, is in its 25th year, and begins to have a history and bibliographical interest. It first appeared, we believe, in London, in 1862. Even then Mr. Story had been living in Rome for something like fourteen years, and his writing was no record of hasty impressions, nor was it any outpour of youthful enthusiasm, since the author was then upwards of 40. Place an intelligent American in Rome, an American who has the poet's voice and the sculptor's hand, settle him there, acclimate him, give him time to see, meditate, and assimilate, then ask a book of him, and what may we not expect? A literary result which, as Roba di Roma has done, becomes a classic among descriptions of classic scenes. The preface to the sixth edition of the work is dated as far back as 1870. The preface to the eighth edition is not dated at all. It ought to have been. The present edition, eighth or later, is in two small but clearly printed volumes aggregating 616 pages, of which 12 are index. Rome and Italy have undergone great changes since this work has been in the hands of the public, and what Mr. Story saw and pictured a generation ago will never be seen again. We congratulate those of our readers who have before them for the first time the pleasure of perusing these fascinating pages. The accent of the singer, the touch of the artist, is in them all.

In Mrs. Margaret J. Preston's Handful of Monographs we find some twenty-five short pieces, mostly in prose, suggested by a recent excursion to Europe. The prose articles are always pleasantly, sometimes effectively, descriptive of scenes among the Alps, in Germany and France, and in England. "The Best Thing in Paris" was one of the meetings of the McAll Mission. "The Quaintest City in England" is Chester, but that is a conventional estimate. "Alpenglow at Chamouny" is a glowing picture. Antwerp, we must remind Mrs. Preston, is not in Holland, but in Belgium; and we should like to know if she really means that she "gave way to fits of laughter" before some of the monuments in Westminster Abbey. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00.]

Mr. Rolfe's edition of Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel gives the text of that poem, purified by all possible means, in 128 pp., illustrated with wood-cuts from Ticknor's holiday edition; and, following it, upwards of 110 pages of notes, with a list of words explained and a useful map of "Scott-Land." The convenience of the book for students is obvious and marked, and it is certain to find wide use. Great gratitude is due to Mr. Rolfe for the service he is rendering in facilitating and popularizing acquaintance with what is best in English literature. [Ticknor & Co. 40c.]

The Bishops in the Tower is the title selected by Canon Luckock of Ely, England, for a series of eight discourses first preached, now printed, on those events in England in the 17th century, in the reigns of Charles II and James III, which established ecclesiastical disabilities, and which had their climax in the imprisonment and trial in 1688 of seven bishops who had resisted James's proclamation of professed liberty of conscience in religion. The lectures are offered as a contribution towards present harmonizing and unifying influences between the Church of England and dissenting bodies. [T. Whittaker. $1.50.]

No minister of any liturgical body of Christians, and no student of the history and science of Christian worship, can afford to do without Burbridge's Liturgies and Offices of the Church; a scholarly, judicial, and valuable exposition of the sources of the Book of Common Prayer; a thoroughly historical and scientific exposition of the whole subject of liturgies from the standpoint of the Church of England. [T. Whittaker. $2.50.]

There is pleasant reading for the people in Mrs. Griswold's Home Life of Great Authors. It is a collection of short descriptive chapters, with illustrative extracts, about Goethe, Wordsworth, Scott, Byron, Irving, Emerson, Longfellow, and others among the dead, and Tennyson, Whittier, Holmes, Browning, Ruskin, and others among the living. There is little or no criticism in the book; there is appreciation, sympathy, affectionate interest; every author is taken at the best, and sketched in personality and surroundings. The book is one to interest people who are making their acquaintance with the literature of the present century. [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.]

The Sketches from My Life, by the late Admiral Hobart Pasha, are the personal reminis-cences of a brave and adventurous Englishman, who had a rough start in life in the British navy, cruised pretty much all over the world, caught sharks, fought yellow-fever, chased slaves, ran the blockade off Charleston in the Civil War, and served Turkey in the war with Russia. Horrors are related without flinching, and some scenes described are enough to make one's blood curdle. But so true and faithful a narrative deserves more than paper covers. [D. Appleton & Co. 50c.]

The two latest additions to the Famous Women Series are Eliza Clarke's Susanna Wesley, and Miss A. Mary F. Robinson's Margaret of Angoulême. Some things in the Wesley we have not liked, though the subject is full of interest, and the personality presented is strong and picturesque. The treatment is not always refined and delicate. Every reader of our London correspondence will know what to expect in Miss Robinson's account of Margaret, Queen of Navarre. Margaret is one of the most interesting of 16th century portraits, with her romantic personal history, her literary tastes and productions, and her relations to Protestantism. A full description of the Heptameron, with extracts, occupies two chapters. Of her other literary works little is said, but, as Miss Robinson observes, she will be remembered for her mercy and her magnanimity, not for her poems and novels. The book has no index. [Roberts Brothers. Each $1.00.]

The Passages from the Unpublished Manuscripts of William Ellery Channing, which have been selected and published under the editorship of his granddaughter, Grace Ellery Channing, are invariably brief, seldom more than a single sentence, or possibly two or three sentences grouped into a single paragraph. They are arranged in some fifty different groups, but this classification by topics is sometimes arbitrary. They have a wide range, from politics and social themes up into the higher regions of moral and spiritual truth, and on, in fact, into the remote realm of pure philosophy. Some of these sayings are striking and suggestive, others are commonplace. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.]

From Denver, Col., comes a tiny vest-pocket-book of George Washington's Fifty-Seven Rules of Behavior, with a short historical preface by W. O. Stoddard. The spirit of these maxims is that of the 13th chapter of St. Paul's 1st Epistle to the Corinthians; their manner is not unlike that of Mr. Bunce's Don't; their style has the quaintness of the period of their author; and obedience to them would transform Denver, or any other place, into a social paradise. [W. H. Lawrence & Co. 40c.]

Rev. F. E. Clark, pastor of the Phillips Congregational Church at South Boston, Mass., is well known in New England as a promoter of the religious life among young people. His book on Young People's Prayer-Meetings has nineteen chapters on the theory and practice of such meetings, and a list of 1,500 topics therefor drawn from many sources. No book like this can "make" a prayer-meeting, but its suggestions may be found helpful by the "awkward squad." [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00.]

Mr. Samuel Arthur Bent has fitted out Longfellow's Golden Legend with a good accompaniment of notes, historical, descriptive, and critical, making a simply printed book in the "Riverside Literature Series." This poem is a wonderful medieval picture, and Mr. Bent's notes bring to the front a great mass of curious and interesting historic detail. Classes in English literature have here a new and helpful text-book. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 40c.]

The leading subjects of the fourth volume in Messrs. Matthews and Hutton's Series of Actors and Actresses of Great Britain and the United States are Macready and Forrest (with an account of the great Astor place riot in New York), Charlotte Cushman and Helen Faucit (the latter now Lady Martin), E. L. Davenport and E. A. Sothorn, Fechter and Matilda Heron. [Cassell & Co. $1.50.]

Matthew Arnold's Estimate of General Grant, reprinted from an English periodical, is simply a review of Grant's Memoirs, written with Mr. Arnold's fault-finding pen, though with more leniency toward the subject than might be expected. [Cupples, Upham & Co. 25c.]

Mr. James A. Dupee, whose Memorial makes a little book of 54 pages, was a Boston boy, a State street banker, and a Lowell manufacturer, a Unitarian and a Democrat, a man of great executive capacity, many virtues, and cultivated tastes, including a love of books, who filled up a life of 67 years with multiplied services to corporations, and died in honor. [Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.00.]

Hannah More Johnson's book About Mexico, Past and Present, does not seem to be based at all upon direct personal knowledge. As a compilation from other works it is intelligent, comprehensive, and well written. Of its 25 chapters, 21 are historical, 4 only descriptive, and 2 of these are devoted to the religious development of the people. There are numerous woodcuts of fair quality. [Presbyterian Board. $1.50.]

Mr. Samuel Arthur Bent's dictionary of the Familiar Short Sayings of Great Men has reached a fifth edition, which appears revised and enlarged, but in a more compact form than before. The original work was reviewed on p. 27 of our 14th volume. The enlargement consists of about 50 pages of "Addenda," devoted to the "sayings" of Carlyle, President Cleveland, Emerson, Gladstone, Lincoln, Schiller, Webster, Bishop Wilberforce, and a few others. This dictionary differs from others in placing each "familiar saying" in its historical setting, so that we know who its author was, and what were the circumstances under which it was uttered. Its place is unique on the reference shelf, and its place is as well wrought out as it is ingenious. [Ticknor & Co. $2.00.]

Stern's United States Calendar for Full 200 Years enables one, by means of a series of tables, to tell the day of the week of any date from 1770 to 1970. Its principle is perfectly simple, and its convenience and uses are obvious. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.]

The first noticeable thing about the Rev. John Ellerton's "words of counsel and comfort for the aged," The Twilight of Life, is that the book is printed in very large type, so as to be easily readable by old eyes. The second thing is the intellectual and rational substance which underlies its religious forms, so that it is something more than a commonplace essay on sacred themes, namely, real and strong meat for those who have been accustomed in spiritual matters to a "good table." Pious grandfathers and grandmothers, with spectacles, will welcome Mr. Ellerton's book. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.]

In Mr. Alton's Among the Law Makers there is a good deal of information about the Capitol at Washington, and the life of Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled, but there is also a good deal of unimportant detail about the author, who was a page in the Senate Chamber, and writes out of his reminiscences of four years of service in that capacity. The book is large, illustrated, handsome, and "smartly" written. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.]

Mr. Richard J. Cleveland, whose sea-faring life of well-nigh three quarters of a century, as related in his journals and letters, forms the subject of the book entitled Voyages of a Merchant Navigator, was a fine specimen of his class, a class that once gave distinction to American commerce. He was born in Salem, Mass., and his life stretched from 1773 to 1860. He sailed all over the globe, traded in China, India, England, and the Continent, South America, and the islands of the Pacific, and died as full of honor for his character and successes, as he was full of years. There was some adventure in his life, some romance, but nothing sensational or startling, and the interest in the story of it is of a quiet sort. [Harper & Brothers. $1.25.]

Pausanias's Descriptions of Greece has been translated into English by Mr. Shilleto, a scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, England, furnished with notes and an index, and published as two volumes in the convenient Bohn's Library. This is not the first translation, one having been made by Thomas Taylor nearly a hundred years ago. Pausanias lived in the second century before Christ, traveled extensively and observingly through Greece, and wrote of it comprehensively, minutely, and accurately, and with occasional touches of humor. The two books of his Descriptions are especially a mine of information with regard to art, monuments, and mythology. [Scribner & Welford. $4.00.]

Miss Juliet Corson's Practical American Cookery is a more thorough work of its class than one meets with every day, being based on a large mass of information systematically collected from all parts of the country, having a Part I of 162 pages devoted to the general principles, sanitary, hygienic, and æsthetic, of food and feeding, and a Part II of more than 400 pages filled with recipes. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.]

Dr. Heman Dyer's Records of an Active Life are the justifiable autobiography of a widely known and highly esteemed American clergyman, of the Church protestant and episcopal, and of the conservative and evangelical school therein, who has rendered long and faithful service in its educational and missionary institutions, has been honored with an election to the episcopate, has visited Europe and Mexico, and who tells an animated and really interesting story of active and useful years now drawing to a close. [T. Whittaker. $2.00.]

Miss Cort's book on Siam is published with good reason. The author, an American lady, from Colorado, has resided in that "heart of Farther India" since 1874, engaged in missionary service. Her forty-two chapters present a series of graphic pictures of the country, its people, and their customs, studied with sympathy but discrimination. There is a map, but no index and no pictures. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $2.00.]

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Mr. Browning does not condescend more generously to the minds of his readers in age than he did in youth. The Dean of St. Paul's, in the gracious and exquisitely written interpretation of Sordello which he has just put forth in Macmillan's Magazine, says very justly that the readers of that enigmatic poem feel that they are "in strong hands, and with eyes that have really seen—seen, with keenness, with truth, with thought—only their owner is not disposed to save us any trouble in making us see what he has seen." Say rather that Mr. Browning, in such works as Sordello and the present volume, is determined to give his readers more trouble than ninety-nine out of a hundred readers of poetry will take, in catching even a glimpse of what he means to say; that he appears to wish to sift out the keen-sighted and painstaking readers from among the dull-sighted and careless readers, and to spare himself the indignity of receiving either admiration or so much as misunderstanding on the part of the latter,—for we will venture to say that without considerable effort, the greater number of these pages cannot even be misunderstood; they will simply present to the superficial reader a face of perfect inscrutability. — Spectator.

In reviewing a volume of poetry from the pen of Mr. Browning, we feel bound at the outset to protest with all earnestness against the too common and most shallow complaint which is made whenever anything difficult in verse is published. "Poetry," said Wordsworth, and he was one who weighed his sayings well, "is the breath and finer spirit of all knowledge"; and it is no marvel that the finer spirit of Mr. Browning's wisdom, when it has passed through the alembic of his fancy, should still retain an affinity to that which gave it origin, and be subtle where that is profound, difficult where that is complex. — H. B. Garrod in the Academy.

Never in English literature—never in any literature, we believe—has the poetry of idiosyncrasy spoken with so powerful a voice as in the work of Mr. Browning. — The Athenæum.

Philip Bourke Marston.

Philip Marston was essentially the poet: even physically this fact betrayed itself. As a man he was loyal to a surpassing degree, generous to a fault, affectionate towards friends, and capable of passionate devotion when his love was adequately called forth. He suffered much in life, and endured two supreme bereavements. So unhappily faithful to him was his fortune that he dreaded making new friendships for fear of evil coming upon the recipients of his affection. His chief friends in London were the late Oliver Madox Brown and the present writer; but he had many sincere friends here and in America, and his acquaintances were legion. In America, indeed, Philip Marston's name, both as a poet and romance writer, is much more widely known than in this country. One of the most valued circumstances of his life was his friendship with Dante Gabriel Rossetti, whom he loved and admired with a reverent affection which never wavered; and much of the little happiness of his later years was afforded him by his intercourse with Mr. Swinburne. — Wm. Sharp in the Academy.

What position he is destined to take among the poets of his time no one can presume to say. Notwithstanding his subservience to Rossetti's influence in the sonnet, such perfect lyrics as "The Rose and the Wind" ought to entitle him to an independent place of his own, and no inconsiderable one. But for what English poet will there be room fifty years hence? — Theodore Watts in the Athenæum.

His talent was a very real one, delicate, distinguished, impassioned. The main drawback to his verse, its want of variety and general interest, was incident on his peculiar circumstances. He sang in a darkened chamber, and he could only repeat certain notes, with a limited variation. — The Saturday Review.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, MARCH 19, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

 The permanence of Henry Ward Beecher's fame will rest upon his platform oratory on sacred and political themes, but it is not to be forgotten that he was a journalist of experience and ability, if not of steadiness and discretion, and that he contributed to literature. Six things, says Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, are the conditions of eloquence: a special gift, training, character, a cause, an occasion, and an audience. As a public speaker Mr. Beecher enjoyed all these conditions. Like Phillips Brooks, mere animal physique was a powerful factor in his outfit. Training had more place in his use of himself than those not knowing him would suppose. Character he had, always a cause, an occasion he never missed, and audience—well, there was never but one momentary lull in the crowds that gathered to hear him. As a journalist Mr. Beecher experimented with the Cincinnati Journal, became known by his connection with the Independent, and will be remembered by the Christian Union, which his son in the Gospel, Dr. Lyman Abbott, has helped lift to a high place among the religious journals of the world. In literature Mr. Beecher's work was chiefly the collection of scattered papers and pulpit utterances, though he wrote one novel, Norwood, and left a majestic fragment of a Life of Christ. It is one of the disappointments incident to his sudden departure that his agreement to finish the latter work the present year was interrupted, and that his purpose to write an autobiography must remain unfulfilled. His life must be written; there is one man to do it, and it will be a treasure in biography.

 A course of Lowell Institute lectures by Mr. James Russell Lowell is something of a treat even for Boston, and it is not surprising that the demand for the free tickets stretched a long line of patient waiters out into the streets, or that the attendance at the opening lecture was a crowded one. After the incident at Chicago there was perhaps a flutter of expectation as to whether Mr. Lowell, having undertaken to lecture on "The Old English Dramatists," might not take it into his head to speak on Earthquakes, the Civil Service Reform, the Queen's Jubilee, or some other substituted topic. But "The Old English Dramatists" the subject proved to be, and James Shirley, Robert Greene, George Peele, were the obscure figures who headed the procession. Such dramatists as these, said Mr. Lowell, and the much-vaunted Marlowe he included with them, "are the best means of convincing us of the immeasurable superiority of Shakespeare." The company in general of whom he was to speak Mr. Lowell described as "a score or so of literary Bohemians, for the most part, living from hand to mouth in London during the last ten years of the 16th century, and the first thirty of the 17th."

 Mr. Robert Grant, in one of the opening numbers of the new Epoch, records a vigorous protest against afternoon teas, and apparently can find no good word to say for them. Doubtless there are teas and teas, and Mr. Grant's experiences must have been peculiarly unfortunate, or he would not make so ungracious a return for hospitalities extended. What can be pleasanter in a quiet social way, for example, than Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton's Friday receptions? There one meets, from four to six in the afternoon, a knot of agreeable people gathered about a delightful hostess. People go there because they like to do so, not because it is a social duty, and they make no haste to go away. If you care for a cup of tea it is there for you, but it is not in the foreground. If you are so fortunate as to know Mrs. Moulton or to enter her parlors with some friend of hers, you are sure of a cordial welcome, a pleasant word, and an introduction to some one present whom she fancies you may care to meet. And there are sure to be present some who are well worth knowing. Literary men and women, artists, clergymen, society people, all are represented, and an absence of formality is noticeable. By the piano a young poet is talking to an artist, both of whose names are known in two countries. Near them a successful novelist converses amiably with his severest critic, and close by may be some leader of society in company with a Harvard professor. Mrs. Moulton's present Friday receptions are to continue through March, and soon after that date she will go to England as one of the literary executors of Philip Bourke Marston, the blind poet, long her valued friend.

 Doubtless publishers know their business better than we do, but it seems to us that some of them sometimes make a mistake in selling their imprint to authors, to be put on books which are simply manufactured and sold on the author's account. It is a fact, we suppose, that some publishers will put any manuscript into print, with their imprint upon it, for a consideration; and it is also a fact, we presume, that some publishers will put their imprint upon no work which has not intrinsic merit and rights of its own to publication. There is a difference, of course, between intrinsic merit and marketable merit. Some of the ablest and most valuable publications are slow of sale, the cost of manufacture and risk in the same are considerable, and publishers are justified in demanding a guarantee against loss through small demand, even when the intrinsic merit may be sufficient to warrant them in lending their imprint. But a publisher's imprint ought to be a stamp of value. In the case of some publishers it is. We know that a book with their name on the title-page is a book of value, whatever may be our ignorance of the author, or the book itself. And we believe that all publishers would do well to be more strict in drawing the line between publications on the author's account and on their own.

 The publication this month of March, in this country, of Parts I and II of A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles, the dictionary edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray, and otherwise known as the "Philological Society's Dictionary," is the first great literary event of the year. This monumental undertaking was begun more than a quarter of a century ago. The late Archbishop of Dublin laid its corner stone. This was in a resolution passed by the Philological Society at his suggestion in 1857. Its origin and early stages have become a topic of history. It was twenty years before the first specimens of the proposed pages were ready and the Delegates of the Clarendon Press had declared their willingness to publish. And now, 1887, thirty years after inception, the first two parts only are ready, proceeding from "A" to "Batten." It needs but a single glance at the interior to be impressed with the magnitude of this enterprise, and the exhaustive thoroughness and care with which it is being conducted. We simply here and now announce the arrival of this distinguished stranger, reserving a more formal and worthy reception until the suitable conditions can be provided. Macmillan & Co. are the representatives of the Clarendon Press in this country.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

BERLIN, February 17, 1887.

IN one of the letters I wrote you last year I spoke of a new school of German literature styling itself "Youngest Germany." Its principal doctrine is that lyrics and fiction with us are at present utterly rotten, that our leading poets and novelists are but weakly scribes catering for the depraved tastes of the ignorant masses, who want to avoid anything inspired by genius and a really natural disposition. Some of the members of this group believe themselves to be superior to Heyse, Freytag, or Spielhagen, and nearly to equal Goethe and Schiller. All of them expect the requisite reform to come from a general introduction of "naturalism." Two or three of them are fond of being called "the German Zola," but I am sorry to say that none is either a Zola, or a Goethe, or Schiller. Several are highly gifted, but these are either much too young to be sufficiently matured, or they show a lamentable lack in artistic qualities, whereas Zola's crudities are made palatable by his mastery as an artist.

One of those who cry "Down with the old, threshed-out, well-worn ways of contemporary literature!" is Herr Konrad Alberti. Up to the present only known as an author of literary biographies (Freytag, Börne, Bettina von Arnim), and as a contributor to the press on general topics, he has suddenly made a start as a writer of fiction. Quite recently he published a volume containing two stories, entitled Giants and Dwarfs. I am glad to say it may be reckoned among the better productions of German "naturalism." The author, in his preface, displays a good deal of the self-conceit common to most of the members of "Youngest Germany," but he is really talented. His crudities are more artistically wrought than those of the majority of his more especial colleagues; only the episode treating of the love affairs of a pair of dogs in the second story ("Forbidden Love") is as nasty as it is superfluous—for, far from belonging to the tissue of the plot, it is only intended to serve as "coloring." This episode reminds me of a tale, Young Dogs, by Oskar Welten, another "German Zola," only that it is not quite as repulsive as Welten's. The chief aim of Forbidden Love is to describe the follies of Berlin society, whilst in We Giants Herr Alberti aims at proving that not even a giant, physical or mental, can successfully struggle against nature if he is liable to hereditary sufferings. The volume will scarcely create so much stir as its author seems to expect according to his grandiloquent preface, but there can be no doubt that it is a very interesting and noteworthy production of "new-German Realism," as Herr Bleibtren, the leader of our contemporary "naturalism," calls Young Germanism in the current number of the Magazin für die Literatur, which he edits at present.

Frau Ulla Wolff, a well-known Berlin author, writing under the male pseudonym of "Ulrich Frank," is not a member of the school in question, but she is still a "realist." Realism such as hers is more polished than "naturalism," and consequently more palatable. Her Weltliche Beichte, published a few days ago and also containing two stories, is not at all lacking in piquancy; she is by no means intent on avoiding naturalia, but she deals with them in a very refined and charming manner. Her subjects are peculiar, her plots slender but fascinating, her psychology is strange and attractive, her language elegant. The two stories are entitled To Weep and To be Silent—alluring titles, to be sure. As a rule German lady writers are so prudish that Frau Wolff-Frank's volume will be considered quite an exception. By the way, her first venture in the book market, a one-volume novel, Das Wunderkind, was universally pronounced one of the most remarkable short novels of recent years (1884). This gifted lady is, besides, a very intrepid journalist—a rare thing in the Fatherland.

Since I reported to you on three more new German books about America, some seven weeks ago, another work partly concerning your country has reached me. I translate its title: Facts and Prospects of the East Indian Competition in the Wheat Trade, by Dr. Julius Wolf, lecturer in the University of Zürich. This gentleman, who is an authority in practical political economy (especially in everything relating to spirits duties and such like), thinks that the wheat export from America is greatly threatened by the growing competition of British India. Finding that the fact of this steady growth has not received the attention it deserves at the hands of European statisticians, he entered into an exhaustive investigation. He traces the rise of the Indian wheat trade back to causes which came into operation some seventeen years ago, such as the removal of the Indian export duties on cereals, the depreciation of silver, the development of the railway system, etc. At present the trade is chiefly influenced by the native system of land tenure, the methods of irrigation, and the price of silver. The discussion of these and kindred matters invests the book with a great scientific interest; it is full of new and valuable information of a statistico-mercantile description, and cannot fail to become a standard work on its subject; nay, the standard work, seeing that no similar book exists in any language whatever. I cannot help recommending its careful perusal to such of your countrymen whose business or duty it is to interest themselves in questions like those involved in Dr. Wolf's profound and conscientious essay, which ought to be translated into English if it is to serve its purpose fully.

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

JULIANA HORATIA EWING.

Born August 3, 1841.
Died May 13, 1885.

THOUGH it is nearly two years since the death of Mrs. Ewing, but little is known of her personal history in this country, where yet her books are so widely read; and we are sure that many persons will be interested in these few particulars of her character and life gleaned from a little memorial that has not had much circulation here.*

Mrs. Ewing was the daughter of the Rev. Alfred and Margaret Gatty. Mr. Gatty was the Vicar of Ecclesfield in Yorkshire, where "Julie's" young life was spent, and Mrs. Gatty was herself a writer of repute, her Parables from Nature in particular being known in America. The daughter was "great" in the nursery with the younger members of the family, and achieved early distinction as a storyteller, especially on birthdays and at Christmas-tide. She was always a storyteller more than a writer. Her first tales were illustrated by her elder sister, and it is an interesting illustration of the spirit of the two and of the atmosphere of the life in this English vicarage, that these sisters, author and artist, "tithed" the first profits from their joint work, and with the funds so obtained first bought some hangings for the parish church, and, second, took two younger sisters, who were out of health, to Whitby for a change of air, and afterwards a brother, also an invalid, across to Belgium and Holland. Juliana did good service, too, as a District Visitor in her father's parish, and held a weekly class for young women in the vicarage. Her first story to appear in print was "A Bit of Green," published in the Monthly Packet in 1861. In 1866 Mrs. Gatty started Aunt Judy's Magazine, largely as a vehicle for her daughter's writings, selecting as its title the nickname by which "Julie" was called among her sisters. In this magazine, under her mother's editorship, nearly all her writings afterwards first appeared. After the mother's death in 1873 she and her sister Horatia K. F. edited it, but with her death in 1885 it died.

On the 1st of June, 1867, Miss Gatty became Mrs. Ewing by marriage to Major Alexander Ewing, A. P. D., and a week later sailed with him for New Brunswick, where their home was to be for the next two years. They established themselves in a pleasant house on the river bank near Fredericton. Here Mrs. Ewing amused herself with the Indians, their bead embroideries and their canoes; collected the native flowers and studied them with the aid of Gray's Botany; studied Hebrew with her husband and Bishop Medley; and sent home stories suggested by her novel observations and experiences.

Returning to England in 1869, Major Ewing was stationed for the next eight years at Aldershot, where Mrs. Ewing found new materials for her indefatigable pen. In 1878 they removed to Fulford, near York. In 1879 Major Ewing was ordered to Malta. Mrs. Ewing set out after a few months to follow him, but sickened on her way across France and was perforce brought back to England, while her husband was ordered on to Ceylon, whither it was wholly out of the question for her to proceed. This separation she was obliged to endure until his return in 1883. Then their home was made at Taunton; at Bath she died; and her burial was at Trull in Somerset on the 16th of May, 1885.

Mrs. Ewing's stories throughout, like those of Jacob Abbott and other writers for children who might be named, were founded on real life, but contained no portraits, unless "Aunt Liberty" in A Great Emergency were a portrait of herself. Many of her early stories were inspired by pictures in old German books, and a canvas in the London Exhibition would set her pen running on a lively tale. She had a great love for animals and flowers. The former she studied with scrupulous care for every use she made of them in her books; they, wherever they appear in her pages, are real. She had great powers of imitation and mimicry, as her success in private theatricals at Aldershot and elsewhere evinced. Poetry she infrequently attempted, except in the form of hymns for Sunday-school festivals. Her mind was more vigorous than her body. Her heroism and her unselfishness were illustrated in the fact that once she went alone up to London to undergo a painful surgical operation, because she would not subject any of her friends to the trial of going with her. Her life went out in the suffering that attended her much of her way. The German print of the Crucifixion, which she caused to be hung over the drawing-room fire-place in every house of wood or stone she occupied for years, was the emblem of this side of her experience. Yet she unfailingly preached the Gospel of Hope, and lived to the end in sunshine and in peace. On her sick bed she liked to repeat the alternate verses of the Psalms as they were read to her. "Letters on Flowers" were almost the last thing she wrote, and in flowers literally she was buried.

* Julia Horatia Ewing and her Books. By Horatia K. F. Gatty. London: S. P. C. K. New York: E. & J. B. Young. 1885. 1s.

Mrs. Ewing wrote in all upwards of one hundred stories, short and long. After their first appearance in Aunt Judy's Magazine or the Monthly Packet, they were generally reprinted in book form. Foremost among them are the following:

A Flatiron for a Farthing.
A Great Emergency.
We and the World.
Jackanapes.
Daddy Darwin's Dovecote.
Mary's Meadow.
Mrs. Overthway's Remembrances.
Lob-lie-by-the-Fire.
Old-Fashioned Fairy Tales.
Jan of the Windmill.
The Story of a Short Life.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

To a Literary Pop.

You praise the poet of immortal name,
Now, when the world's best eulogies are willed him.
Living, he wanted bread far more than fame;
He was not "classic" till starvation killed him.
What if some Keats now felt the critic's brand?
Some Chatterton today cursed fortune's fetters?
Dare you cheer either with benignant hand?
Not you!—sleek lacquey at the skirts of Letters!
New York City, Feb. 14, 1887. EDGAR FAWCETT.

Place au Rossignol!

"And then there advanced to the throng of chattering birds a plaintive wren, who announced the coming of the nightingale, and demanded silence that they might hear his song."—Old Fable.

O little birds, your voices shrill
Fill all the woodland space with sound;
Your shrieks and calls in long-drawn trill
On every side re-echo round;
Our ears are wearied; we'd rejoice
If some sure spell of deft romance
Would kindly hush each aspirant voice
And give the nightingale a chance!

O little bards, your "songs" appall;
 You'll surely strain your tender throats;
 Parnassus' groves are free to all,
 But we would gladly spare your notes.
 You "only sing because" you "must!"
 Would not one know it at a glance?
 Yet, with all due respect, we trust
 You'll give some greater bard a chance!

Dorchester, Mass., March 4, 1887.

H. S.

MINOR NOTICES.

Mrs. Clara Erskine Clement's Outline History of Architecture is offered in its title-page both to "beginners and students," but is less sufficient for the latter than for the former. To "beginners" only can we commend it. Its illustrations are numerous and often pertinent. [White, Stokes & Allen. $2.50.]

The Cavé method of Learning to Draw from Memory is imparted by its author, Madame Marie Elizabeth Cavé, in a series of letters, whose style is "Frenchy." Madame's idea is that drawing is as natural an art to learn as writing, and that whoever can handle a pen can master the pencil. We doubt it, and we doubt if this book will prove it. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.]

In The Mormon Puzzle and How to Solve It, the Rev. R. W. Beers, a Presbyterian pastor of Elkton, Md., takes novel ground for a man of his cloth. He has never been in Utah, and has studied the subject only from a distance and in the works of others. But while frankly recognizing and fully reprobating the evils of Mormonism, he does not hesitate to say that in his opinion "there is genuine Gospel enough in the Mormon creed to save it from the grave." Therefore he believes in reformation from within, and argues forcibly and fervently for the introduction of colonization and educational influences. The book is a sensible and liberal contribution to the discussion. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00.]

Through the Gates of Gold, a Fragment of Thought. "On the mental steps (!) of a million men Buddha passed through the Gates of Gold; and because a great crowd pressed about the threshold, he was able to leave behind him words which prove that those gates will open." Ab uno disce omnes; this sentence is a good specimen brick of the rhetoric and the logic of this "poor fragment of thought," as the author, with quite insufficient modesty, styles it at the end. It is very poor, and very fragmentary; and we doubt its title to be called "thought." What the theosophist "is pleased to call his mind" has undoubtedly been considerably exercised in its production, but to very little profit. Much here is the baldest commonplace, slightly disguised; then much vague and meaningless allusion to the Gates of Gold, which, as the author says, "lead to no special place;" the weakness of pleasure, knowledge and virtue, especially of the last, is fully exposed by the author, and we close the book with the feeling that the Gates of Brass would be a fitter title for these bumptious pages. [Roberts Bros. 50c.]

Lee & Shepard's illustrated editions of the well-known hymns, "Abide with Me," "Nearer my God, to Thee," and "Rock of Ages," are ready in fresh covers of appropriate designs for Easter uses.

From the same publishers with the above, and in anticipation of the same season of the Christian year, we have four new illustrated quartos: The Message of the Bluebird, Gladness of Easter, See the Land her Easter Keeping, and Arise, my Soul, Arise. The first of these, by Miss Jerome, is a handful of leaves out of her portfolio of bird songs and pictures; the other three are pictorial settings of hymns of the resurrection. Of these three the preferable are the third and fourth; Kingsley's hymn, "See the Land her Easter Keeping," being the least effectively presented.

LITERATURE IN BRAZIL.

From a chapter in the Hon. C. C. Andrews's new book on Brazil, noticed elsewhere, we have extracted a few data respecting authors and journals in Brazil, which are recast and rearranged below in an order convenient for reference.

Authors.

ALENCAR, José Martiniano de. Born at Ceará, in northern Brazil, May 1, 1829; died Dec. 12, 1877. Wrote some 30 works of fiction, of which Iracema and Guarany are considered the best. The former is a prose poem, founded on life in a colony at the mouth of the Jaguaribe. Guarany is a romance depicting the devotion of a young Indian lover to his Portuguese mistress. Alencar filled an important position in the educational and the civil service, and was at one time proprietor and editor of Diário do Rio, in which his first writings appeared.

ALOES, Antonio Castro, b. near Curralinho, Bahia, March 14, 1847, d. July 6, 1871, poet and dramatist. His reputed best work is Cachoeira de Paulo Afonso. He left many unpublished manuscripts.

ASSIS, Machado de, poet, and writer of short stories, now living.

CALDAS, the Padre Antonio Pereira de Souza, b. in Brazil, educated in Portugal and Italy; lyric poet, translator of the Psalms of David into Portuguese verse.

CORREIA, Raymundo, poet, now living.

DIAS, Antonio Gonçalves, b. at Caxias, Maranhão, Aug. 10, 1823, d. Nov. 3, 1864; educated in Portugal; journalist, teacher, and poet; author of Primeiros Cantos (1846), Leonor de Mendonça (a drama, 1847), a dictionary of the Tupi language (1857), and in the same year an epic poem, a fragment of Tymbiras.

DURAO, Frei José de S. Rita, b. at Catta-preta in the province of Minas-Geraes, about 1720, d. 1784; educated by the Jesuits, doctor in theology, historical poet.

GUIMARAES, Bernardo, b. in Ouro Preto, Aug. 15, 1825, d. March 10, 1884. Soldier, journalist, poet, and novelist. His Cantos da Solidão are admired; his prose works numerous; among the latter are Ermitão de Muquem, Garimpeiro, Slave Isarra, and Seminarista. The latter is an argument against the compulsory celibacy of the priesthood.

GUIMARAES, Luiz, poet, now living.

JOSÉ, Casimiro, Marques de Abreu, b. in the village of Barra de São João, Jan. 4, 1837, d. Oct. 18, 1860; poet. The Rio Edition of his writings contains 70 lyrics.

MACEDO, Joaquim Manoel de, b. in the village of Itaboraity June 24, 1820, d. April 11, 1882. Especially distinguished as a novelist. His Moreninha (1844) is regarded as laying the foundation of Brazilian fiction. It is a realistic picture of society in Rio. Besides his numerous novels he wrote dramas, a History of Brazil, a Biographical Year [4 vols.], and contributed to journals.

MAGALHAES, Domingos José Gonçalves, b. at Rio Janeiro, Aug. 13, 1811; poet and dramatist whose works are characterized by simplicity and a high moral tone. His chief work, Confederação dos Tumoyos, is a patriotic poem. His Antonio José is the earliest Brazilian tragedy.

MAGALHAES, Valentim, poet, now living.

OLIVEIRA, Alberto de, poet, now living, author of Meridionaes.

SILVA, Innocencio F. da; author of a Dicionário Bibliographico.

VARELLA, Fagundes, a poet recently deceased, of whom no biographical particulars are accessible.

VARNHAGEM, Francisco Adolpho, Viscount of Porto Seguro; author of a History of Brazil and a defense of Amerigo Vespucci as discoverer of America.

Some Journals.

Revista Trimestral do Instituto Historico Geographico e Ethnographico do Brazil. Rio. A quarterly historical journal.

O Direito Revista Mensal de Legislação Doutrina e Jurisprudencia. Rio. A monthly journal of legal decisions.

Jornal do Commercio. Rio. The principal newspaper of that city. Established 1827. Circulation 20,000.

Revista Illustrada. Rio. The "Punch" of Brazil. Eight pages.

A ROMAN MAGAZINE.

We are in regular receipt of the Nuova Antologia, a fortnightly magazine published in Rome, at which our readers may like to glance for a moment over the editorial shoulder. The January and February numbers begin the year with articles of notable quality and variety. The recent revival at Turin of certain dramas of the XVI century is commented upon unfavorably by the Hon. Bonghi, who finds in them nothing desirable for resuscitation. Comedy inherited from the Greek authors, obsolete words and constructions, and subjects and treatment utterly unfit to be presented before an honest audience—this is substantially the verdict passed not only indeed by Signor Bonghi, but by the Italian press upon this dramatic revival. The brilliant play-writer, Giacosa, he of the mediæval troubadours and blonde châtelines, together with the other eminent men of letters who gave conferences upon these comedies, must have been under some literary hallucination, a hypnotism of the antique. In the same article Signor Bonghi criticises the Abbesse de Jouarre of M. Ernest Renan; and finds it a shining example of the defects of its author. "Napoleon at the Isle of Elba" is the title of an article by Signor G. Livi, who, by means of access to documents hitherto unpublished, casts new light upon the political attitude of Napoleon during his brief reign of exile. The letter is quoted in which a society of Italian patriots invited him to lead in the conquest of Italy, and place himself upon the throne of the Cæsars. This, with other documents cited, helps to make coherent the web of plots, counter-plots, suspicions, and delusions of the episode of Elba; and, with the comments of Signor Livi, forms a valuable addition to Napoleonic history. In "An Etruscan Pompeii" Signor E. Brizio describes the researches made at Misano, near Bologna, an Etruscan city, built upon a regular plan in conformity with the prescriptions borrowed by the Etruscans from the Roman augurs, with its necropolis, of which the uncovered tombs recall the allusion of Dante to the arches of Pola and Arles. In the critique by Signor F. d'Arcais of Fambri's new drama, "L'Aretino," literary praise is mingled with the just objection that the Aretino is not such as history records him. The protagonist of the play is moved by sentiments quite foreign to the impudent, unscrupulous Leonardo Aretino, who, without reverence or respect, pushed himself here and there, and degraded his great literary gifts to basest uses—the prototype of the modern reporter at his worst. Signor V. Ellena writes of the new commercial treaty, proposed to supersede that of 1878 with Austria-Hungary, and of 1881 with France. Signor P. G. Molmenti bewails the passing away of Venice, the mystic bride of the sea, beneath the rude hands of reform. There are also articles upon the Conclave of Leo XIII; the People and Languages of Abyssinia; the Crisis in Germany, considered by the Hon. Bonghi; and a picturesque and optimistic article upon the beneficence and beauty which recent science has discovered in certain microbes—the little commas which place, when malevolent, a period to so many an existence. In finely imaginative verse, Signor D. Gnoli strikes a note of incitement to his brother poets. Among the literary articles of especial interest is that upon the new "Locksley Hall," of which the critic, Signor E. Nencioni, has to say that "it is a work of rare and austere beauty, which instills an affectionate reverence." Signor G. Cesareo, known as a student of Shakespeare, writes concerning some modern poets of Spain, Chili, and Peru. The serial novels are the "Tears of One's Neighbor" (Le Lacrime del Pressimo), by Signor G. Rovetta; and "Amore," in which Signora Matilde Terao displays the accurate realism of the journalist together with the delicate feminine quality, pervasive, but not too much accentuated, of her literary style. The minor departments review current politics, books, events in literature and art, and the financial situation of the fortnight previous to the date of the monthly publication of the Nuova Antologia. [Rome: Via del Corso, 466.]

OTHER PERIODICALS.

The March Century offers a captivating list of contents. Mr. Cable has done hardly anything better in its way than his Acadian story of "Grande Pointe"; Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer begins a collection of illustrated notes on the cathedral architecture of England; there are some agreeable reminiscences of Secretary Stanton; and Wilbur Fisk Tillett tells us about the renaissance in the South, where he says there has been an increase of wealth over population in the last five years of twenty-five per cent; cause, the abolition of slavery—"when the slaves were emancipated the white people were set to work." Mr. Tillett believes that more real literary work has been done in the South in the last fifteen years than was done altogether before the war. If any one wishes to know how the typical cultivated American girl looks, with her delicate and gracious beauty, her deep-eyed earnestness, and her firm, questioning mouth, he will find her revealed in Mr. John T. Stoddard's composite photographs of Smith College classes in his article on composite photography, which suggests improvements on Galton's method. Dr. J. M. Buckley deals a sturdy final blow at the faith-healing chimæra, which Kelso Carter is allowed to defend in four pages of superstitious cant. One of the most entertaining of the papers in this number of the Century is J. R. G. Hassard's account of a camping-out trip in Southern California; there were five in the party, they were out sixty-eight days, they had a guide, a Chinese cook, a cow, and a great many table luxuries, and the total cost for each person was two dollars a day.

Prof. St. George Mivart has something to say about the future of Christianity, in the Forum for March, starting with the conclusion that "no theism but Christian theism, that is, some form of Christianity, can be the absolute and final religion of mankind." Dr. E. E. Hale begins a proposed series of articles on helpful books with an attractive bit of personal confession. The rule for buying books he thinks should be "like that which was laid down for marriage by an admirable husband of a charming wife: "'Do not be married until you cannot possibly help it.'" Prof. Ely shows why labor organizations are likely to be of service to the world; Dr. W. A. Hammond accounts for mysterious disappearances by the psychological phenomena of double consciousness; Prof. Theodore Gill is incredulous about sea-serpent stories; Col. T. W. Knox declares that the world is rapidly becoming overcrowded, and will soon be obliged to display the sign "Standing room only;" and Judge E. A. Thomas makes a vigorous attack on the jury system.

An article by such a writer as Taine, on such a subject as Napoleon Bonaparte, is something of a novelty, at least, if not a treasure, and the reader will find it in the March number of the New Princeton. "Posthumous brother of Dante and Michael Angelo," the great French critic calls the great French Emperor, "one of the three sovereign minds of the Italian Renaissance." "The Essentials of Eloquence," according to Rev. Dr. Wm. M. Taylor, further on, are a special gift, training, character, a good cause, a great occasion, and a sympathetic audience. No wonder, then, there are so few orators. In writing of "The Course of American Architecture" Mr. W. P. P. Longfellow, nephew of the poet, criticises the national fondness for the conspicuous and the merely ornamental. The literary studies are one on Victor Hugo by John S. Fiske and one on George Meredith by Flora L. Shaw, the former a continued critical review of the poet's works, the latter a sympathetic sketch with large place given to the personal equation. The light articles, a feature of the Princeton in its new life, are "Don Finimondone," a Calabrian love-story by Mrs. Cavazza, a lady of Portland, Maine, and "Idle Notes of an Uneventful Voyage," by Brander Matthews, an amusing, life-like picture of a voyage home across the Atlantic in a swift Cunarder.

—Hon. Carl Schurz's life of Henry Clay in the "American Statesmen Series" is to be in two volumes; it will be issued soon by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., who have also in preparation a new edition of Rural Hours, by Susan Fenimore Cooper The Law of Divorce, by A. Parlett Lloyd; and A Club of One: "Passages from the Note Book of a Man who Might Have Been Sociable."

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Sundry Notes and Queries. A correspondent in Ohio asks: "Is any book published giving an analysis of Shakespeare's plays? If so, where published?" We are not sure that we know what is meant by "analysis" here. If an outline of the plots of the plays, we know of no such book; though we have the impression that one of the popular one-volume editions of Shakespeare (is it the so-called "Avon" edition?) contains something of the sort. The stories of the plays are best told in Lamb's well-known Tales from Shakespeare. There are several inferior books of the kind.

An excellent teacher and critic finds fault with us for the spelling of patines in the familiar passage in the Merchant, v. 1, 59:

"Look how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold."

She says:

I prefer the looks of patines myself, but patens has surely better support; for the 1623 edition has patiens, whose natural modification, allowing for changed spelling, would be the omission of one t. If it be said that the primitive is patina, it may also be said that the other form of the Latin is patena; and the French being patène, the inference in favor of paten seems to me very strong.

In our edition of the play we followed the spelling adopted by all the editors, English and American. Now that our attention is called to the various forms—patine, patin, and paten—we prefer the first, though with no disposition to quarrel with anybody who prefers either of the others. The usual Latin form is patina, in spite of the derivation from patere; and the derivative patinarius appears to be invariably so spelled. The French has the form patine for the patina on bronze, which is etymologically the very same word.

A Canadian correspondent writes:

On p. 134 of your Mer. of Ven. you translate Isola di Rialto by the "Island of the Deep Stream." It is easy enough to see how you fell into the deep stream (rivo from rivus instead of ripa), and you can easily enough pull yourself out in the next edition.

As it happens, it is our friend who has tumbled into the stream, as some editors of the play had done before him. The Italian rivo is from the Latin rivus, and means stream; the equivalent of ripa, bank, being the feminine riua. We may add that "island of the high bank" would be a strange name for the Isola di Rialto, which is as flat as the other islands on which Venice is built.

The critic also says that Rialto in the folio of 1623 is "always spelt Ryalta." The word occurs five times in the play: in the first two, it is Ryalta; in the other three, it is Ryalto.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

812. English and American Literature. (To F. C. R., North Bloomfield O.) Your inquiry for "the best book on English and American literature" is so general as to be hard to answer. Chambers's Cyclopædia is a voluminous collection of extracts with accompanying biographical and critical narrative. [American Book Exchange.]—Brooke's Primer of English Literature is the best brief introduction in the language, but is very brief. [Appleton.]—Wm. Minto's Manual of English Prose Literature is excellent. [Blackwood.]—Tyler's History of American Literature is voluminous, exhaustive, and incomplete. [Putnam.]—Richardson has written a Primer of American Literature, which is a rapid sketch [Houghton], and has published the first volume of a History, which has merit [Putnam.]

813. Lucian of Samosata. (To J. E. G., Towson, Md.) There is an incomplete English translation of Lucian's works by Dr. Thomas Franklin [London. 4 vols. 1781]; one complete by William Tooke [London. 2 vols. 1820]; a translation of selections by Evelyn Abbott [London. 1872]; one by W. L. Collins [Edinburgh. 1873]; and one by C. R. Williams. 1882]. The two first named would be had with difficulty.

814. The Prince of Naphthali. (Answer to 811.) The book is Salathiel (The Wandering Jew), by Rev. George C. Croly. Peterson & Bro. of Philadelphia published it long ago in paper. It is in the catalogue of Boston Public Library, "Lower Hall, Eng. Prose Fiction," 5,071. E. W. H.

Charlestown, Mass.

815. Wanted to find a poem, perhaps translated from the German, in which a mother returns from the grave to take back with her one by one her children, who are not kindly treated by their step-mother. E. W. H.

Charlestown, Mass.

816. Lists of selected books in Fiction, Travels, etc. (To F. J. R., Harrisburg, Pa.) Your questions are so general and sweeping that it is difficult to answer them in a narrow compass. The Best Reading [G. P. Putnam's Sons] is a good general index to what is best in all branches of literature. It touches the foreign field. The Class List of English Prose Fiction, published and for sale by the Boston Public Library, is complete and admirable touching that part of the subject. For critical and descriptive works on fiction and fiction writers see Forsyth's Novels and Novelists of 18th Century [Appleton], Masson's British Novelists and Their Styles [Lothrop], Scott's Lives of Celebrated Novelists [Scribner & Welford], Tuckerman's History of English Prose Fiction [Putnam], Lanier's The English Novel [Scribner], James's French Poets and Novelists (Macmillan), Hosmer's Short History of German Literature [Jones], Brandes's Eminent Authors of the Nineteenth Century [Crowell]. As masters of a rich and copious style read Plutarch, De Foe, Addison, Steele, Burke, Goldsmith, George Eliot, Irving, Hawthorne.

817. Authorship wanted of the following:
An honest confession is good for the soul.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The recent visit to Boston of Mrs. John T. Sargent, in whose hospitable parlors the Radical Club had its home for so long, has been greatly enjoyed by her many friends in this city. On a Tuesday lately a pleasant reception was given in her honor in a delightful Beacon Street home, and a few among the people present were the artist Gauguengig, Mr. Arlo Bates, who is gaining distinction in the threefold capacity of journalist, novelist, and poet, Mrs. Grace Oliver, the biographer of Dean Stanley, Mrs. Moulton, Miss Craig, the actress, Mr. Pickering, the Browning reader, and the poet-clergyman, Rev. Arthur Wentworth Eaton.

—At Mr. Partridge's readings from Shelley and Keats one saw literary, artistic, and fashionable Boston. This may be in part due to a Browning reaction, but it is largely owing to the fact that the young poet-sculptor interprets the two most spirituelle of our poets in a charming and sympathetic manner. Among the poems Mr. Partridge has read are Shelley's "Skylark," "Adonais," and "Hymn to Intellectual Beauty," Keats's "Eve of St. Agnes" and "Ode to a Nightingale."

—It was a fair wind that brought from New York recently the news that Frank Dempster Sherman is soon to give to the public, through White, Stokes & Allen, a volume of poems to be called Madrigals and Catches. Though Mr. Sherman had not a wide acquaintance in Boston during his connection with the present senior class at Harvard, those who had the good fortune to know him will not soon forget his genial personality, and a nature that has won for him quite as many friends as have his dainty and light-hearted rhymes.

—Fitzgerald Malloy, the author, has been spending the winter in Algiers, investigating certain branches of Oriental occultism under the guidance of an Arab mystic. The results of his experience will be embodied in a novel to be published by Messrs. Ward & Downey, London, in September.

—Since writing elsewhere of Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd's Cathedral Days we have obtained a few particulars concerning her, in which all readers of that charming book will be interested. It is, as we surmised, her first book, but it is by no means her first writing. Mrs. Dodd, who was Miss Anna Bowman Blake, and is the daughter of Stephen M. Blake, a well-known New York merchant, in which city her home has always been, began literary work some ten years ago in the newspapers and magazines, chiefly the New York Evening Post, Appleton's Journal, and Harper's and Lippincott's magazines. A paper by her in Harper's in 1881 on "Frank Political Leaders" is said to have been pronounced by Mr. Henry M. Alden, the editor, "the most brilliant article of the kind we have had in ten years." This article grew out of a visit to Europe in 1880. A contribution by Miss Blake to Appleton's Journal, on "Philosophy at Concord," was translated into French, reprinted in Littré's Revue Philosophique, and excited much comment in France. Since her marriage to Mr. Edward W. Dodd, formerly of Boston, her pen has been mostly engaged on art criticism, and for two years she has held a connection with the London Art Journal. Cathedral Days is a first essay in the more serious field which Mrs. Dodd hopes to enter, and it is certainly a most promising one. We shall be both surprised and disappointed not to receive more and excellent work at her hands.

—A recent number of the Detroit Tribune has an article by J. S. Phillips on Mr. Vanderpoole, the author of Sebatana and Ruhainah, two novels of Eastern life, and, as Mr. Phillips believes, of Democracy, a much-talked-of novel in Holt's Leisure Hour Series. Ruhainah was published by Cassell under the pseudonym of "Evan Stanton." According to Mr. Phillips Mr. Vanderpoole is a young man of 32, was born and brought up in the United States, but comes of a notable French family, was grand-nephew to George Sand, and is one of her literary executors. He was one of six persons who were at her bedside when she died. For eighteen years his hand has been in print. He has done a journalist's work in Paris, London, New York, and Chicago papers, has traveled in Egypt, Persia, Africa, India, Alaska, and British America, writes with equal facility in English and French, was correspondent of Figaro during the Turko-Russian War, and has sung Bayard Taylor's Bedouin song to Arabs on the Nile. The story which Mr. Phillips tells of him is a romance in itself. The publication of his last completed work, "The Pilgrim of Lost Hope," a tale of California mining life, has just been begun in the Detroit Sunday Tribune. He has materials collected for a work on the comparative grammar of the Oriental languages, and a series of Egyptian and Oriental tales in mind.

—Mr. J. Elliot Cabot's memoir of Emerson may be expected from the press of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. on the 25th of May. It will be in two volumes of the size of the Riverside edition of Emerson's Works, and will consist of extracts from his unpublished MSS., with a thread of biography.

—The London Athenæum says that Mr. Lowell expects to be in England again at Easter; that Mr. Kingslake has at last completed his Invasion of the Crimea, and sent the final MS. to the publishers; that Sir James Stephens has been compelled to give up his intention of writing a life of Carlyle for "English Men of Letters;" that the author of Obiter Dicta is soon to be heard from again; that Mr. Weale is engaged on an elaborate work about book-binding; that the Routledges will shortly commence the publication of an illustrated edition of "Masterpieces of French Fiction" in monthly volumes; that Mr. Hughès's memoir of Bishop Fraser is ready; that Miss Robinson's translation of the Heptameron will consist of a selection of thirty of its best tales; that a memoir of the late Lord Idlesleigh, for which there are ample materials, is contemplated by his family; that a new volume of poems by George Meredith is in press; that Drs. Döllinger and Reusch are editing the almost unknown autobiography of Cardinal Bellarmine; and that the English Goethe Society now numbers 200 members.

—We read in the Academy that a volume of selected stories by the late Philip Bourke Marston will be published this spring; that new novels by Mr. Hardy, Mr. Black, and Mr. Hatton are on the eve of appearance; that the Queen has given consent to the publication of a small book by Miss Kenyon entitled Scenes in the Life of the Princess Alice; that Mr. Gosse has been lecturing at the Royal Institution on "The Critics of the Age of Anne" and at Cambridge on "The Earlier Writings of Swift"; and that Sir Richard Burton, after finishing up his Arabian Nights, will bring out a limited edition of his version of the Pentamerone of Basili.

— Echoes of Bible History, by the Rt. Rev. W. P. Walsh, Bishop of Ossory, Ireland, to be published by Thomas Whittaker, will show how discoveries of recent years in Eastern lands throw light upon the Bible narrative.

— Juanita, a Romance of Real Life in Cuba, by the late Mrs. Horace Mann, is to be published shortly by the D. Lothrop Co. The story, which deals with the subject of slavery, was written before Uncle Tom's Cabin was given to the world, but as many of the characters and incidents were real, the author kept back the manuscript; now, after her death, it has been found worthy of publication.

— Ticknor & Co. announce the publication of a series of light fiction in paper covers, for leisure hour and summer reading. The series will include works by Blanche Howard, Edgar Fawcett, E. W. Howe, Barrett Wendell, and Virginia W. Johnson.

— In announcing the issue of part III (Bat-Boy) of the New English Dictionary, the publishers, Macmillan & Co., call attention to the fact that "it is a characteristic of the letter B (shared only by some letters of less compass toward the end of the alphabet) that a very small proportion of the words beginning with it are derived from or through Latin, the great majority being Teutonic, either of the native Old English stock, or of the accessions which this received from the kindred speech of the Norsemen. Hence the present part deals with many of the oldest and most interesting words of the language, which are also among its most important living elements in every-day use."

— Among the large staff of editors employed on the new dictionary in preparation by the Century Co. of New York, Austin Abbott, Esq., is in charge of the department of law, and his brother, Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of the theological.

— Col. J. L. Peyton of Staunton, Va., is writing a History of Virginia "from the Retrocession of Alexandria to the Reconstruction of the Union."

— A new edition of Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott's life of Henry Ward Beecher, bringing the narrative down to the end of Mr. Beecher's career, will be ready soon by Funk & Wagnalls. Rev. S. B. Halliday will assist Dr. Abbott in completing the work.

— A third edition of Mrs. Silsbee's Half-Century in Salem is now on the press.

— The Hon. Dexter Richards is to provide Newport, N. H., with a library building to cost at least $12,000.

— Mr. T. W. Higginson is said to be collaborating with Dr. Edward Channing of Harvard College in the production of a popular history of England, somewhat in the style of the Young Folks' History of the United States.

— The death of Col. Robert N. Scott, late chief of the office of publication of war records at Washington, will not seriously impede the completion of the gigantic task to which he gave so much time and thought. All the material to be used has been copied and arranged in proper order, and most of the maps have been collected. Twenty-five volumes of the series have already been printed; the series will probably extend to about eighty volumes.

— Paul Henri Féval, a prolific French novelist after the manner of Dumas père, died on the 9th inst. at the age of seventy.

— The library of Gen. R. C. Hawkins (2,578 titles), to be sold in New York next week by Leavitt & Co., contains many rare and choice books, including, briefly, Vespucci's Voyages (1509); De Bry's Voyages; Father Hennepin's Voyage and New Discovery, both the 1697 and 1704 editions; Cadwallader Colden's Five Indian Nations (London, 1747); Ben Jonson's works, first collected editions (1616); 40 titles of Shakespeareana, including Rowe's edition, the second quarto of "Love's Labor Lost," and "The Return from Parnassus;" the black letter (1602) edition of Chaucer; the first and second folios of Spenser; the first English translation of Rabelais; Florio's translation of Montaigne; Bacon's Essays (1639); and the first American edition of Irving's Sketch Book.

A biographical dictionary, to include accounts of the lives of all men and women of note throughout the world during the period from 1800 to 1887, is announced by Cassell & Co. It will be in one large volume, entitled Celebrities of the Century. The American contributions are to be prepared under the supervision of American writers.

— Prof. Henry Morley, who has been for many years engaged in collecting material for an elaborate History of English Literature, has it now nearly ready for the press. It will fill twenty octavo volumes, covering the period from Alfred to the present day, in a continuous narrative. The volumes, however, will be grouped by periods, and each volume will be separately indexed. Cassell & Co. are to publish this monumental work.

— An edition of the English translation of Karl Marx's Capital, an elaborate exposition of socialism, has been obtained for American consumption by Scribner & Welford.

— The series of monographs on "Epochs of Modern History" is said to have attained a sale of 90,000 copies.

— A new edition of Flemming's Vocabulary of Philosophy, which has been out of print for so long, is about to be issued by Scribner & Welford. This edition will be completely revised and practically rewritten by Professor Calderwood.

— Twenty-one Americans composers write to the April Century in favor of international copyright. It will be remembered that a similar group of "Open Letters" from American authors was published in The Century for February, 1886.

— The publication of the first number of The Writer, a monthly magazine designed to be a practical guide and help to all who write for the press, is announced. Contributions from literary people of repute are promised, and every number is to be composed wholly of original matter. The editors are W. H. Hills and Robert Luce, both of the Boston Globe. The scheme of the new periodical is a good one and deserves the success which we are confident it will attain.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce a new edition of Browning, in six volumes, which will contain all the poetry which that poet has hitherto written, from the latest revised London edition. The first two volumes will appear in April, and the rest will follow in rapid succession.

— The price of Mr. W. E. Benjamin's collected set of original editions of Dickens's Works was $1,200, not $12, as our types made it in our last issue! Even at that price the set has been sold, and Mr. Benjamin already has an order to duplicate it, which it will probably take him a year to do.

— Among the noteworthy publications which the D. Lothrop Co. have in hand is a volume of travel and observation, by Dr. Alexander McKenzie, relating to Europe and the East. The same house will publish Life Among the Germans, by E. Louise Parry; When I was a Boy in China, by Prof. Yon Phon Lee; and Prose Pastorals, by Herbert M. Silvester.

Publishers' Announcements.

— A. D. F. Randolph & Co.: Abraham, Joseph, and Moses in Egypt (the Stone lectures for 1887), Rev. Alfred H. Kellogg, D. D.

— G. P. Putnam's Sons: The American Electoral System: "Its character and its History," Charles O'Neil.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co.: The Death of Ivan Ilyitch, and other stories, from the Russian of Count L. N. Tolstoi; The Picture of Paul, Rev. H. K. Hawcis.

— D. O. Haynes & Co., Detroit: The Cremation of the Dead, Hugo Erichsen, M. D.

— Arnold & Co.: Theology of Evolution, E. D. Cope, Ph. D.

— Charles Scribner's Sons: Agriculture in Some of Its Relations with Chemistry, Prof. F. H. Storer; The Early Tudors (Epochs of Modern History), Rev. C. E. Moberly.

— Ticknor & Co.: American Literature and Other Papers, E. P. Whipple; Last Memorials of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Samuel Longfellow; The Confessions of Claud, Edgar Fawcett; Discourses on Architecture, E. E. Viollet-le-Duc; The New Astronomy, S. P. Langley; Stories and Sketches, John Boyle O'Reilly; A Sea Change; "or, Love's Stowaway," by William D. Howells.

NEOBIOLOGY.

Jan. 19, Dr. Olof Otto Hugo Johannes von Feilitzen, Stockholm, in his 33d y.; literary history and criticism.

Feb. 5, Richard H. Bealey, Nottingham, England, 59 y.; Lancashire dialect poet.

Feb. 15, Mr. J. Sandifer, London; publisher.

Feb. 10 (3?), Mrs. Henry Wood, England, 68 y.; novelist.

Feb. —, Sir Charles Macgregor, England; travels in Khorassan.

Feb. 10, Rev. Samuel Hopkins, Northampton, Mass., 79 y.; author of a History of the Puritans.

Feb. —, M. Feuilleux de Conches, France, 84 y.; biographer and editor in French literature.

Feb. —, the Marquis Juan Antonio Seoane, Spain; philosophy.

Mar. 8, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Brooklyn, N. Y., in his 74th y.; preacher, orator, journalist, and religious author.

Mar. 8, Paul Henri Faval, Paris, in his 70th year; dramatist, novelist, and historian.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

Eloquence, The Essentials of.	New Princeton, March.
W. M. Taylor.
Emerson, The Poems of.
Prof. C. C. Everett.	Andover R., March.
Hugo, Victor.	New Princeton, March.
Meredith, George.	New Princeton, March.
Novels, Some Thoughts about.	Macmillan's, March.
Pickwick, The True Story of.	Temple Bar, March.
Russell, Clark, The Boyhood of.
W. H. Rideing.	Brooklyn Mag., March.
Sand, George, The Country of.
Bertha Thomas.	Eng. Illus. Mag., March.
Youmans, E. L., Sketch of, with a Portrait.	Pop. Sc. Month., March.

Every Owner of SPARKS'S LIFE AND WRITINGS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN should have FRANKLIN IN FRANCE, which is a complement of that work.

FRANKLIN IN FRANCE

From Original Documents, most of which are now published for the first time. By EDWARD E. HALE and EDWARD E. HALE, Jr. With three newly engraved portraits of Franklin, from copies which are now quite rare, and numerous portrait illustrations throughout the text. One handsome 8vo volume of 500 pages. Cloth, $3.00.

When Benjamin Franklin died, in 1790, he left to his grandson, William Temple Franklin, the largest collection of his papers. This collection, which had been supposed to be irrevocably lost, was found a few years since on the top shelf of an old tailor's shop in St. James, became the property of Mr. Henry Stevens, and finally of the United States. From this collection and from other original documents, this life of "Franklin in France" has been written.

"I am greatly obliged to you for your most important contribution to our knowledge of Franklin. Your volume shows that you agree with me that whatever attracts readers to Franklin's writings and to the study of his public career is a benefaction to humanity. . . . We can never have too much from the pen of a man who never wrote a dull line or a foolish one. . . . I have read it ('Franklin in France') with the greatest satisfaction."—John Bigelow, Editor of "The Works of Franklin," to Mr. Hale.

"Early this morning I received your delicious book on Franklin, and have spent the day in reading it. You have brought together a great mass of things new and instructive and exceedingly pleasant to read. It takes a person who is familiar with the subject of your studies and the times to know how much of what you have brought forward was unpublished."—George Bancroft, the Historian, in a letter to Mr. Hale.

"No such exhaustive record of this important period of our history exists in the language."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"Dr. Hale and his son have brought together, in addition to well-known letters and documents, many important papers now first published, and have presented a picture of great force and vividness of the difficulties which Franklin had to encounter in Paris, and which he met with so much tact and so serene a temper. The story must be read as a whole, and any attempt to select characteristic extracts from these new letters would only give a very inadequate impression of their intrinsic interest and of the services which they help to illustrate."—Boston Post.

"It is a curious circumstance that two distinguished students of American history have been simultaneously engaged in the exploration of the Franklin papers, purchased by the United States Government in 1882, and that the results of their discoveries, the first important fruits of that national acquisition, are given to the public almost at the same moment. Mr. Bigelow and Mr. Hale have worked on different lines and with different purposes, and are not likely to interfere with each other. They agree in bearing testimony to the great value of the collection of letters and other documents bequeathed by Franklin to his grandson, and now, after many strange vicissitudes, safely deposited in the library of the State Department at Washington. It includes nearly 3,000 papers; of the whole bulk more than one-half has never been printed, and the unpublished portions apparently comprise most of the correspondence of Franklin's later years. Probably the new materials will not oblige us to reverse any notable verdict of history, but they will throw a strong light upon some obscure affairs, and illustrate with fresh force the extraordinarily various services of Franklin to his native country."—New York Tribune.

NEW BOOKS, JUST READY.

THE EGOIST.

A Novel. By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Evan Harrington," "Harry Richmond," "Sandra Belloni," "Rhoda Fleming," "Victoria" and "Diana of the Crossways," being the eighth in our new uniform 12mo edition, bound in English cloth, uncut. Price $2.00.

"Mr. Meredith's novels are an intellectual tonic. They are great, and, indeed, we may say they are the only novels of any living author which deserve to be called great. They will take the same high and permanent rank that is assigned to the works of George Eliot and George Sand."—Boston Traveller.

SOME CHINESE GHOSTS.

By LAFORD HERN.

CONTENTS: The Soul of the Great Bell—The Story of Ming-y—The Legend of Tehi-Nu—The Return of Yen-Tehi-King—The Tradition of the Tea Plant—The Tale of the Porcelain-God. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Some Chinese Ghosts," by Laford Hearn, is a collection of half a dozen legends culled from the realm of Cathayan story. The style has such grace and finish that it is charming, and the imagination is fresh and wholly original. This little gem is sure to have a permanent setting in American literature.

SONNETS IN SHADOW.

By ARLO BATES, author of "Berries of the Brier." 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Mr. Bates's first poetical volume, "Berries of the Brier," though not long since published, is entirely out of print. "Sonnets in Shadow," being an In Memoriam, strikes a tender chord, but it is the plaint of a soul which has thoughts worth the telling.

CATHEDRAL DAYS.

A Tour through Southern England. By ANNA BOWMAN DODD. With 23 illustrations from sketches and photographs by E. Eldon Deane. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

This is the record of a trip in places little frequented by tourists, told with so much fascination of style that the reader seems to share the delightful journey with the travelers. One of our foremost critics says of Mrs. Dodd: "She is, of all the women I know, the most thoroughly educated and accomplished—one of our ablest writers on literature, art, music, etc. I have looked over her descriptive record of a tour among the Southern Cathedral towns of England, and find it very charming."

S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago,

HAVE JUST ISSUED:

MASTERS OF THE SITUATION;

OR,
SOME SECRETS OF SUCCESS AND POWER.

By W. J. TILLEY, D. D.

The appearance of Dr. Tilley's work is a literary event of importance. It is a handsomely printed volume of 346 pages, tastefully bound, and adorned with a unique and original side stamp in black and gold. Price $1.25.

The topics discussed comprise "Genius," "Manners," "The Single Eye," "Masters of the Situation," and others of moment to the question of success in life. The book is free from any symptoms of didactic dryness, and is full of apt and pleasing illustrations. We invite you to examine it at your bookstore.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

THE POETICAL WORKS OF BENJ. F. TAYLOR, LL. D.

First complete edition. One handsome volume, containing portrait of the author. 12mo, 355 pages, price $1.75.

"Taylor is one of the greatest word painters in the world."—Trubner's American and Oriental Record, London.

"Whittier need not hesitate to claim Taylor as a comrade poet."—Chicago Journal.

"Taylor's poems deserve a position by the side of the masterpieces of American poetry."—Boston Times.

SOLAR HEAT, GRAVITATION AND SUN SPOTS.

By J. H. KEDZIE. 12mo, cloth, with 22 fine illustrations, $1.50.

"Mr. Kedzie's theory is the only one so far advanced that seems at all satisfactory."—Philadelphia Times.

"The arguments in support of these theories are urged with scholarly force and scientific acumen, and are worthy the careful attention of all interested in the study of the great light-giving orb."—New York Observer.

GEOLOGICAL STUDIES:

Or, The Elements of Geology, for High Schools, Colleges, Normal and Other Schools.

By ALEXANDER WINCHELL, LL. D., Professor of Geology and Paleontology, University of Michigan. 640 pages, 367 fine illustrations, $3.00.

"Professor Winchell has given the science a freshness and charm, and clothed it with a sense of beauty and inspiration, that will delight and instruct as it brings a better knowledge of geology into our schools and homes."—The Current, Chicago.

KANT'S ETHICS.

A Critical Exposition by ex-President NOAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D., of Yale College. Price $1.25. Being the fifth volume in the series of Griggs's Philosophical Classics.

"President Porter's exposition is as luminous as his criticism is just and helpful."—The Beacon, Boston.

"It is an able, scholarly volume, and will richly repay the student for the time devoted to it."—Christian at Work.

PRECEDING VOLUMES OF THE SERIES:

Kant's Critique of Pure Reason. By Prof. G. S. MORRIS, Ph. D., of the University of Michigan. $1.25.

Schelling's Transcendental Idealism. By Prof. JOHN WATSON, LL. D., of Queen's University. $1.25.

Fichte's Science of Knowledge. By Prof. C. C. EVERETT, D. D., of Harvard University. $1.25.

Hegel's Aesthetics. By Prof. J. S. KEDZIE, S. T. D., of Seabury Divinity School. $1.25.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

All the above books are bound in uniform style, 16mo, cloth, price $1.25 per volume, or $6.25 for the set of five volumes, put up in a neat paper box.

* For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

S. C. GRIGGS & CO.,

87 and 89 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO.

Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROS., BOSTON.

American Literature,

1607-1885.

By CHARLES F. RICHARDSON, Professor of English Literature in Dartmouth College. Part 1 (complete in itself). The Development of American Thought. Second edition. Octavo, cloth extra, $3.00.

"I find it admirably adapted to the uses of a class who will take with me, next semester, a course of lectures on the same subject. Professor Richardson has the gratitude of all teachers of American Literature."—Louise Manning Hodykins, Professor of English Literature in Wellesley College.

"It is proving to me an instructive and suggestive volume of reference. The author's method of treatment has advantages which I have tested in the work of my department."—S. A. Longwell, Teacher of English and Senior Literature in Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

"One of the few books on literature in which the historical and logical methods are happily combined."—Prof. T. W. Hunt, Princeton N. J.

"He has shown a discriminating insight and literary judgment in the treatment of our American literary work."—New Princeton Review.

"The most thoughtful and suggestive work on American literature that has been published."—Boston Globe.

"Nothing approaching it in completeness and broad grasp of the subject has heretofore been produced by any writer."—New York World.

"It is not a mere compilation of facts, but enters into philosophical and critical discussion, and becomes a trustworthy guide to those who would learn what American literature is, and what it has achieved. It is itself a most desirable contribution to it."—The Churchman.

"Professor Richardson's style is always animated, always clear, always forcible, and often brilliant. He has the art of making dull things bright, and there is hardly an uninteresting page in his whole volume."—New York Tribune.

"No class should go out of the American academy or high school that has not had access to this latest, most independent, most enjoyable consideration of the development of American thought."—New England Journal of Education.

"Shows wide and careful study of the theme, a cool judgment, and a steady hand in formulating the results of that judgment. . . . Accurate in information, correct in taste, and eminently simple and interesting in style."—Chicago Times.

"An honest, searching, and dispassionate criticism of American literature, and as such deserves the careful attention of those whose interest is in our national improvement."—Baltimore American.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 W. 23d St., New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 50 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 40 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

Derby Roll-Top Desks.

FIRST-CLASS IN WORKMANSHIP, MATERIAL, DESIGN AND FINISH.

While many are seeking trade by offering INFERIOR goods at lower prices than ours, we are, where possible, making our desks MORE PERFECT, and will not lower the quality to compete with LOW-PRICED workmanship and poor material. Several styles in stock adapted for physicians and home use.

Call and examine our

Derby Desks

In Antique Oak,
Red Cherry,
Black Walnut
And Mahogany.

Catalogues sent on application.

DERBY & KILMER DESK COMPANY,

55 CHARLESTOWN ST., BOSTON, MASS.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT
COMPANY

OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefensible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

NEW BOOKS.

DUE NORTH.

By MATURIN M. BALLOU, author of "Due South," "Edge-tools of Speech," "Genius in Sunshine and Shadow." Mr. Ballou's previous travel-books have had an immense popular success, which will doubtless be repeated in this vivid record of his recent travels. Beginning with two brilliant chapters on Copenhagen, it contains attractive accounts of the Swedish and Norwegian capitals, Stockholm and Christiania; chapters devoted to Bergen and Trondheim; the Lofodens and Marstrand; the North Cape and Midnight Sun; Lapland and Finland; St. Petersburg and Moscow; the Nova and Volga; Nijni-Novgorod; Warsaw and Russian Poland. $1.50.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF BOSTON.

A Novel. "The story is one of those unpretentious, quiet, realistic and yet vivid, narratives, which are perhaps the very most popular among the great bulk of story-readers, like 'The Lamplighter,' 'Rutledge,' and many others which have sold wonderfully, and still sell." $1.50.

THE STRIKE IN THE B— MILL.

Initial volume, new series of Round-Robin novels. This exciting story deals with a question of vast importance, the idea of workmen combining against their employers. $1.00. Paper covers, 50 cents.

DISCOURSES ON ARCHITECTURE.

By E.-E. VIOLLET-LE-DUC 2 vols., 8vo. Copiously illustrated. A new edition of this noble classic of architecture and aesthetics. $15.00.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price. Catalogues of our books mailed free.

Ticknor & Co., Boston.

GRAY'S BOTANIES.

GRAY'S BOTANICAL SERIES,

By Prof. ASA GRAY, of Harvard University, provides the best and most complete equipment for all classes or for special students.

GRAY'S HOW PLANTS GROW.

For Introduction $0.80

GRAY'S SCHOOL AND FIELD BOOK.

For Introduction 1.80

GRAY'S MANUAL. For Introduction . 1.62

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Two lenses 2.00

GRAY'S BOTANIST'S MICROSCOPE.

Three lenses 2.50

Write for circulars and terms for introduction of other works in the series.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & CO.,

PUBLISHERS, 753 & 755 Broadway, New York.
149 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Essay Club's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1898. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 86th Street, New York City.

JOHN F. STRATTON,

49 Maiden Lane, - - - New York.

Importer, Manufacturer and Wholesale Dealer in all kinds of MUSICAL MERCHANDISE, MUSICAL BOXES, BAND INSTRUMENTS. STRATTON'S CELEBRATED RUSSIAN GIT VIOLIN STRINGS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

Dr. Mark R. Woodbury

HAS prepared and prescribed for more than 30 years his D. K. A. They never fail to cure Dyspepsia, to promote digestion, to relieve constipation, to cure heartburn to neutralize acid stomach.

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS

Cost only 50 cents a box (trial boxes 25 cents), will be mailed to any part of the United States on receipt of the price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

Lee & Shepard's New Books

LECTURES ON MORAL PHILOSOPHY

By ANDREW P. PEARSON, D. D., LL. D., Emeritus Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard University. Cloth, $1.50.

ENGLISH SYNONYMS DISCRIMINATED

By RICHARD WHATELY, D. D., the Archbishop of Dublin. A new edition. 50 cents.

HINTS ON WRITING AND SPEECH-MAKING

By THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON. Cloth, 50 cents.

THE MONARCH OF DREAMS

By THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON. Cloth, 50 cents.

HOW SHALL MY CHILD BE TAUGHT?

Practical Pedagogy, or the Science of Teaching Illustrated. LOUISA PARSONS HOPKINS, Supervisor of Boston Public Schools. Author of "Educational Psychology," "Handbook of the Earth," "Natural History Plays," etc. Price $1.50.

THE NATION IN A NUTSHELL

By GEORGE MAKEPEACE TOWLE, author of "Young Folks' History of England," "Young Folks' History of Ireland," etc. Price 50 cents.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S HISTORY OF IRELAND

By GEORGE MAKEPEACE TOWLE, with an introduction by JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY, the Irish Patriot. Illustrations from original designs by CHARLES COPELAND. Cloth, $1.50.

LIFE OF GEO. W. WHISTLER

CIVIL ENGINEER

By Prof. GEORGE L. VOSE, President Boston Society Civil Engineers, and author of "Vose's Manual for Railroad Engineers," "Geometrical Drawing," etc. With Portrait. Cloth, 8vo, $1.00.

VIRGINIA F. TOWNSEND'S NEW NOVEL

A BOSSON GIRL'S AMBITIONS

Uniform with her other books. Price $1.50.

THE NEW NOVEL BY AMANDA M. DOUGLAS

FOES OF HER HOUSEHOLD

Uniform with her other books. Price $1.50.

NEW EDITIONS

A YEAR WORTH LIVING

By WILLIAM M. BAKER, author of "His Majesty Myself," "Making of a Man," "Blessed Saint Certainty," "New Timothy," "Moss Evans," etc. Price $1.00.

LATER LYRICS

By JULIA WARD HOWE. $2.00.

DIALOGUES FROM DICKENS

Arranged by ELIOT FETTER, A. M. First Series. Price $1.00.

DRAMAS AND DIALOGUES FROM DICKENS

Arranged by ELIOT FETTER, A. M. Second Series. Price $1.00.

BUDS FOR THE BRIDAL WREATH

By Rev. W. P. TILDEN. 18mo, full gilt and gilt edges. Price 75 cents.

EASTER NOVELTIES

MISS IRENE E. JEROME'S

THE MESSAGE OF THE BLUEBIRD

Told to Me to Tell to Others

In a new and appropriate Easter dress. Palatine boards, floriated ornaments, gold titles, satin ribbon, boxed, $1.00.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE"

ARISE, MY SOUL, ARISE!

By SARAH FLOWER ADAMS. Illustrated. Tastily bound in Palatine boards, with floriated designs and gold titles, knotted with satin ribbon and boxed. Price $1.00.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S EASTER HYMN

SEE THE LAND HER EASTER KEEPING

Illustrated. Uniform in size and style of binding with "Arise, My Soul, Arise!" Price $1.00. Mr. Kingsley's verses have the ring of the true poet, his hymns the spirit of the true Christian teacher.

"A BASKET OF EASTER EGGS"

GLADNESS OF EASTER

From the Poets. Illustrated. Uniform in size and style of binding with "Arise, My Soul, Arise!" and "See the Land Her Easter Keeping." Price $1.00.

OLD FRIENDS IN EASTER DRESS

4 Separate Books, viz.

NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE

ROCK OF AGES ABIDE WITH ME

MY FAITH LOOKS UP TO THEE.

Miniature Edition. Size 5½ x 4½ inches; in white and gold, knotted with satin ribbon. Price 35 cents each. Cloth, gilt, 50 cents; alligator style, 50 cents; French morocco, $1.00; calf, $2.00.

. Catalogues of our publications mailed free on application.

Lee & Shepard Publishers Boston

APRIL ATLANTIC,

Now ready, has

A Fine Etched Portrait

OF

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,

With the following articles:

JOHN G. WHITTIER,

On the Big Horn. A Poem.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,

The second paper of

Our Hundred Days in Europe.

MRS. OLIPHANT AND T. B. ALDRICH.

The Second Son. XIII.-XVI.

EDMUND KIRKE,

A Suppressed Chapter of History,

Relating a very interesting episode of the War for the Union.

EDWARD IRVING STEVENSON,

Via Crucis.

F. MARION CRAWFORD,

Paul Pateff. VIII., IX.

OLIVE THORNE MILLER,

The Mocking-Bird's Nest.

JOHN C. ROPES,

General McClellan. A Review.

WILLIAM W. ARCHER,

Lazarus Mart'n, de Cullud Lleyer.

LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY,

A Tory Parson.

Other Essays, Poems, Contributors' Club, etc.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a number.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO, Boston.

NEW BOOKS.

NEW YORK.

Vols. 8 and 9 in American Commonwealths. By

ELLIS H. ROBERTS, author of "Government Revenue." With a Map. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50.

New York, by its geographical position and size, its settlement, its vast commercial and industrial development, and its varied political changes, has a history of conspicuous interest. Mr. Roberts, the well-known editor of the Utica Herald, is admirably fitted, by his intimate knowledge of the State and of public affairs, to produce an excellent history of New York and a valuable addition to the series of American Commonwealths.

A CENTURY OF ELECTRICITY.

By T. C. MENDENHALL. With Illustrations.

1 vol., 16mo, decorated cloth, $1.25.

The peculiar interest of the subject, the author's complete information, the simple style, and the numerous illustrations make an exceedingly instructive and entertaining book.

HISTORY OF THE PAPACY DURING THE PERIOD OF THE REFORMATION.

By Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON. Vols. III. and

IV. THE ITALIAN PRINCES, 1464-1518. With Appendices and Index. 8vo, $7.50.

The English Churchman says of the former volumes: "His work is in all respects a great one, and is certain of a permanent place on the shelves of the student of ecclesiastical history. It is a grand specimen of conscientious workmanship, written in an admirable spirit, and a credit to English historical scholarship."

A SATCHEL GUIDE

For the Vacation Tourist in Europe. Edition for 1887, revised. With Maps, Money Tables, Traveler's Calendar, etc. 16mo, roan, flexible, $1.50 net.

The Satchel Guide has yearly grown in popular confidence as it has proved to be thoroughly trustworthy and to contain just the information tourists wish.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO, Boston.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S

RECENT BOOKS.

New Volume of "English Worthies."

GEORGE CANNING.

By FRANK H. HILL. Volume 8 of "English Worthies." Edited by Andrew Lang. 12mo, cloth, price 75 cents.

The previous issues of "English Worthies" are: CHARLES DARWIN, by GRANT ALLEN; MARLBOROUGH, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY; SHAFTESBURY (the First Earl), by H. D. TRAILL; RALEIGH, by EDMUND GOSSE; STEELE, by AUSTIN DOBSON; BEN JONSON, by J. A. SYMONDS; ADMIRAL BLAKE, by DAVID HANNAY. 12mo, cloth, price 75 cents each.

LIL LORIMER.

A NOVEL. By THEO GIFT, author of "Pretty Miss Bellow," etc. 12mo, price, paper cover, 50 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

Lil Lorimer, the heroine of this novel, is a character marked by many individual and fascinating qualities, and enlists the sympathies of the reader to an unusual degree. The action of the story takes place partly in South America, with an English family residing there, affording some fresh and striking pictures of life.

IN PARADISE.

A NOVEL. From the German of PAUL HEYSE. A new edition. In two vols. 12mo, half bound (in boards, with red cloth backs and paper sides). Price for the two vols., $1.50.

"We may call 'In Paradise' a great novel with the utmost confidence in our judgment of it."—N. Y. Evening Post.

JOHN-A-DREAMS.

A NOVEL. By JULIAN STURGIS, author of "John Maidment," etc. A new edition. 12mo, paper, price 25 cents.

MISS CHURCHILL. A Study. By CHRISTIAN REID. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS. A JOURNAL OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA, FROM 1852 TO 1860. By the late CHARLES GREVILLE. One vol., cloth, price $2.00.

BRAZIL: ITS CONDITION AND PROSPECTS. By C. C. ANDREWS, ex-Consul-General to Brazil. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A ZEALOT IN TULLE. A Novel. By Mrs. WILDRICK. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

THE MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES. A Novel. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. 12mo, paper, 50 cents.

ON THE SUSQUEHANNA. A Novel. By Dr. WILLIAM A. HAMMOND. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

CREATION OR EVOLUTION? A PHILOSOPHICAL INQUIRY. By GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL AND GEOLOGICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS. By ANGELO HEILPRIN. International Scientific Series. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

IN ONE TOWN. A Novel. By EDMUND DOWNNEY. 12mo, paper, 25 cents.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 7. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 320. Publishers.

BOSTON, APRIL 2, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

Scribner's Magazine

FOR APRIL

Is now for sale by all dealers everywhere. The number contains the first installment of the unpublished Thackeray Letters. The Boston Post, in a long editorial article, says: "They are altogether delightful." The Boston Transcript says:

"Not the least interesting parts of the letters are the caricatures with which Thackeray enlivened his correspondence with his friends. The writer's humor and gay spirits crop out repeatedly. That the characters of Joseph Medley and George Osborn are filling his brain appears from the combination signature, 'Jos. Osborn,' which he gives to the first letter in the series, written in January, 1847, just after the first chapters of 'Vanity Fair' had been published. The next one is written in French, and Thackeray signs himself, 'Chevalier de Titmarsh.'"

The Brooklyn Union, also speaking of the Thackeray Letters, says:

"The letters are characterized by the entire freedom of friendly correspondence, and through the lines gurgles the humor of the great novelist, while shrewd and wise observations on men and things, and apt allusions to literary matters, give them a decided value."

The Critic calls the Letters a "literary feast." In the same number of the magazine appears the concluding paper of ex-Minister Washburne's "Reminiscences of the Siege and Commune of Paris," with many illustrations, short stories by Thomas Nelson Page and F. D. Millet, and contributions from H. C. Bunner, Julia C. R. Dorr, Edith M. Thomas, Harold Frederic, and many others. The Boston Beacon says:

"SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE already occupies a position of assured success both in this country and England, and is destined to grow in the public favor. The current number is a model of what a high-grade family magazine should be."

25 CENTS A NUMBER. $3.00 A YEAR.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
NEW YORK.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference.
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
681 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

BANKER'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Northerney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STONE. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLEBRIDGE, M.A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JONES-BROWN, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Rheik of Alexandria, The Inn in the Desert. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 3 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONIUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN FIGURES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

TWO ROYAL LIVES.

Gleanings at Berlin, and from the Lives of their Imperial Highnesses, the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany. By DOMITIKA ROBERTS. With numerous portraits and illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, beveled boards, gilt top, $2.25.

"This deeply interesting work. . . Much praise is due to the author of this work for the intelligence with which she has collected in a limited space all the principal facts of these 'Two Royal Lives.' In accomplishing this task an 'earnest purpose' has been united to real ability and a genuine admiration for the characters of the princes so faithfully portrayed."—Morning Post.

STUDIES IN ITALIAN LITERATURE,

Classical and Modern, also the Legend of "Il Cenacolo," a poem. By CATHERINE MARY PHILLIMORE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, vellum, red edges, $2.40.

CONTENTS: The Paradise of Dante—Petrarch—Tasso—The Prince Printers of Italy—The Italian Drama—Manzoni, etc.—The Legend of "Il Cenacolo," etc.

POPULAR TALES AND FICTIONS.

Their Migrations and Transformations. By W. A. CLOUSTON. 2 vols., post 8vo, upwards of 1,000 pages, half roxburg, $10.00.

CONTENTS: Introduction—Origin and Diffusion of Popular Tales, etc.—Invisible Caps and Cloaks—Gold-Producing Animals—Adventures with Giants—Dragons and Monstrous Birds—Bird-Maidens—The Hare and the Tortoise—Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp—The Hunchback and the Fairies—The Enchanted Horse—Dæmon Enclosed in a Bottle—Contracts with the Evil One, etc.—Whittington and his Cat—The Three Travelers and the Loaf—Llewellyn and his Dog Gellart—The Three Knights and the Lady—The Three Hunchbacks, etc.—Chaucer's "Pardoner's Tale"—The Lucky Impostor—The Miller's Son, or Destiny, etc.—Appendices—Full Complete Index, etc.

A COMITIST LOVER, and Other Studies.

By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN, author of "The New Godiva," "A Tourist Idyl," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"Of these miscellanies, the first and most important . . . is of singular value. Miss Chapman's mind is largely occupied with ethical and social questions, and to the consideration of them she brings a judgment always sympathetic and never harsh, a clear apprehension and a noble emotion. . . The note of heartbreak which runs through the conversation deepens its sacredness to the point of tragedy."—Bradford Observer.

CAPITAL.

A Critical Analysis of Capitalist Production. By KARL MARX. Translated from the Third German Edition by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and edited by Frederick Engels. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $12.00.

"The Bible of the working-classes."

. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FEUD OF OAKFIELD CREEK.

A Novel of California. By JOSIAH ROYCE, Ph.D., author of "California," in the series of American Commonwealths. 1 vol., 16mo, decorated cloth, $1.25.

A story of great value as depicting unusually dramatic scenes and situations in California life, aside from its interest as a portrayal of character and of romantic experience. It promises to be one of the notable novels of the season.

HIS STAR IN THE EAST.

A Study in the Early Aryan Religions. By LEIGHTON PARKS, Rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston. 1 vol., crown 8vo, $1.50.

CONTENTS: The Religion of the Son of Man—Vedism—Brahmanism—Transition from Brahmanism to Buddhism—Buddhism—Christ's Religion and Buddhism—Hinduism—Zoroastrianism—The Perversion of the Gospel—The Future of Christ's Religion.

This book is an important contribution to the study of comparative religion, written from full knowledge of the literature of the subject; from personal observations in China, Japan and India; and in a spirit of generous appreciation.

DAFFODILS.

A new Volume of Poems. By Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," "Bonnyborough," etc. 16mo, in unique binding, gilt top, $1.25.

A very attractive book, containing the poems written by Mrs. Whitney during several years past. In verse, as in prose, Mrs. Whitney is profoundly earnest, and always in search of whatever is true as well as beautiful.

PANSIES.

A Volume of Poems by Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY. A new edition, in similar style to "Daffodils." 16mo, $1.25.

"A book which is singularly free from artistic commonplace and everywhere breathes a spirit of refined fancy and thoughtful earnestness, which should commend it to all true sympathies, even if it were not matched by so rare a degree of poetic merit."—New York Tribune.

HOLY TIDES.

By Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY. Square 16mo, beautifully printed and bound, 75 cents.

A tasteful book of thoughtful poetry, celebrating the great festival days of the Church—Advent, Christmas, Epiphany, Lent, Whitsunday, Trinity and Easter—days which commemorate events notable in the religious experience of mankind.

N. B. These three books by Mrs. Whitney are admirably suited for Easter gifts.

A CLUB OF ONE.

The Note-Book of a Man who might have been sociable. 16mo, gilt top, specially attractive in typography, presswork and binding. $1.25.

The author of this book has seen, read and thought much, and has here condensed the results of his studies and observations. It is a book of great variety—comment, reflection, gossip, criticism, with ample and apt quotation.

* * For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

Four Important Books.

ECHOES OF BIBLE HISTORY.

By the Rt. Rev. W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D. With 50 illustrations. 330 pp., 12mo, $1.50.

Gives in concise form a popular account of those marvelous discoveries made in Eastern lands, more especially Chaldean, Egyptian and Palestine, which have thrown such light and corroboration around the Bible narrative.

A MANUAL OF CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES.

By the Rev. C. A. Row, M.A., Bampton Lecturer for 1877 (being the initial volume of the new "Theological Educator" series). 206 pages, 16mo, cloth, 75 cents net.

While the manuals in this series will be specially useful to theological students, the clearness and simplicity of their style will, it is hoped, attract the many laymen interested in these subjects; while their freshness and scholarship will make them interesting even to proficients in theology.

JOB AND SOLOMON:

Or, The Wisdom of the Old Testament. By the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, M.A., D.D. 309 pages, 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

"Mr. Cheyne's work is in many respects one of the most noteworthy of our day."—N. Y. Times.

SERMONS TO CHILDREN.

"The Bird's Nest," and other "Sermons for Children of all Ages." By the Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. Just out.

A collection of sixteen unusually attractive addresses to the young by the well-known Dr. Cox. A third edition of the book is already in demand in London.

RECENT NOTEWORTHY VOLUMES.

1. THE BISHOPS IN THE TOWER. A Record of stirring events affecting the Church and Non-Conformists from the Restoration to the Rebellion. By CAXON LUCKOCK. $1.50.
2. THE LIFE OF CHRIST IN THE WORLD. Sermons by the Rev. ARTHUR BROOKS. $1.50.
3. LUCK'S HANDBOOK OF BIBLICAL DIFFICULTIES. Second edition nearly sold out. $2.50.
4. SYMPOSIUM ON FUTURE PROBATION BY LEADING ENGLISH DIVINES. $1.50.
5. BISHOP'S LITURGIES AND OFFICES OF THE CHURCH. $2.50.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,

3 and 5 Bible House, New York.

Derby Roll-Top Desks.

FIRST-CLASS IN WORKMANSHIP, MATERIAL, DESIGN AND FINISH.

While many are seeking trade by offering INFERIOR goods at lower prices than ours, we are, where possible, making our desks MORE PERFECT, and will not lower the quality to compete with LOW-PRICED workmanship and poor material. Several styles in stock adapted for physicians and home use.

Call and examine our

Derby Desks

In Antique Oak,

Red Cherry,

Black Walnut

And Mahogany.

Catalogues sent on application.

DERBY & KILMER DESK COMPANY,

55 CHARLESTOWN ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Important New Books

JUST PUBLISHED BY

A. C. Armstrong & Son.

MODERN METHODS OF ILLUSTRATING BOOKS.

By H. T. WOOD, Secretary to the Society of Arts, London. 12mo, cloth, uncut edges, $1.25. (New volume, "Book Lover's Library.")

London Literary World says: "This volume is very welcome. The author has evidently thoroughly mastered the subject, for he has produced a book which is a model of clearness and conciseness, minus technicalities."

REPRESENTATIVE ENGLISH PROSE AND PROSE WRITERS.

By T. W. HUNT, Professor of English Language in the College of New Jersey. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"A book excellently adapted to convey practical instruction in the principles and history of English prose composition. . . . The work as a whole is exceedingly well done, and shows thorough study, sound judgment, and a true sense of literary virtues and faults under all their outward changes. . . . The volume has the great merit of making an instructive study of some of the masters of English serve as an exercise both in style and criticism. It would be particularly available as an advanced text book in rhetoric."—N. Y. Nation.

Rev. Dr. Wm. M. Taylor's New Work.

THE PARABLES OF OUR SAVIOUR.

Expounded and Illustrated. Uniform with the same author's "Limitation of Life," "Contrary Winds," and other sermons. Crown octavo, 454 pages. $1.75.

"We are bound to add that Dr. Taylor has a thoroughly independent way of treating his subjects. He very properly makes use of all the material which is furnished in the storehouses of the past and the present, but he is not a mere provider of other men's thoughts and writings; he weighs and considers their contributions, and then speaks out of the enriched but independent movements of his own mind."—London Literary World.

Rev. Dr. A. B. Bruce's New Work.

THE MIRACULOUS ELEMENT IN THE GOSPELS.

Uniform with the same author's "Parabolic Teaching of Christ." 8vo, cloth, each $2.50.

Rev. Dr. W. G. T. SHEDD says: "THIS NEW WORK exhibits the SAME LEARNING, CLEARNESS, CANDOR AND THOROUGHNESS that appear in his other works. We regard his volume, considered as a whole, as an instructive and valuable addition to the literature of Apologetics. It does what it proposes to do—namely, to establish the main truthfulness and credibility of the gospel miracles, with ABILITY AND FAIRNESS."

POEMS AND LIFE OF MADAME GUYON.

Edited and arranged by Rev. A. S. DYER of Cambridge, England. With a portrait. Cloth, $1.00.

"This collection of Madame Guyon's poems will be a treasure to many, and a source of peculiar interest to all book-loving people. It will be specially welcome for the Easter season."—Boston Traveller.

NEW PRINCETON REVIEW

FOR MARCH.

"The quality of the New Princeton Review has that fine and rare depth and earnestness which is often wanting in American reviews. As the magazine wins its way, it establishes a firm foundation of regard in the thoughtful public. Literature is enriched by its scholarly articles, and a thoughtful consideration of social questions encouraged."—Boston Journal.

"The New Princeton Review has scored nearly all the successes of the higher order of periodical literature that have been made in this country since its publication began a year or more ago. The March number is packed solid with articles on different subjects, and there is nothing from cover to cover which one could afford to have omitted."—Boston Herald.

"There has been nothing in the history of American periodical literature more striking and hopeful than the certainty of touch and distinctness in standard shown from the outset by the editors of the New Princeton Review in selecting the ground to be occupied, and in carrying out the plan thus formed with marked judgment and unerring taste."—N. Y. Christian Union.

TERMS: $3 a year in advance, postage free. Single numbers, 50 cents. We make the special offer of 1896 and 1897—Two years in one subscription for $5.

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON,

714 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, APRIL 2, 1887. No. 7.

CONTENTS.

NAUMANN'S HISTORY OF MUSIC	99
FRANKLIN IN FRANCE	99
THE ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG MAN	99
MODERN METHODS OF ILLUSTRATION	100
JAPANESE FAIRY TALES	100
COGOL'S DEAD SOULS	101
BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE:
Mrs. Ewing's Works	101
Masters of the Situation	101
Forced Acquaintances	102
MINOR FICTION:
Two Gentlemen of Boston	102
Miss Churchill	102
The Golden Hope	102
MINOR NOTICES:
Ballou's Due North	102
Bascom's Sociology	102
Von Reber's History of Mediæval Art	102
Silsbee's Half Century in Salem	103
Saltus's Anatomy of Negation	103
Etc., Etc., Etc.
ORIGINAL POETRY:
The Brontës. E. T. A.	104
A LETTER FROM NEW YORK. Calamus	104
THE PERIODICALS	106
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Chicago vs. Boston	106
Good News from Mary Cowden Clarke	107
The February Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society	107
NOTES AND QUERIES. 818-820	107
NEWS AND NOTES	108
ENGLISH OPINIONS	103
A NEW THEORY OF THE APOCALYPSE	103
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	108
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	108

NAUMANN'S HISTORY OF MUSIC.*

GERMAN authorship, English editorship, 1,332 pages of letter press and upwards of 300 illustrations, many of them of extreme interest, invest this work with imposing dimensions and solid values. In the number, variety, and value of its illustrations it surpasses any work on the subject with which we are familiar, any certainly which is easily accessible; while in scope it is comprehensive, in treatment thorough, in learning affluent, and in criticism judicious and instructive. The first volume is somewhat strictly historical, the second shades off into musical biography, which as we approach the present time becomes minute and rapid. It would be too much to say that every musician of note, past and present, is catalogued in its pages, but it would be hard to name one who is omitted; composers, organists, pianists, violinists, vocalists, all are here, sometimes honored with the dignity of whole chapters, as Bach and Handel, Mozart and Beethoven; sometimes dismissed with a few lines, as Czerny and Hartmann, Bennett and Sullivan. Each officer and private in this great army of composition, instrumentation, and song is recognized, ranked, and passed in review before the reader.

The first volume deals with the scientific, philosophical, more truly historical divisions of the subject; all that part of it, we may say, which lies back of the Reformation. Here human figures are dim and names uncertain, while as we recede into the archaic period we have only currents and tendencies to study. Book First has to do with the music of the ancients, the Chinese, Japanese, and Hindoos, the Egyptians and their companion families among the nations, the Israelites and their apostate descendants the Islamites, and after them the Greeks and Romans. Thence we pass in Book II to the early Christian and the Middle Ages, to the development of church music, the contributions of Gregory, the Folk-Music, the troubadours and the minnesingers, and the rise of the Netherlands and the English schools. Of Book III Luther is the central figure, with the Reformation developments of musical science and art throughout Europe. At this point the second volume joins on, with its portrait gallery of the men who have made music famous in the last two hundred years. Men, we say, for it is astonishing how few women are numbered in the company of great musicians.

The illustrations are a distinguished feature of this fascinating history. Some of them are pictures of the first rude implements of sound; others portraits of great players and singers whose faces we are glad to see. Many are inserted fac-similes of musical manuscripts and autograph letters. There is, for example, a page of Handel's "Messiah," a view of Beethoven on his death-bed, a drawing of Mozart's ear compared with an ordinary ear.

A happy instance of the author's skill in characterization is his remark that Bach is the Old Testament, Beethoven the New Testament, of musicians.

FRANKLIN IN FRANCE.*

THE "original documents" on which is based this handsome volume, treating very freshly and entertainingly of Franklin's long residence in France as the representative of the infant republic of the United States of America, are those purchased by Congress under President Garfield. Their character and their varied history as a collection are presented in a full preface, which also names, as source of this work, the letters addressed to Franklin, preserved by the American Philosophical Society; the Bancroft manuscripts; those of the "House of Adams;" the archives of Massachusetts; the Austin diary; and Dr. Sparks's collection of unprinted matter.

From all these quarters Rev. Dr. Hale and his son, who in this work makes a promising first appearance as a historian, have selected the materials for a fresh examination and presentation of Franklin's whole mission to France, "printing all the more important letters not published heretofore, and also the most important unpublished letters of his correspondents." The amount of matter previously known which is here used is small. At the same time, the book is not a mere collection of correspondence, but an exceedingly interesting account of those years in which Franklin used all his immense popularity with the French nation to help the cause of his own country. On his first visit to France, in 1767 and 1769, he was universally honored as the eminent philosopher; and, in particular, gained the friendship of the influential school of the Physiocrats. From 1776 to 1781, when Yorktown closed the war, Dr. Franklin was, first, one of three commissioners, and then sole Minister Plenipotentiary to France, standing before kings, indeed, as the diligent man deserved to do.

The minute story of his labors and trials as representative, political, financial, and, not least of all, social, is told with the skill and unfailing power of making his pages attractive which especially distinguish Dr. Hale's historical writings. His stories, it is well known, are sometimes as circumstantial and realistic as any histories; his history, on the other hand, is as readable as most novels. The chapters on Beaumarchais, Franklin and the French, Voltaire, and Franklin (Qu'il était charmant de voir embrasser Solon et Sophocle !), John Paul Jones, and the Dunkirk Privateers, we have found particularly good. The work as a whole is, of course, indispensable to one who henceforth wishes to know the sage himself, or the inner history of our Revolution. We may well be grateful that the Franklin manuscripts did not fall into the hands of any Dr. Dryasdust. An occasional repetition is all that reminds us that we are not reading the work of a single author. Two slight matters have apparently escaped the notice of both writers. The reference to Yorktown on page 224 (under date of 1778) is erroneous; and on page 309 the authors have not escaped what Prof. Bain well calls "the snare of the participial construction," for surely it was not "the sailors of Dunkirk" (the subject of the sentence) who were "successively occupied and fortified," etc., but Dunkirk itself!

THE ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG MAN.*

OCTAVE FEUILLET'S most popular romance has maintained its hold upon the affection of at least two generations of readers, and seems to be in a fair way to retain its freshness of interest for some time to come. The simplicity of its motive, the

* The History of Music. By Emil Naumann. Translated by F. Praeger. Edited by Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley. Two volumes. Illustrated. Cassell & Co. $10.00

* Franklin in France. From Original Documents, Most of Which are Now Published for the First Time. By Edward E. Hale and Edward E. Hale, Jr. Roberts Bros. $3.00.

* The Romance of a Poor Young Man. By Octave Feuillet. From the French by J. Henry Hager. William S. Gottsberger. 90c.

charm of its style, the refinement of its passion, the purity of its sentiment, all appeal to tender and thoughtful minds, and awaken responsive echoes from ardent temperaments which cannot escape such influences any more than a flower can escape the solicitation of sunshine and the dew. The author, to be sure, displays to a certain extent in this book the defects of his virtues. Maxime is perhaps a little too perfect; one would have more patience with him if he occasionally made a mistake or lost his temper—but he is a type far removed from the prig, and his manly qualities of head and heart win frank admiration. In Marguerite we have the prototype of many figures that have appeared again and again in modern fiction, none of the conscious or unconscious imitations having the reality of the original. She is a distinct creation, and one that bears the test of analysis. And then the triumphant conclusion of the narrative: the hero coming victorious from all his trials, and finding himself rewarded with a fortune and the hand of the woman he loves. It is like a fairy tale, and in spite of the realists, good women and chivalric men have not lost their appetites for the fairy-tale order of fiction.

This book, long out of print in any English version, Mr. J. Henry Hager has sought to bring once more before readers confined to the vernacular. His version is better than none at all, but it is by no means an adequate rendering. In idiom it follows the French with slavish fidelity; it is often awkward in phraseology; and it is frequently incorrect or defective in interpretation. The simplicity and charm of the original text, and often its force, are time and again lost altogether. Thus, "étudier avec une sollicitude extraordinaire le réveil de la nature," is translated "to study with singular care the phenomena of the reawakening of nature." "J'étais . . . plongé dans une sorte de torpeur dont la rêverie uniforme me présentait le mirage de somptueux festins," is Englished by Mr. Hager, "I had been in a state of semi-unconsciousness, in which my mind had been engaged in causing to pass before me a vision of sumptuous feasts." On page 72 the narrator is represented as making his way "towards the château, holding a traveling bag in one hand, while with the other [he] decapitated the heads of the dandelions;" but the hero's arm was not as long as Mr. Hager would have us believe. M. Feuillet says that the decapitation was done "à coups de canne." On the same page we read of "deep perspectives" for "profondes perspectives," and of "white barks moored under rustic shelters." It is true that the French has "barques," but, as any dictionary will show, and common sense will indicate, the correct rendering is "boats." On page 75 "a genuine furnace" is spoken of as "blazing in the fireplace." When Lucie Campbell "lancait . . . un regard furtif," Mr. Hager will have it that she "stole a stealthy glance," which is twice too sly. Perhaps the most amusing mistranslation in the book is that wherein "le ruisseau de la rue du Bac," of which M. Feuillet speaks as the mirror of a certain period, is boldly set down as "the brook in the Rue du Bac!" If Mr. Hager knew French and had a better command of English, we are inclined to think that he might have made a fairly satisfactory translation; but as he lacks these somewhat important qualifications, we cannot justly say that his efforts have been crowned with success.

MODERN METHODS OF ILLUSTRATION.*

MR. WOOD'S little manual, describing the various methods now in use for book illustration, will be welcomed by readers in general, who will find in it excellent and lucid descriptions of processes, and some suggestive comment and criticism. The range of the author impresses us as being rather narrow. He confines himself chiefly to English methods, with occasional references to French and German work, and says nothing of American work, which, to be sure, does not on the whole equal the foreign, but which in some points, if we are not mistaken, has developed new and important improvements.

After an introductory review of the older processes of book illustration, Mr. Wood passes to the discussion of photographic methods, considers then the production of surface blocks, devotes three chapters to the making of type-blocks from half-tone negatives, gives proper space to intaglio plates and photogravure, and concludes with a chapter on mechanical processes. As a result of his investigations, Mr. Wood inclines to the opinion that engraving on wood as an art is doomed:

It may be a matter of dispute to what extent chemical or "automatic" engraving processes (both names are equally inappropriate and equally convenient), will oust wood-engraving from the place it now holds, whether they will drive it out altogether, or whether they will only take away from it all the cheaper work, leaving the finest still to be accomplished by its aid. That they are interfering to a large extent with it, is unquestionable; that they can produce results it is incapable of is equally certain; and that in a very few years they will do all that wood-engraving can do and a good deal more, is, to say the least of it, extremely probable.

Later, Mr. Wood freely admits the great merit of wood-engraving—its unrivalled richness and softness of tone, and the opportunity it affords the engraver to assert his own individuality unhampered by any purely mechanical processes. But, as he says, the art has been vastly abused. "For years it has been trying to be anything but itself." The photographic processes, with their faithful reproduction of detail, have altered the taste of the public, and wood-engravers have sought to meet the demand till many of the most admired cuts "look like nothing so much as over-exposed photographs." The chief argument against the perpetuity of wood-engraving is, however, the fact that artists of the first class favor the mechanical processes because their work is thereby reproduced with absolute exactitude. Mr. Wood thinks that typographic blocks promise the most sure and satisfactory results in the immediate future for the reproduction of specially prepared pictures, or line drawings, and that photogravure methods will be generally employed for the production of large engravings.

With regard to processes in detail Mr. Wood has much to say that is of interest. He tells us, for instance, that in photographing medals and other metallic objects, in order to avoid the bad effects of the glittering surface, plaster casts are made and the photograph is taken at second-hand with much greater certainty of success. If a polished silver cup is to be photographed, the careful workman puts first a lump of ice in it; then the moisture condenses upon the metal and gives "a dull matte surface instead of a bright one." It is also interesting to know that pure honey is regarded as a valuable material in the preparation of the sensitive film for photo-etching. Greater speed can be obtained with honey than with albumen, and this is especially desirable in newspaper work.

With a good negative, and a well prepared film, a print can be obtained in ten minutes by the electric light. Three or four hours will suffice for the etching, and thus, in cases of pressure, a block can be ready for the printing press in five or six hours.

A bit of information for the curious is also afforded in the remark that the recent small-paged edition of Skeat's Etymological Dictionary was made by the photo-lithographic process, all trouble and expense for press correction thereby being saved.

JAPANESE FAIRY TALES.*

HERE is something rare and interesting: not remarkable as literature but curious as art, and striking as typography. The eight books are of actual Japanese manufacture, and published in Tokio. The tales are very brief, and are presented in an English translation, which however well preserves their original simplicity and quaintness. The type is unusually large, and the text is ingeniously woven in with the pictures, and even sometimes boldly imprinted on the tinted groundwork of the pages. The outer sides only of the doubled leaves are utilized,

* Japanese Fairy Tale Series. Eight numbers. Momotaco, or Little Reachling.—Shitakiri Suzume, the Tongue Cut Sparrow.—Saru-Kani Kassen, or Battle of the Monkey and the Crab.—Hanasaki Jiji, the Old Man who made the Dead Trees Blossom.—Kachi-Kachi Mountain.—Nedumi no Yome-iri, the Mouse's Wedding; Kobutori, the Old Man and the Devils.—Urashima, the Fisher-boy. Tokyo: Kobunsha, No. 2 Minami Saecicho. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

* Modern Method of Illustrating Books. By H. Trueman Wood, M.A. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1 25.

showing their folded edges towards the reader. The paper is genuine "Japanese," unlike what we see in this country. The paper covers are brilliantly illuminated, and the edges tastefully knotted at the back with light blue silk. The illustrations throughout are in color and the entire appearance of the books is unique.

As for the stories themselves they are the fruits of a somewhat childish imagination, and belong to the grade of fables told for youngest minds. We cannot take space to epitomize them all, but may specify two as examples. "The Tongue-Cut Sparrow" had been mutilated of its singing member by a cross old woman, and had flown away to a distant home. Its loving master and mistress followed after it and made it a visit of sympathy. When they departed, the sparrow offered them their choice of two wicker baskets. Unselfishly they chose the smaller, and when they got home they found it full of treasure. Then the cross old woman, moved by envy, also took a journey to visit the sparrow, and the sparrow gave her a choice of two similar baskets, but she avariciously chose the larger, and when she got it home and opened it, out burst a troop of devils and devoured her.

Better still is the story of "Urashima." Urashima was a fisher boy. He caught a tortoise, and because a tortoise could live a thousand years, he mercifully threw it back into the sea. Then it proved that the tortoise was a lovely goddess in disguise, and Urashima married her, and they went away to live in the beautiful Dragon Palace beyond the seas, and lived there in happiness four hundred years, and would have lived on forever had it not been for an unhappy mistake made by Urashima.

The charm of these books is the pictures. We can give no idea of their grotesque beauty, their whimsical humors, their technique at once rude and delicate, the crudeness of the thought underlying them, the manual skill of its expression. They are as interesting in their way as anything of Mr. Caldecott's, Kate Greenaway's, or Walter Crane's. And the purity of the books, pictures and stories alike, is without a stain.

GOGOL'S DEAD SOULS.*

GOGOL'S story of Dead Souls, which may be safely classed as the author's masterpiece and as one of the enduring productions of modern literature, it is a pleasure to have brought before us in this handy form, in a version which is at least noteworthy for its good English—since Miss Hapgood is one of the select few translators who do not, in the pursuit of fidelity, scorn the rules of grammar and syntax, or for the sake of piquancy take refuge in slang.

Here, then, we have a great novel gracefully and, we doubt not, faithfully rendered; a novel that ought to be read by every one who wishes to understand the complexities and idiosyncracies of Russian character, for it comprises within its pages an epitome of the more significant traits which go to make up the Russia of today.

Notwithstanding its lugubrious title, the book is by no means a ghastly one. Tchitchikoff is a polished, insinuating scoundrel, whose undeviating effrontery and honest villainy are delightfully depicted; the "dead souls" are dead serfs, whose names he buys or begs from landed proprietors with the intention of mortgaging them to the government. The motive of the plot is at once evident. The author adopts the ingenious scheme as an excuse for a constant change of scene in harmony with his purpose, which is to pass from point to point, describing people, manners, customs, and conditions, leaving no phase of rural existence unrecorded. The book is really a narrative of travel and observation, so real are the personages, so actual the shifting scenes through which the author conducts us. And what enthusiasm, what vivacity, what unfailing humor, what clever wit, and what unsparing satire does he not display in the course of his enticing chronicle! The petty nobility, the village functionaries, the peasants—all classes are represented by ten or a hundred different types; each one of them is alive, thinks, feels, acts, plays his or her part with undeviating truthfulness. Open the book at any point and you are at once impressed with Gogol's wonderful fertility of imagination, his profound knowledge of human nature, and his overwhelming resources as a social satirist. These qualities naturally led him into excesses. That he often resorts to caricature is evident; but this very exaggeration is self-confessed, and serves an artistic purpose. Like Cruikshank, Gogol deals in bold outlines and sharp dashes of color; yet we perceive clearly the essential veracity of all that he creates.

Then, as the magnificent panorama passes before us, we readily understand the emotion which Poushkin is reported to have expressed on hearing Dead Souls read by its author: "God; how sad is Russia!" Underneath the humor and wit and satire is the elemental pathos of a sorrowing comprehension of Russian limitations and Russian needs. Gogol saw constantly in the background as he wrote, an ideal, perfected Russia, the Russia that might be, that must be; and contrasting the real with the ideal, he mingled his laughter with tears. The humor that we find in Gogol belongs to the same order as that of Cervantes; it is based on an innate sympathy which never loses its tenderness, even when humanity shows itself in the most degraded and humiliating forms.

It is a pity that Miss Hapgood had not been contented with giving Gogol's work as it stands, without addition. The Continuation and Conclusion of Dead Souls, which she translates at second hand from the French and tacks on at the end of the original narrative, has no reasonable excuse for being. It is not interesting as a literary curiosity, and as for "those people who like to have their stories complete," let them seek for mental pabulum elsewhere. Certainly the person who reads Dead Souls, with or without continuations and conclusions, "to see how the story ends," is doomed to a toilsome task terminating in condign disappointment.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Mr. George M. Towle has written a picturesque and readable Young People's History of Ireland, that terra incognita of modern politics, a companion to his history of England, bringing the story in 39 chapters down to 1886. [Lee & Shepard. $1.50.]

The Land of Fire, by Capt. Mayne Reid, is a boys' book of surprising and startling but instructive adventure in Terra del Fuego; the hero, being an English lad who ran away to sea, was shipwrecked near Cape Horn; the last work of its lamented author, handsomely printed. [F. Warne & Co.]

Messrs. Roberts Brothers of Boston send us a set of their edition of the works of Mrs. Ewing, of whom a sketch appeared in our last issue. There are nine volumes, in neat typography and uniform binding, all enclosed in a box—a little but choice library by themselves. The volumes are generously illustrated with wood-cuts of the common English grade. The life of Mrs. Ewing by her sister will be found bound up in the same volume with Jackanapes, Daddy Darwin's Dovecot, and The Story of a Short Life. In all some forty of her tales are included in this collection, among which, besides those named, are Jan of the Windmill, A Flatiron for a Farthing, Six to Sixteen, A Great Emergency, and We and the World. Roberts Brothers began the publication of Mrs. Ewing's works in this country, and issued five of them by direct arrangement with her, and the appearance of Jackanapes was the turning point of interest in her here. Her writings ought to be in every home, in every Sunday-school library, and in every public library in the land. [The set, $9.00.]

Masters of the Situation. By W. J. Tilley, B.D. [S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50.] These twelve chapters, on "some secrets of success and power," belong to the class of work in practical ethics which Samuel Smiles and William Matthews have cultivated with such success. Promptness, singleness of aim, patience, and fidelity—these are virtues of which none of us have too much, and it is well to be reminded, even with a surplus of illustration from biography, how much they can accomplish. Mr. Tilley does not make the mistake, however, of defining genius as simply a great capacity for taking pains, as some worthy writers have been led to do. He is wisely aware that the foolish show their folly quite as often in the immense pains they take on nothing, as in their neglect of what really deserves their patience. We can sincerely commend Mr. Tilley's volume as one of the very best in its field.

* Tchitchikoff's Journeys; or, Dead Souls. By Nikolai Vasilievitch Gogol. Translated from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. Two vols. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $2.50.

Forced Acquaintances. By Edith Robinson. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] The "Forced Acquaintances" in this "book for girls" are two sisters, so antagonistic that but for the necessity of living together they would probably never speak to each other. They are young, bright, witty, attractive, and possess many excellent qualities, and the family to which they belong has position, culture, and refinement. The mother is lovely and gentle, though from some cause she seems to have failed in right influence over her daughters. The motif of the book is to show how, after shameful bickerings and displays of ungovernable temper, the girls are at last brought into better relations through an imminent danger to one of them, who comes near losing her life after a passionate outbreak. The author does not attempt to make this grade of human nature any better than it is. Happily there is sunshine as well as storm in the story; there are spirited episodes in girl life; there are wit, fun, and repartee; there are most amusing situations; there are some piquant comments on society and the neighbors of the Ware family; and, lastly, there is intimate knowledge of girl character and of the pranks and impertinence of which some girls are capable, as well as of the freshness, buoyancy, enthusiasm, and generosity which are attributes of girl nature. The work appears to be by a youthful hand, but has not the faults of immaturity, being neither crude nor overdone.

MINOR FICTION.

Two Gentlemen of Boston. A novel. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] This story, written in a familiar but now almost obsolete style, is a curious example of the survival of literary traditions. The narrative is in the first person, and the heroine—there were heroines, it will be remembered, in the old-fashioned novel—is that delightful mixture of self-consciousness and simplicity in whom novel readers of a generation ago delighted. The most amusing part of it is that the story is put forth as a picture of contemporary life. Yet the people who figure in it are so far removed from the realities of time and place, that except for a liberal use of dialect in the rural passages the whole thing is as unreal as the Midsummer Night's Dream—and not nearly so poetical! The heroine, to be sure, is a universal heroine. She always alights on her feet, as the saying is; she is more than at home in any situation, and her submissive purity permits her to pass unscathed through the fiercest onslaughts of evil. It is certainly a very droll book.

Miss Churchill: A Study. By Christian Reid. [D. Appleton & Co. $10.00] One does not need to commend Miss Reid's stories to discerning readers who keep themselves well informed on the subject of contemporary fiction. They are stories not to be talked about, but to read with a quiet, intellectual enjoyment. Miss Churchill certainly shows no falling off in the author's powers; indicates rather, we should say, a ripening and well-rounded maturity which gives us here of its best. The tale opens in the high pine region of a Southern State, where Cecil Churchill, a beautiful young woman endowed with a latent spark of genius, is vegetating in enforced isolation. To her comes Bernard Lysle, a successful war correspondent and brilliant man of the world. He recognizes her fine qualities of mind and heart, and is able to open to her an honorable way of gaining access to circles of wealth and culture in Italy and England. Her development under a favorable environment is closely traced with an intuition that never fails, and in her the author succeeds in bringing before us a real woman whose experiences we can follow with ready sympathy and appreciation. Lysle remains naturally a strong force in guiding her career; the story of his disinterested love and tragic fate is simply told, with an intensity which needs no rhetorical embellishments or tricks of style to make itself felt. The book is one that holds attention by unveiling hidden springs of character and revealing human motives, noble and ignoble, with the certainty of insight belonging only to the true artist.

The Golden Hope. By W. Clark Russell. [Harper & Brothers. Franklin Square Library. 20c.] This story is worthy of Mr. Russell's rare and striking powers. There is improbability enough in it, but sufficient truth, considerable dramatic power, great variety of incident, and incomparable descriptive force. Mr. Russell has no equal as a word-painter of marine scenery and sea life. The grandeur of the ocean in a storm, the splendor of the skies by day and night, the majesty of a ship under full sail, find in him an artist of Turneresque abilities. "The Golden Hope" was a smart schooner in which a plucky young Englishman, guided by a wonderful dream, set sail for the Indian Ocean in search of an unknown island whereon he believed his beloved Agatha to be a castaway. The tragedy of fire at sea, of shipwreck, and of watery graves, the romance of united hearts and divided lives, of lapsed memory, and the recovery of the lost, and the excitements of strange meetings on the deep, of finding a baby adrift, and of escapes from hurricane, are narrated with an intense but not unwholesome realism. As a writer Mr. Russell should guard against his besetting sin of long sentences. One on p. 26 runs to the extreme of 196 words, and others of 100 words each are not uncommon. But no reader fairly afloat on this craft will desert it till its voyage is over.

MINOR NOTICES.

Due North; or, Glimpses of Scandinavia and Russia. By Maturin M. Ballou. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] Mr. Ballou's narrative of northward travel cannot be said to add a very perceptible increment to the sum total of human knowledge or human pleasure. It covers a not unfamiliar route, and the author is one of those tiresome tourists who will not, if they can possibly help it, trust to their own individual impressions; who are not content to see with their own eyes, but who move about in a mist of guide-book reminiscences and historical reflections; and, therefore, give us vague perceptions, or else formulate boldly their ideas at second-hand. Mr. Ballou's account of Cuba in Due South had much that was good, because the author was, comparatively speaking, on new ground, and was thrown upon his own resources. But on the beaten track he follows the beaten track, and finds little to say that others have not said better before him. His route took him first to Copenhagen, thence to Christiania, and along the coast of Norway to the North Cape, with a glimpse of the "midnight sun," then to Stockholm and across the Baltic to St. Petersburg, with an excursion, by way of Moscow, to Nijni-Novgorod and back to Warsaw. Mr. Ballou's English has improved considerably since Due South was published, but he still indulges in queer linguistic involutions. His first sentence is wholly devoid of a subject. On page 50 there is an account of what must have been a quiet earthquake: "While strolling through the wood-paths and over the rocky ways . . . the grounds in many places were seen to be decked with flowers." But this is nothing to what took place in Russia, where, "in a half-upright position, and after a night passed in coquetting with sleep, at six or seven o'clock in the morning the cars stopped at a way-station" . . . (p. 351). On the whole, we were wrong in asserting that Mr. Ballou saw nothing new; sights like these are not witnessed by every traveler, and are well worth recording.

Sociology. By John Bascom. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.] This eleventh volume of Ex-President Bascom's composition well exemplifies his chosen method of covering a large field suggestively rather than a small field exhaustively. It is not a system of sociology, but its nine chapters discuss, with the author's accustomed breadth of view and fairness of statement, the offices of custom, government, religion, and ethics in the development of society, singly and in their mutual relations. Dr. Bascom belongs heartily to the school of thinkers who allow no divorce between economic and moral laws, perceiving well that as they are laws of one and the same human being, they must be altogether harmonious when rightly viewed. The most interesting, because the most specific, of these chapters is the one on Social Problems, in which Dr. Bascom applies his principles to the main issues of the day. He favors woman suffrage and prohibition, but opposes, with too much ingenuity, we incline to think, international copyright. With his condemnation of unlimited testamentary powers we fully sympathize; the world belongs to the living, not to the dead, and society needs to protect itself against the latter, not only from the corruption of their bodies, but also from the often worse corruption of their last wills and testaments!

History of Mediæval Art. By Dr. Franz Von Reber. Translated by Joseph Thacher Clarke. Illustrated. [Harper & Brothers. $3.50.] A volume by Dr. Von Reber, predecessor to this, on Ancient Art, translated also by Mr. Clarke, appeared at the close of 1882, and was reviewed in this journal, Vol. XIV, p. 19. Thus by successive steps our author, a learned Bavarian professor, is slowly, laboriously, but thoroughly covering the whole field of the historic development of art. The mediæval period as treated in the present volume is somewhat vaguely defined, extending from the early Christian and Byzantine line on the one side to the Gothic line on the other, and including the Persian and Mohammedan precincts. After the Christian period, the Romanic and Gothic are of course the most important and interesting. It is a striking fact how largely the history of mediæval art is the history of architecture, and of church architecture. Painting and sculpture were distinct features, but subordinate; through all these centuries Art was the handmaid of the Christian religion, and her supreme efforts were to depict the story of the Cross and the work of Redemption. The great cathedrals of the Middle Ages were only so many houses built to shelter the Sacrament of the Last Supper. The wood-cuts in Dr. Von Reber's work are conspicuous for their number, over 400, and are of good quality. It is a scholar's work for students, yet not too technical; entirely readable, yet demanding patience and attention. The history of Christianity for a thousand years may be discerned between its lines.

A Half-Century in Salem. By M. C. D. Silsbee. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.] This charming book has reached a third edition before we have found place to mention the first. Every citizen of Salem (it is the Massachusetts Salem, of course), everybody who was born in Salem, or who ever lived there, everybody who had Salem ancestors, everybody who has ever been to Salem, has wanted or should want a copy of this book. What a glamour there is over that simple little city by the sea! whose sea-captains made such voyages and brought home such treasures; whose antique houses, full of presses, buffets, and corner cupboards, burst out with silks, crapes, damask stuffs, sandal wood, spices, and china of fabulous value! Even Salem school mistresses were not like others, and Salem shops and shop-keepers had their individuality; Salem gentlewomen an air, a grace and dignity, peculiarly their own. All these delectable traits have been known to Mrs. Silsbee, and though in these pages she makes the most of them that is possible within the limits, it is not half enough.

The Anatomy of Negation. By Edgar Saltus. [Scribner & Welford. $2.00.] After a rarely brilliant exposition of pessimism in his Philosophy of Disenchantment, Mr. Saltus has quickly given us a "tableau of anti-theism from Kapila to Leconte de Lisle," at least as epigrammatic, and, we are bound to add, at least as shallow. He warns us against the misconception of supposing that he attempts here to prove anything; but this is a quibble. In his rapid and often superficial sketch of atheism beyond the bounds of America and England, Mr. Saltus is evidently enamored of a denial of God; all his arts of literary expression (and they are many) go to prove indirectly the absurdity of belief in a deity. Yet in his most witty epigrams at the expense of our poor universe and its hypothetical Creator, the note of unreality is unmistakable, and we cannot escape the feeling that pessimism and atheism are positive pleasures to Mr. Saltus, since they afford piquant exercise for his rhetorical gifts. That he believes any part of what he professes, we shall be convinced only upon hearing that he has committed suicide, as logically he ought!

Easter publications are beginning to be a speciality on the book counters, as Christmas publications long have been; but we cannot say that anything of special note has greeted the approaching season, so far. The Words of Comfort and Hope, collected by Louisa S. Houghton from Molinos, St. Augustine, Madame Swetchine, and others, are printed in purple ink on alternate quarto pages, and bound in covers of pebble paper with torn edges, the front ornamented with a panel of "ivory" on which are stamped five children's faces. [White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00.]—Similar to the foregoing, but of larger dimensions, is Heralds of Easter, a poem by Dora Read Goodale, with well-executed pictures of flowers and birds in color. [White, Stokes & Allen. $1.50.]—Bishop Baynes's Easter Song, with illustrations by J. H. Gratacap, is a publication of last year, freshened with a new cover, and was adequately noticed on p. 136 of our last volume. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50.]—E. Nesbit's poem, The Lily and the Cross, with its eight full-page lithographs by Nister of Nuremberg, whose work was so conspicuous among the Christmas books last year, makes easily the most attractive of these Easter memorials. These sketches, in simple black and white, are chaste, rich, and beautiful. [E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.]

To the little vest-pocket series of "Helps to Belief," the Rt. Rev. Dr. Magee, the learned and eloquent Lord Bishop of Peterborough, adds a tract on The Atonement, the Christian doctrine of which he defines as "the forgiveness of penitent sinners by God for the sake of and because of that which Christ has done for sinful men." The Bishop's handling of the subject in these 126 small pages is not at all historical, and scarcely at all scientific, but simply Biblical, expository, and ethical. [Cassell & Co. 40c.]

The religious public is indebted to White, Stokes & Allen of New York for a new and pretty edition of Keble's immortal Christian Year, in "Golden Treasury" style, the features of which are laid paper, rough edges, and good margins; with the added attractions in this instance of a rubricated title and a parchment cover imprinted with Guido's "Mater Dolorosa," whose face is so popular in the art stores just now. [$1.00.]

Miss Yonge's Teachings on the Catechism are short, simple, illustrated comments on the questions and answers in the Catechism of the Church of England, intended to be read by parents or teachers to young children who are learning that manual. [E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.]

Mrs. Anna J. Johnson's Christ Unveiled has astronomical bearings, treats of a duodecimal principle in creation, discounts in advance "the judgments of earth," and does defiance to grammar, sense, and science. [New York: J. N. Johnson. $1.00.]

Delaborde's History of Engraving, translated by Stevenson, and provided with a supplementary chapter on the English division of the subject by Walker, makes a volume in the useful "Fine Art Library," edited by Sparkes of the Kensington Training School; fully illustrated with wood-cuts not of the first quality; not touching upon modern mechanical processes, but containing a chronological table of principal engravers. [Cassell & Co. $2.00.]

The Early Flemish Artists who are sketched by Professor William Martin Conway, with twenty-nine accompanying wood-cuts reproducing their important works, are chiefly the Van Eycks, Van der Weyden, Van der Goes, Memling, Schongauer, and Bouts; whose subjects were almost exclusively sacred, as the Virgin and Child, for use as altar pieces and the like. [London: Seeley & Co.]

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Mr. Browning has again given us a book which will add to the wealth of English poetry, and if in the above remarks we have glanced with any excess of severity at what seem to us defects in his style, it is we who have cause to regret for assuredly, whatever may be his exact place in the poetry of the world, it is a high place somewhere among the immortals. — The Athenaeum.

If Mr. Perry had devoted his cultivation and his industry to writing a novel, he might have amused somebody. If he had devoted them to making a spade, he might have dug something. But having applied them to nothing more useful than tracing what he is pleased to call the "evolution" of snobs, he has written a worthless little book. — The Saturday Review.

Mr. Browning's recent efforts have been continued to monologues, not always in his own name, which are sometimes imaginative, and always subtle and full of matter, though the meaning has often to be ascertained by conjecture. Opulence in thought and language never fails; and the present volume is, like its predecessors, saturated with fanciful ingenuity. — Saturday Review.

Mr. Besant's paper on the relations between authors and publishers, read on Wednesday before the Incorporated Society of Authors, is a very pleasant essay, especially pleasant to those who have books to publish. They can hardly help feeling elated by his predictions or dreams as to the good time coming, when two hundred millions of people shall all speak English, and all buy books, and all obey one copyright act, and authors shall all be entitled to heavy royalties, and shall, therefore, if successful, become rich beyond the dreams of avarice. We are not quite sure we wish the dream to come true, for we hold literature to be more valuable than happiness, and have a notion that full-fed authors do bad work; but there is little probability of the contingency. — Spectator.

The extravagance of the praise sometimes bestowed upon Mr. R. L. Stevenson's work makes a calmer estimate seem almost a slight. Yet it may be matter for sober doubt whether any of the six tales called The Merry Men, etc., will live even twenty years. — Athenaeum.

A New Theory of the Apocalypse.

"Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur." Von Oscar von Gebhardt und Adolf Harnack. II Band. Heft 3. Die Offenbarung Johannis eine jüdische Apokalypse in christlicher Bearbeitung. Von Eberhard Vischer mit einem Nachwort von Adolf Harnack. [Leipzig.]

The author of this work, a young German student of theology, has made what may perhaps turn out to be the most remarkable discovery in New Testament criticism of any in this century. The discovery is simply this, that the Apocalypse, which has hitherto been unhesitatingly received by theologians of all schools as a work of genuinely Christian authorship, is in reality—in its main substance and throughout by far the larger part of it—a purely Jewish composition; that it is in fact, as the title of the essay puts it, simply "a Jewish Apocalypse" in a Christian dress. The first three chapters are Christian, of course; but in the fourth chapter the book begins over again, and from that to the end, with the exception of a few short passages and a word or two interpolated here and there, all is purely Jewish. The theory comes to us recommended by all the authority of Prof. Harnack, who declares that, however skeptical he was at first, on carefully reading the Apocalypse once more in the new light thus thrown upon it, "the scales fell from his eyes." And, if all are not so easily convinced, at least it will not be denied that this hypothesis is most ingenious in itself, that it has been most ably worked out, and that it clears up some hitherto insuperable difficulties. — Robert B. Drummond in the Academy.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, APRIL 2, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

The Brontës.

Three violets, growing on the waste obscure,
Three stars alone, upon a midnight sky,
Three nightingales that never learned to fly,
Three broken hearts, wild, passionate, and pure,
Misunderstood, unschooled save to endure—
How lowly were their lives, their thoughts how high;
Their works so dauntless, and themselves so shy,
In consciousness of right alone, secure
With knowledge only how to love and pray?
Did ever any from such scanty store
Gather so large a hoard, meet and unmeet?
Did ever lives so write themselves away,
Or ever any woman hands before
Pour such a bitter ointment at Love's feet?
New York City.

E. T. A.

A LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, March 28, 1887.

THE Authors' Club, very recently incorporated, is now in the fifth year of its existence, with a reasonable prospect of a longer existence than is the usual experience of clubs, literary and unliterary, in this city. It was organized October 21, 1882, for "the promotion of social intercourse among authors," the organizers being Noah Brooks, Edward Eggleston, R. W. Gilder, Laurence Hutton, Charles De Kay, Brander Matthews, and E. C. Stedman. The membership was limited to seventy-five.

In every club the quality of the membership is, or should be, a matter of the most careful consideration. It was so regarded in this case. Who are authors, in the sense intended by the club? Are editors, writers of technical treatises, compilers of manuals and works of reference, as such, to be regarded as authors? This point received very careful attention, and it was decided to exclude writers of the classes named, unless they should have done in addition creditable work in the domains of pure literature, as imaginative, critical, historical work; but no definition of what "pure literature" is has been as yet attempted by the club, and it would be a somewhat perilous subject for the club to discuss.

For the Authors' Club, whether wisely or unwisely, has not quite lived up to the rather exacting standard which in this matter of "pure literature" it proposed to itself at the start. It numbers among its members more than a few excellent fellows who would be an addition to any club, but whose names, though doubtless they will all be famous in due course of time, are not as yet known in literature. I do not say that this is a mistake. It is good policy to make up a club of good fellows, of men who have cultivation and the disposition to be social; and the Authors' Club is undoubtedly so made up in the main. But the departure from its carefully-considered original plan only shows how difficult it is to fore-organize the character of a body so mobile, so responsive to surrounding social influences, as that of a social club. Success in practice is of course the great test; and if the Authors' Club cannot be quite adequately described as a club of authors, it is still a very pleasant place, and membership in it is considered a desirable thing.

The meetings, held at the unpretentious rooms in West Twenty-fourth Street, are purely social. There was at first a dark rumor that their object was to listen to poems written by members; but when the purely anti-social character of this arrangement was perceived, it became evident that no institution could long withstand such a strain upon the vital forces of the members; and the project, if it was ever seriously considered, was dropped. One may visit the club without the least fear. First in the order of the evening comes the regular business, as the election of members or the arrangement of committees; then the flow of talk runs on until about eleven o'clock, when the sweet thunder of a Japanese gong breaks out, calling to supper in the smaller of the two rooms occupied by the club, and the members, or as many of them as can find chairs—for their growing numbers make their present accommodations rather narrow—take their places at a long table and before a good supper. The meetings usually last until about one o'clock. Old members of the Century Club say that they are reminded of the days far back in the forties by these pleasant gatherings, in which so many of the future fames of the country are represented; for, to say nothing of the achieved reputations, it is charming to think of the possibilities that are gathered in this attractive club. The present limit of membership is one hundred and fifty. The dues are calculated on the modest scale which becomes the typical resources of the typical man of letters; and, though projects of taking a larger apartment are broached from time to time, yet it is felt that to make haste slowly is the better policy. The club has kept free from debt and from the temptation to indulge in any more expensive luxuries than a supper every other Thursday evening; and it is undoubtedly fulfilling, in the main, its true function—that of promoting better acquaintance among its members, and of allaying such of the ira auctorum as may find time to survive the preoccupation of this busy city life.

CALAMUS.

—In a very cheerful little room, up two flights of stairs in the Traveller building, may be found every morning one of the busiest literary women in Boston, Miss Lilian Whiting. It is but a few years since she came to Boston from St. Louis, yet in that time hard work and undoubted talent have placed her in the front rank of the journalistic profession. Looking at her, one would hardly think her capable of doing the immense amount of work that she really accomplishes. Beside her regular editorial and review work, her duties oblige her to cultivate a wide social acquaintance; but, though far from strong, one never finds her borne down by fatigue. Whether her friends see her hard at work at her writing-table in the Traveller office, or at an afternoon tea, she has the same animated, cheery manner and cordial greeting. At least three prominent journals in the West and South publish weekly letters by Miss Whiting, and in spite of all her many cares and occupations, she must have a few spare moments now and then, or how do her charming lyrics get themselves written?

—It is not every editorial sanctum that can boast of its three poets, but the office of The Pilot has long been able to do this. The senior editor, John Boyle O'Reilly, has a national reputation, and his associate, James Jeffrey Roche, is fast gathering his own laurels. The third poet in this constellation is Miss Katharine E. Conway, whose verse is not as well known as it deserves to be, but who is unmistakably a poet.

—The studio receptions on Tuesdays of Mr. and Mrs. John Paul Selinger have lately been one of the pleasant features of Boston life. At these agreeable gatherings there is sure to be music as well as l'vely chat, and the charming and picturesque hostess, who looks as if she might have stepped from one of Gainsborough's delightful canvases, dispenses tea with all the grace of the long-past beauties she resembles.

—For a ramble through the fields trodden by the feet of the Elizabethan dramatists, who could be a more delightful guide than Mr. Lowell? The greatest charm in his lectures has been the familiar conversational manner in which he has addressed his audiences. Often it has seemed as though he were taking all the people before him into his confidence, and revealing to them some personal yet mutually interesting bit of information.

—Mrs. Moulton's Friday receptions came to an end for the season with the gathering of last week. We have alluded to these in a former number of the Literary World, and therefore can only speak just here of the general regret which all Mrs. Moulton's friends yearly feel when these delightfully unique assemblies are ended with the winter and the snow.

—It is a pity that the whole army of our young critics, and in fact some who can no longer be included in that category, could not have been present at Mr. Lowell's lectures, which were literary criticism in its perfection. We may have missed something of the fire of old time, but the same keen, incisive analysis was there, the same play of fancy, the same illumining wit. Marlowe, Chapman, Webster, Beaumont and Fletcher, Massinger and Ford—we have heard their praises sung and their faults dwelt upon before, but never with such fine discrimination.

—A Poe revival, and in Boston! Shade of Edgar Allan, art thou smiling that swift satirical smile of yore? The most unique of our men of letters has a fine interpreter in Mr. Arthur Falkland of the Museum company, who has recently read from his prose and poetry with much force and feeling. Such pieces as "The Masque of Red Death," and "A Cask of Amontillado," afford excellent opportunity for the exhibition of strong dramatic power. Mr. Falkland is himself a poet. "The White Rose," a poem of which he is the author, was read by Mr. Pickering recently.

—"More poets yet!" Rumor tells us that Mr. Charles K. Bolton, a member of the Harvard Freshman class, is gathering his verses for a volume.

—Mr. Bliss Carman and Mr. Clinton Scollard are both in Cambridge.

—Only seventy-five copies of Talbot Baines Reed's History of the Old English Letter Foundries are to be provided for subscribers in the United States, and these are to bear the imprint of A. C. Armstrong & Son. The book is not only a complete history of English typography, but will also contain a full bibliography. The subscription price is $8.40.

MINOR NOTICES.

In Principles of Art Mr. John C. Van Dyke, who is librarian of the Sage Library at New Brunswick, N. J., has written one of the best popular works on that subject with which we are acquainted. He first sketches the imitative, decorative, and symbolic art which preceded the classical and symmetrical product of Greek genius; and after briefly treating the latter, he dwells more at length on the emotional, intellectual, and individual art of mediæval and modern times. Art in itself, he says, is not rightly defined as specific imitation, or as mere generic "truth to nature." Idealism and realism are both misleading terms. The artist is an interpreter of the pictorially beautiful, which he has the gift to see in nature; the individuality of the painter or the sculptor in the effort to transfer his own feeling of the beautiful is of supreme importance. These ideas Mr. Van Dyke presents with an abundance of illustrations and in an animated style. Devotees of the prevailing "realism" in art and letters will find in him a keen opponent. [Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.50.]

Those in search of a scholarly historical portrait of the two Henrys of England, VII and VIII, and of the England of their time, the first half of the 16th Century, will find it in Rev. C. E. Moberley's addition to "Epochs of Modern History," entitled The Early Tudors. There are 16 chapters with an index and maps; having for side topics such as the voyages of Columbus and the Cabots, Erasmus and his works, the rise of the New Learning, the advent of the art of printing, the beginnings of the Reformation, the condition of literature, art, and science. These are good popular summaries of the facts—the volumes of this "Epochs" series, of which we have not had a new one for some time. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.]

In The Fall of Maximilian's Empire as Seen from a U. S. Gunboat a Lieutenant of our Navy, Mr. S. Schraeder, has written a spirited account of the mission of the "Tacony" to Vera Cruz in 1867, albeit the intercession of her commander, Roe, in behalf of the ill-fated Emperor, was in vain. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.]

In Professor Simon Newcomb's Plain Man's Talk on the Labor Question, we have, in a somewhat extended form, twenty essays that originally appeared in the Independent, handling the topics of "Society and its Wants," "Capital and its Uses," "The Laborer and his Wages," with a quaintness, pertinency, and effect that have not been equaled by any recent writer in this field. [Harper & Brothers. 60c.]

J. T. Dawson's Wealth of Households is a poorly-written book, absurdly paragraphed, containing some good ideas, but nothing of special importance. [Oxford: Clarendon Press. $1.25.]

Rev. Washington Gladden's nine papers on Applied Christianity originally appeared as lectures, or as articles in the Century, and convey a forcible and profitable message to laborer and capitalist alike, from one of the clearest minds and kindest hearts of the time. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

Dr. T. Edwin Brown's Studies in Modern Socialism and Labor Problems have a rhetorical stamp, quote freely from other writings, set some of the statistics of the subject in a wrong perspective, but justly attach the highest importance to coöperation and profit-sharing as a solution of present difficulties, and close with a valuable bibliography. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.]

Mr. Phillips's Labor, Land and Law is a work of history and philosophy combined, exhibiting research and learning, but not always well reasoned, loaded with no little extraneous material, lacking arrangement and method, and therefore missing its best effect, which, substantially, would be the position held by Mr. Henry George. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.]

In his essay on American Patriotism Mr. Putnam P. Bishop appears to much better advantage than in his late novel, The Psychologist, discussing in it such topics as the dangers of partisanship, a venal press, the support of corrupt men for office, and the improvement of the civil service, all in a style especially to profit young readers. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.]

There is a good deal of sense and not much nonsense in the little book on Modern Etiquette in Public and Private, which lays down the social law and rules for calls, receptions, dinners, weddings, balls, and all the round of fashionable life, from both the man's and woman's point of view. The defect of the book for American use is that it is English, but then English custom is an authority in most things. So far as a book can help one to be a gentleman (or a lady), this one may be helpful. [F. Warne & Co. 75c.]

Mrs. Knox-Heath's Parts of Speech and how to Use Them is part second of the same author's Elementary Lessons in English; a clear and convenient text-book for use in schools, but to be used with caution by the teacher, for its divisions are not always logical, and the correctness of some of its details is at least questionable. The typography is admirable. [Ginn & Co. 70c.]

It is fifteen years since Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's Wear and Tear was first published, and we are glad to receive a fifth edition of so wholesome a book of "hints for the overworked" in brain and body, and to learn from it that a decided improvement in the American physique is noticeable. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.]

The four hundred Queer Questions and Ready Replies which have been put together in a neat book by S. Grant Oliphant relate to obscure or little-known topics in history, geography, biography, mythology, philosophy, natural history, science, and philology—a pretty wide field, but the compiler seldom loses his way in it. [New England Publishing Company. 75c.]

Prof. Warman, author of The School-room Friend, is teacher of elocution in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Chicago, and was formerly a pupil of Professor Monroe of Boston. To the public reader or speaker, he says, there are three "essential requisites": control of thought, of body, and of voice. The present book is a guide to the control of thought, more especially in reading. Treatment of the two other requisites is to follow. A study of these hundred or more pages would certainly conduce to clear and impressive delivery. [Chicago: W. H. Harrison, Jr.]

In A Century of Electricity T. C. Mendenhall of Washington, D. C., furnishes an untechnical, readable sketch of the exterior of the development of electrical science from Franklin's time down to the present experiments with electric motors. The book is not large, and its movement is rapid. Could not the author have made either more or less of his task; either restricting it to the compass of a magazine article, or else expanding it so as to enter more satisfyingly into detail? There are illustrations, and the telegraph, the telephone, electric cables, electric lights, and electric motors have each a chapter; but we should like to know more than it has to tell us about the last two applications of electricity. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

Rand, McNally & Co. of Chicago continue the issue of their large folding Pocket Maps, by adding thereto the maps on Dakota [25c.], Minnesota [25c.], West Virginia [25c.], Rhode Island [25c.], Arizona [25c.], and Ohio [50c.]; an Official Railroad Map of the United States and Canada [50c.], and a Commercial Map of the United States and Canada [$1.50]. The two last named are too large to be spread out for examination except upon a table or the floor. The State maps are accompanied with copious indexes and some statistical matter, and show the railroad and express systems. Typographically the maps lack brightness, but are distinct and well colored.

From the same publishers we have a new Atlas of the Northwest; perhaps so named from the fact that the maps of our Western States and Territories are especially prominent in size and number. The work includes, however, maps of the world, in hemispheres and Mercator's projection, as well as different countries or regions separately; in all about thirty, printed in colors. There are further a sheet of national flags in brilliant colors, and curious tables of comparison, showing the highest buildings in the world, the products of different sections of the United States, geographical indexes and national governments. [Flexible canvas, 50c.]

Cassell & Co. have become the publishers of the Pocket Guide to Europe, formerly published by Ticknor & Co., the best European guide-book of its size in the English language, and having few superiors in any size, for use of rapid travelers. Whatever other guide-books the excursionist across the Atlantic carries, he should not leave this behind, [$1.50.]

Lee & Shepard have brought out a new edition of Archbishop Whateley's English Synonymes Discriminated. This is a small book, and a book to be read, in distinction from Crabbe's Synonymes, which is much ampler, but better suited for reference. [50c.]

Travelers in Spanish-speaking countries, not familiar with the language, will not miss it if they provide themselves with the A-B-C Spanish Phrase Book, a little paper-covered fifty-cent manual, with 128 pages of questions, answers, and common remarks in Spanish and English. [Cupples, Upham & Co.]

From London come three volumes of a "Library of Continental Literature," designed, the publishers say, to meet the increasing demand for translations of the works of the chief contemporary writers of the continent. Judging by at least two of these specimens we should say that the resultant impression would be one of surprise that the writers in question enjoy so much popularity. Les Dames de Croix-Mort, by Georges Ohnet, here translated under the title of Edmée, is a brutal, not to say bestial, piece of fiction-mongering — brutally false in conception, brutally debasing in action, and brutally vulgar in style. The author's portrait exhibited on the cover is in keeping with the book. — Irène, by the Princess Olga Cantacuzène-Altieri, is the story of a young libertine who tries to abduct a beautiful Greek girl, is compelled by her wily father to marry her, exiles her for a time to the ruined castle of his ancestors, after five years meets her again, falls de-perately in love with her, and finally wins her love by entering upon a life of self-sacrifice. A young artist, in love with the heroine, plays a creditable part in the romance. — M. Léon Tinseau's Hélène (Mme. Villéfran jeune) is the best of the trio. Smyrna is the scene of several chapters, and the manners and customs are vividly portrayed. M. Tinseau has grace and wit, a fine ideal of romance, an agreeably emphatic style, and native refinement of imagination. Hélène is a captivating novel; and it has been well translated. Typographically, this series is far superior to most of its rivals; we hope the publishers will show more discrimination in their choice of future issues. [F. Warne & Co. Each 35c.]

To their scholarly and practical "Principia Series" the publishers have added part third of The French Principia: An Introduction to French Prose Composition, by Rev. P. H. E. Brette, B. D. It contains an elementary exposition of the principles of French syntax, embracing information not usually included in grammars or dictionaries; and a series of exercises, well arranged and calculated to excite the interest of the student from the very first. The volume is admirably equipped with tables of idiomatic and proverbial phrases, conversational questions, explanatory foot-notes, and a vocabulary. We know of no work better designed to teach pupils to write French correctly. [Harper & Brothers. occ.]

PERIODICALS.

The April Atlantic seems to us a trifle dull, but that no doubt is because the March number was so uncommonly brilliant. Even Dr. Holmes's cheering account of how well he got on with the London notabilities fails to revive our drooping interest. Miss Louise Guiney administers the only decided stimulus in her vivacious paper on Mather Byles, the Tory parson. Edmund Kirke tells how Lincoln offered to buy the slaves for five hundred millions of dollars if Mr. Davis would end the war; W. H. Ray writes prosily on that threadbare topic, Russia in Asia; and Olive Miller has an agreeable article on the habits of the mocking-bird. In the story of "Lazarus Martin" W. W. Archer scores a success; the dialect and the quiet humor are of excellent quality.

Edgar Fawcett contributes the complete novel to the April issue of Lippincott's; it is called "Douglas Duane," and would have made a sensation, perhaps, if Mr. Stevenson had not written "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" — but it is a sufficiently ghastly variation on the theme of transformed identity. Lucy C. Lillie has something to say of Belgravian Bohemia — a subject which she might better have treated with less reticence, or have let entirely alone. Will Carleton explains the emotions of a public lecturer while confronting an audience, and confesses that he finds the experience too pleasant to give over.

One of course turns first to the Thackeray letters in taking up the April Scribner's, and finds an intellectual treat by so doing. It is Thackeray — the whole Thackeray — who speaks in these delightful, epistles which range through the entire scale of manly gentleness, boyish candor, delicious raillery, true pathos, touching not seldom the deeper notes of love and duty, and trust in goodness as the supreme guide and aim of existence. A number of Thackeray's unpublished drawings are reproduced, and the frontispiece portrait of the great novelist, engraved by Kruehl after Laurence's crayon drawing, is effective and pleasing. Perhaps the most noteworthy of the general articles in this number are Lieut. Hughes's well-worded exposition of the possibilities of torpedo warfare, W. B. Scott's painstaking account of the mammoths that not so many centuries ago roamed over the American plains, and A. S. Hill's convincing plea for proper provisions for the study of English in our colleges. Mr. Stimson's story of "The Residuary Legatee" gets to the verge of a crisis, and continues to display qualities which promise to put the author in the first place among the younger contemporary writers of fiction. A good many of Mr. Stimson's rivals have felicity and charm, energy and humor; he has all these, and something more — the undefinable something called genius.

Three attractive descriptive papers appear in Harper's for April: Edmund Kirke writing of Chattanooga as the coming "metropolis of the central South, and the iron emporium of the whole country," Ralph Meeker beginning a graphic and readable account of Russian manners and customs, and Charles Dudley Warner contributing the first of a series of notes on the "pseudo-republic" of Mexico. A fully illustrated article, by Theodore Child, on the "Comédie Française," is worth looking at. Lee Merriweather gives some sober and thought-inducing facts on the living expenses of working-men in Europe and America. "Springhaven" comes to an end with a marriage. Mr. Howells in "April Hopes" takes us through a Campobello picnic, and in the "Editor's Study" discusses pernicious fiction — which is fiction that is not "real" enough, and has no moral purpose. We cannot praise Ellen Dorsey's story, "Back from the Frozen Pole" — it is too much like a spiritualistic "séance," where one does not know the medium — ghastly enough, but tempered by the assurance that it is all make-believe.

The Forum for April keeps, as usual, well in the van of popular thought and discussion, and on all topics has something pertinent and suggestive. Prof. T. Davidson advocates manual training in the public schools, remarking incidentally that the theory that American school children are overworked is nonsense — the trouble seems to be that they are not worked in the right direction. Prof. W. T. Harris reveals the process of his mental growth in a helpful article on "Books That Have Helped Me," ascribing chief gratitude to Kant, Hegel, Carlyle, and Dante. Rev. John Snyder says we are getting on very well without the tyranny of prohibition;

Mrs. Craik wants a legal arrangement by which abused wives may separate from their husbands without divorce; Amos K. Fiske urges that our cities would be better governed if mayors were autocrats, and appointed all subordinate officials; Dr. E. C. Spitzka ridicules the hydrophobia bugbear; Samuel A. King proclaims his readiness to attempt a trans-Atlantic balloon voyage if any one will pay the bill; Prof. R. A. Proctor takes the affirmative on the sea-serpent question; and Dr. Gladden writes thoughtfully on the duty of the individual to society at large.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Chicago versus Boston. The Daily Advertiser quotes the following from an article in the Chicago Tribune upon the discussion raised by Mr. Lowell's lecture on Richard III.:

From the Shakespeare side of the controversy, if Chicago were at all interested in it, she would not look to Boston as an authority. It is not long since that Mr. Head of this city produced a little brochure on the causes of the insomnia of Shakespeare, fortifying his argument with supposititious letters from Shakespeare's contemporaries, alleged to have been obtained from the British Museum. The persiflage of the paper was apparent upon the surface; and yet the Literary World, the organ of Boston culture, gravely swallowed this all at a gulp, and complimented Mr. Head upon the new light he had shed upon Shakespeare and his environments! In addition to this, the secretary of the leading literary club of Boston has written Mr. Head to express to him the gratitude of the literati of the Hub for his invaluable contribution to their knowledge of the bard! Chicago may be pardoned if he looks with suspicion on anything Boston has to say about Shakespeare. With such a capacity for gullibility we would rather trust Donnelly and his cipher than the most erudite of them all.

As Touchstone says (with one slight "emendation"): "When a man's [jokes] cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child Understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room"; but, in this instance, is it stupidity or "cussedness" that ails the Chicago man? We will give him the benefit of the doubt, and assume that he is as innocently obtuse as he seems. There be folk nearer than Scotland who cannot see a joke without the preliminary surgical operation. The notice of Mr. Head's merry brochure appeared in the World for Dec. 11, 1886, and, as was doubtless clear to everybody outside of Chicago, was meant to be in the same ironical vein as the matter commented upon. If the Tribune will reprint the thing (a copy of the paper shall be sent him for the purpose), it is possible that some even of its local readers may see this without spectacles. After referring to the strike in the Globe Theatre mentioned in one of the MSS. printed by Mr. Head, and remarking that the expression "ground to the dust by the greed of capital" was not so modern as we had thought it, we quoted the letter from "Mordecai Shylock" as showing that the M. N. D. must be an earlier play than the critics have supposed, etc. We added: "These be important facts, and there are others like unto them in these veracious and valuable documents." If the Chicago editor did not see the sportive irony here, how did he detect it in Mr. Head's booklet? The author probably knew the man, and wrote "this is a goak" on the fly-leaf of the copy sent him.

If there is anything in the story about the "secretary of the leading literary club," the explanation is of course similar. Mr. Head doubtless appreciated the joke, but the editor when he heard of it took it in dead earnest. The "moral" is that all fun sent to the Chicago Tribune should be distinctly labeled as such.

In another part of the article quoted above, the Tribune defends Chicago from the supposition that the people there "care sixpence who wrote Richard III." A Harvard friend who was at the lecture tells us in a letter that, as he was leaving the hall, he overheard one of the "soldest" and stolidest men of the city remark with pious emphasis to a companion, "What in — do I care who wrote Richard III.?" There spoke Chicago! The Tribune merely puts the verdict in print.

Good News from Mary Cowden-Clarke. The many American friends of Mrs. Cowden-Clarke will be happy to share the good news contained in a letter we have just received from her, dated "Villa Novello, Genoa, 5th March, 1887." She says:

"She [Mrs. Rolfe] and you will, I feel sure, be glad to learn that neither ourselves nor our house here suffered any harm from the late earthquake. It was extremely awe-inspiring, but we felt there was nothing for it but to abide quietly and as calmly as we could its possible effects; whereas the Genoese people were distressingly alarmed. The Acqua Sola and the New Boulevard — comparatively open spaces and near to no houses — were nightly crowded all last week, by persons wandering about, with bags and bundles in their hands, women with babies in their arms, some stretched on mattresses placed on the bare ground, some sleeping in carriages and omnibuses hired for the purpose. Now, however, tranquillity is becoming restored; and it is comforting to see the earnest way in which high and low are exerting themselves to send help of all kinds to the poor creatures in the towns along the Riviera, which have suffered severely. Processions are formed that go through the streets of Genoa with bands of music to attract attention, with carts heaped up with clothes, bedding, etc., collected as they pass along; men holding up bright-colored bags on poles that they lift to upper windows; gentlemen carrying money boxes and offering them to passers-by; and I understand that the sums and goods thus collected are very large in amount. My sister Sabilla and I chanced to drive out the other day when there were several of these processions; and it was a wonderfully Italian scene. The brilliant sunshine lighted up the animated concourse thronging the thoroughfares, the carts were painted showily, with 'Beneficenza' in large gilt letters on their sides, the bands were playing the cheerfulest of tunes, and the whole effect was almost Carnavalesque in its bustle and vivid coloring. Strange contrast to the late panic and gloom!"

This was not intended for publication, but we are sure that the writer will forgive us for taking the liberty to quote it here.

The February Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society. The society met at Hamilton Hall, Columbia College, New York, February 24th, the President, Appleton Morgan, Esq., in the chair. Le Grand Burton, Esq., of Chicago, was elected a non-resident member; and Hon. C. H. Davis of St. Paul, Senator-elect from Minnesota, and Dr. Geo. Frederick Holmes of the University of Virginia, honorary members. The paper of the evening, "The Sonnets: some New Inferences from Old Facts," by Wm. J. Rolfe, owing to its author's inability to be present, was read by Mr. Nevin. Mr. Rolfe disclaimed any desire to add to the multitude of theories already aggregated about these wonderful poems. But after long study he was inclined to come back to the starting point, and hold that they were in truth and fact autobiographical, — were William Himself, not as the crazy Barnstolff held, because the initials of their dedicatee, W. H., could be so interpreted, but because the difficulties in the way of not believing them autobiographical were greater than those in the way of so believing them. For example, it was possible to read them so that they made a connected history of narrative. Now, if the relater of this narrative was simply relating the story of another man's life, why should he, the relater, express remorse? Remorse is one thing, regret is another. But the historian poet does not simply regret that the history was thus and so. He expresses remorse (Mr. Rolfe here quoted numerous examples). This feature seemed to stamp the history as autobiographical.

The points made in the paper were summed up thus at the close:

1st. That the Sonnets were not edited by Shakespeare, but by some anonymous collector, who did not, and obviously could not, ask the poet or the persons to whom they were addressed for aid in settling a textual question. [Dowden and others have taken the ground that the edition of 1609 was not authorized or supervised by Shakespeare, but Mr. Rolfe claims to be the first to prove this beyond a doubt from certain typographical peculiarities — the significance of which has been strangely overlooked by critics and commentators.]

2d. That the arrangement of the Sonnets in the edition of 1609 was therefore not authoritative, but simply the best conjectural one that the collector could make from a study of the poems, and what he knew of their history; and there is, moreover, internal evidence that the order is not strictly chronological.

3d. That the great majority of the Sonnets are personal, or autobiographical, and were not intended for publication; but it is not probable that the first 126 (or such of these as are personal) are all addressed to one man, and the rest to one woman, with whom Shakespeare and that man were both entangled.

4th. That in whatever sense "Mr. W. H." may have been the "begetter" of the Sonnets, all the attempts to identify him have been unsuccessful, and some of them ridiculous.

5th. That while the majority of the Sonnets were probably written before 1599, some of them may be of later date, especially those in which the poet refers to himself as old and tired of life.

Mr. Fleming said, in moving the reference of the paper to the Publication Committee, that his own study of the Sonnets had led him to the same conclusion as that arrived at by Mr. Rolfe. For his own part he did not think so highly of the Sonnets as compared with the other Shakespeare work; and thought it was as autobiographical sketches, rather than as literary productions, that they were valuable at all. The speaker pictured Shakespeare as a many-sided man, and believed Dowden not far wrong when he spoke of the Romeo element and the Hamlet element; the former referring to the passions or emotions, the latter to the intellect. Romeo lived in the world of feeling; Hamlet in that of thought. Shakespeare lived in both. The speaker here quoted the 42d and 131st Sonnets, which seemed to him almost a rhymed statement of the passage in Hamlet's soliloquy, beginning "For who would bear the whips and scorns of time," etc. In fact it had always been a pet theory of his (the speaker's) that both the Sonnets and the soliloquy were autobiographical, and that much that elsewhere was enigmatical could be illuminated by so considering them. Mr. Morgan thought it was hardly safe to follow such enthusiastic gentlemen as Mr. Dowden too precipitately. Shakespeare was not only the most objective, but also the least subjective of poets. It was simply impossible to ascertain what he spoke in the character of his personages, and what he spoke (if he ever spoke anything) in his own, William Shakespeare's, character. The speaker knew that Mr. Dowden, or somebody, had discovered that the will of Constance for her lost child was written by Shakespeare just after the death of his son Hamnet, and that he made one of his characters advise men never to marry ladies older than themselves, from an abiding personal experience of the folly of such an act, etc., etc. But a parity of interpretation would make out Shakespeare to have been a beetle, and to have spoken from his own personal experience when testifying that a beetle trod upon feels a pang as great as when a giant dies, and, in the speaker's opinion, suffocate us in a mass of absurdities. He thought Mr. Rolfe's point as to the difference between remorse and regret well taken. It is said to be natural for us to bear up bravely against the temptations of others and to succumb to our own. Mr. Rolfe, the speaker thought, had great reason for believing the temptation here to be Shakespeare's own. Mr. Reynolds asked if there was any known difficulty anywhere to the formation of any theory possible about the Sonnets, whether theorizers would ever be interrupted or disconcerted by any facts. So far as he had read the critics and commentators, they all disagreed about the Sonnets, but none of them were able to contradict each other or show wherein each other was wrong. He had listened with great pleasure to Mr. Rolfe's paper, which seemed to him to deal with the Sonnets as they stood, rather than to manufacture schemes for them, and he seconded the motion to refer it to the Committee on Publication. Mr. Frey said he thought that in the Sonnets Shakespeare had boasted of his future fame and triumphs. "We all know that the poet had produced so many plays, and such excellent ones, before 1592, as to make Robert Greene, the great critic of the day, exceedingly envious. It is therefore not to be wondered at that a young man with such honors thrust upon him should exult a little, and perhaps exhibit in his Sonnets a self-consciousness of his future immortality." Mr. Frey quoted in explanation portions of Sonnets 18 and 19:

So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, . . .
Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young, etc.

Mr. Frey added that numerous similar expressions had been detected by him, and they seemed to him to be signs of youth and immaturity rather than, as Dowden calls them, "intimations of immortality." The motion to refer the paper of the evening to the Publication Committee was then agreed to.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

818. The Dead Mother. (Answer to No. 815.) The poem referred to is one by Robert Buchanan, and may be found in any complete edition of his poems, in his Idylls and Legends of Inverburn, and in A Household Book of English Poetry.

819. A Traveler's True Tale (answer to No. 813), after the Greek of Lucian of Samosata, by Alfred J. Church, was published by Seeley & Co., London, 1880, 12mo, pp. 110, with 12 illustrations. E. W. H.

820. Authorship Wanted of the following lines:

Methinks if ye could know
How visitations of calamity
Affect the pious soul, 'tis shown you there.
Look yonder at that cloud which through the sky
Sailing alone doth cross in its career
The toiling moon. I watched it as it came
And deemed the deep opaque would blot her beams,
But, melting like a wreath of snow, it hangs
In folds of wavy silver round, clothing
That orb in beauties richer than her own;
Then passing, leaves her in light serene.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Elliot Stock, 62 Paternoster Row, London, publishes a monthly Book Prices Current, cataloguing all London book sales, with prices fetched.

— Mr. George Parsons Lathrop's editorial connection with the Epoch, the new weekly in New York, was terminated last week, without ill-feeling, however, either on his part or Mr. Seligman's. Who is to succeed to the responsible editorship we have not heard at this writing.

— Miss Emma Lazarus, the poet, is in Paris dangerously ill. Three of her sisters are with her.

— Mr. James R. Gilmore ("Edmund Kirke") has again entered the lecture field, in which, some years ago, he was a prominent figure. He has recently spoken to large audiences (before the Kent Club and the Historical Society) at New Haven, and is preparing now a lecture on the "Southern Negro since Emancipation," a subject he is competent to handle from his long acquaintance with the blacks, and his recent residence of some years in the South. •

— The publishers of the new American Magazine (successor to the Brooklyn Magazine) propose to issue a first edition of 75,000 copies of the initial number, which will appear on April 15. The chief aim of the conductors of this periodical is asserted to be to inculcate "a careful reverence for American sentiment and a thoughtful attention to American interests."

— Routledge's superb illustrated edition of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables, in five volumes, of which the first only has been noticed in our columns, has been out of the market for some time, but, as will be seen from an advertisement in this issue, a new edition is in preparation, and the sale of the work hereafter will be by subscription only through the agency of McDonnell Brothers of Chicago.

— We should like to know whose is the private library offered for sale in this week's Literary World.

— Thomas Whittaker will publish early in April Canon C. A. Row's Future Retribution Viewed in the Light of Reason and Revelation, and the Rev. E. Hatch's Early History of Christian Institutions.

— Frederick Warne & Co. have in preparation a Jubilee Edition of the life of Queen Victoria, to be called The Queen: Her Early Life and Reign; also The Victoria Birthday Book, both to be fully illustrated and published in various forms at popular prices.

— Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York, announce that very shortly they will publish A Summer in England with Henry Ward Beecher, giving not only all the sermons, lectures, and addresses delivered there by him last summer, but also an account of the trip, of his reception by people and clergy and statesmen. This account is by Major J. B. Pond, his traveling companion and manager.

— The W. H. Harrison, Jr., Publishing Co., of Chicago, have in press a treatise on Orthoepy: the Science of Pronunciation, by Prof. E. B. Warman, A.M., of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago. The book contains an appendix of over 5,000 words that are apt to be mispronounced, giving the correct pronunciation of each word and the authority for the same.

— William R. Jenkins, New York, announces that he will publish an edition of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables in five twelvemo volumes. The first volume, "Fantine," will be ready by the middle of April. This is welcome news, as the popular Paris duodecimo edition for some time has been withdrawn from print.

— Mr. George C. Gorham, formerly Secretary of the United States Senate, is to write a biography of the late Edwin M. Stanton, at the request of the surviving members of Mr. Stanton's family. It is thought that a great deal of unpublished history of interest and importance will first be given to the world in this work, upon which Mr. Gorham expects to expend two years of active labor.

— The Baker & Taylor Co., New York, have ready the fiftieth thousand of Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong's Our Country: Its Possible Future and Its Present Crisis.

— Miss Sarah Orne Jewett will have a sketch of New England life in the May number of the Atlantic, entitled "The Court'ing of Sister Wisby."

— Cupples, Upham & Co. have nearly ready Yesterdays with Actors, by Kate Reingolds Winslow, a volume of reminiscences illustrated with portraits of notable stage personages.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will have the first two volumes of their collected edition of Mr. Browning's poems ready on April 16; they are marvels of beauty and cheapness. The same house have in press Zury, a story of Illinois life, by Joseph Kirkland; a new edition of Starr King's Christianity and Humanity; and, in the "Riverside Literature Series," the second part of Longfellow's Golden Legend, edited with notes by Samuel Arthur Bent.

— Mr. T. B. Aldrich will have a poem of considerable length in the May Atlantic.

— A new edition of Cushing's useful dictionary of Initials and Pseudonyms is to be brought out by T. Y. Crowell & Co.

— A copy of the first edition of Mr. Browning's Paracelsus (London, 1835) is priced at $30 in George J. Coombes's catalogue No. 3 of Rare and Curious Second-hand Books. The same price is asked for the original edition of Dickens's Pickwick (London, 1837). The first English edition of Emerson's Nature (London, 1884) is offered at $6.50—about one half what one must pay for the first American edition.

— Rev. Dr. Ray Palmer, author of "My faith looks up to thee," and other hymns, died in Newark, N. J., Tuesday of this week at an advanced age.

— Miss Charlotte Fisk Bates has been giving in Boston a course of interesting and instructive lectures upon the old English writers, from the Anglo-Saxon period to the time of Henry VII inclusive. It is the opinion of those who have heard them that, if published, they would contain in a concise and accessible form much that can now be obtained only by careful search through many volumes. The lectures will probably be resumed in the fall. Miss Bates will give a reading from her writings early in May, at the Woman's Club Rooms, 5 Park Street.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

March.

Americanisms. R. A. Proctor.
Books that Have Helped Me. E. E. Hale.

Knowledge.
Forum.

Byron's Opinion of Southey and Disraeli. Murray's Mag.
Hullah, John, Reminiscences of. Cassell's Mag.
Living, the Joy of. Grant Allen. Murray's Mag.
Mouvement, le, Littéraire. Raoul Frary. Nouvelle Rev.
Périodiques Anglaises, Revue de. Nouvelle Rev.
Eugène Fargue. Century.
Poetic Outlook (The), in America.
Poetry in Education. From the French of M. Education.
Pecants.
Shelley (Sa Vie et Son Oeuvre). G. Sarrazin.

The National Review.—Two Views of the Conservative Party: (1) The Truth about Tory Democracy. A. A. Baumann, M. P.—(2) Lord Randolph Churchill appeals unto Cæsar. C. W. Beckett, M. P.—The Effects of Civilization upon Women. A. Woman—The Church Question in Scotland. A. Church Layman—Free Registries and the Marketing of Labour. N. L. Cohen—Ancient and Modern Painted Glass. E. G. Howard—Celts and Teutons in Ireland. Lord Courton—India and Tibet. R. S. Gundry—Rosselli in Prose and Verse. William Sharp—The Metropolitan Coal and Wine Dues. R. G. Webster, M. P.—Politics at Home and Abroad. Correspondence.

The Contemporary Review.—Home Rule and Imperial Unity. By Lord Thring—Transylvanian People. By E. Gérard—The Racial Programme. By the Earl of Selborne—Remedies for Fluctuations in General Prices. By Professor Alfred Marshall—The Old Testament: Ancient Monuments and Modern Critics. By Captain Conder—The Decline and Fall of Dr. Faustus. By E. R. Pennell—The National Church as a Federal Union. By James Martineau, D.D.—Contemporary Life and Thought in France. By Gabriel Monod—Contemporary Records: General Literature.

Blackwood's Magazine.—Love that Lasts Forever: A Jubilee Lyric. By the Earl of Roslyn—The Douglases—Diane de Breteuille—Revelations from Patmos. By J. Theodore Bent—To Pyrrha—To Coralie. By T. M.—Russian Soldiers and Russian Armaments—Sarracinesca. By F. Marion Crawford—Chaps. XXIX—XXXI—The Old Saloon—The Next of Open Spaces—The Imperial Institute. By E. F. G. Law—The First Move of the Separatists—Note to Lord Brabourne's Irish Articles.

The Fortnightly Review.—The Present Position of European Politics. III. Russia—Wealth and the Working Classes. By W. H. Mallock—Our Task in Burma. By "Conservative"—The Imperial Institute: What is Practically Wanted. By Kenric B. Murray—A Fresh Field for the Sportsman (with Map of Alaska). By H. W. Seton-Karr—Valentine Visconti. By A. Mary F. Robinson—The Case for Free Education. By E. North Buxton—French Aggression in Madagascar. By the Malagasy Amba Sador—Theology under its Changed Conditions. By Hon. and Rev. Canon Fremantle—The Canadian Fisheries Dispute. By Rt. Hon. the Marquis of Lorne, K. T.—Verdi's "Otello." By H. Sutherland Edwards—On "The Chess Masters of the Day." A Protest. By H. E. Bird—Thanks from the House of Sheltor.

The Nineteenth Century.—Professor Huxley on Canon Liddon. By His Grace the Duke of Argyll—The True Position of French Politics. By Mona. Joseph Reinach (Editor of the République Française).—A Colonial View of Imperial Federation. By the Hon. Sir Robert Stout (Prime Minister of New Zealand)—The Trials of a Country Parson. By the Rev. Dr. Jessop—The Dullness of Museums. By the Rev. J. G. Wood—Mr. Gladstone on "The Irish Demand." By the Right Hon. Lord Brabourne—Cyril Tournour. By Algernon Charles Swinburne—The Prospect in South Africa. By the Right Hon. Earl Grey—Twenty-four Hours in a Newspaper Office. By Arnot Reid—The Greater Gods of Olympus—1. Poseidon. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P.

April.

Books that Have Helped Me. Prof. W. T. Harris. Forum.
Brain-Forcing in Childhood. By Wm. A. Hammond. Pop. Science M.
English in Our Colleges. A. S. Hill. Scribner's.
Fiction, Pernicious. W. D. Howells. Harper's.
Française, the Comédie. Theodore Child. Harper's.
Thackeray, A Collection of Unpublished Letters of. Scribner's.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Art.

AN INTRODUCTION TO GREEK SCULPTURE. By L. E. Upcott. Oxford: The Clarendon Press. $1.10

Biography.

JAMES HANNINGTON, FIRST BISHOP OF EASTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA. A History of his Life and Work. By E. C. Dawson. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $2.00

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, HIS MATERNAL ANCESTORS. With Some Reminiscences of Him. By David Greene Haskins. Illus. Cupples, Upham & Co.

THE EARLY TUDORS. By the Rev. C. E. Moberly. With Maps and Plans. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

THROUGH THE FIELDS WITH LINNÆUS. A Chapter in Swedish History. By Mrs. Florence Caddy. 2 vols. Little, Brown & Co.

THE FIRST KHRDIVE. By the Rev. Daniel March, D.D. Presbyterian Board. $1.50

JOHN ADAMS AND THOMAS JEFFERSON. By Wm. O. Stoddard. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.25

Dictionaries.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Founded Mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society. Edited by James A. H. Murray, LL.D. Part I, A—ANT. Part II, ANT—BATTEN. Part III, BATTOR—BOZ. Oxford: The Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan & Co. Each $3.25

NUTTALL'S STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. New Illustrated Edition. By Rev. James Wood. Frederick Warne & Co. $1.50

Easter Publications.

WORDS OF COMFORT AND HOPE. By Louise S. Houghton. White, Stokes & Allen. Illuminated cover $1.00
 HERALDS OF EASTER. By Dora Read Goodale. With Designs by Fidelia Bridges. Illuminated cover $1.50
 AN EASTER SONG. By the Rt. Rev. Robert Hall Baynes. Illus. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50
 THE LILY AND THE CROSS. By E. Nesbit. E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c
 ARISE, MY SOUL, ARISE! An Easter Hymn by Sarah Flower Adams. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
 SEE THE LAND HER EASTER KEEPING. By Charles Kingsley. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
 GLADNESS OF EASTER. From the Poets. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
 THE MESSAGE OF THE BLUEBIRD TOLD TO ME TO TELL TO OTHERS. By Irene E. Jerome. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
 ABIDE WITH ME.—ROCK OF AGES.—NEARER, MY GOD, TO THREE. Lee & Shepard. Each 35c.

Essays and Sketches.

MASTERS OF THE SITUATION; OR, SOME SECRETS OF SUCCESS AND POWER. By Wm. James Tilley. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50
 REPRESENTATIVE ENGLISH PROSE AND PROSE WRITERS. By Theodore W. Hunt. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

Fiction.

JESS. By H. Rider Haggard. — ELIZABETH'S FORTUNE. By Bertha Thomas. 20c. — GLADYS FANE. By T. Wemyss Reid. 20c. — THE FAWCETTS AND GARODS. By Skimath. 20c. — SPRINGHAVEN. By R. D. Blackmore. 25c. — THE MERRY MEN, ETC. By R. L. Stephenson. 15c. — Harper's Franklin Square Library.
 THE JESUIT'S RING. A Romance of Mount Desert. By Augustus Allen Hayes. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
 ROGER CAMERDEN. Geo. J. Coombes. Paper 50c.
 DR. TRENT'S COUSIN. By Helen B. Williams. Presbyterian Board. $1.25
 TWO GENTLEMEN OF GOTHAM. By C. & C. Cassell & Co. $1.00
 THE DETECTIVE'S EYE. By F. du Boisgobey. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.
 MRS. HALPHASTUS, AND OTHER SHORT STORIES. By George A. Baker. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00
 THE OLD HOUSE AT SANDWICH. By Joseph Hatton. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 25c.
 SHE. By H. Rider Haggard. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.
 VICTIMS. By Theo. Gift. Henry Holt & Co. Leisure Moment Series. Paper 30c.
 THE BRIDE OF THE NILE. A Romance. By George Ebers. Tr. by Clara Bell. 2 vols. W. S. Gottsberger. $2.00
 THE STRIKE IN B—MILL. Round Robin Series. Ticknor & Co. $1.00
 JESS. By H. Rider Haggard. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.
 SOME CHINESE GHOSTS. By Lafcadio Hearn. Roberts Bros. $3.00
 LIL LORIMER. By Theo. Gift. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 50c.
 SPRINGHAVEN. By R. D. Blackmore. Illus. Harper & Bros.
 CECIL'S FORTUNE. By F. du Boisgobey. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.
 THE STEEL NECKLACE. By F. du Boisgobey. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.
 TWO GENTLEMEN OF BOSTON. A Novel. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
 THE MOON MAIDEN, AND OTHER STORIES. By Jessie E. Greenwood. Macmillan & Co. $1.25
 THE EGOIST. A Comedy in Narrative. By George Meredith. Roberts Bros. $2.00
 MRS. EWING'S STORIES. 9 vols.—Six to Sixteen—A. Great Emergency—Jan of the Windmill—We and the World—Mrs. Overthway's Remembrances—Jackanapes and Other Stories—A Flatiron for a Farthing—Lob Lie-by-the-Fire, The Brownies, and Other Tales—Melchior's Dream, Brothers of Pity, and Other Tales. Cloth. Illus. Roberts Bros. $9.00
 BALDINE, AND OTHER TALES. By Karl Erdman Edler. Tr. by the Earl of Lytton. Harper & Bros.
 THE STARTLING EXPLOITS OF DR. J. B. QUIRS. From the French of Paul Célière by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie. Illus. Harper & Bros.
 A CHILD OF THE CENTURY. By John T. Wheelright. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

History.

THE STORY OF ANCIENT EGYPT. By George Rawlinson. With the Collaboration of Arthur Gilman. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
 A HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE. By C. A. Fyffe. M. A. Vol. II. Henry Holt & Co. $2.50
 BALTIMORE AND THE 19TH OF APRIL, 1861. By George Wm. Brown. Baltimore: N. Murray. $1.00
 THE HISTORY OF ROME. By Theodor Mommsen. Tr. by Wm. P. Dickson, D.D., LL.D. The Provinces of the Roman Empire from Cæsar to Diocletian. 2 vols. With Maps. Charles Scribner's Sons. $6.00

THE STORY OF PERSIA. By S. G. W. Benjamin. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
 STUDIES IN MUSICAL HISTORY. By Louis S. Davis. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25
 A HISTORY OF THE PAPACY DURING THE PERIOD OF THE REFORMATION. By M. Creighton. Vol. III and IV. The Italian Princes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $7.50
 THE VICTORIAN HALF-CENTURY. A Jubilee Book by Charlotte M. Yonge. Macmillan & Co. Paper 35c.

Pamphlets.

ADDRESS AT THE DEDICATION OF THE BROOKS LIBRARY BUILDING AT BRATTLEBOROUGH, VT., JAN. 25, 1887. By Melven Chamberlain. Cambridge: John Wilson & Son.
 COOPERATION IN NEW ENGLAND. By Edward W. Bemis. American Economic Association. 75c.
 A SYNOPSIS OF THE NATURE AND EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL AND NARCOTICS. By L. H. Luce, M.D. D. C. Heath & Co.
 PROFIT-SHARING. By H. O. Nelson. St. Louis, Mo.

Philosophy.

SOCIOLOGY. By John Bascom. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
 MORAL PHILOSOPHY. A Series of Lectures. By Andrew P. Peabody. Lee & Shepard.

Poetry.

MADRIGALS AND CATCHES. By Frank Dempster Sherman. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00
 SONNETS IN SHADOW. By Arlo Bates. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Science and Philosophy.

AMERICAN STATE CONSTITUTIONS. A Study of their Growth. By Henry Hitchcock. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.
 OUTLINES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW. By George B. Davis. Harper & Bros.
 THE INTER-STATE COMMERCE ACT. An Analysis of its Provisions. By John R. Dos Passos. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

AGENTS WANTED

FOR

Henry Ward Beecher.

THE MEMORIAL VOLUME.

We announce a new edition of Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT'S

HENRY WARD BEECHER;

HIS LIFE AND CHARACTERISTICS, WITH ANALYSES OF HIS POWER AS A PREACHER, LECTURER, ORATOR, AND JOURNALIST.

Dr. Abbott will be assisted, as in the previous edition, by the Rev. S. B. Halliday, the Assistant Pastor of Plymouth Church. The book will contain more than a score of portraits of Mr. Beecher at different ages (from twenty-three years and upwards) and in different moods; also portraits of all his brothers and of his own family, etc.; with pictures of the various houses in which he has lived and churches in which he has preached. It will be pre-eminently the Memorial Volume of this truly great man, now gone, containing, with a vast quantity of other matter, Beecher's farewell discourses in England in 1886; his last Sermon; the Funeral Sermon of Dr. C. H. Hall, etc. 8vo, nearly 700 pages. Price, cloth, $3.00; half morocco, $5.00; extra fine full morocco to order, $10.00.

Sold by Subscription. Agents Wanted Everywhere. Send for Terms.

FUNK & WAGNALLS,

18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Bride of the Nile.

A Romance by GEORG EBERS, author of "Uarda," etc. From the German by Clara Bell. In two volumes, price, paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.75.

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

WM. S. GOTTSBERGER, Publisher

11 Murray Street, New York.

American School and College Dramas.

EDITED BY EDWARD ROTH.

The Gray Tigers of Smithville; or, He Would and He Wouldn't. An Extravaganza, in Three Acts. Supplied by booksellers, or mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents. 1185 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

VALUABLE LIBRARY FOR SALE.

THE property of a gentleman who has devoted many years and a large expenditure of money in its formation. The collection, as a whole, is one of unusual excellence and interest. It is seldom, indeed, that a library so perfect in the essentials requisite for a gentleman is placed at the disposal of the purchaser. In the number and range of desirable books, in the choice of editions, in the careful selection of copies, the judicious and often costly bindings, and the perfect condition of the whole, it has seldom been equaled. It is particularly strong in the department of Fine Arts, and comprises all the most notable art publications, both old and new; Galleries and Collections of Prints and Etchings, and Standard Works in all departments of literature. Ample opportunity for inspection. A catalogue and terms of sale will be furnished on application to W. F. H., Box 2365, NEW YORK.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACGONNALL & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNORR, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
 Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
 RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
 JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.

NOW COMPLETE.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS consists of Three Parts, or Five Volumes, as follows:

PART FIRST.

A JOURNAL OF THE REIGNS OF KING GEORGE IV AND KING WILLIAM IV.

By the late CHARLES GREVILLE, Clerk of the Council to those Sovereigns. Edited by HENRY REEVE, Registrar of the Privy Council. Two vols., 12mo, cloth, price $4.00.

"Since the publication of Horace Walpole's Letters, no book of greater historical interest has seen the light than the Greville Memoirs. It throws a curious, and, we may almost say, a terrible light on the conduct and character of the public men in England under the reigns of George IV and William IV. Its descriptions of those kings and their kinsfolk are never likely to be forgotten."—New York Times.

PART SECOND.

A JOURNAL OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA, FROM 1837 TO 1853. The

"Greville Memoirs," Second Part. By the late CHARLES GREVILLE, Clerk of the Council. Uniform with Part First. Two vols., 12mo, cloth, price $4.00.

"Mr. Greville's Diary is one of the most important contributions which have ever been made to the political history of the middle of the nineteenth century. He is a graphic and powerful writer; and his usual habit of making the record while the impression of the events was fresh upon his mind, gives his sketches of persons and places, and his accounts of conversations, great vividness. The volumes will be read with as much interest for their sketches of social life as for their political value."—London Daily News.

PART THIRD (just published).

A JOURNAL OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA, FROM 1853 TO 1860. By the late CHARLES GREVILLE, Clerk of the Council. Being third and concluding part of the "Greville Memoirs." One vol., 12mo, cloth, price $2.00.

The volume now published, in addition to personal anecdotes, deals with many important events; such, for instance, as the re-establishment of the French Empire, the Crimean War, the Indian Mutiny, and the Italian War.

* * The Work Complete, in Five Volumes, put up in box. Price $10.00.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers, New York.

Cupples, Upham & Co.'s NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE MATERNAL ANCESTORS OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON. By DAVID G. HASKINS, D. D. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, very fully illustrated, $1.50.

The same. Edition de Luxe 1 vol., quarto (in box), $5.00.

THACKERAY'S LONDON. By WILLIAM H. KIDING. Third edition. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00.

POEMS IN PROSE. By IVAN TOURGUENEFF. Second edition. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00.

YESTERDAYS WITH ACTORS. By KATE RICHMOND WINSLOW. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, illustrated, $2.00.

The same. 100 copies, large paper for collectors, $5.00.

THE WORLD AS WE SAW IT. By Mrs. A. R. LITTLE. 1 vol., large 8vo, magnificently illustrated, $7.50.

THE ANDOVER DEFENCE. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $1.25.

NOTES ON THE HISTORY OF THE OLD STATE HOUSE: BOSTON. By GEORGE H. MOORE. Only 50 copies made. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

HARVARD: THE FIRST AMERICAN UNIVERSITY. By GEORGE GARY BUSH (new edition). 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, elegant, illustrated, $1.25.

GENERAL GRANT: AN ESTIMATE. By MATTHEW ARNOLD. 1 vol., 12mo, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

FELLOW TRAVELLERS. A novel. By GEORGE FULLER. 1 vol., 12mo, paper, 344 pp., 50 cents.

THE TERRACE OF MON DESIR. A Russian novel. 12mo, 50 cents.

Any of the above sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price.

CUPPLES, UPHAM & COMPANY,
THE OLD CORNER BOOKSTORE,
263 Washington Street Boston.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

Routledge's superb five volume edition, with illustrations from designs by De Neuville, Bayard, Morin, Valnay, and other eminent French Artists.

McDONNELL BROTHERS beg leave to announce that they have arranged with Messrs. George Routledge & Sons for the exclusive sale of the above work.

An edition will be ready about
May 15th, and will be sold only by subscription.

Parties wishing to sell this work on the subscription plan please write for terms etc., to

McDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY

THE STORY OF ANCIENT EGYPT.

By GEORGE RAWLINSON, Professor of Ancient History in the University of Oxford, author of "Five Great Monarchies," etc. Volume XIV. in the Story of the Nations series. With 50 illustrations and 2 maps. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.50.

CHIEF CONTENTS: The Land of Egypt—The People of Egypt—The Dawn of History—The Builders of the Pyramids—The Rise of Thebes—The Good Amenemhat—Abraham in Egypt—The Shepherd Kings—The First Warrior King—Queen Hatshepsut and Her Fleet—The Vocal Memnon—The Disk-Worshippers—The Exodus of Israel—The Land Shadowing with Wings—Ethiopia vs. Assyria—The Persian Conquest—Three Desperate Revolts—A Gleam of Sunshine—The Light Goes Out in Darkness.

Previously issued in the NATIONS series: "Greece," "Rome," "The Jews," "Chaldea," "The Moors," "The Saracens," "The Normans," "Persia," "Germany," "Norway," "Spain," "Hungary," "Carthage."

"No series of the day deserves more praise than the 'Story of the Nations.'"—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"A clear, rapid and entertaining account of the principal nations of the ancient and modern world."—New York Tribune.

Full descriptive prospectus of the series sent on application.

AMERICAN STATE CONSTITUTIONS.

A consideration of the influences that have affected their history. By HENRY HITCHCOCK, LL. D., of the Missouri Bar. Volume No. 36 in the "Questions of the Day." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

An analysis of its provisions and of the obligation incurred under them, and Constitutional questions in relation thereto, with full text of the bill. By JOHN R. DOS PASSOS, of the New York Bar. Volume No. 37 in the "Questions of the Day." 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE PHONOGRAPHIC INSTRUCTOR.

An improved method of self-instruction in shorthand. By JOHN WATSON. Octavo, cloth, $2.00.

READY NEXT WEEK.

THE BALKAN PENINSULA.

Narrative of a Sojourn in Croatia, Bosnia, Servia, Roumania, Bulgaria, Roumelia and Turkey, with a study of the peoples of these countries, their resources and their probable future. By EMILE DE LAVELEYE, author of "Primitive Property," "Elements of Political Economy," etc. Translated by Mrs. Thorpe, revised and edited for the English public by the author, with an introductory chapter upon the most recent events, and a letter from Mr. Gladstone. Octavo, with map, cloth extra, gilt top, $4.50. (Limited letter-press edition.)

SCOTLAND AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS.

By the Duke of Argyll, author of the "Unity of Nature," etc. With eleven illustrations engraved on wood from designs by the author. Two volumes, octavo, cloth extra, gilt top, $8.00. (Limited letter-press edition.)

* * Putnam's New Classified Catalogue sent on application.

Juliana Horatia Ewing and Her Books.

A MEMOIR

By HORATIA K. F. GATTY,

With a Portrait,

By GEORGE REID, R. S. A.

Illustrated by fac-similes from Mrs. Ewing's sketches, and a cover designed

By RANDOLPH CALDECOTT.

Small 4to, Paper Boards, 30 cents net; by mail, 33 cents.

"We are sure that many persons will be interested in these few particulars of her character and life."—Literary World.

THE ENGLISH EDITIONS OF MRS. EWING'S BOOKS

May be obtained from any bookseller, or of

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO., - - - Cooper Union, New York.

French Books For Sale.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. Brunetière (Ferdinand). Histoire et littérature. 3 vols., 18mo..... $3.00 | 8. Du Camp (Maxime). Souvenirs littéraires. 2 vols., 8vo, paper..... 4.50 |
| 2. Quinet, Edgar. Lettres d'exil à Michelet. 4 vols., 18mo..... 4.00 | 9. Legouvé. Soixante ans de Souvenirs. Tome premier. 8vo..... 2.25 |
| 3. Poutmartin (A. de). Souvenirs d'un vieux critique. 6 vols., 18mo..... 6.00 | 10. Duc de Noailles. Cent ans de République aux États Unis. Tome premier. 8vo..... 2.25 |
| 4. Delvan (Alfred). Dictionnaire de la langue verte. 1 vol., 8vo..... 3.00 | 11. Gaston Mangras. Voltaire et Jean-Jacques Rousseau. 8vo..... 2.25 |
| 5. Cohen (Henry). Guide de l'amateur de livres & gravures du XVIII ^e siècle. 5me et dernière édition. 8vo..... 7.50 | 12. Estienne (Henri). Apologie pour Herodote. 2 vols., 8vo..... 7.50 |
| 6. Techener. Bulletin du Bibliophile. 1834-1885. 30 vols., 8vo, half mor..... 45.00 | 13. Frary, Raoul. La question du latin. 18mo..... 1.00 |
| 7. E. Dupuy. Les grands maîtres de la littérature russe. 18mo..... 1.00 | 14. Roux (Joseph). Pensées. 18mo..... 1.00 |
| | 15. Lemaitre, Jules. Nos contemporains. 2 vols., 18mo..... 2.00 |

John Delay, 23 Union Sq. N. Y.

Spring and Summer 1887 WOOLENS.

We are in receipt of one of the finest exhibits in the market. Novelties from London and Paris. Full assortment of Staple Woollens, as usual.

We guarantee the excellence of our garments in all particulars.

GEORGE LYON & CO.,
TAILORS,

No. 459 Washington Street, Boston,
BETWEEN TEMPLE PLACE AND WINTER ST.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUMFORD COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

French Books For Sale.

- | | |
|--|--|
| 1. Amiel, H. F. Fragments d'un journal intime. 2 vols., 8vo..... $2.50 | 8. Quentin-Bauchard, Les Femmes bibliophiles (xvii ^e , xviii ^e et xix ^e siècles). 2 vols., 8vo..... $15.00 |
| 2. Jacob, Bibliophile. Mélanges bibliographiques. 12mo..... 2.50 | 9. Martel. Petit recueil des proverbes français. 12mo..... 1.00 |
| 3. Dr. P. Regnard. Les maladies épidémiques de l'esprit. Sorcellerie, magnétisme, morphinisme, délire des grandeurs, ouvrage illustré de 100 gravures. 8vo..... 3.00 | 10. Tousselet. Les Juifs rois de l'époque, histoire de la féodalité financière. 2 vols., 12mo..... 2.00 |
| 4. Desbarrolles. Les mystères de la main révéler; art de connaître la vie, le caractère, la destinée d'après l'inspection des mains. 12mo..... 1.50 | 11. Lettres de Niron de Lenclus, précédée de mémoires sur sa vie. 12mo..... 1.00 |
| 5. Desbarrolles. Les mystères de l'écriture; art de juger les hommes sur leurs autographes avec nombreuse fac-simile. 12mo..... 1.20 | 12. Genin. Lexique comparé de la langue de Molière et des écrivains du xvii ^e siècle. 8vo, half mor..... 4.50 |
| 6. Lacombe (Paul). Bibliographie parisienne. Bibliographie analytique et raisonnée des ouvrages relatifs aux mœurs de Paris, de 1600 à 1800. 8vo..... 6.00 | 13. Genin. Récréations philologiques, recueil de notes pour servir à l'histoire des mots de la langue française. 2 vols., in 1, half mor..... 4.00 |
| 7. Barbey d'Aurevilly. Les œuvres et les hommes. Sensations d'art. 8vo..... 2.25 | 14. Godefroy. Lexique comparé de Corneille et de la langue au xvii ^e siècle. 2 vols., 8vo, half mor..... 4.00 |
| | 15. Delachenal. Histoire des avocats au Parlement de Paris au moyen âge de 1300 à 1600. 8vo..... 2.40 |

John Delay, 23 Union Sq., N. Y.

Authors and Publishers.

A Manual of Suggestions for Beginners in Literature. Comprising a Description of Publishing Methods and Arrangements, Direction for the Preparation of MSS. for the Press, Explanations of the Details of Book-Manufacturing, with Instructions for Proof-reading, and Specimens of Typography, the Text of the United States Copyright Law, and Information concerning International Copyrights, together with General Hints for Authors. Third edition. Octavo, cloth extra. $1.00.

"Full of valuable information for authors and writers. . . . A most instructive and excellent manual."—Harper's Monthly (Easy Chair).

"The manual contains nothing about Aldines nor Elzevirs, but sticks severely to the business in hand; and, whatever the publishers may think of it, authors and readers and all who use books must recognize in the manual a firm, friendly hand extended where one was sorely needed."—N. Y. Independent.

"It should be in the hands of every reader in the country. . . . Its suggestions are invaluable."—Boston Transcript.

"In short, the volume is a complete compendium of information and advice, and will prove of the greatest value to all connected with authorship or publishing, as well as instructive in many curious points to the general reader."—Good Literature.

"The work itself, though a small one, is of great value. It modestly purports to be merely a manual of suggestions for beginners in literature; but there is much in it which the most experienced literary veteran can read with profit, not merely for the views it suggests, but for the information it contains."—N. Y. Evening Post.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
PUBLISHERS,
NEW YORK AND LONDON.

WEBSTER.

With or without Patent Index.

IT IS THE STANDARD

Authority in the Gov't Printing Office, and with the U. S. Supreme Court, and is recommended by the State Sup'ts of Schools in 36 States. In addition to various useful tables the latest issue of this work comprises

GET THE BEST AND LATEST.

A DICTIONARY,
118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings.
A GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD,
25,000 Titles, (recently added) and
A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY,
nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
ALL IN ONE BOOK.

It is an invaluable companion in every School and at every Fireside.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ROGER CAMERDEN.

A STRANGE STORY.

16mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

"The story is pleasantly written, and the little volume is prettily made."—Boston Courier.

"A most original story."—Newark Daily Advertiser.

"A very clever little story. The sub-title, 'A strange Story,' well describes its character. It deals with mental phenomena, and assumes to explain what many regard as insoluble mysteries."—Boston Evening Transcript.

* For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publisher.

* CATALOGUE OF RARE AND CURIOUS BOOKS (No. 3) just issued, AND WILL BE SENT POST-FREE TO ANY ADDRESS, ON APPLICATION.

GEORGE J. COOMBS,

BOOKSELLER, IMPORTER, AND PUBLISHER,
275 Fifth Ave., New York.

D MEANS DYSPEPSIA KILLERS.

PREPARED by Dr. MARK R. WOODBURY; put up in lozenge form in little boxes convenient to carry. Agreeable to taste, perfectly harmless, and SURE TO CURE Dyspepsia and Indigestion. You should get a box. Only 50 cents (trial box 25 cents), sent to any part of the United States, on receipt of price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

D

K

"This monumental work. . . . Never before has the English language been treated lexicographically in a manner so truly comprehensive and scientific, and rarely has the University of Oxford lent the resources of its celebrated Press to a work more worthy of its ancient renown."—LONDON TIMES.

(TO BE COMPLETED IN TWENTY-FOUR PARTS.)

Now Ready, Parts I, II and III. A—BOZ (pp. xxxii, 1040), 4to,
Price $3.25 each.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY

ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the materials collected by

THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

EDITED BY

JAMES A. H. MURRAY,

B. A., LONDON; BORN M. A., OXFORD; LL. D., EDINBURGH; D. C. L., DURHAM, ETC.;

SOMETIME PRESIDENT OF THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY;

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF MANY SCHOLARS AND MEN OF SCIENCE.

PART III extends to the end of Bo-. It deals, in all, with 8,765 words, and the articles which it contains will be found to be replete with interest and instruction to every reader. It is a characteristic of the letter B (shared only by some letters of less compass toward the end of the alphabet) that a very small proportion of the words beginning with it are derived from or through Latin, the great majority being Teutonic, either of the native Old English stock, or of the accessions which this received from the kindred speech of the Norsemen. Hence the present part deals with many of the oldest and most interesting words of the language, which are also among its most important living elements in every-day use. In the course of their long-continued service, many of these have branched out into a vast network of senses (see BE, BEAR, BEET, BOARD, BOX), which it puzzles the lexicographer to disentangle, and even more to display in an orderly arrangement helpful to the reader. Especial attention is called to the number of words (about 1,600), chiefly verbs and their derivatives, formed with the prefix be-, and their treatment in the Dictionary. In the ETYMOLOGY, much more original work has had to be done than in the two preceding Parts. The B- words are full of puzzles, which have baffled the efforts of all etymologists; every one of these has received a fresh and independent investigation, in which the Editor has had the co-operation of the most eminent philologists of Europe, and the result has been the discovery of new facts or the elimination of old errors in the history of hundreds of words.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS:

ENGLISH

"No one will hesitate to say that the speedy completion of this vast undertaking is, or ought to be, an object of great concern to every educated speaker of English. . . . Every Englishman who can possibly afford it ought to do his part in forwarding this great enterprise of national interest by purchasing the parts as they appear."—Athenæum.

"An achievement without parallel."—Academy.

"The execution beggars all eulogy. . . . This wonderful book."—St. James's Gazette.

"For the first time we have a dictionary based on historical principles presented to us. . . . If any one will look at the development of the different senses in Dr. Murray's Dictionary, all the quotations being given in the order of their age, . . . he cannot fail to be struck with the amount of research displayed, and the perspicuity with which the results are set forth. . . . A work of this description is truly a national work."—Spectator.

AMERICAN.

"That great Anglo-Saxon undertaking. . . . We need hardly remind our readers that this work ought to be not only in every gentleman's library, but in every intelligent household."—Nation.

"This monumental work."—Prof James M. Garnett, in the American Journal of Philology.

"Certainly the Englishmen of this generation will bequeath to those that come after them no richer legacy than this."—New York Times.

"This dictionary is the most important contribution ever yet made to the history of our language. No one is safe in giving the history of an English word without consulting it. No one can consult it without learning something. . . . No student of language can do without it; every Anglo-Saxon may be proud of it."—Independent.

OXFORD: CLARENDON PRESS.

New York: MACMILLAN & CO., 112 Fourth Avenue.

JUST PUBLISHED.

YACHTS AND YACHTING.

With over 110 Illustrations by FRED. S. COZZENS and others. One volume, quarto, price $1.50; full gilt, extra cloth, price $2.00.

Edition de Luze, on large paper, and limited to 250 copies price $5.00.

This delightful volume includes a "History of American Yachting," by Capt. R. F. Coffin; "The Mayflower and Galatea Races of 1886," by Chas. E. Clay; "American Steam Yachting," by E. S. Jaffray; "British Yachting," by C. J. C. McAlister.

"Infinite Riches in a Little Room."

CASSELL'S

POCKET GUIDE TO EUROPE.

With Maps. Bound in Leather. Price $1.50.

This handy volume was planned by E. C. STEDMAN of New York, to meet the demand for a general European Guide Book, small enough to be carried easily in a gentleman's or lady's pocket, and yet more complete than any other single-volume guide.

It was compiled by Edward King of Paris, and revised by M. F. Sweetser of Boston, and is re-edited and kept up to date by Mr. Stedman.

For accuracy, fullness, legibility of text and maps, compact beauty and usefulness, and very moderate price, the publishers recommend it as the model book of its kind.

"A Powerful Novel of New York Life."

TWO GENTLEMEN OF GOTHAM.

1 volume, 16mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

"A work certain to attract unusual attention by its brilliant pen pictures of New York scenes and its clever handling of New York people. The authors are two men well known about town, who paint scenes they have looked on in a way that at once shows a knowledge of them."

THE HISTORY OF MUSIC.

By EMIL NAUMANN. Translated by F. Praeger. Edited by the Rev. F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Mus. Doc., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford. With numerous illustrations, including reproductions of many famous manuscripts. Two large octavo volumes. Price, per set, $10.00.

"The history of music is carefully traced from unclassical times to the music of the future. No such elaborate work has heretofore been attempted."

THE WHOLE TRUTH.

A Novel by J. H. CHADWICK. 1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

"The style is crisp and unaffected, and the author holds the reader's attention to the end."

Complete catalogue sent free to any address.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,
739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 8. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE NO. 321. Publishers.

BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$3.00 per Year.

A Child of the Century.

By JOHN T. WHEELWRIGHT. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper (yellow covers), 50 cents.

"Mr. Wheelwright's novel is one of the most thoroughly enjoyable of the recent publications in the line of fiction. It is a well-drawn story of modern life, dealing largely with some of the political questions of the day, and the characters are varied and interesting throughout."—Boston Times.

"It is a particularly creditable piece of work, and Mr. Wheelwright signs his name to one of the most entertaining novels of the year."—Washington Capitol.

A ROMANCE OF MOUNT DESERT.

The Jesuit's Ring.

By A. A. HAYES. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"Mr. Hayes's novel is one of decided interest. The scene is laid for the most part at Bar Harbor, the attractions of which place, both natural and social, are portrayed with the enthusiasm of one who is particularly familiar with them. No more felicitous description of this charming summer resort has ever appeared in print."—N. Y. Sun.

"The conception of the story is excellent. It indicates a scholarly research, a sensitiveness to artistic literary effect, and a fine power of selection in material. The book will rank among the best and most interesting of summer novels."—Boston Traveller.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Dr. Sevier.

By GEORGE W. CABLE. Uniform with "Old Creole Days" and "The Grandissimes." 1 vol., 12mo, $1.25; also in paper, 50 cents.

"There are few living American writers who can reproduce for us more perfectly than Mr. Cable does, in his best moments, the speech, the manners, the whole social atmosphere, of a remote time and a peculiar people. Characters stand out from his pages with a lifelike distinctness; and in their dialogue we hear the very tones of their voice, and catch the eccentricities of their accent."—N. Y. Tribune.

NEW EDITION FOR 1887.

The Index Guide

To Travel and Art-study in Europe.

By LAFAYETTE C. LOOMIS. With Plans and Catalogues of the Chief Art Galleries, Maps, Tables of Routes, and 160 Illustrations. 1 vol., 16mo, 600 pages, $3.50.

"One of the most compact, comprehensive, and exhaustive traveling companions ever printed."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Its value is incontestable."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"A guide-book of exceptional value."—The Critic.

* For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price, by the publishers,

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
742-745 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—B. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

HANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCES STORM. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. K. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIESTER'S LEVANA.

RIESTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPIROEA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

NEW VOLUME OF THE HANDLEY CROSS
SPORTING NOVELS.

A LOOSE REIN.

By "WANDERER," author of "Across Country." With colored illustrations by G. Bowers. 8vo, cloth, $4.00.

SPORTS AND ANECDOTES OF BY-GONE DAYS

In England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, and the Sunny South. By C. T. S. BIRCH REYNARDSON, author of "Down the Road." With numerous illustrations in color. Demy 8vo, cloth, $4.50.

TWO ROYAL LIVES.

Gleanings at Berlin from the Lives of their Imperial Highnesses, the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany. By DOROTHEA ROBERTS. With numerous Portraits and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, beveled boards, gilt tops, $2.25.

"A very interesting volume. . . . A perusal of this work will prove a capital tonic to any dyspeptic democrat who has an idea that all kings and scions of royalty do is to indulge in a round of frivolous festivities and careless pleasures. . . . The reader will find in this volume an abundance of attractive and interesting information, which will do much to abate many popular prejudices, and prove that where duty is the ruling motive of action, the members of a royal family can do much to elevate a people, and exalt a State."—The Nottingham Journal.

JUBILEE EDITION.

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES.

From the accession of Queen Victoria to the general election of 1880. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M. P. Jubilee Edition, with an appendix of events to the end of 1886. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

CAPITAL.

A Critical Analysis of Capitalist Production. By KARL MARX. Translated from the Third German Edition by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and edited by Frederick Engels. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $12.00.

"The Bible of the working-classes."

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

JUST READY. KNIGHT-ERRANT.

A NOVEL.

By EDNA LYALL,

Author of "Donovan," "We Two," "Won by Waiting."

12mo, cloth, price $1.50. Uniform with the author's previous books.

Mrs. Lyall's novels have met with a flattering reception from the class of readers that look for a high ethical purpose in fiction. Her books, while animated by an underlying religious motive, have a strong interest, derived from well-drawn characters and well-wrought plots.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

DONOVAN: A Modern Englishman.

"The story is told with a grand simplicity, an unconscious poetry of eloquence which stirs the very depths of the heart."—London Standard.

WE TWO.

"We recommend all novel readers to read this novel, with the care which such a strong, uncommon and thoughtful book demands and deserves."—London Spectator.

WON BY WAITING.

"The sentiment of the story is delicate and uplifting, and the style is uncommonly spirited and attractive."—Boston Gazette.

In uniform style, 12mo, cloth, price $1.50 each.

For sale by all booksellers; or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

D. APPLETON & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

The Poetical and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning.

An entirely new edition, from new electrotypes plates, after the latest revised English edition. In six volumes, crown octavo. Now ready: Vol. I., containing Pauline, Paracelsus, Stratford, Sordello, Pippa Passes, King Victor and King Charles. Vol. II., containing Dramatic Lyrics, The Return of the Druses, A Blot on the 'Scutcheon, Colombe's Birthday, Dramatic Romances, A Soul's Tragedy, and Luria. Cloth, $1.75 a volume; half calf, $3.00.

Gentleman's Magazine Library.

Vol. 7. Romano-British Remains, Part I. 8vo, $2.50; Roxburgh, printed on hand-made paper, $3.50; Large-Paper Edition, Roxburgh (50 copies), printed on hand-made paper, $6.00.

The two volumes in this Library devoted to Romano-British Remains will unquestionably be among the most important and interesting of the whole. The Gentleman's Magazine was the repository of a vast amount of information on this subject, and in these volumes it is arranged topographically. The editor prefaces this first volume with an elaborate introduction.

Christianity and Humanity.

By T. STARR KING. With a Memoir by E. P. Whipple. New edition. 12mo, price reduced to $1.50.

This is unquestionably one of the noblest volumes of sermons ever published in this country. In thought, in insight, in eloquent utterance, Starr King was one of the foremost preachers America has produced, and his illustrious patriotism endears his memory to every true-hearted citizen.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

Roberts Bros.' New Books.

PRISONERS OF POVERTY.

Women Wage-workers, their Trades and their Lives. By HELEN CAMPBELL, author of the "What-to-do Club," "Mrs. Herndon's Income" and "Miss Melinda's Opportunity." One volume, 12mo, cloth, price $1.00; paper covers, 50 cents. These are the articles in an enlarged form which lately appeared in the New York Tribune, where they created such widespread interest.

THE TWO BROTHERS.

By HONORE DE BALZAC. Uniform with "Père Goriot," "The Duchesse de Langeais," "César Birotteau," "Eugénie Grandet," "Cousin Pons" and "The Country Doctor." 12mo, half morocco, French style, price $1.50.

BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.

A Novel. By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Evan Harrington," "Harry Richmond," "Sandra Belloni," "Rhoda Fleming," "Vittoria," "Diana of the Crossways," "The Egoist." 12mo, English cloth, uncut, price $2.00.

THE KERNEL AND THE HUSK.

Letters on Spiritual Christianity. By the author of "Philchristus" and "Onesimus." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The author of this book asserts that a belief in the miracles of Christ is not essential to a belief in Christ; and in an introduction "to the reader" he says, "It is to the would-be worshipers and the doubtful worshipers of Christ that the following letters are addressed by one who has for many years found peace and salvation in the worship of a non-miraculous Christ."

TEN TIMES ONE IS TEN: THE POSSIBLE REFORMATION.

By E. E. HALE. A cheap edition, in paper covers, 30 cents.

. Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

JUST ISSUED.

Practical Lessons in Nursing.

I.—The Nursing and Care of the Nervous and the Insane.

By CHAS. K. MILLS, M. D. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

In no class of cases is it more important for a nurse, caretaker, or companion, to have good principles of action and clear notions of practice than among patients suffering from nervous or mental affections. Many of these unfortunate cases require prolonged and elaborate treatment, much of which necessarily must be carried out in the absence of the physician. This, together with information as to the care of such patients, also as to the use of massage, electricity, bathing, etc., by nurses this book endeavors to give.

IN PRESS.

II.—Maternity; Infancy; Childhood.

By JOHN M. KEATING, M. D.

III.—Outlines for the Management of Diet.

By E. T. BRUEN, M. D.

IV.—Fever Nursing.

By J. C. WILSON, M. D.

TWO VALUABLE WORKS.

MRS. JAMES BROWN POTTER'S MY RECITATIONS.

By CORA URQUHART POTTER. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00; cloth, gilt edges, $1.25.

One of the most famous women in America at present is Mrs. James Brown Potter; and her book, "My Recitations," is one of the best-selling books of the season, not only because its author's name is a household word in our midst, but also because she is known to be the best of American lady elocutionists, and a collection of pieces which have obtained her approval must be a valuable one to all readers, either amateur or professional.

"Mrs. Potter's Recitations have a world-wide reputation, and, in compliance with numerous requests for copies of her selections, she has gathered and published them under one cover. A handsome phototype of the fair elocutionist makes a fitting frontispiece."—Baltimore American.

HALF-HOURS WITH THE BEST AMERICAN AUTHORS.

Selected and arranged by CHARLES MORRIS

Complete in four crown octavo volumes of about 500 pages each. Cloth, gilt top, $6.00; half morocco, $10.00; three-quarters calf, $13.00.

Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 cop. es. Elegantly printed on laid paper. Octavo size, untrimmed edges. 4 vols. Half cloth, with extra titles for rebinding.

"It is a work over which every book-lover must rejoice. Gems have been gathered from every department of literature, and have been edited with a taste and refinement fitting their own high character."—Chautauquan.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail postage prepaid, on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

VALUABLE LIBRARY FOR SALE.

THE property of a gentleman who has devoted many years and a large expenditure of money in its formation. The collection, as a whole, is one of unusual excellence and interest. It is seldom, indeed, that a library so perfect in the essentials requisite for a gentleman is placed at the disposal of the purchaser. In the number and range of desirable books, in the choice of editions, in the careful selection of copies, the judicious and often costly bindings and the perfect condition of the whole, it has seldom been equaled. It is particularly strong in the department of Fine Arts, and comprises all the most notable art publications, both old and new; Galleries and Collections of Prints and Etchings, and Standard Works in all departments of literature. Ample opportunity for inspection. A catalogue and terms of sale will be furnished on application to

W. F. H., Box 3306, New York.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1887. No. 8.

CONTENTS.

WASTE-LAND WANDERINGS	115
BISHOP HANNINGTON	115
CAPTAIN SAMUELS, THE YANKEE SKIPPER	115
TALKS ABOUT LAW	116
MR. HAGGARD'S "JESS"	116
THE PROVINCES OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE	117
THE BALKAN PENINSULA	118
BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE:
Prince Peerless	119
In the Time of Roses	119
Veronica and other Friends	119
The Moon Maiden	119
Uncle Sam's Medal of Honor	119
Hidden Sunbeams	119
The Chester Coterie	119
Miss Ruth and Miss Susan	119
Dr. Trent's Cousin	119
MINOR FICTION:
On the Susquehanna	120
The Startling Exploits of Dr. J. B. Quies	120
Stanley Huntington	121
The Old House at Sandwich	121
MINOR NOTICES:
Studies in Musical History	121
A History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation	121
The Statesman's Year-Book, 1887	121
Scotland as It was and as It is	121
Hints on Writing and Speech-making	121
Napoleon and Marie-Louise	121
The Game of Logic	122
Etc., Etc., Etc.
ORIGINAL POETRY:
Phillip Bourke Marston. A Sonnet. By O. C.	120
Auringer	120
PARAGRAPHS	120
NEW YORK NOTES	120
BOSTON NOTES	124
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
"A Daniel Come to Judgment!"	124
Shakespeare for Women	124
Shakespeare's Later Style	124
THE PERIODICALS	125
NEWS AND NOTES	125
ENGLISH OPINIONS	119
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	126

WASTE-LAND WANDERINGS.*

THIS is the third of Dr. Abbott's delightful books about a circumscribed tract in New Jersey, near Crosswich Creek and Big Birch Creek, affluents of the Delaware; a region inexhaustible in its attractions for a naturalist. Historic, descriptive, full of information, abounding in anecdote, warm with enthusiastic love for nature, written in a racy and vivacious style, it is a volume of unusual charm and picturesqueness.

Our author set out to explore a certain "waste-land" through which the "Big Birch" meanders, and as he sat idly, or floated all day in his boat, returning home across the fields, he saw wonders not revealed to many men: such as a Turk's cap lily on a stalk eleven feet tall; rudbickias growing to the height of seven or eight feet; a grapevine which was a "foot in circumference at the ground and for some distance beyond," and "more than one hundred yards long." It is a country of fossil trees that have an aromatic odor; of amber, of quicksands, and a boiling spring; of unnumbered kinds of birds — bitterns, blue herons, green herons, arctic buntings, long-spurs, kinglets, linnets, the Florida gallinules, all manner of warblers, strange rail-birds, red-birds, the coon crake, wingthing — where even buzzards seen against the twilight sky are attractive; where acres of flowers of one variety are to be found; where the white-footed mice afford abundant opportunity for their nesting habits to be studied; where the fish come up by the boat-side and wait long enough to make one's acquaintance; where are boulders of jasper, and bluffs abounding with Indian arrow-points, spears, scrapers, and other relics of the aborigines.

* Waste-Land Wanderings. By Charles C. Abbott. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

This keen observer had novel experiences; as when he "caught an unusually large mud-minnow, which had swallowed a pike; and in the pike's stomach was a small mud-minnow, and in its stomach were the remains of a pike. Four fish as one!" And also when he saw (p. 241) a cloud of mosquitoes "half a mile wide, and one hundred yards from front to rear," making a sound "like a train of cars passing over a bridge;" and witnessed a migration of redwings numbering, as he thought, "fifty thousand birds in the flock;" and tried military tactics with seven fishes that kept in a row and advanced or retreated as he directed their movements; all of which indicates that this is a captivating book, one for the out-of-door literature department of your own or of the public library. It has a full table of contents and a full and carefully-made index.

BISHOP HANNINGTON.*

BISHOP HANNINGTON was the latest martyr in the cause of Christian missions. His heroism and achievements have added another tragic page to the history of the opening of Africa. He deserved to have his life written, and it has been well written. This is a remarkable book because it has a remarkable subject. We advise every boy to read it for its stirring pictures of youthful exuberance and manly adventure. We advise every minister to read it for its exemplification of the apostolic spirit in the nineteenth century. We advise every lover of missions to read it for the light it throws upon one of the most difficult yet fascinating missionary fields. We advise every Christian to read it for the stimulus it affords to faith, hope, and charity. We advise everybody to read it for its personal interest, its unconventionality, and its dramatic power.

The outlines of Bishop Hannington's career can be given in a few words. Born near Brighton, England, in 1847, he died in Equatorial Africa, near the shores of the Great Victoria Nyanza, in October, 1885. He was a typical English boy, a collector of specimens, an enthusiastic yachtsman, pure, true, fearless, and indomitable. Born among the Dissenters, he became in youth a Churchman, and from the prospects of a successful business life turned to the ministry. Intelligent, but an indifferent scholar, he had to try once and again in his examination for orders. A short period of study at Oxford, where everybody knew him as "Jim Hannington," was followed by his ordination at Exeter, and by a curacy on the wild rough heights of Devon, at Martinhoe. His "conversion," his actual experimental entrance on the religious life, followed, reversing the usual order. In 1875 he became incumbent of a chapel of ease in his native town of Hurstpierpoint. By this time he was fairly afloat on the full current of ministerial labor, a devoted parish priest, an unwearying temperance worker, a highly successful and widely employed missionary. Frank, blunt, loving, impulsive, reckless, tactful, prodigiously energetic, no ritualist yet tolerant of ritualism, all things to all men in a good sense, it was no wonder that when a call came in 1882 for helpers in Africa, he volunteered.

* James Hannington. A History of his Life and Work. By E. C. Dawson. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $2.00.

He made a first missionary journey to the Nyanza by way of Zanzibar and Mpwapwa in 1882 and '83, and was beaten back by fever, going home to England, as was feared to die. Recovering himself, and then designated as First Bishop of Eastern Equatorial Africa, he returned to the assault in 1883, and struck out from Frere Town to reach the Nyanza if possible by a new route around its northern shores. Meanwhile the friendly Mtesa, King of Uganda, had died, and had been succeeded by his vicious, feeble, suspicious, and vindictive son Mwanga. Mwanga, resenting the approach of a dreaded European from the unusual quarter of the northeast, handed the intrepid Bishop over to the spears of his soldiers.

Thus perished what was mortal of one of the bravest knights in the modern army of the Great King. He, if ever man was, was born and bred to the post in which he died. His hardihood, his bravery, his coolness, his judgment, his unselfishness, his gentleness, his strength, are illustrated by a hundred anecdotes. Rash we must think he sometimes was, but it was himself he exposed, his cause never. What man ever faced lions in Central Africa as did he?

CAPTAIN SAMUELS, THE YANKEE SKIPPER.*

THE old, old saying, that "truth is stranger than fiction," is strikingly exemplified in this book, which ought to make the manufacturers of petty realistic novels open their eyes with wonder. Everybody, we suppose, has heard of Captain Samuels and his famous ship, the "Dreadnaught." It is the story of his career from boyhood till he gave up seafaring, that is succinctly related in this fascinating volume. Captain Samuels wastes no time on rhetorical elaboration; he tells his story, as he sailed his ships, in a straightforward, energetic, business-like way, which at once wins the reader's confidence and holds it to the end. Short of the chronicle of Baron Munchausen's adventures, we do not recall any book which records so many disastrous chances, moving accidents by flood and field, and hair-breadth 'scapes as are here written down by this Yankee descendant of the vikings, and best of all, we feel sure that they are true. It needed not the indorsement of the Bishop of New York to inspire belief in the sincerity of Captain Samuels, although we cordially agree with the assertion that the book "has not a dull line in it," and that "if one wanted an effectual deterrent to use in the case of a lad seized with the fancy for going to sea, it would not be easy to find it more readily than in the often painful experiences of the author."

* From the Forecastle to the Cabin. By Captain S. Samuels. Harper & Brothers.

To the boys of a larger growth, the book, aside from its charm as a record of romantic adventure, is interesting as a picture of marine life in the palmy days when the sails of American ships were on every sea and the American flag was carried into every port. Those were the days of daring voyages, of piracies, of frequent mutinies, of flogging, of "crimps" that drugged poor sailors and "shanghaied" them aboard strange ships, and all the rest of the manners, customs, and brutalities which ruled the sailor's existence. All this Captain Samuels portrays without extenuation, and it is evident that only by superior ability and superior strength of character was he able to rise from the position of cabin boy on a coaster at the age of eleven, to the command of a first-class clipper at twenty-one. An attempt merely to enumerate the more striking of his adventures would be impracticable in the space at our command. Here are a few selections from the chapter-headings:

Caught in a Levanter in the Grecian Archipelago. — I do a Stroke of Seasmanship which Attracts Attention Aboard two English Brigs. — Sir Edmund Lyons, British Minister to Greece, accepts a Cigar from me and praises my Countrymen. — I Return the Compliment by a Piece of Foolhardiness and by Showing my Heels to his two Brigs. . . . I decline to be Admiral of the Turkish Navy. — A Dozen of us try to Swim the Bosphorus as Byron did. — He must have done his Swimming in different Weather. . . .

I assist a Christian Lady to flee from a Turkish Harem. — She comes to me and my Friend, a Swedish Captain, down a Silken Ladder in the dead of Night, goes on Board my Friend's Ship, and sails away to England, where they are Married. — Constantinople becomes too Hot to Hold me after they are Gone. — A Collision in the Bosphorus, and a Run to Odessa, in which I beat the entire Fleet of which I was Admiral.

So the tale goes on, describing an adventure with pirates, the spending of a year's income in a five weeks' stay at Batavia, the sharp sale of a rotten ship to a Dutchman, six hours drifting in an open boat in a gale off the Cape of Good Hope, the renowned mutiny on board the "Dreadnaught," when Captain Samuels got the better of a crew of "bloody forties," and the disastrous experiences of the hurricane in the "Devil's Blow-hole" — all this and much more with the simple art of a born teller of stories. Captain Samuels naturally has some bitter reflections on the present ignominious condition of his country as regards naval and maritime power. He thinks that by the increase of luxury in living we are as enervated as the Romans were at the fall of the empire, and in the clamor for free ships he detects the influence of British gold. It is not free ships, but protected ships, that we need, in his opinion, to win back the supremacy which England gained by preying upon our defenseless shipping during the civil war. He is Yankee to the last, and his final word is that "it is not for the American mind to retrograde and to look across the ocean for an inspiration."

TALKS ABOUT LAW.*

THIS work is "good in spots." The various parts are satisfactory, but the volume as a whole lacks coherence; it is not homogeneous; the train of thought is unduly broken by switches and branch roads. "Talks about Law" is a very just title. Most of the chapters are "talks" about their topics. The volume contains forty-three chapters; about one third, perhaps half, are devoted to explanations of the existing law of the land on subjects of common interest to the masses of the people, such as Marriage, Husband and Wife, Parent and Child, Employer and Employee, Minors, Contracts, Negotiable Paper, Partnership, Agency, Bailments, etc. These are treated upon the whole judiciously, in a simple, readable style, without the encumbrance of elaborate research or profound learning.

Another third of the book is devoted to history and antiquities of law. Such are the chapters on How Law Grows, Ancient Forms of Trial, Benefit of Clergy, Punishments, Pulpit and Pew. There remain a number of chapters, or portions of chapters, discussing plans of law reform, such as Both Sides of the Jury Question, and the Divorce Question. Of course, we speak only of a certain general character of the chapters, but the impression that they leave is that the work has not been written consecutively, with a single purpose, but is largely composed of essays written independently, and united in a volume with such additions and connecting matter as seemed appropriate. It seems well adapted to supply useful information, sometimes practical, sometimes historic, sometimes argumentative.

One feature will restrict the usefulness of the work for students. It hardly brings out with sufficient clearness the truth that there are thirty-eight States, and that their laws vary, even conflict, in many particulars. Mentions of the distinctions between State laws are comparatively few, and where they occur, New Hampshire law is generally stated, as if that State were a satisfactory type of all. Thus the chapter on Courts describes the English and Federal judiciary systems quite fully and mentions the jurisdiction of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, but scarcely suggests that other States have systems which are distinctly different. The chapters on Law Suits and Pleadings describe the course of a civil suit very fully and correctly according to the New England practices, with a good deal of illustrative information from English sources, but give nothing of the practice in other States, or of the codes of procedure, or the changes of nomenclature which they have introduced. There are six pages about trial by Ordeal, by Purgation, by Wager of Battle, and by Wager of Law (topics which are explained in any cyclopedia), but only the barest mention of the use made in modern times of trial by referees, or by a judge without a jury. In the discussion of Evidence there seems no mention of the immense and important innovation which has admitted parties and persons interested to testify.

Upon the whole, we think that the lawyer, the law reformer, the general student, and even the law student, will do well to add this volume to a library containing a fair supply of representative books on the subject of American jurisprudence.

MR. HAGGARD'S "JESS."*

TO Mr. Rider Haggard existence is a succession of vivid passions set off by terrific thunder storms and blazing sunsets. To read one of his books is like witnessing a melodrama enacted with an accompaniment of fireworks and a brass band. He has the imagination of a scene-painter, the fondness for incident of a dime novelist, the style of the pet reporter of a sensational newspaper. He can portray a character only by the cut of its clothes, the baldness of its head, the fairness of its complexion, or the brilliancy of its eyes. His story of Jess is like a nightmare — grotesque, fantastic, horrible, leaving the mind wearied and depressed. At first one is taken with the novelty of the business. Here is something out of the common; here is a man who lets himself go! But even in the reaction against the petty realism of contemporary fiction, it is possible to go too far. Of the painter of miniatures and the dauber of panoramas we prefer the former; but we are willing to acknowledge that this is a matter of taste.

The story of Jess is briefly this: Captain John Niel is riding along a road in the Transvaal on a hot summer afternoon on his way to the farm of Silas Croft, with whom he is to go into partnership. While he is

* Talks About Law. A Popular Statement of what Our Law is and How it is Administered. By Edmund P. Dole. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

* Jess. A Novel. By H. Rider Haggard. Harper & Bros. 75c.

moralizing there appears over a hill-top a lovely woman on a pony pursued by a mad ostrich. Thud! Pony knocked over; girl runs, falls on the grass. "In an instant the huge bird was on top of her, kicking at her, rolling over her, and crushing the very life out of her." John Niel to the rescue; gets badly used. "Just as things were growing faint and dim to him, however, he suddenly saw a pair of white arms clasp themselves round the ostrich's legs from behind, and heard a voice cry: 'Break his neck while I hold his legs.'" So he twisted the neck "till it broke with a snap." The girl is Bessie Croft, niece of Silas; she is very beautiful, with her "low, broad brow, crowned with soft, yellow hair, the chin very round and white, the mouth sweet though rather large." She dances before him to show that she is not hurt. They limp away arm in arm. At the farm John Niel meets Jess; she is pale, she has a pair of Eyes, and she is Intellectual. John admires Bessie; Bessie falls in love with John "in a sweet womanly fashion." Jess, however, brings her Mind into play. "There rose up in her breast a knowledge that . . . her nature was stronger than his nature, and her mind encompassed his mind, and could pass over it and beat it down as the wind beats down a tossing sea." Bessie tells Jess of her love for John, so Jess calls back her Mind and takes it away for a visit to Pretoria. Time for an incident. Frank Muller, the handsome fiend, a Dutch-English half-breed, appears and tells Silas Croft he must have Bessie to wife or he will stir up a war against the English and take her by force. Old Croft drives him away with curses. John wins Bessie's troth and goes on a hunting expedition; is shot at twice by Muller, but is not hit. The Transvaal war breaks out and John goes to Pretoria in pursuit of Jess; is penned up there with the besieged; is wounded, and Jess nurses him. Then she lets her Mind out again:

She said nothing, she did not even move, she only looked at him. . . . She . . . kept her eyes upon his face, and it seemed to John as though power flamed from them; for, as she looked, he felt the change come. Everything melted away before the almost spiritual intensity of her gaze. . . . He knew that he loved this woman. . . . Strong man as he was, he shook like a leaf before her. "Jess," he said hoarsely, "God forgive me! I love you!" and he bent forward to kiss her. She lifted her face toward him, then suddenly changed her mind, and laid her hand upon his breast. "You forget," she said, almost solemnly, "you are going to marry Bessie."

"Almost solemnly" is good. Frank Muller provides the pair with a pass, intending to kill them on their way back to the farm, and they obligingly seize the opportunity to place themselves in his clutches. On a dark night they come to a river bank, where Muller says there is a ford and tells them to drive on. They drive on, are soon afloat, and Muller and his two accomplices stand on the bank and shoot at them, while one of Mr. Haggard's stupendous tempests gets in its work. The wagon catches on a rock and John drags Jess ashore; a lightning stroke kills the two wicked accomplices and melts their rifles; and Muller flies to pursue his vengeance further. With a band of Boers he goes to the farm, has Croft knocked down and beaten, and informs Bessie that she must marry him or her uncle will be put to death at sunrise. Meanwhile Jess has arrived and overhears the interview. At night she borrows a knife from a Hottentot, creeps into Muller's tent and stabs the fiend. Then she makes her way to a cave and dies with her head pillowed on John's breast, he being asleep and ignorant of her presence. John marries Bessie and they and Silas Croft go back to England.

This summarizes the action of the story; and if the reader will sprinkle in a sufficient quantity of the Transvaal patois and Boer oaths, with a sunset and a thunder storm in every chapter, he will have a fair idea of what Mr. Haggard can do. What Mr. Haggard cannot do is to write the English language correctly. "It is us," said Jess, quickly" (p. 196); "she . . . read on like one reads in some ghastly dream" (p. 243); "Jacobus—whom . . . was exceedingly sick" (p. 299); "so that was where they were being taken to" (p. 300)—these are specimens of Mr. Haggard's style. We must not close without giving at least one specimen of Mr. Haggard's "philosophy"—it belongs to the order which a trans-Atlantic authority has recently defined as "flap-doodle":

They were walking along that easy, winding road that leads to the mountain paths of love. It is a very broad road, like another road that runs elsewhere, and, also like this last, it has a wide gate. Sometimes, too, it leads to destruction. But for all that it is a most agreeable one to follow hand-in-hand, winding as it does through the pleasant meadows of companionship. . . . By and by it is different. By and by, when the travelers tread the heights of passion, precipices will yawn and torrents rush, lightning will fall and storms will blind; and who can know that they will attain at last to that far-off peak, crowned with the glory of a perfect peace which men call happiness? . . . Some say that they have climbed its topmost pinnacle . . . and heard the quiring of immortal harps and the swanlike sigh of angels' wings; and then behold! a mist has fallen upon them, and they have wandered in it, and when it cleared they were in the mountain paths again, and the peak was far away.

THE PROVINCES OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.*

THE preëminent historian of the Roman Commonwealth, in these two crowded volumes, has resumed his masterly narrative after a thirty years' interval. He has not taken up his tale at the point where he had previously stopped, but passes over for the present the struggle against Cæsar's new empire and its final establishment, as well as a full consideration of the new regime, to view the history of the provinces.

The Roman State of this epoch resembles a mighty tree, the main stem of which, in the course of its decay, is surrounded by vigorous offshoots pushing their way upwards.

Leaving, then, the story, which has already been well told by others, of the doings of the Court of Rome, Prof. Mommsen, without promising to fill up this gap in his work, presents, as he alone could present, the actual work of the imperial period as his exhaustive scholarship discovers it in the agricultural towns of Africa, in the homes of the vine dressers on the Moselle, in the flourishing townships of the Lycian mountains, and on the margin of the Syrian desert.

Even these words fail to show the extent of the historian's view, for the titles of the chapters embrace the whole circumference of the power which encircled the Mediterranean and made it a Roman lake. The Northern Frontier of Italy, Spain, the Gallic Provinces, Roman Germany, Britain, the Danubian Lands, Greek Europe, Asia Minor, the Euphrates Frontier, Syria and the land of the Nabataeans, Judea, Egypt, and the African Provinces—with a grasp like that of Gibbon, and more than Gibbon's learning, the German historian traverses the mighty round, and gives a condensed but graphic sketch of the condition and history of the many peoples over whom Rome held sway.

Seldom has the government of the world been conducted for so long a time in an orderly sequence; and if an angel of the Lord were to strike the balance whether the domain ruled by Severus Antonius was governed with the greater intelligence and the greater humanity at that time or in the present day, whether civilization and national prosperity generally have since that time advanced or retrograded, it is very doubtful whether the decision would prove in favor of the present.

The character of the task which Prof. Mommsen lays upon himself prevents his displaying his great ability in consecutive historical narrative, wrought out in detail, relieved by sketches of eminent men, and "moralized" for the edification in statesmanship of modern nations. "With self-denial this book has been written, and with self-denial let it be read." We have been reminded by it more than once of Mr. Stephens' recent admirable history of the French Revolution, which also emphasizes the part of the provinces, and thus sets that great epoch in a new light. On a wider scale and with less of unity in the main action to which these provincial histories refer, Prof. Mommsen casts a proportionally greater flood of light upon Roman history between Cæsar and Diocletian. Paris was not France; much less was the city of Rome the Roman empire.

No one can henceforth claim to be decently well read in the history of this period who does not study these volumes with care. The expansion and clearness of view which they must impart to the reader will compensate for the absence of some of the charms of Mommsen's earlier volumes. Occasionally the author relents from his severity and gives vivid sketches, all too brief, of the religion, manners, and literature of the various provinces. Germania crying "Back!" to the Roman general, and Boudicca (in whom one hardly recognizes Cower's British warrior-queen) are not altogether suppressed; while the Bithynian Dio and the scholar of Chæroneia, who, beyond any second, knew "in so happy a measure how to reconcile himself serenely to necessity, and how to impress upon his writings the stamp of his tranquility of spirit and his blessedness of life," almost triumph over that "self-denial." The chapter on Judæa shows that Prof. Mommsen is a strong adherent of the new school of Old Testament criticism — an ally whom that school will not despise. The account of Palmyra and Zenobia is quite detailed, and the sketch of Alexandria, whose citizens are very aptly compared to the English in India, is especially effective. The apparatus of maps is full and excellent; they, however, should have been Anglicised throughout. Prof. Dickson, the translator, in this respect as in others, has apparently proceeded upon the worst principles a translator could set before him, of taking as little trouble as possible, and of running his so-called English sentences too often in the mould of the original. His preface reads like a profession of incompetence, and it is much to be regretted that so powerful a writer as Mommsen should not have found a translator whose English was to be compared with the German original; "the battle of Varus," and "all-Hellenism," to cite but two minor instances, are "vile phrases" to denote the battle in which Varus was defeated, and Pan-Hellenism.

* The Provinces of the Roman Empire from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Theodor Mommsen, translated by W. P. Dickson, D.D. Two volumes, pp. xvi, 397, and 396, with ten maps. Charles Scribner's Sons. $6.00.

THE BALKAN PENINSULA.*

[Emile Louis Victor de Laveleye, the author of this fine work, is a Belgian by birth and a Parisian by education. He was born at Bruges in 1822, became a contributor to French reviews, and in 1858 one of the editors of the Revue des Deux Mondes. Later he was appointed to a professorship in the University of Liege, and has filled other honorable positions in the world of letters and science. He has published copiously upon economic topics, his Elements of Political Economy, Socialism of Today, and Primitive Property, being known in this country. He is a French publicist of distinction.]

NO work at once so important, so timely, and so readable as this has appeared the present season. The pivotal point of European politics just now is the Balkan Peninsula; the question of questions with Austria, Russia, and Turkey, and therefore with the remoter nations looking on, is, what shall be done finally with Croatia and Slavonia, Bosnia and Serbia, Roumania, Bulgaria, and Roumelia, that assembly of dismembered principalities on the border between Europe and Asia, essentially European and of the West, but so long ground under the heel of Turkey? France and Germany it is true are eying each other; England has troubles in Ireland to attend to; the Balkan problem is for the moment quiet; but the Balkan problem is not solved, and until it is there can be no rest. As a solution shall Austria or Russia, either one, absorb these Balkan provinces? Or shall Austria and Russia divide the lot between them? Or shall these provinces be let alone, to work out their own manifest destiny, by association in some sort of a republic or federation?

This last is the sensible, the Christian, the logical solution. This we understand to be Mr. Gladstone's wish and that of the English Liberals. And this is the recommendation of M. de Laveleye's book, which however is no dry political treatise, but a charming description, a picture of these Balkan provinces, a series of studies of their landscape, their towns, their farms, their people, and their resources, as seen in the course of a recent journey diagonally across the peninsula from Belgrade to Constantinople. The work is absolutely fresh. An introductory historical chapter compasses the very latest events, and puts the reader in possession of the whole present situation; and the pages which follow set before us a view of the land and its people, which for photographic effect, animation, picturesqueness, and general interest, we have not seen the like of this long time.

M. de Laveleye's starting point on his expedition was Vienna, and his first important interview was with Bishop Strossmayer, at Essek, a Slavonian town on the River Drave, just above its confluence with the Danube. Of Strossmayer he gives a masterly sketch in his second chapter. His personal description of the man stands out like a statue:

He appeared to me like a saint of the Middle Ages, such as Fra Angelico painted on the walls of the cells of San Marco in Florence. His face was refined, thin, ascetic; his light hair, brushed back, surrounded his head like a halo; his gray eyes were clear, luminous, inspired. A sharp yet gentle flame beamed from them, the reflection of a great intellect and a noble heart. His speech is easy, glowing, full of imagery; but, although he speaks French, German, Italian, and Latin, besides the Slav languages, with equal ease, no one of these dialects can furnish him with terms sufficiently expressive for the complete rendering of his thought, and so he uses them by turns. He takes from each the word, the epithet, he needs, or he even uses the synonyms that come from them all. It is when he finally arrives at Latin that his sentences flow with unequalled breadth and power.

From Essek M. de Laveleye journeyed to Belgrade, the Servian capital lower down the Danube, thence to Sofia in Bulgaria, and on by way of Philippopolis and Adrianople to his destination. This was a "cross lots" route, accomplished only in part by rail and otherwise by stage-coach, often over bad roads, but generally through an interesting country. American missionaries are at work in these lands, but our author has nothing to say of them. Spots here and there are dyed with the blood of Turkish atrocities and of Russian victories, but this work is not a history. It is a survey — of broad and fertile fields golden with maize, of towns and cities parti-colored with the meeting of two civilizations, of people busy, for the most part prosperous, and just now contented. Bosnia is beautiful. In Servia every man is a land owner:

The land is fertile and not badly cultivated. The predominant system of the succession of crops is the triennial wheat or rye, maize or fallow. . . . The dwelling houses are large, with outbuildings, stables, cow-houses, maize ricks, barns, all together in a large, well-hedged space, in which the animals wander about. These constructions are generally thatched, and made of clay or wood, but being whitewashed, they peep out prettily amidst the fruit trees, which form a complete wood.

How simple but effective this glimpse in Philippopolis:

A wide boulevard has been made between the station and the town, with beautiful buildings, villas amidst flower gardens, and large houses inhabited by the Consuls of foreign powers. The interior of the town has no savor of the East; it is more like an old fortified city of Southern Italy. The steep narrow streets lie between very lofty houses, whose upper stories, often of wood, hang over, supported by beams or corbels. Some houses resemble the Roman villas on the frescoes of Pompeii, beyond a high wall, and a heavy door with large nails, girded with iron bars, opens a marble-paved court, which is well sheltered by acacias and cherry trees with bright red fruit. Then comes the house with a row of slender columns and tall pilasters, painted white with arabesques of bright blue. A vine ornaments the façade; its branches are laden with purpling grapes. Through the foliage the sun throws golden rays upon the pavement and flowers. These bright colors and this delicious freshness give an impression of brightness and happiness.

Is it simply that M. de Laveleye has a sunny temper, or is the Balkan Peninsula a garden? No reader can resist the generally pleasant impression which this most intelligent and readable of recent books leaves upon the mind. It is like a fresh breeze blowing away the miasma. Hands off! one feels like saying to Austria and Russia, as the sympathies are drawn to these peoples; and to Turkey, Keep on the other side of the Bosphorus. Let these Slavs govern themselves. Leave them to their vineyards, their harvests, their flocks and herds, their wives and children, their peaceful homes, their growing schools, their extending railways, their life, liberty, and happiness. And thanks to M. de Laveleye for his patriotic and philanthropic journey in their behalf, and his fascinating account of the journey.

American Titles.

[From Sons and Daughters.]

Rich Americans feel that they lack distinction unless they can get a title. Even our best names here are only local; they don't pass current out of their native city. Look at the Biddles, even. Now, of course, a Philadelphian would sooner be a Biddle than to be a king; but yet only last winter Lord George Hurst was over here — a serious fellow, don't you know, with a note-book, and a desire to get to the root of the matter—and he button-holed me one night and said, "There is just one thing more I want to ask about. Will you please tell me what is a biddle? I hear it said, 'He is a biddle,' or, 'She was a biddle,' and it is quite incomprehensible to me what a biddle is."

* The Balkan Peninsula. By E. de Laveleye. Translated by Mrs. Thorpe. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.50.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Prince Peerless. A Fairy Folk Story Book. By the Hon. Margaret Collier (Madame Galletti di Cadilhac). Illustrated by the Hon. John Collier. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.] Eight fairy stories, written by a mother for her children; but with the exception of "The Sick Fairy," the allegorical "Two Fairies," and "Prince Peerless," they are not particularly attractive, while four of them are positively depressing—not profitable reading for children. If we are to have fairy stories, why can they not be deliciously absurd and amusing, or else peopled by the canny little brownies of the old-fashioned books who did good and not evil to mortals? The pictures are awesome, all but the last.

In the Time of Roses. A Tale of Two Summers. Told and Illustrated by Florence and Edith Scannell. [Roberts Brothers. $2.00.] Readers of Sylvia's Lovers—one of the engaging volumes of last year—will be pleased to see another work from the same dainty pen and the same artistic hand. This is a lovely book, delicate and refined without and within; the covers are artistic in design and in the fine key of coloring; the story is quiet, about persons of gentle manners and breeding; the style pleasing, and the illustrations are tempting, some in soft tints, some pen and ink vignettes, bits of Capri scenery, and others taken on English ground, with exquisite faces of young girls, noticeably the "Geraldine" and the "Isolina," on pages 13 and 27. It is a sweet and pure book for girls, refining in its influence.

Veronica and Other Friends. Translated from the German of Johanna Spyri. By Louise Brooks. [Cupples, Upham & Co. $1.50.] Madame Spyri has a fondness for taking a young girl for her central figure, placing her in adverse circumstances and then developing her character through painful discipline till she is rounded into a noble womanhood. Of both the stories in this volume, "Veronica" and "Uncle Titus," this is the plan, and the influence is helpful, though the way is hard. The latter story has considerable humor, and the pranks of the twins are amusing, especially where they "let on the water" for the purpose of enacting the deluge, and come near being drowned in the wash-tub, in which they embarked with the cat and dog to personate Noah and his wife and the animals. The family life of the Birkenfelds is delightful, and there are capital portrayals of character in the good Gertrude and Judith, in Uncle Titus and Aunt Ninette, with story enough to captivate, and moral purpose enough to do good to the reader.

The three stories included in the volume which Miss Jessie Greenwood has called The Moon Maiden are of the fanciful, fairy order, but are based, each in its turn, on a tiny point of moral truth. Children often resent this mixture, but we think they will condone it in the case of The Moon Maiden, because of the extreme sweetness and freshness of the tales, which are charmingly told, with hints of humor as well as pathos, and many bright touches. [Macmillan & Co. $1.25.]

In 1862 Congress authorized the preparation of certain medals of honor to be presented in its name to non-commissioned officers and privates in the Union Army who should distinguish themselves by gallantry and soldierly qualities. About 500 such medals were awarded during the Civil War. What deeds of daring and heroism did they signalize! In the handsome book called Uncle Sam's Medal of Honor General Rodenbough, U. S. A., collects the stories of some of the exploits by which these medals were won. It is a stirring volume for readers of the literature of courage, and danger, and martial achievement. Boys may read it with quickened pulses and be moved by it to manliness, hardihood, coolness, and pluck. There are portraits and other pictures. [G. P. Putnam's Sons.]

From the Presbyterian Board at Philadelphia we have several additions to the shelf of religious fiction: Hidden Sunbeams, a utilization of settlers' life in the early history of Central New York, a mixture of story and Paley's Evidences, with unnatural dialogue [$1.15.]; The Chester Coterie, by Kate Livingston Hamilton, a girls' story of the performances of a cooking club [$1.00.]; Miss Ruth and Miss Susan, by the late Helen E. Chapman, a study of contrasting characters, without pious conventionalities, and both readable and wholesome [$1.00.]; and Dr. Trent's Cousin, by Helen B. Williams, a book with the stature of a full-grown novel but the soul of an evangelical sermon [$1.25.].

MINOR NOTICES.

An admirable opportunity for the study of the French romantic movement is afforded by Professor Crane's Le Romantisme Français, a compact volume of selections from the writings of Victor Hugo, Alfred de Musset, George Sand, Balzac, Mérimée, Théophile Gautier, and Sainte-Beuve. An introduction traces the various links in the development of the romantic school, gives bibliographical data, and provides references; the notes, which fill nearly forty pages, are prepared with extreme care. When one thinks how impossible such a book as this would be dealing with the realists, one realizes something of the degradation of contemporary French literature. [G. P. Putnam's Sons.]—From W. R. Jenkins, New York, who is doing good work in presenting wholesome and attractive French fiction at a reasonable price, we have L'Ombra, a story of an Italian countess and opera singer, by A. Genevraye, an author who deserves to be better known in this country [60c.]; Alphonse Daudet's recently published sketch of boat life on the Seine, with its brilliant coloring and pathetic motive [25c.]; and, for young readers, Mme. de Ségur's Malheurs de Sophie, the first volume of a projected "bibliothèque choisie pour la jeunesse" [60c.].—Sophie Doriot's Beginner's Book in French aims to beguile the tedium of scholastic routine by appealing to the humorous predilections of the child-learners. The illustrations do not seem to us to be always in the best of taste, and the nursery rhymes are surely crude; but the method of the book and its arrangement are both excellent. [Ginn & Co. 95c.]

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Mr. Baird . . . is not indeed without his Protestant bias, and would probably answer with Michelet, if attacked on such a score, that he has had no care to "maintain a wise and prudent equilibrium between good and evil," and, "on the contrary, is frankly strongly partial on the side of right and truth." But, though in full sympathy with the Huguenots, he is no blind partisan. He judges with equity and weight. His book is built on the solid rock of contemporary records. It bears every mark of industry, accuracy, and care. It is, in fact, a solid book, lacking somewhat in brilliancy, perhaps, especially when compared with Motley's glowing histories, and rather unduly weighted with extracts from official documents and public manifestoes—extracts that might preferably have been relegated to notes or appendices—and yet a book arranged clearly, lucidly, with a due sense of proportion; in brief, a book of which Mr. Baird may well be proud.—Mr. Marials in the Academy.

I think that George Eliot has done harm to imaginative literature, because she has cultivated a taste for the prose of every-day life. She has not attempted in fiction what Wordsworth achieved in poetry—to flood the commonest incidents in the light of imagination, to reveal a familiar landscape under the unfamiliar charm of moonlight. That combination of the actual and the supernatural makes half the difference between Macbeth and Robinson Crusoe, for both are real, and both are imaginative. George Eliot's intellectual force and great literary power are apparent in every line she wrote; but her veracity and her imagination are perhaps seen at their best in the first part of Silas Marner only. There the imagination is the imagination of metaphysics, and the realism is the realism of the "pots and pans" of life. Compare George Eliot's realism and imagination in this best part of her work with the realism and imagination of so slight a thing as Wordsworth's "We are Seven." The veracity is about equal, but how different the imagination! Macbeth is more realistic than Holingshed's Chronicle; but its realism is imaginative—it is the familiar bathed in the light of the unfamiliar.—T. Hall Caine in the Academy.

It is exceedingly annoying to see a novelist astonishingly, almost phenomenally successful, in virtue of an inferior book. Mrs. Wood succeeded first of all through East Lynne, and although a hundred and forty thousand copies have been sold, and the book has been pirated by dramatist after dramatist, and a bill was actually introduced into Parliament to protect it, East Lynne is an inferior book. We have a much higher opinion of Mrs. Wood, as we shall speedily show, than the generality of critics; but after carefully reading it a second time, we cannot deny that East Lynne is very poor stuff.—The Spectator.

No bishop in recent times was more practically useful, more widely popular or universally lamented, than the late Bishop of Manchester. His life was worth writing, and it has been well written by a man who possesses special qualifications for the task. Judge Hughes, who was one of Fraser's pupils at Oriel, knew the bishop intimately for many years. The bishop and his biographer had many elements in common—the same joyous, hearty temperament and constitutional buoyancy, the same outdoor tastes and sympathies, the same keen interest in questions of education, pauperism, and other social problems. There are many passages in this volume which are written in the vigorous style of "Tom Brown's School Days;" but as a rule Mr. Hughes wisely effaces himself, and leaves the bishop to be, as far as possible, his own biographer.—Athenaeum.

The consumers of fiction are, as Mr. Traill puts it, a great and ever-increasing army. They are indiscriminating and voracious readers. What is required to counteract "the literature of the streets" is the cheapening of good fiction to the utmost, even to the halfpenny; the supply must be abundant and continuous, and the effort unrelaxing and far-reaching.—Saturday Review.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Philip Bourke Marston.

Now art thou nearer than thou wert before,
Now hath thy heart found room, by death set free!
There is no ocean now, a bar to be 'Twixt thee and those whose hearts thy image wore.
From that warm cloud that wraps us evermore,
Alive with sun-bright souls in ecstasy,
Thy spirit, naked of mortality,
Strikes fire direct into each bosom's core.
So near! Oh now thou art forever done
With that frail speech which half obscures the soul.
Henceforth thy songs in living lines shall run
Straight to our hearts, released from all control.
And when we crave thy music's sinless fire,
Thy soul's warm self shall answer our desire.

O. C. AURINGER.

Queensbury, N. Y., March 28, 1887.

. The last day of March was signaled by what was called "An Authors' Reading" at the Boston Museum in aid of the Longfellow Memorial Fund. Mr. Lowell, Dr. Holmes, Mr. George Wm. Curtis, Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Howells, Mr. Higginson, Dr. E. E. Hale, Mark Twain, and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, all under the marshalship of Professor Charles Eliot Norton, united in presenting, to an afternoon audience that completely filled the theater, an entertainment of readings from their own works, with one or two selections from Longfellow. The entertainment was too long, lasting some three hours, and became tiresome, after the novelty of the spectacle had faded out, but the tender interest in the object sustained the general attention to the close. Over five thousand dollars was added to the Fund.

. Professor Norton's reference at the late Authors' Reading, to the Rev. Francis Higginson, first minister of Salem, Mass., and his descendants, might well be amplified a little, to illustrate what Emerson called "the still living fire of the old New England families." Among the lineal descendants of this same old clergyman, though under different family names, may be mentioned Senator Hoar and his brother, the former Attorney-General; the late John Lowell, founder of the Lowell Institute, and his grandson, Judge Lowell; the late Governor John A. Andrew; Colonel Henry Lee; Henry Cabot Lodge; Robert Treat Paine; Gen. Chas. J. Paine; and the late Rev. Chas. T. Brooks, the translator of Faust. Such a variety of noted and useful men certainly may indicate the truth of Emerson's phrase; which is similarly illustrated by the prominence still maintained by the descendants of Francis Higginson's compeers in the Massachusetts Bay Colony; Winthrop, Endicott and Saltonstall. The founders of the Plymouth Colony, Bradford and Winslow, are also well and honorably represented to this day.

. The rumor that Dr. Joseph Parker, minister of the City Temple, London, is to be invited to come to Brooklyn to deliver a eulogy on Henry Ward Beecher, and the accompanying talk that he is likely to be called to succeed Mr.

Beecher, both of which have been telegraphed about the country, look like attempts to advertise Dr. Parker's books. It is to be hoped they mean nothing more.

NEW YORK NOTES.

— Possibly no one has given a wider impulse to reading in New York than Mrs. John Sherwood. A native of New Hampshire, and educated in Boston, her residence in West 32d Street has become a literary center through her Monday classes in literature and her Thursday readings from her own writings—reminiscences of travel, acquaintance with illustrious personages abroad, and descriptions of conventional usages in the old world. Few American ladies have had better advantages for obtaining such information in London, Paris, and Rome, as well as in her own country. Her Thursday readings have been crowded, and are made additionally attractive by music and recitations.

— Morning Lectures on the Roman Excavations, and Rome, Paris, and London, have been given at private houses this winter, as well as at Chickering Hall, all largely attended. Lectures on Art and Art Works have also been given by the professors of the Metropolitan Art Museum, in private houses, and there have been classes in general literature, history, poetry, architecture, etc., etc., in private parlors.

— President Barnard of Columbia College has invited ladies and gentlemen to the free course of scientific lectures under his direction.

— The "Sorosio" is not a fashionable club, but has a large membership of educated and brilliant women who meet once a month to discuss the interests of their sex. The President, Mrs. Laura Thomas, is a gifted lady. Until recently she has been a successful farmer in New Jersey, and can talk of bees and fruits as glibly and understandingly as of current literature. Her manners peculiarly adapt her for the position she occupies in this famous club, which gives breakfasts to noted women authors, singers, and travelers, and variously encourages feminine talent and industry.

— The Nineteenth Century Club has become an immense membership of ladies and gentlemen of literary inclinations. It meets in the rooms of the American Art Gallery, No. 6 Madison Square. At a late meeting Mr. Chatterji, the Brahman expert in theosophy, talked for an hour, but did not enlighten the audience with any definite idea. He steered clear of everything that might be supposed to touch on the profundities of theosophy, but admitted at the close of his lecture that he has two doctrines: one the transmigration of souls, the other that the Ego is eternal in the sense of having no relation to time. Mr. Chatterji's book, now in press in Boston in a translation, is anticipated with interest, here as well as generally, by the inquirers into the new craze called "Theosophy." It is understood that he will soon open a school for the study of Aryan literature, and for instruction in his subtle doctrines.

— The library of Mr. A. T. Stewart is to be sold, as well as the remaining objects of art in his late residence. His collection of books is rare, but not proportionately so, compared with his pictures. It is stated as a fact that Mr. Stewart had scholarly tastes, was educated, and daily read portions of Greek or Latin classics. The very chill which caused his death is said to have ensued from his lingering over a favorite Greek author in an insufficiently heated room. There is a public disappointment in the disposal of his residence for a club house, as the idea had obtained a wide acceptance that he intended it for an art museum, to be free to all people. The design of the interior, as well as exterior, would tend to confirm such belief, as the whole mansion is divided into square rooms, opening with double doors into marble-paved corridors. All the staircases, too, are of white marble. It is said that Mr. Stewart regretted that he was only known as a successful merchant to the world at large.

MINOR FICTION.

On the Susquehanna. A novel. By William A. Hammond. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.]

Dr. Hammond has something far better than the art of fine writing: he has the art of telling a story and of telling it well. On the Susquehanna is indisputably a striking story well told. The characters are not many; there is no very elaborate combination of incidents; the plot is transparent at the most critical point in the narrative—nevertheless there is in the book so much energy and vigor that the author carries us along almost in spite of ourselves. Our sympathies are sometimes against his theories, and we now and then question his facts, but we do not often fail of finding entertainment with the glimpses he gives us into the recesses of pronounced types of character. When Francis Honeywood, owner of the Susquehanna Iron Works, dies in the prime of manhood, he leaves his daughter Alana mistress of all his wealth and the bearer of a shameful secret regarding her parentage. Alana is a nature of rare nobility and is gifted with unusual intellectual capacity, although she is exquisitely feminine. She goes to work to unravel the secret and discover her mother, who, she believes, is by her own will living a life of degradation. How the search ended and what complications arose, the reader will thank us for not revealing. A strike, a startling adventure with robbers, the wiles of a cunning impostor—these add sensational elements in abundance, but they are never treated in a sensational way. We should be sorry to believe that such a character as John Benham is an impossibility, yet we cannot help thinking that Dr. Hammond has heightened his perceptions rather beyond the limits of credulity.

The Startling Exploits of Dr. J. B. Quies. From the French of Paul Célière, by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie. [Harper & Brothers. $1.75.]

It is a very mild sort of humor which M. Célière has given us in his story of The Startling Exploits of Dr. J. B. Quies. Dr. Quies was a French pseudo-savant, member of many scientific societies, and moreover a man whose round personality invariably claimed repose. Travel of all description was particularly distasteful to the amiable doctor, and the humor of the narrative consists in putting him through a series of involuntary journeys, which take him to Algiers, across the desert of Sahara into Egypt, and finally home to his native village. A valet, Magloire, figures as deus ex machina, and is like a character out of Molière. One situation upon which the author dwells may be taken as typical of the whole book. In the Sahara Dr. Quies falls in with an English explorer, Sir Thomas Nicholl, who provides generously for his necessities, but refuses to hold any intercourse whatever with his guest. At the end of three days Magloire appears, proclaims his acquaintance with Dr. Quies, and Sir Thomas at once asks to be introduced! The illustrations have a piquancy which is genuinely French, not to say Parisian. But compared with Tartarin of Tarascon the text is like milk and water after champagne. The translation is of course irreproachable.

Stanley Huntington, by Sydney J. Wilson, is an overwritten novel of Southern life, with not unfaithful pictures of local scene and character, but crude and swollen in style. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.]

If one wants a sensational story of seduction, supposed murder, mining life, Indians, and private vengeance, spiced with ranch slang and other boisterousness, he will find it in Joseph Hatton's The Old House at Sandwich, the English town of Sandwich being the starting-point, Chicago and Drummond's Gulch the way stations, and Lake Maggiore the end. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 25c.]

MINOR NOTICES.

Studies in Musical History. By Louis S. Davis. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.65.]

This series of papers should be of much interest to musical readers, though its different parts are of singularly unequal merit. The best chapters, perhaps, are the interesting and inspiring essay on the German choral and the collection of curious antiquarian lore poetically related in the chapter on bells. Most strictly in the line indicated by the title are the chapters on the mass, considered musically, and some of the great composers who have enriched its canon, and on the transition period in music between Gregory the Great—from whose name we have the term Gregorian tones—and the origination by S. Philip Neri of the oratorio, A.D. 1540; while seemingly farthest from a historic treatment of music are the disquisitions on the functions of music teachers—containing, however, useful suggestions—and the curious chapter on myths and folk-lore. In one place we notice the old tradition about the composing of the "apostles' creed;" in another certain lines in "the hymn to St. John," from which Guido of Arezzo introduced six of the familiar syllables used for tones:—

Ut queant laxis.
Resonare fibris.
Mira gestorum.
Famuli tuorum.
Solve polluti.
Labbii reatum.
Sancte Johannes.

Our author makes the common misuse of Catholic for Roman. His style is somewhat poetic, as befits the subject; and it is occasionally a little difficult to follow the thought.

A History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation. By M. Creighton. Vols. III and IV. The Italian Princes. 1464-1518. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $7.50.]

It is certainly a courageous historical undertaking for a British scholar to attempt to get behind the Papacy in the period of the Reformation. The Reformation has been described by Protestants from the Protestant side, and by Romanists from the Roman side; in this work it is described by a Protestant from the Roman side; not out of Roman sympathies, but from the Roman point of view. The first two volumes of Mr. Creighton's work appeared as long ago as 1883, and were noticed in our Vol. XIV, p. 148. Four years have elapsed, and these second two volumes appear, devoted to the Italian Popes whose administrations covered the latter half of the 15th century and the first two decades of the 16th. These were the days of the Borgias and Savanarola, of the glory of Florence, of the Italian Renaissance in literature and art, of high offices and ignoble administrations, of material splendor and moral corruption; but through all these crowded varied days Mr. Creighton follows closely his single thread of Papal history, touching only what else is actually connected with it. This laborious work has almost the novelty of an expedition and the charm of an exploration, so fresh is the light in which it enables us to see some memorable scenes and familiar characters; so ample is its store of materials, so thorough its assimilation of them. With a good deal of hard and dry detail it is constantly opening up vistas which are alive with dramatic interest.

The Statesman's Year-Book, 1887. Edited by J. Scott Keltie. [Macmillan & Co. $3.00.]

This well-known annual surveys the Civilized World from the standpoint of a British citizen. It is calculated, so to speak, from the meridian of Greenwich. In this year 1887 it reaches its 24th issue. The editor, Mr. Keltie, is Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. The "world" is growing, and year-books must grow too, and this one runs up to very nearly a thousand pages, although thin paper and close-trimmed margins keep the volume compact and handy. It opens, as such a work should open, with an analytical table of contents, and closes, as such a work should close, with an index. The perspective of nations, as seen by a Briton, puts the States of Europe first, of course; then, in a Part Second, the principal States of America, Africa, Asia, Australia, and Oceania; out of the nearly 1,000 pages of the whole, Great Britain and Ireland get 104 pages, Germany 89, the United States of America 34, France 34, and India 29. There are full statistics of populations, commerce, railways, telegraphs, and revenues. All facts are interesting; as, for example, that Belgium is the most densely populated country in Europe, having 514 souls to the square mile; Norway the least, with 15. Belgium, too, has a larger mileage of railways and telegraphs, per 1,000 square miles, than any other European State. The Statesman's Year-Book is a directory to the life of living nations, setting forth the personality of each and describing its home; an index to the times. To students of affairs, particularly to politicians, economists, and journalists, it is indispensable.

Scotland as It was and as It is. By the Duke of Argyll. 2 vols. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $8.00.]

These handsome and inviting octavos of some 300 pages each have beautiful typography, brilliant covers, a suggestive title, and distinguished authorship, but will not fulfil the reader's expectations. The work is able in certain ways and valuable in certain directions, but it has neither the historical interest nor the descriptive charm which its exterior traits would suggest. Instead of being a series of picturesque views of Scottish scenery, life, and character, in their past and present aspects, it is substantially an economic tract. To adopt its author's singular fondness for capitalization of important words, it is a Contribution to the Literature of the Agrarian Question; a great Landlord's Defense of the Right of Landholding; a Challenge to the Henry Georges and the McGlyms of the present agitation towards a new order. The foundations of the argument are historical, ancestral almost, we might say. The Duke of Argyll clings tenaciously to traditional rights and habits, and makes large claim for the privileges of Mind side by side with those of Matter. He is not always accurate in his historical statements, and his pages have little interest except for specialists in the field of sociology and political science. Only students of the legal and scientific side of the great questions of land ownership and rental will care to read the work. But on such a subject as "Scotland as It was and as It is," what a fascinating book might be written!

Hints on Writing and Speech-making. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. [Lee & Shepard. 50c.]

We earnestly wish that all aspirants for literary honors, and some who have attained them, would take this little manual, give it a place upon their desks, and make its contents as familiar as household words. Of all the guides and instructors for young writers this is incomparably the best; it says all that needs to be said on the subject, in the briefest possible space and in a manner that cannot fail to produce an impression upon the memory. The "Hints on Writing" appeared long ago in the Atlantic as "A Letter to a Young Contributor;" the "Hints on Speech-making," a few months ago, in Harper's Magazine. Both are well worthy of preservation in book form. Mr. Higginson does not neglect practical details. "Use good pens, black ink, nice white paper, and plenty of it." He reminds the young contributor that an editor is human. "Do not treat him like an enemy, and insist on reading your whole manuscript aloud to him, with appropriate gestures. His time has some value if yours has not." He warns against a premature assertion of individualism. "A man has not much intellectual capital who cannot allow himself a brief interval of modesty." There is wit, too, in the entreaty to "spare the raw material; deal as cautiously in Latin as did General Jackson when Jack Downing was out of the way; and avoid French as some fashionable novelists avoid English." The chapter on speech-making is no less pointed and sententious. The recipe for a successful speech is: something to say; an earnest purpose; a conversational manner; a few points planned in orderly fashion, with one good fact and one good illustration under each; and "never carry a scrap of paper before an audience." But neither quotation nor synopsis can do justice to a volume so pregnant with the wisdom of common sense.

Napoleon and Marie-Louise. A Memoir. By Madame la Générale Durand. [Rand, McNally & Co. 75c.] This book is one of many compilations of Napoleonic history intermingled with personal reminiscences which have seen the light of late years. It cannot compare in interest or value with the memoirs of Mme. de Rémusat, and indeed contains very little that is significant or wholly trustworthy. Mme. Durand was evidently a favorite with the Emperor, and her tone throughout is apologetic. She depicts him as an ardent lover, a devoted husband, and an adoring father; she has much to say of his fondness for practical jokes; and she dwells at length on his natural kindliness of heart and cites many illustrations of his generosity. She endeavors as far as possible to extenuate or palliate his amours, and she thinks it a noteworthy virtue that he used all possible means to conceal his infidelity from the Empress. The latter is depicted as a calm, thoughtful, kind-hearted woman, a stranger to every kind of intrigue, and one who "had all the feminine accomplishments, loved occupation, and did not know the meaning of ennui;" she was, moreover, naturally timid, and her shyness was often mistaken for haughtiness. Naturally, Mme. Durand has several anecdotes to relate and she explodes a few of the old ones. A "communicated note" tends to support the assertion that Napoleon after his abdication attempted to kill himself by swallowing poison. Letters printed in the appendix show conclusively that the Emperor, prior to his exile to St. Helena, had made definite arrangements to escape to the United States, and that Lucien Bonaparte and his family were to join the expedition.

The Game of Logic. By Lewis Carroll. [Macmillan & Co. $1.00.]

We confess to having spent some minutes in trying to make out just how children are to be persuaded to enjoy Mr. Lewis Carroll's new book, The Game of Logic, with its accompanying diagrams and red and gray wafers. There may be young people capable of being amused by such syllogisms as "No old rabbits are greedy," "Some not greedy rabbits are black," "All white rabbits are free from greediness," "No rabbits that are not greedy are black," "No old rabbits are free from greediness," and by disposing x and y, predicates, attributes, major and minor premises, in order due, with a red wafer here and two gray wafers there; but we should be at a loss where to lay our hands upon such young people, outside of the establishment of the late well-known Dr. Blimber. We seem to see some pale little Dombey junior bending a puzzled brow over the book, and trying to convince himself that it is fun and a game, and not hard work under a thin disguise; but a sturdy boy, not of the little Paul order and not educated by Dr. Blimber, would, we are inclined to think, spurn The Game of Logic as a stupid sham, black rabbits, greedy rabbits, pink pigs, and all, and clamor for some play that is really play, or else some study that is really study, on the principle that two things, each good in itself, often make when mixed a third thing which is neither good nor desirable. We could easily illustrate this well-known fact by a logical formula after the manner of Mr. Lewis Carroll, but perhaps it as well to leave it to the imagination of the reader.

The new, enlarged, and illustrated form in which Cupples, Upham & Co. have brought out Rev. Dr. Haskins's extremely interesting account of the Maternal Ancestors of Emerson, first published in the Literary World, is a great improvement over the pamphlet in which the sketch was first reprinted. We have now a really beautiful little book, in choice library binding, large and heavy type, and wide margins, and with plenty of portraits and pictures. The charm of these simple pages is not exceeded in any book that has been published on Emerson. [$1.50.]

Under the novel if not fanciful title of The First Khedive the Rev. Dr. Daniel March has written out the story of Joseph according to the narrative in the book of Genesis, enriched with considerable Egyptological knowledge and colored with a glowing but tempered imagination. Dr. March's purpose is the ethical improvement of the theme to average minds. The treatment is less homilistical than Dr. Wm. M. Taylor's The Prime Minister, of last year, and more biographical. [Presbyterian Board. $1.50.]

Mr. William O. Stoddard has added to his new series of "Lives of the Presidents" a book on John Adams and Thomas Jefferson. It is a popular biography, not intended especially for young readers, but written in ordinary style and for average minds. There are a few pictures, and the book is both attractive and useful. [White, Stokes & Allen. $1.50.]

On reading Mr. Haweis's Picture of Paul, just added to his series on "Christ and Christianity," it occurs to us to say in characterization of it that it comes nearer to Talmagian eloquence than any other London product with which we are familiar. Mr. Haweis is hardly a scholar, in the scientific sense of the word, but there is less scholarship in this than in the preceding volumes on Jesus and the Gospels, and there is more declamation, more of an expository use of the Biblical narrative for popular effect. Mr. Haweis's exegesis is sometimes fearful, as when he makes the "seeing through a glass darkly" in 1 Cor. xiii: 12 looking through a horn window, but there is no disputing the plainness and vigor with which he applies St. Paul's teachings to modern life, and particularly to London life. A fastidious congregation would not stand such preaching, and fastidious readers will scarcely enjoy such reading; but the way of putting things is always to the point, sometimes striking, and occasionally amusing. After saying this, we shall not surprise any one by adding that it is sometimes colloquial, slangy, and even coarse. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.]

The death of the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher has occasioned a fresh edition of Prayers from Plymouth Pulpit, an attractive red-edged volume of 332 pages, twenty years old in the body, but perpetually young in the spirit, which is that of tender communion and fellowship with Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Mr. Beecher was certainly gifted in prayer. With all his imagination and emotion, his devotional exercises of mind seldom ran into extravagance or sensationalism, or exceeded the canons of good taste. [A. C. Armstrong & Son.]

The volume on Revelation in Meyer's New Testament Commentary proves to be written by Düsterdieck of Hannover, and has been translated for its present place by Dr. Jacobs of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Philadelphia. Some note of explanation should be given showing how Meyer's work came to be pieced out thus by another hand, but there is no such note, and the uninformed reader is left in the dark.

Düsterdieck is a learned, reverent, and sympathetic expositor, but he rejects the commonly accepted authorship of the Apocalypse, assigning it to another John. His argument to this effect occupies considerable space in the introduction. [Funk & Wagnalls.]

The fifth volume of Dr. Joseph Parker's People's Bible compasses the books of Joshua and Judges. Dr. Parker approaches to being the Henry Ward Beecher of London; but Mr. Beecher's originalities were natural, while Dr. Parker's have the effect of being studied. Take, for example, the second of these discourses, entitled "Aspects of Human Character," founded on Joshua i: 10-15, which the writer of this notice heard Dr. Parker deliver in his City Temple, Holborn, London, one rainy Sunday evening in September, 1885; it is difficult to avoid in reading it, as it was in hearing it, the impression of artificiality. Each discourse is preceded in print by the prayer that preceded it in delivery. This trait of artifice is still more noticeable in the prayers, nevertheless Dr. Parker is a power. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50.]

Among the "Helps to Belief," the little square vest-pocket-books which Cassell & Co. are publishing, are Creation, by Bishop Goodwin of Carlisle, and Miracles, by the Rev. Brownlow Maitland. These tracts are good examples of the calm and sensible way in which the best Christian scholars are adjusting the changed relations of religious truth and modern thought. What could be more temperate, judicious, or satisfactory than the Carlisle Bishop's statement of the theological, the philosophical, and the scientific reasons for reconciling the Divine origin of the universe with the Evolutionary hypothesis of Creation? or Mr. Maitland's removal of the objections against miracles on the ground of intrinsic improbability, and then the admission of the direct evidence in their behalf on the ground of the records and of historic Christianity? [Each 50c.]

Excellent indeed are the three papers—three "talks" from manuscript—by Bishop Huntington of Central New York on Good Talking and Good Manners as Fine Arts, and the accompanying one on The Social Law of Mutual Help; the thoughtful, forcible, wise, and sometimes brilliant, utterances of a truly paternal nature, one of the noblest of earthen vessels, charged with a sublime fluid of thought and feeling. [Syracuse, N. Y.: Wolcott & West.]

In Our Father Annie L. Hyde has compiled a small book of selections in prose and verse fitted to the several petitions of the Lord's Prayer. The book is thoroughly catholic, and will meet the devotional wants of readers of every school and sect. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00.]

E. P. Dutton & Co. print a 41st thousand of Rev. George Everard's little book of "Counsels to Young Christians," Not Your Own, a devotional symphony of variations on the air of 1 Cor. vi: 19. [40c.]

In The Victorian Half-Century Miss Yonge has prepared a pleasantly-written review of the fifty years' reign of Victoria, which will be welcomed by readers of all classes. An attractive picture of the family life of the queen is given, and all the noteworthy events of the period are faithfully recorded, although the Irish question is disposed of as being yet in so undeveloped a state that it cannot be entered upon. This is politic, certainly, but after the frank condemnation of the Liberal government in its Egyptian policy or lack of policy, is an unnecessary manifestation of reserve. In the closing paragraph the material progress of the Victorian era is duly lauded, and the irreligion and skepticism of the times are deplored. It strikes us as rather curious that in writing of the events commemorated by the laureate, no reference is made to nor any quotations taken from Lord Tennyson, whose name, indeed, does not appear in the volume. Miss Yonge claims for her work "perfect accuracy," it "having been revised by the best authority." [Macmillan & Co. 35c.]

So old and so renowned a story is the Siege of Troy, that at least some knowledge of it should be considered an essential part of education. We have in Mr. Aubrey Stewart's Tale of Troy a classic tale of the Iliad, related in twelve chapters of moderate length. The language is clear and studiously simple, and shows a marked preference for strong Anglo-Saxon words and phrases; and, though prose, has constantly a subtle suggestion of poetry. The type and paper are handsome, and the front cover is ornamented with an appropriate Greek frieze. In fact, nothing seems lacking, unless it is a map, to make clear the relative position of places, and suitable illustrations. Perhaps, however, no pictures less artistic than the celebrated designs by Flaxman would be worthy of the book. [Macmillan & Co. $1.25.]

The Hon. George William Brown, Chief Judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore, who was Mayor of that city in 1861, has written out, under the title of Baltimore and the Nineteenth of April, 1861, a detailed account of the memorable passage of the Sixth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers on its way to Washington at the opening of the Civil War. The narrative, with appendices, fills 176 octavo pages, and is supplied with a map of the streets on which the fatal encounter between the soldiers and the citizens occurred. Judge Brown tells his story with circumstantiality, and with evident truthfulness and fairness, and has certainly made a valuable contribution to history. [Baltimore: N. Murray. $1.00.]

The latest addition to the series of Epochs of Church History is an account of The University of Oxford, by the Rev. Mandell Creighton. Mr. Creighton of course rejects the tradition of King Alfred's founding of Oxford, finds its origin in the academic body which grew up after the Paris idea at the beginning of the 13th century, and after the history becomes well-defined, traces it in successive chapters down to the present time. The passage on "The Oxford Movement" is especially interesting; so are the 16th and 17th Century pictures of the University. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. 80c.]

In American State Constitutions, an essay of some sixty pages, Dr. Henry Hitchcock generalizes the history of our several State Constitutions, tracing their growth, identifying their likenesses, and pointing out their contrasts, after a manner fitted to interest and instruct legislators and students of constitutional law and political science. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.]

To the same series with the above, "Questions of the Day," John R. Dos Passos, Esq., of New York City, contributes a book on The Inter-State Commerce Act, enacted at the last session of Congress, the law which is to work such a change in tariffs and regulations for railroad transportation between the different States. It is just the book for those who want to know what "the Inter-State Commerce Act" is and means. The law is printed in full, and carefully analyzed in detail. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.55.]

Mr. George M. Towle's The Nation in a Nutshell is in effect a primer of American History, a bird's-eye view of the growth of the United States, a cursory sketch of course, but one that presents the outlines with distinctness and general accuracy. [Lee & Shepard. 50c.]

J. B. Lippincott & Co. are publishing a series of "Practical Lessons in Nursing." The books are small and are prepared by physicians. The latest received by us is on The Nursing and Care of the Nervous and the Insane, by Dr. Charles K. Mills, a Philadelphia medical instructor. The four chapters treat respectively of the physical and mental qualifications of nurses for nervous patients, of the science and practice of "massage" in its various forms, of the function and application of electricity, and of the actual daily care of the insane. Dr. Mills recommends electricity and massage under conditions, and his book is cautious, sensible, and suggestive. There are a few pictures of apparatus. [$1.00.]

Not amusement only, but instruction in entertaining forms, is the end and object of Elizabeth G. Bainbridge's Schoolroom Games and Exercises, the author believing that by means of such playful exercises children may be helped to pick up useful knowledge. The idea is sound and good. The working out of it shows ingenuity and awakens interest. And in the sitting room as well as in the school room this book might find grateful users. [Interstate Publishing Co. 75c.]

G. P. Putnam's Sons, who have a keen scent for good books appearing over the water, have imported a supply of Marshall's Junior Course of Practical Zoölogy, a new and advanced text-book for school use, a ripe fruit of the scientific instruction at Owens College. The method is clinical. Representative subjects are dissected before the reader's eye, the microscope is freely used, and abundant illustrations are inserted. The work takes its place in the class-room and the laboratory with an air of authority. [$2.50.]

Mr. Upcott of Oxford, England, is the author of a Clarendon Press text-book, An Introduction to Greek Sculpture, which in small compass traverses the whole subject, from the religious origin of Greek sculpture down to the Roman supremacy, and the blending of Greek ideas with Roman. There are lists of authorities and of the chief monuments to be found in illustration. [Macmillan & Co. $1.10.]

Microscopy for Beginners, by Dr. Alfred C. Stokes, first gives a full description of the microscope as an instrument, in all points of construction and operation; and then sets the beginners to work with it, chiefly among subjects taken from the water, both plants and animals. There are nearly 200 illustrations. The author disclaims being a professional microscopist, but certainly is an expert, and a competent guide. [Harper & Brothers.]

Beginners with the brush and palette will find in A Manual of Oil Painting, by the Hon. John Collier, a clear statement of general principles, and a body of directions for technical practice, all expressed in a tone of encouragement that is fitted to remove timidity and call out self-reliance and individuality. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.]

Cebes was a Theban philosopher of not quite certain date, Socratic in his mind and method. He left a treatise on the dangers and temptations of human life, which in the Greek is called "Pinax," but has been edited under the English equivalent, Tablet, as a text-book, with introduction and notes, by Professor Parsons of the Ohio Wesleyan University. In classic literature it holds a famous place, its ethical character has won it respect, and it has been translated into all the languages of Europe, and into modern Greek and Arabic. Lovers of Plato will enjoy an hour with Cebes. [Ginn & Co. 80c.]

Mr. Ayton's treatise on Practical Electricity is not a book for popular reading, but a strictly technical manual for students of electrical engineering, that field of applied science which is opening so widely and rapidly at the present time. It is a text-book for the lecture room and the laboratory, with numerous illustrations. [Cassell & Co. $2.50.]

Mr. Leslie Stephens's Dictionary of National Biography has reached its tenth volume, but with that gets no farther along the alphabetical list of British names than CLARKSON. The leading contributors to this volume are Professor Blaikie, Mr. A. H. Bullen, Mr. W. P. Courtney, Mr. Rhys Davids, Mr. Austin Dobson, Dr. S. R. Gardiner, Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, Sir Theodore Martin, Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, and Prof. Ward. The Chambers family furnish the first entries of note. There is an extended and excellent sketch of the poet Chapman. The royal Charleses, I and II, occupy no fewer than 40 pages between them. The poet Chatterton is handsomely treated, receiving almost as much attention as Chaucer. The Churchills, of course, are numerous, and the biography of John, first Duke of Marlborough, is one of the most important in the book. This is by Mr. Stephens himself, and fills 25 pages. The Clares and Clarkes, in formidable array, conclude the volume. [Macmillan & Co. $3.25]

The contents of the second volume of the new edition of Franklin's Works are chiefly letters to various individuals, among them Cadwallader Colden, Peter Collinson, Jared Eliot, James Logan, John Perkins, James Bowdoin, Mrs. Jane Mecom, and Mrs. Deborah Franklin. The dates range from 1744 to 1757. It is interesting to note the wide range of the topics of these letters, and in particular the prevalence among them of various phases of electrical discovery and inquiry. In fact there was scarcely any subject on which this wisest of Americans could not write, from "remedies for the stone and gravel" to "The effects of electricity on paralytics," including "the culture of grass in meadows," "public speaking," "the difficulty of civilizing Indians," "a mail for the army," and the "habits of old age." The volumes of this work give singular pleasure to the eye. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.]

Perhaps the most noteworthy work recently published on the subject is Samuel Taylor Coleridge und die englische Romantik, a monograph remarkable for insight, and for a knowledge of English literature in its byways as well as in its beaten paths. It is not necessary to agree with all Professor Brandl's conclusions in order to thank him heartily for a volume which every reader interested in Coleridge will do well to consult. It is written in a clear and lively style, and we are glad to see that its readers will before long be largely increased by the issue of an English translation.—Spectator.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Shakspeare's Later Style. Dr. Furnivall sends us the following note, which we print instead of one of our own commenting on the same slip of our friend Morgan:

In your number of Feb. 19 there is a most astounding sentence in the report of Mr. Morgan's speech, which, if rightly given, shows on how slight a basis of study some folk utter opinions. Mr. Morgan is stated to have said:

The first Locksley Hall is much more highly polished, and more accurate in its scansion than the second. In the Shakespeare Plays, the critics seem to think that care and polish betoken maturity.

Now as the whole argument of those who chronologize Shakspeare's plays by verse-tests is, that in his latest period he got much freer and looser in the structure of his verse, using the run-on line, the double-ending, the weak-ending, more and more frequently in order to get the ease of natural talk, Mr. Morgan's statement is, as near as possible, the direct contrary of the fact. It is just as if doctors who consider wrinkles, gray hair, relaxed muscles, signs of old age, were boldly told that they had said these things were marks of early and vigorous manhood. Shakspeare's earliest genuine play, Love's Labour's Lost, is probably his most labored one, and his worst. Winter's Tale, his last genuine play, contains more free and loosely constructed lines—more with three syllables to a measure, more run-on lines, more weak and double-ending ones—than any other genuine play. (Henry VIII. I do not admit to be genuine.) So far, Tennyson has changed in the same direction as Shakspeare; but every poet has to be judged by his own verse-test.

That there are folk capable of believing that The Taming of a Shrew—with its Marlowe borrowings, its bombast and frequent nonsense¹—is a genuine play of Shakspeare's, is an interesting parallel to the Bacon-authorship belief in America and here. Human credibility is evidently infinite, or is this Shrew business the latest specimen of American humour?

F. J. FURNIVALL.

¹ I admit its structural and comic merits.

Shakespeare for Woman. In a recent examination of Richard Grant White's volume, Studies of Shakespeare, we find in the opening chapter the following sentences:

Shakespeare is not a woman's poet. He deals too largely with life; he handles the very elements of human nature; he has a great fancy but is not fanciful; his imagination moulds the essential and central rather than the external; he is rarely sentimental, never except in his youngest work. Women with the exception of a few, who are not always the most lovable and happiest of their sex, like something on lower plane, something that appeals more directly to them.

They would rather look at a woman of the first fashion in a dress of their time than at the grand simplicity of ideal woman in the Venus (so-called) of Milos.

I confess I was rather startled on reading his first statement. It had not occurred to me that the great bard of Avon was more particularly suited as reading to the masculine portion of the world, than the feminine. I had been so rash as to have an opinion that a well-educated woman had a higher and more complete idea of Shakespeare's writings, versatility, genius, etc., than many men. But then, as a great student of Shakespeare, Mr. White should be a competent judge in the case. It may have been that the author, in stating that Shakespeare was not a woman's poet, was thinking of the ladies of the 18th Century. It certainly would seem that he did not grant that they had intellect enough to appreciate Shakespeare, even if he does not believe in the doctrines of those who assert that woman has no soul. I have always had an idea that woman was sufficiently intuitive to understand the most difficult problems in human nature, and therefore, why not "the very elements of human nature," which Mr. White says "Shakespeare handles"? In fact, I think if some statistician were to gather the facts he would find proportionately more men than women who had absolutely no idea of Shakespeare or his genius.

True, I know that men get the credit of being very quick in perception, but that is because their wives, mothers, and sisters have been bringing a good influence to bear upon them. It is not in man to be more intellectual than woman. His intellectuality, if he has any, is from his mother generally; if he hasn't, he marries a young lady who possesses that all-desirable article and is happy. She gives him points, and he goes forth and proclaims them as his own. She is the instigator of his best thoughts and deeds. (Hence the reason why so many business men marry school-teachers, as the statisticians show.)

As Shakespeare's "imagination moulds the central and essential rather than the external," so he is best appreciated by woman. Why? Because woman moulds the essential, central, and external in all that she undertakes. Speaking of his lack of sentimentality would imply that woman is most fond of sentimental poetry. If we grant that, we must also give man the credit, or discredit, of similar tastes. Mr. White seems to think it a perverted taste. Man is no more free from it in proportion than woman. Finally he does come to acknowledge that there are a few women who can appreciate the great bard. This condescension could be forgiven, if he did not say in the most pessimistic way that the few who he granted had the power of understanding Shakespeare, "are not always the most lovable or happiest of the sex." This declaration is a statement which it is difficult to conceive of as being true. We only wonder, in silence, if Mr. White was depicting some one he had seen, or if not, from whom he drew his information. There probably are very many women, as well as men, who do not appreciate Shakespeare, but to give the credit to man for superabundant intellectuality, and then scathingly insinuate that only the sour, ugly women like Shakespeare, is quite inconsistent. To say that "they like something on lower plane, appealing more directly to them," is true only of a certain class. I refer to the women who habitually read all society novels, without any aspirations to literary reading. That class are often very insipid.

I suppose when Mr. White compares the two he takes men and women of equal intellect. He cannot do otherwise in all fairness. There are just as many so-called men who would rather look at man or "woman of the first fashion in a dress of their time, than at the grand simplicity of ideal woman in the Venus, so-called, of Milos."

Oh, amazing inconsistency! Man is perfect, so far as the power to appreciate Shakespeare is concerned, and woman, in the very few cases where she does, is imperfect, in figure and temper! It is well that "the world does move," and that there are women who not only appreciate Shakespeare, but other authors of a high order. I fear Mr. White was suffering with an attack of mental dyspepsia, or some equally distressing malady, when he wrote the lines to which I refer. I cannot otherwise account for his statements. If women were as incompetent in judging in every case, we should have a poor world in which to live.

Cecil Hampden Howard.

"A Daniel Come to Judgment, yea, a Daniel!" The Boston Transcript recently printed nearly a column of fine print about Shakespeare, from an anonymous contributor, of which the following is a sufficient sample:

His work often travesties his own instructions to the players. His princes and warriors out-Herod Herod in their ranting over sword points and open graves. Who tears a passion to tatters and topples reason from her throne like Shakespeare? In the imaginative sallies there is no temperance. As in his storms, so the winds of his humor crack their cheeks; "palaces and pyramids" of fancy "slope to their foundations, and the yeast waves swallow navigation up." Shakespeare's heroines have been unduly commended. While some of them are well and delicately drawn, the dominant touches are quite the reverse, and reveal an innate indelicacy in the soul of the artist. . . . Radiant in parts with transient gleams of rare beauty, the general tone and tendency of the Shakspearean drama is offensive and revolting to a healthy mind.

The Transcript has a semi-literary character which makes it the favorite evening paper with a large class of cultivated people. Why should it inflict upon them such stuff as this?

BOSTON NOTES.

— Nearly two years ago several members of the class of 1886 at Harvard, feeling the need of a college publication which should contain the more serious thought of undergraduates, founded the Harvard Monthly, which so far has carried out the wishes of its founders. One of this group of earnest young men, Mr. William Morton Fullerton, for many months has occupied the post of literary editor of the Boston Advertiser, a position for which his remarkable critical ability eminently qualifies him. The tiny room at the top of the tall and narrow Advertiser building finds him busied there for several hours each day, but only a part of his work is done there. His literary workshop is at his father's house, a pleasant, cheerful home on a quiet street in Wal-tham; and here, in an apartment book-walled and literally book-invaded, are written those Letters About Books which the readers of the Sunday Record and the Monday Advertiser turn to with interest from week to week. Few of the younger generation of critics are possessed of more acuteness and discernment than Mr. Fullerton, and sound scholarship and wide reading combine to equip him thoroughly for his chosen work. His literary judgments are formed with care and deliberation, and show a practiced, unwavering hand. He seldom fails to grasp the motif of a book, and his literary style is delightful. He has already won for himself a large clientage of cultivated and appreciative readers, and those whose knowledge of him extends as far as personal acquaintance are warm in their praise of his social qualities. Should his future copy his past, there seems no reason to doubt his becoming before many years one of the foremost of American critical essayists.

— In spite of all that is said about the facility with which our early illusions vanish, there are, it must be said, some few illusions which remain with us undispelled, in many instances, throughout a long life. One of these is the notion that authors are quite different in appearance from other people. A poet, a novelist, or an essayist, must be of a type quite unlike the rest of people. Perhaps there is no more persistent delusion than this, and only frequent contact with authors can eradicate it thoroughly from the minds of those who have entertained it. Thousands of persons have read After the Ball and formed their own ideal of its author; but should you point out to any one of them on Tremont street some day a cheery, bright-faced little woman with blonde hair, which her heavy mourning veil does not all conceal, and say, "That is Miss Nora Perry," your listener would be incredulous. His ideal of a poet has been quite different, and if the truth were to be told, far less satisfactory in all probability. It is some years since Miss Perry left Providence and came to live in Boston, where her face is now a familiar one on the streets. At present her home is on West Cedar Street, a rather quaint sort of thoroughfare, nearly at the foot of Beacon Hill and extending parallel with Charles Street, but as quiet as its neighbor is noisy. Here, in pleasant rooms filled with books and pictures, Miss Perry lives. At present she is not seen at very many social gatherings, but to a small circle of personal friends she is always at home; and her witty, animated conversation is always a source of enjoyment. She usually has some piece of literary work on hand, and in the course of a year accomplishes a great deal of miscellaneous literary labor. As we intimated before, she does not impress one at first sight in the way the average mind feels that it should be impressed by the sight of an author, and as far as our experience goes, she is like most other authors in this respect.

— It has been rumored that Mr. William H. Hayne will come North sometime during the summer season to make arrangements for the publication of a volume of poems. Mr. Hayne has been spending the winter in Montgomery, Alabama. He is quite small in stature, and a great talker.

— Boston showed its affection for the literary lions by packing the Museum from "pit to dome" on the day of the Authors' Reading in benefit of the Longfellow Memorial Fund, and although Mr. Lowell almost droned through the "Building of the Ship," and Mr. Aldrich was little heard beyond the front rows in the orchestra, the occasion was one of great interest. Mark Twain rushed off to catch his proverbial train, firing a parting shot of wit at Dr. Holmes. The Autocrat was, as he always is, charmingly at his ease, Mr. Howells was natural, and Mr. Curtis the same polished speaker, inimitable in grace and finish. The entertainment was unique, and, as some one has remarked, being possible nowhere else, greatly tickled Boston vanity.

— It is understood that Mr. Partridge has given his last public reading in Boston for some little time at least, but he is to favor the people of Cambridge with a choice programme, reading in Mrs. Mosher's music room on the 19th of the month. Mr. Partridge hopes to go to Paris this coming season.

— Mr. Edgar Fawcett was present on Monday evening last at the first performance of his five-act play in blank verse, entitled "The Earl," and bowed his acknowledgments to an enthusiastic, though not large, audience. Mr. Fawcett's stay in Boston has been made pleasant by the attentions of his numerous friends in literary circles.

— It was a great pleasure to the small company of friends assembled as the guests of Miss Marion Allen, in the quiet parlors of her home on Columbus Avenue, a week ago Monday, to listen to Mr. Oscar Fay Adams and Mr. Clinton Scollard as they read selections from their own poems. It was an "authors' reading" much less grand and impressive than that which had crowded the Boston Museum a few days before, but it was altogether delightful, and perhaps, just because it was so quiet, all the more pleasurable. Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton was present, and was evidently one of the most interested listeners. The occasion was a good one in which to contrast the tendencies, and to determine the points of likeness, in the spirit and temper of two of our younger poets, both of whom are singers already of considerable achievement as well as of peculiar promise. The distinctive mark of their lines is fineness and delicacy of feeling and correctness of form. There is a fluent and impetuous inevitableness of self-singing rhythm in Mr. Scollard's verse, on account of which it almost always seems necessary for his sentences to flow in meter. Mr. Adams, on the other hand, while his lines have not quite so easy motion, show a very worthy, Gray-like restraint, which gives the impression, and that truly, that he sings only when he must and when he has something very well worth the saying. He read, on this occasion, among other things, two of his "Post-Laureate Idylls." Mr. Scollard ran felicitously from such fine poems as "In the Library," and "As I Came Down from Le banon," to the lighter airs of vers de société which he knows so well how to sing. Mr. Scollard, in fact, carols so much in this strain that we scarcely can learn one song ere he tunes his voice to another melody. We hope he will forgive us if we whisper that it may be he sings too much, and might learn something from his friend Mr. Adams, in the latter's principle of restraint, just as, possibly, Mr. Adams might learn from Mr. Scollard to write more than he does. But the poems of both are most interesting, and revelatory of refined artistic methods which are possible only to minds of true poetic instinct. In the mechanism of verse they have nothing to learn. It is only added experience now which can add to the value of their literary work.

— There has been some quiet amusement in Boston this week over a movement to form an "Authors' Club;" the outcome of it remains to be seen.

PERIODICALS.

Mrs. S. Van Rensselaer fairly begins her promised descriptive papers on English cathedrals with a pleasing article on Canterbury in the Century Magazine for April. Mrs. Van Rensselaer writes with knowledge, discrimination, appreciation, and quiet enthusiasm of the characteristics and associations of this historic pile, and the illustrations are many and admirable. Edward Eggleston's paper on colonial meeting-houses is also well furnished with pictures. Prof. Whitney's exposition of the Veda is perhaps unnecessarily scholastic in form, but in substance presents an outline of much value. The astonishing revelation of "English as She is Taught" in our public schools, as made by Mark Twain, has a serious side, which will make the reader think after he has laughed. Mr. G. P. Lathrop has a rather inconsequential discussion on the precise circumstances under which certain portraits of Hawthorne were taken—a characterless engraving by Mr. Cole of the Bennoch portrait serving as frontispiece. "Little Compton," by Joel Chandler Harris, is a story of war-time full of genuine pathos and humor, and breathing, moreover, the spirit of the "new South."

The first number of the new American Magazine has a not very attractive cover, a number of passable but not over-fine illustrations, a varied list of contents, and several articles of uncommon interest. Literary life in Boston is described chiefly with reference to club life by William H. Rideing, who knows his subject well and writes in a gossipy, agreeable way. The portraits illustrating this paper are of varied interest. That of Mr. Parkman is excellent; of Dr. Holmes, we never saw a worse representation than that given on page 51; and that of Mr. Howells depicts him as a champion of the heavy-weights. There are a good many stories in the number, none of which we have had time to examine. Z. L. White's article on the National Senate is full of anecdotes and is plentifully beportraited; Mr. J. T. Trowbridge describes his literary novitiate; and Rev. Dr. Newman has something to say of Gen. Grant's habits. The "portfolio" is devoted apparently to antique humor, and that not of the best sort.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Mary Howitt, the English poet, has just celebrated her 89th birthday at her home in Tyrol.

— The popular books of the season in London may be discerned in these figures of the number of copies needed in Mudie's Circulating Library: The Haywood Letters 750, the Greville Memoirs 1,000, Mr. Haggard's She 2,000, the Doyle Reminiscences 1,000, Mr. Stevenson's Kidnapped 1,000, Mr. Besant's Children of Gibeon 830, Miss Broughton's Doctor Cupid 775, Mr. Haggard's King Solomon's Mines 1,170, Hobart Pasha's Sketches from My Life 600, and Stanley's Congo 570.

— The Leonard Scott Publishing Company of Philadelphia have begun an excellent thing—the publication of a Quarterly Index to the periodicals which they issue in this country. Of these there are no less than nine—the Contemporary, Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly, Edinburgh, Quarterly, Westminster, and Scottish Reviews, and Blackwood's Magazine, all British, and the Shakespeariana, American. The Index will be published to subscribers at 25c. a year, and will give the key to some of the most important writing of the time.

—Mr. Beecher's War Speeches in England and America (1863), and new editions of Norwood and the Yale Lectures on Preaching, are announced by Fords, Howard & Hulbert.

—Ticknor & Co. publish today American Literature and Other Papers, by E. P. Whipple, with an introduction by Mr. Whittier; The Confessions of Claude, by Edgar Fawcett; Mr. W. J. Rolfe's students' edition of Enoch Arden; and Ancient Legends of Ireland, by Lady Wilde.

—Joel Munsel's Sons, Albany, New York, send us an attractive specimen sheet of their projected cyclopedia of American Ancestry, which will first appear in numbers, embracing the ancestry of separate localities, and later on be revised and incorporated into volumes under the name of each State. Blank forms will be supplied to all who wish to contribute genealogical data. The volumes are to be sold separately at a low price.

—The life of Henry Ward Beecher, upon which Dr. Lyman Abbott and Rev. S. B. Halliday are engaged, is to contain reminiscences and estimates by a number of prominent public men in this country and abroad. From the publisher's announcement we learn that one chapter is to be devoted to "funeral obsequies,"—a phrase of which the responsible authors could hardly be guilty.

—Actuated, evidently, by the attention attracted to Moore's Epicurean by the charges of plagiarism brought against Mr. Rider Haggard, Henry Holt & Co. will at once issue editions of the work in their "Leisure Hour" and "Leisure Moment" series.

—Thomas Whittaker, New York, will publish soon Woodland Tales, by the author of The Buchholz Family and Reminiscences of a Grandfather: "The Recent Past Viewed from the Southern Standpoint," by the Rev. R. H. Wilmer, D.D., Bishop of Alabama.

—D. C. Heath & Co. have just ready Novellen Bibliothek, a collection of standard short stories in German, selected from the best modern writers, with explanatory and literary notes by Dr. Wilhelm Bernhardt of the Washington High School, Washington, D. C.

—A translation of the Vicomte E. M. de Vogüé's critical review of The Russian Novelists, the translation by "a Boston lady," is to be issued by D. Lothrop Co.

—We learn from the Athenæum that Mr. Bryce and Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice are two of a company of gentlemen who are writing a joint history of Ireland, in the past and present centuries; that Mr. Lewis Morris publishes at once a volume of "Songs of Britain;" and that a biography of Sir Richard Burton, the distinguished traveler and Oriental scholar, is in preparation under the editorship of Mr. Francis Hitchman.

—D. Appleton & Co. have in press, and nearly ready for publication, another volume of Southwestern history by James R. Gilmore ("Edmund Kirke"), entitled John Sevier as a Commonwealth Builder. The book is a sequel to Mr. Gilmore's recent volume, the Rear Guard of the Revolution, and it completes an account of a remarkable career of the first Governor of Tennessee, who was one of the most unique and picturesque characters in our history. Mr. Gilmore claims that he was not only a soldier and a statesman, but a "nation-builder," having found Tennessee "a little collection of log-houses, and left it a great State with a population of nearly four hundred thousand souls." Sevier turned the tide of the Revolutionary War at Kings' Mountain, and for twenty-five years held the passes of the Alleghanies against the warlike Creeks and Cherokees, who outnumbered him ten to one; but in all that time were not able to break through to harass the eastern settlements. Sevier was certainly a most heroic character, and had he lived upon the seaboard where his deeds could have been written about, he would now be as well known to every school-boy as Lexington and Bunker's Hill. Mr. Gilmore is doing a good work in bringing him to the knowledge of the public. The country cannot afford that such men should be forgotten. The two books named are the beginning of a series of Southwestern histories, for the writing of which Mr. Gilmore has prepared himself by seven years of study, four of which he spent upon the ground, among the scenes where the events occurred, and in contact with the descendants of the men of whom he writes. He has accumulated a vast amount of original historical material, and this he is now putting together at his picturesque home on the shore of Lake George, in Warren County, N. Y. The field Mr. Gilmore is going over has been most strangely overlooked, but it is one of the most interesting in American history. The men he writes about made possible our present great Republic; for had it not been for the work they did, the territory of the United States would have had the Alleghanies as its western boundary. Mr. Gilmore is now engaged on the third volume of this Southwestern series, which will recount the career of James Robertson, the first pioneer beyond the Alleghanies, and the founder of the settlements at Nashville, and along the Cumberland. He was a most remarkable man, but a totally different character from Sevier; though the two for forty-three years were devoted friends, standing loyally together in the most trying circumstances. Mr. Gilmore styles Robertson "a cross between John Brown and Martin Luther." His own idea of his life work is expressed in his phrase, "We are the advance guard of Western civilization, and our way is across the continent"—remarkable words to have been uttered a hundred years ago by one who, with only seven hundred men, was surrounded by 20,000 hostile Indians.

—The next "No Name" novel in Roberts Brothers' series is to be called Cracker Joe, and deals with life among the "poor whites" in Florida.

—Mrs. Dodd's Cathedral Days will probably appear soon in a London edition; it has been a remarkably successful book.

—The May Atlantic is to afford A Glimpse of Emerson's Boyhood, by J. Elliot Cabot. Mr. Aldrich's poem in the same number is entitled "The Lost Cæsar: 1851-1870."

—Mrs. Siddons, by Mrs. Arthur Kinnard, is to be issued in the "Famous Women Series." The publishers, Roberts Brothers, are to bring out Pascoe's London of To-day, revised for the year 1887.

—Mrs. Margaret J. Preston has compiled a collection of Colonial Ballads which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. are to publish. The same house will issue Grant Versus the Record, by Coswell McClellan; Connecticut (in the "American Commonwealths" series), by Alexander Johnston; and a new edition of Helen M. Knowlton's Hints on Drawing and Painting.

—Mr. Homer Greene's story, The Blind Brother, which was awarded the $1,500.00 prize in the competition recently held by the publishers of the Youth's Companion, is to be brought out in book form by T. Y. Crowell & Co. The scene is laid among the coal mines of the Wyoming Valley, of which region Mr. Greene gained a thorough knowledge during an experience of two or three years as a mining engineer. Mr. Greene was born at Ariel, Wayne County, Pennsylvania, in 1853; is a graduate of Union College and of the Albany Law School; and has served a term as district attorney of his native county. His first literary work, a story called "The Mad Skater," appeared in Wayne Reid's magazine Onward in 1869. Since then he has contributed, but not voluminously, in prose and verse to various periodicals. He is now at work at his home at Honesdale, Pa., on a novel. The character of his work thus far is such as to arouse a good deal of interest in his future possible career as an author.

—Under the title of The Best Books, Mr. W. Swan Sonnenschein has in the press a classified bibliography of about 25,000 current books in all departments of literature, with the prices, sizes, dates of first and last editions, and the publisher's name of each. The following is the classification of subjects adopted:—Christianity, Non-Christian Religion and Mythology, Philosophy, Society, Geography and Ethnography, History and Antiquities, Biography, Science, Arts and Trades, Literature and Philology. The work will form a quarto volume of about 650 pages.—Academy.

Publishers' Announcements.

—Ginn & Co.: The Art of Reading Latin, Prof. W. G. Hale; The Order of Words in the Ancient Languages Compared with the Modern, Henri Weil.

—Estes & Lauriat: Miss Parloa's Kitchen Companion; Latin Hymns, Hon. John Lord Hayes, LL.D.; George Eliot's Complete Works ("Sterling Edition," 12 vols.); Key to North American Birds, Elliott Coues, 3d revised edition; The White Hills, T. Starr King; The Early Tudors, Justin McCarthy; Social Customs, Florence Howe Hall.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vol. X. New York: Macmillan & Co. London: Smith, Elder & Co. $3.25

Essays and Sketches.

A CLUB OF ONE. Passages from the Note-Book of a Man who Might Have Been Sociable. With Marginal Summary by the Editor. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

SCYTHE AND SWORD. Poems. By O. C. Aurlinger. D. Lothrop Co.

GOOD TALKING AND GOOD MANNERS. FINE ARTS. With a Paper on the Social Law of Mutual Help and the Labor Problem. By the Rev. F. D. Huntington. Wolcott & West.

Fiction.

SABINA ZEMBRA. By William Black. Harper's Franklin Square Library. 20c.

JUANITA. By Mary Mann. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50

KNIGHT-ERRANT. By Edna Lyall. D. Appleton & Co.

THE TWO BROTHERS. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50

BRAUCHAMP'S CAREER. By George Meredith. Roberts Bros. $2.00

THE STORY OF KENNETH. By Bayard Taylor. New "Knickerbocker" edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

Text-Books.

CEBES' TABLET. With Introduction, Notes, Vocabulary, and Grammatical Questions. By Richard Parsons. Ginn & Co. 80c

A-B-C SPANISH PHRASE BOOK. Compiled by F. R. Guernsey. City of Mexico: C. M. H. Hill. 2d edition. Paper 50c.

WARMAN'S SCHOOL-ROOM FRIEND. By Prof. E. B. Warman. Chicago: W. H. Harrison, Jr., Publishing Co. 75c

HINTS ON WRITING AND SPEECH-MAKING. By T. W. Higginson. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

ENGLISH SYNONYMS DISCRIMINATED. By R. Whately. New Edition. Lee & Shepard.

AN INTRODUCTION TO FRENCH PROSE COMPOSITION. By Rev. P. H. E. Brette. Harper & Bros.

Theological and Religious.

THE ATONEMENT. By Wm. Connor Magee. Cassell & Co. 40c

BREAD IN THE DESERT, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Randolph H. McKim, D.D. T. Whittaker. $1.50

A MANUAL OF CHRISTIAN EVIDENCES. By C. A. Row. T. Whittaker. 75c.

JOB AND SOLOMON; OR, THE WISDOM OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, D.D. T. Whittaker. $2.25

THE MYSTERY OF GOD. A Consideration of Some Intellectual Hindrances to Faith. By T. Vincent Tymms. 2d edition. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $2.50

"NOT YOUR OWN." By the Rev. George Everard. E. P. Dutton & Co. 40c.

PRAYERS FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT. By Henry Ward Beecher. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50

HOLY CROSS. A History of the Invention, Preservation, and Disappearance of the Wood Known as the True Cross. By W. C. Prime, LL.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25

THE STAR IN THE EAST. By Leighton Parks. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

THE PICTURE OF PAUL. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

CURRENT DISCUSSIONS IN THEOLOGY. By the Professors of Chicago Theological Seminary. Vol. IV. F. H. Revell. $1.50

SERMONS ON EVIL SPEAKING. By Isaac Barrow. Cassell's National Library. Paper 10c.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE. By Joseph Parker. Vol. V. Joshua-Judges, V. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50

TEACHINGS ON THE CATECHISM. For the Little Ones. By Charlotte M. Yonge. E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

DANIEL I-VI. An Exposition. By the Very Rev. R. Payne Smith. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By the Rev. John Keble. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.00

Travel and Description.

VILLAGE PHOTOGRAPHS. By Augusta Larned. Henry Holt & Co. $1.75

WASTE-LAND WANDERINGS. By Charles C. Abbott. Harper & Brothers.

DUE NORTH: OR, GLIMPSES OF SCANDINAVIA AND RUSSIA. By Maturin M. Ballou. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

THE BALKAN PENINSULA. By Emile de Lavelaye. Tr. by Mrs. Thorpe. S. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.50

SCOTLAND AS IT WAS AND AS IT IS. By the Duke of Argyll. 2 vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $8.00

CATHEDRAL DAYS. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $2.00

FROM THE FORECASTLE TO THE CABIN. By Captain S. Samuels. Illus. Harper & Bros. $1.50

HAIFA; OR, LIFE IN MODERN PALESTINE. By Laurence Oliphant. Edited with an Introduction by Charles A. Dana. Harper & Bros.

THE IRISH SKETCH-BOOK. By William Makepeace Thackeray. London: Smith, Elder & Co.

Miscellaneous.

CASSELL'S COMPLETE POCKET-GUIDE TO EUROPE. Cassell & Co. $1.50

THE DIARY OF SAMUEL PEPYS. Cassell's National Library. Paper 10c.

THE TEMPEST. By Wm. Shakespeare. Cassell's National Library. Paper 10c.

THE GAME OF DRAW POKER. By John W. Keller. Including the Treatise by R. C. Schenck, and Rules for the New Game of Progressive Poker. White, Stokes & Allen. 50c

THE GAME OF LOGIC. By Lewis Carroll. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK. 1887. Edited by J. Scott Keltie. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

POCKET MAPS: Arizona, 25c. — Minnesota, 25c. — Dakota, 25c. — Ohio, 50c. Rand, McNally & Co.

OFFICIAL RAILROAD MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA. Rand, McNally & Co. 50c.

NEW COMMERCIAL MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA. Rand, McNally & Co. $1.50

ROSALIND. By Thomas Lodge. ISAAC BICKERSTAFF. Papers from Steele's "Tattler."

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Compiled and Edited by John Eigelow. Vol. II. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

APOTHEOSIS OF AN IDEAL. An Interior Life Drama. Boston: Printed privately.

JUST PUBLISHED.

GOETHE-CARLYLE.

Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle. Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. 12mo, $2.00.

"The publication in full of this remarkable series of letters is by far the pleasantest of recent contributions to the Carlyle literature."—New York Tribune.

"Preserves in a scholarly form the matter that the world will not willingly let die. . . . The book is one of the most valuable contributions to contemporary literature."—Boston Evening Traveller.

"A collection of letters at once interesting and enlightening. . . . Like the 'Early Letters' issued a few months ago from the hands of the same admirable editor, the letters here given embrace a period of which there has been either a dearth of information or a superabundance of false impressions. . . . It is an altogether beautiful picture here revealed of the aged German poet—a picture of benignity, generosity, wisdom and tranquillity which will captivate the reader, as it not only captivated but firmly enchained the wedded pair of Craigenputtock."—New York Times.

ALSO,

EARLY LETTERS OF THOMAS CARLYLE.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. With two portraits. 12mo, $2.25.

"The whole picture of the man from his youth upward cannot be completely understood without a study of the present volume, and it therefore ought to be possessed by all those who have accumulated the other volumes which have attempted to throw light upon the career of Thomas Carlyle."—Christian Advocate.

"The letters are full of human interest, warm with sympathy and affection—just such letters as a young man of good breeding and a kind heart, of brilliant, though of somewhat erratic, genius, might be expected to write to those whom he loved and who loved him. They are indeed remarkable letters, viewed in whatever way; entirely unconventional, and never commonplace; instinct with wit and wisdom and wholesome good cheer."—New York Observer.

"We are enabled to see the genesis of his great talents, and the transformations they wrought in his character; the difficulties, doubts and forebodings which he encountered; sturdy simplicity of his home relations; and, through all, the firm, unalterable confidence in his own destiny as a leader among men. It is a significant and even an inspiring narrative here unfolded."—Literary World.

"Lewis Carroll's immortal story."—Academy.

THE 'ALICE' BOOKS.

ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND.

By LEWIS CARROLL. With 42 illustrations by Tenniel. 12mo, $1.00.

THROUGH THE LOOKING-GLASS AND WHAT ALICE FOUND THERE.

By LEWIS CARROLL. With 50 illustrations by Tenniel. 12mo, $1.00.

"What wert thou, dream-Alice, in thy foster-father's eyes? How shall he picture thee? Loving, first, loving and gentle; loving as a dog (forgive the prosaic simile, but I know of no earthly love so pure and perfect) and gentle as a fawn; then courteous—courteous to all, high or low, grand or grotesque, king or caterpillar, even as though she were herself a king's daughter and her clothing of wrought gold; then trustful, ready to accept the wildest impossibilities with all that utter trust that only dreamers know; and, lastly, curious—wildly curious, and with the eager enjoyment of life that comes only in the happy hours of childhood, when all is new and fair, and when sin and sorrow are but names—empty words, signifying nothing."—Lewis Carroll, in The Theatre.

Macmillan & Co, New York,

119 4th Avenue.

NOW READY, AND MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS,

Descriptive and Priced CATALOGUE

Of an Interesting Collection of Books in Good Condition.

Henry Miller, Bookseller and Importer, 79 Nassau Street, New York.

WEBSTER.

With or without Patent Index.

IT IS THE STANDARD

Authority in the Gov't Printing Office, and with the U. S. Supreme Court, and is recommended by the State Supts of Schools in 36 States.

In addition to various useful tables the latest issue of this work comprises

A DICTIONARY,

118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings.

A GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD,

25,000 Titles, (recently added) and

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY,

nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,

ALL IN ONE BOOK.

It is an invaluable companion in every School and at every Fireside.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

Spring and Summer

1887

WOOLENS.

We are in receipt of one of the finest exhibits in the market. Novelties from London and Paris. Full assortment of Staple Woollens, as usual.

We guarantee the excellence of our garments in all particulars.

GEORGE LYON & CO., TAILORS,

No. 459 Washington Street, Boston, BETWEEN TEMPLE PLACE AND WINTER ST.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MURSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

Found in a Dictionary.

THE word tail. But it can't be found in Dr. MARK B. WOODBURY'S vocabulary. He has prepared and prescribed his Dyspepsia Killers, which we call D. K.'s, for 30 years, and they have never failed to cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion. Sold by DR. LITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., General Wholesale Agents. They will send them by mail to any part of the U. S. on receipt of 50 cents for a large box, or 25 cents for a trial box.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 50 cents.

Other advertising pages, 15 "

Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

EDWARD ABBOTT. EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—
VICTOR HUGO.

Routledge's superb five volume edition, with illustrations from designs by De Neuville, Bayard, Morin, Valnay, and other eminent French Artists.

McDONNELL BROTHERS beg leave to announce that they have arranged with Messrs. George Routledge & Sons for the exclusive sale of the above work.

An edition will be ready about May 15th, and will be sold only by subscription.

Parties wishing to sell this work on the subscription plan please write for terms, etc., to

McDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

The Temple of Alanthur.

WITH OTHER POEMS.

By ISAAC R. BAXLEY. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"The story is wrought out with unmistakable poetic strength."—Buffalo Times.

"There are many beautiful thoughts to be found in the volume."—St. Paul Dispatch.

"His verses certainly are very beautiful, and there can be no question that he possesses genuine poetic faculty. . . . The gift of vivid expression and a sweet sense of melody."—Baltimore News.

"The poems in this little volume are of considerable merit."—Troy Times.

"Is as ambitious a volume of verse as the year is likely to give us."—Hartford Courant.

"Mr. Baxley has given to it the full poetical fervor. . . . Has the most quiet naturalness and grace."—New York Times.

"It would be impossible to deny merit in Mr. Baxley's book. . . . His diction is good, and he writes with apparent ease."—Boston Transcript.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
27 and 29 West 23d Street, New York.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 West 23d St., New York,

HAVE NOW READY

PRACTICAL CHIROSOPHY.

A SYNOPTICAL STUDY OF THE SCIENCE OF THE HAND. By EDWARD HERRON-ALLEN, author of "A Manual of Chirosophy," "The Science of the Hand," "A Discourse on Chiromancy," "Codex Chiromanticus," etc. With explanatory plates and diagrams, by Rosamund Brunel Horsley, 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

CONTENTS: Prefatory Excursion—Hand Superstitions and Customs—The Physiology of the Hand—On the Shapes of Hands—Chiromancy—Chiromancy or Palmistry.

HANNAH THURSTON.

A Story of American Life. Volume No. 17, Knickerbocker novels. 16mo, paper, 50 cents.

"If Bayard Taylor has not placed himself, as we are half inclined to suspect, in the front rank of novelists, he has produced a very remarkable book—a really original story, admirably told, crowded with life-like characters, full of delicate and subtle sympathies."—London Spectator

THE STORY OF KENNETT.

By BAYARD TAYLOR. Volume No. 18, Knickerbocker novels. 16mo, paper, 50 cents.

"Mr. Bayard Taylor's book is delightful and refreshing reading, and a great rest after the crowded artistic effects and the conventional interest of even the better kind of English novels."—London Spectator.

* * Putnam's New Classified Catalogue, 134 pp., sent on receipt of 6 cents in stamps.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 24 PARK ROW, N. Y.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE
BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,
13 Astor Place, New York.

CUORE, an Italian School Boy's Journal. By EDMUNDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the 39th Italian edition by Isabel F. Hapgood. 12mo, $1.25.

In this delightful volume, so unconventional in form, so fresh and energetic in style, Signor de Amicis has given not only the heart-history of an Italian lad, but also a very vivid and attractive picture of modern life in Italy. He is a genuine boy who is supposed to write the story, and all the events, incidents and observations are seen through a boy's bright young eyes. The descriptions of school experiences, of festivals and public ceremonies, of scenes in city and country, are all full of color and charm, and are inspired by a genuine love for humanity.

SIGRID. An Icelandic Love Story. Translated from the Danish of JOH THORSSON HORODSSON. 12mo, $1.25.

A quiet, unpretentious story, noteworthy for its artlessness, its careful delineation of scenery and character, its variety of interest, and the refined humor in the author's quietly fruitful portrayal of the primitive and picturesque life of the inhabitants of Ultima Thule. The fortunes of Sigrid and Indrid make an idyllic love tale which attracts because it is true to the instincts of finer natures the world over. Nearly every phase of contemporary manners in Iceland is touched upon, and revealed with the skill of the true artist.

THE PICTURE OF PAUL. (The Disciple.) By the Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A. The fourth volume of Christ and Christianity. 12mo, $1.25.

The Literary World says: "Mr. Hawes contends for a rational estimate of the New Testament records as distinct from an absolute divine and infallible book, a position which we hasten to say need in no way imply that he is other than a profound and loving believer in the New Testament."

INITIALS AND PSEUDONYMS. A Dictionary of Literary Disguises. By WILLIAM CUSHING, A.M. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

A new and revised edition of "a work which no reference library, no librarian, no literary reporter, and no fully equipped bookseller can afford not to possess."

PROFESSOR JOHNNY. By the author of Birchwood Fitch Club and Riverside Museum. 12mo, $1.25.

"It is the very book that the parent, watchful of the moral and intellectual development of children, would select out of a hundred such books as are regularly published for the young."—Boston Globe.

French Books For Sale.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. Harrisse (Henry).
Just published.
Excerpta Colombiana. Bibliographie de 400 pièces gothiques françaises, italiennes et latines du commencement du XVIIe siècle, non décrites jusqu'ici, précédées d'une histoire de la Bibliothèque Colombine. 8vo.
$9.00 | et raisonnée des poteries de tous les temps et de tous les peuples. Ouvrage contenant 200 figures sur bois, 1,000 marques et monogrammes, et 12 planches gravées à l'eau forte par Jules Jacquemart (1 ^{re} édition). 8vo, reliure de l'édition.
$10.00 |
| 2. Duruy (Victor).
Histoire des Romains depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à l'invasion des Barbares. Ouvrage enrichi de 2,500 gravures dessinées d'après l'antique et de 100 cartes ou plans. 7 vols. 8vo, demi mar., vert du Levant, non rognés.
45.00 | 5. Duplessis (Georges).
Histoire de la gravure en Italie, en Espagne, en Allemagne, en Angleterre et en France. Avec 73 reproductions de gravures anciennes par le procédé Durand. 8vo, demi mar., rouge, non rogné.
9.00 |
| 3. Jacquemart (Albert).
Histoire du Mobilier, recherches et notes sur les objets d'art qui peuvent composer l'aménagement et les collections. Ornés de 200 eaux fortes typographiques d'après Jules Jacquemart (1 ^{re} édition). 8vo, demi mar., rouge, non rogné.
8.00 | 6. Souvenirs et Correspondance tirés des papiers de Madame Récamier. 2 vols., 8vo, brochés.
4.50 |
| 4. Jacquemart (Albert).
Histoire de la Céramique, étude descriptive
8.00 | 7. Mémoires sur Carnot (1752-1823). par son fils. 4 vols., 8vo, brochés.
4.00 |
| | 8. Mémoires de Hourrienne sur Napoléon, le Consulat et l'Empire. 10 vols., 8vo, brochés.
10.00 |
| | 9. Anglier (Emile).
Théâtre complet. 6 vols., 12mo, brochés.
6.00 |
| | 10. Lubiche (Eugène).
Théâtre complet. 10 vols., 12mo, brochés.
10.00 |

John Delay, 23 Union Sq., N. Y.

American School and College Dramas.

EDITED BY EDWARD ROTE.

The Gray Tigers of Smithville or He Would and He Wouldn't. An Extravaganza, in Three Acts. Supplied by booksellers, or mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

1133 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 9. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 322. Publishers.

BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

THE May number of Scribner's Magazine, which is just ready, contains the second installment of the Thackeray letters, which have excited so much interest and enthusiasm among the novelist's admirers. The London Daily News says, in a long editorial entitled "Treasure Trove":

"The most charming letters that ever were printed. . . . No admirer of Thackeray—that is to say, nobody who has the faintest tincture of letters—will be content until he has read all these, a welcome pleasure after the scraps from a waste-paper basket which have been offered to the world lately."

Among the important papers in the May number are: "THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE STEAMSHIP," by Commander F. E. Chadwick, U. S. N., copiously illustrated; "FORESTS OF NORTH AMERICA," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, with 13 illustrations; "AN OCEAN GRAVEYARD," by J. Macdonald Oxley, with illustrations; two delightful short stories, "MARSE ARCHIE'S FIGHT," by Maria Blunt, and "AN ISLANDER," by Margaret Crosby, and contributions by Robert Louis Stevenson, H. C. Bunner, J. S. of Dale, Arlo Bates, Philip Bourke Marston, Sarah M. B. Piatt, Susan Coolidge, and others. Readers who have not yet had Scribner's Magazine should send 25 cents to the publishers for this number. Subscription, $3.00 a year. Charles Scribner's Sons, 743 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."
HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Nordey, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.
GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.
WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.
"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.
PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. E. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.
HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.
HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Desert. Translated by S. MENDEL.
GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.
FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.
CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.
TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.
HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.
BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.
BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.
CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.
COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.
FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.
HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.
MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.
PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.
RICHTER'S LEVANA.
RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.
SPIROGA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.
STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

With Prefatory Notice by William Michael Rossetti.

ANNE GILCHRIST.

Her Life and Writings. Edited by HERBERT HARLAKENDEN GILCHRIST. Twelve illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

Not the least interesting part of her life is that which details her intimate friendship with Walt Whitman.

"A biography of a good and clever woman. . . . Mrs. Gilchrist knew many of the foremost literary people of her day, and their little revelations of themselves, published as a rule with sufficient discretion, help to correct some other estimates formed on other authorities. Here we find a kind, friendly and humorous, if splenetic, Carlyle; a helpful and merry Mrs. Carlyle, and a friendly and unaffected Dante Gabriel Rossetti. These characteristics, so unlike the Carlyle of the too copious memoirs, so unlike the Mrs. Carlyle, the femme incomprise, so unlike the Rossetti of myth, are extremely welcome."—Daily News, London.

"The purchase of this first edition will be wise. It is one of those books that are sure to rise in price."—British Weekly.

"The glimpses she affords us of Carlyle are entirely pleasant."—Scottish Leader, leader.

"This memoir of 'Anne Gilchrist' is one of the most interesting books of the season."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CLAUDE LE LORRAIN.

Illustrated by many reproductions of his "Liber Veritatis." By OWEN J. DULLEA. With a carefully prepared List of his Principal Paintings. Crown 8vo, ornamental cloth covers, $1.25. Forming the new volume of the Series of "Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists."

* All previous volumes of this extremely valuable series also on hand. Full lists on application.

Studies in Religious History.

By ERNEST RENAN. Post 8vo, cloth (481 pp.), $2.40.

CONTENTS: Experimental Method Applied to Religion—Paganism—Comparative Mythology—Buddhism—The Translations of the Bible—Francis of Assisi—Religious Art—A Word upon Galileo's Trial—Port Royal—Spinoza, etc.

The Cruise of the Marchesa to Kamschatka and New Guinea.

With Notices of Formosa and Liu-Kiu and Various Islands of the Malay Archipelago. By F. H. H. GUILLEMAUD, M. A., M. D., F. L. S., F. Zoölogic. Soc., F. R. G. S., etc. With numerous illustrations, maps, etc. 2 vols., medium 8vo, cloth, $16.80.

THE LATEST NOVELS.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF BOSTON.

A Powerful New Novel, $1.50.

"Of striking interest, power and beauty."—Home Journal.

"A cross between Dickens and the minor key of 'The Story of a Country Town.'"—Press.

"Profoundly interesting. There is a wealth of material, and the plot and situations and descriptions mark the genius of the author."—Inter-Ocean.

FORCED ACQUAINTANCES.

A Story for Girls. By EDITH ROBINSON. $1.50.

"Bubbling humor."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"Pleasant descriptions and amusing incidents, fresh and lively from beginning to end."—Wit-ness.

"Here is a bright story that has an uplifting power. It widens the mental horizon, while teaching the tenderest, truest lessons of right living."—San Francisco Post.

THE STRIKE IN THE B— MILL.

A Novel of Labor. $1; in paper covers, 50 cents.

"It is a dramatic story."—New York Sun.

"A careful study of the labor movement, fair in tone, well written and interesting."—Journalist.

"One of the most welcome and helpful studies which our industrial revolution has yet produced. Very readable as a story."—Boston Herald.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent postpaid upon receipt of price. Catalogues mailed free.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

JOHN S. LOCKWOOD, COMMISSION BOOK-BUYER, 82 EQUITABLE BUILDING, BOSTON.

Mr. John S. Lockwood, senior member of the late firm of Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Booksellers and Publishers, Boston, having established himself independently as an agent and buyer of books on a commission basis, both in home and foreign markets, offers his services to donors of new public libraries, trustees of new or established public and college libraries, individuals, societies and town committees. His experience of more than twenty-five years in this direction, his relations with the trade, and his thorough acquaintance with the catalogues and books of American and Foreign Publishers, give him peculiar advantages, and enable him to relieve those engaging his services of all labor of detail, and also to make an appreciable saving in cost.

He will submit to patrons for examination approved Manuscript lists of books of an absolutely standard character, in all departments of literature, from which selections can be made covering any desired expenditure, and will personally execute orders intrusted to him, in this country and Europe.

Mr. Lockwood solicits correspondence, and refers by permission, to the gentlemen whose names appear below.

REFERENCES:

Hon. John D. Long, Hingham, Mass.
Hon. Charles Allen, Justice Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, Boston.
Mark Hopkins, L.L.D., Williamstown, Mass.
John N. Denison, Esq., Sear's Building, Boston.
W. I. Fletcher, A.M., Librarian of Amherst College, Amherst, Mass.
Arthur Gilman, A.M., Cambridge, Mass.
Frederick L. Ames, Esq., Equitable Building, Boston.
H. H. Hunnewell, Esq., 37 N. 1st Street, Boston.
David Nevins, Esq., 82 Chauncy Street, Boston.
Charles F. Clark, Esq., President of The Bradstreet Company, New York.
Hon. H. O. Houghton of Messrs Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston.
Messrs. Lee & Shepard, Publishers, Boston.
Messrs. Roberts Brothers, Publishers, Boston.
Rev. Edward Abbott, Cambridge, Mass.
Col. T. W. Higginson, Cambridge, Mass.
Edwin M. Bacon, Editor of the Boston Post, Boston.
Charles E. Hurd, Literary Editor of the Boston Transcript, Boston.
Horace E. Deming, Esq., Mills Building, New York.
Prof. George H. Howison, University of California, Berkeley, Cal.
Edwin L. Byner, Librarian of Boston Bar Association Library, Boston.

UNLIMITED FUN!

MARK TWAIN SAYS:

"It is a darling literary curiosity."

ENGLISH AS SHE IS TAUGHT.

Genuine answers to Examination Questions in our Public Schools. Collected by one who has had many years' experience.

For glaring absurdities, for humorous errors, for the great possibilities of the English language, see this book.

Boards flexible, new style, 50 cents. Cloth, gilt top (unique), $1.00. Your bookseller will show it to you.

ENGLISH WRITERS.

AN ATTEMPT TOWARDS A

HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By HENRY MORLEY, LL. D., Professor of English Literature at University College, London. Volume I., extra cloth, gilt top, price $1.50. Other volumes to follow.

CELEBRITIES of the CENTURY.

Being a dictionary of Men and Women of the Nineteenth Century. Edited by LLOYD C. SANDERS. One volume, large quarto, leather back, price $5.00.

As the title implies, it is a biographical dictionary of the century, containing condensed accounts of the lives of every man and woman who has won distinction during the years from 1800 to 1887, no matter what quarter of the globe they may be a native of. The American celebrities have been written of by and under the supervision of well-known American writers.

PRACTICAL ELECTRICITY.

A Laboratory and Lecture Course, for First Year Students of Electrical Engineering, based on The Practical Definitions of the Electrical Units. By W. E. AYERSON, F.R.S. With numerous illustrations. One volume, 12mo, extra cloth, price $2.50.

This book is intended to assist students in acquiring experimentally an exact working knowledge of electric currents, difference of potentials, resistance, electromotive force, quantity, capacity, and power.

The TRAGEDY of BRINKWATER.

A Novel. By MARTHA LIVINGSTON MOODEY. One volume, 16mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

Strong in conception, vigorous in style—a story that will interest young and old alike—each detail develops until the climax is reached, and the mystery of The Tragedy of Brinkwater is revealed.

YACHTS AND YACHTING.

With over 110 illustrations by FRED. S. COZZENS and others. One volume quarto, price $1.50; full gilt, extra cloth, price $2.00.

Edition de Luxe, on large paper, and limited to 250 copies, price $5.00.

This delightful volume includes a "History of American Yachting," by Capt. R. F. Coffin; "The Mayflower and Galatea Races of 1886," by Chas. E. Clay; "American Steam Yachting," by E. S. Jaffray; "British Yachting," by C. J. C. McAlister.

Complete descriptive catalogue sent free to any address on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

JUST READY.

Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit.

SELECTED FROM THE WRITINGS AND SAYINGS OF

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Revised in part by Mr. Beecher, and under revision by him at the time of his death.

12mo, cloth, gilt top, price $1.00.

The work of selecting the characteristic sayings by the Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER contained in this volume was begun nearly ten years ago, at Mr. Beecher's suggestion and under his guidance. After its completion the manuscript was in his hands, and he from time to time revised and corrected it. When his ministry came to a close, he had gone patiently over about one-third of it, making many alterations, additions, and erasures. The remaining proverbs stand in the words in which Mr. Beecher originally clothed them.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d Street, New York.

HAVE NOW READY:

FRANCE UNDER RICHELIEU AND

MAZARIN. By JAMES BRECK PERKINS.

Third and cheaper edition. 2 volumes, large octavo, with portraits, $4.00.

"Our pleasure in reading it has been so great that we fear only that we shall use language that seems too laudatory. . . . 'France under Richelieu and Mazarin' will introduce its author into the ranks of the first living historians of our land. He is never dry, he never lags, he is never prolix; but, from the first to the last, his narrative is recorded currente calamo, as of a man who has a firm grasp upon his materials."—New York Christian Union.

"A brilliant and fascinating period that has been skipped, slighted, or abused, by the ignorance, favoritism, or prejudice of other writers, is here subjected to the closest scrutiny of an apparently judicial and candid student. . . . His style is fluent, forcible, dignified and good."—Boston Literary World.

"We have very little but praise for the work before us. The style is for the most part excellent, serious and perceptive in discussion and in delineation of character, animated in narration."—The Nation.

. Putnam's New Classified Catalogue, 134 pp., sent on receipt of 6 cents in stamps.

LES MISERABLES.

Par VICTOR HUGO.

New and handsome edition (in French); printed from new type.

Five volumes, 12mo, paper, $4.50 the set.

Five volumes, 12mo, cloth, $6.50 the set.

Separately, paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50 per volume.

Vol. I. (FANTINE) is now ready.

THE MAY ALWAYS BE HAD OF NEWEST Wm. R. Jenkins,
Publisher and Importer,
FRENCH 550 Sixth Ave., New York.
BOOKS . French Catalogues on application.
Special importations made at low rates.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TIRUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 86th Street, New York City.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1887. No. 9.

CONTENTS.

MODERN PALESTINE	131
A HANDBOOK TO DANTE	131
ENGLISH PROSE AND PROSE WRITERS	132
GIORDANO BRUNO	133
STORER'S AGRICULTURE	133
LINNÆUS	133
THE NOVELS OF GEORGE MEREDITH	137
MINOR NOTICES:
Village Photographs	134
Catalogue of the Nevins Memorial Library	134
A Day in Ancient Rome	134
Studies in Italian Literature	135
Moral Philosophy	135
The Whole Truth	135
Etc., Etc., Etc.
MINOR FICTION:
Mrs. Hephaestus, and Other Short Stories	138
Two Gentlemen of Gotham	138
A Child of the Century	138
Roger Camerden	139
The Jesuit's Ring	139
The Strike in the B— Mill	139
Etc., Etc., Etc.
BOSTON NOTES	136
NEW YORK NOTES	136
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Edward Garrett	141
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
The "Mermaid Series" of Old Dramatists	141
Dr. Ingleby's Edition of "Cymbeline"	141
"The Shakespeare-Shapleigh Entanglement"	141
Abraham Lincoln's "Shakespeare"	141
THE PERIODICALS	142
NEWS AND NOTES	142
ENGLISH OPINIONS	143
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	143
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	143

MODERN PALESTINE.*

MR. OLIPHANT'S book on Modern Palestine—made up of a series of letters from the headquarters of the Temple Colonies at Haifa, and originally published in a New York newspaper—is fragmentary and disjointed to a rather perplexing degree, and leaves the reader to his own resources as regards maps and the ways and means of travel. Mr. Oliphant is an amateur archæologist, a haunter of ruins, an ardent admirer of ancient inscriptions, a faithful student of topography; and the greater part of the volume is taken up with the record of his explorations, which are of the utmost interest from the archæological point of view, but which the author has, it seems to us, made needlessly dry and technical. Still there is a great deal to attract readers devoid of antiquarian enthusiasm. Mr. Oliphant relates the history of the Temple Society, founded by Prof. Christophe Hoffman of Würtemberg, which began active colonization in Palestine in 1868, and now numbers over five thousand adherents, of whom more than three hundred are in America. The four colonies now established number altogether about one thousand settlers. At Haifa great changes have been wrought; seven hundred acres are under tillage; substantial stone mansions have been erected; exports and imports have increased largely; the Arab population has benefited by the improved methods of agriculture; and wheeled vehicles, an extraordinary innovation, have been introduced. Mr. Oliphant recommends Haifa as one of the most attractive localities in the East as regards climate, position, and associations, and says that the invalid tourist will find comfortable quarters there. There is a manufactory at Haifa which makes soap out of oil from the olives of Carmel, and sends fifty thousand pounds of the product to America annually.

Mr. Oliphant describes Easter among the Melchites (Greek Catholics), when a sort of carnival is held and religion is glorified by a plentiful indulgence in intoxicating liquors. The French Consul is the figure-head at the Melchite celebration, as indeed he is at all religious ceremonies throughout Syria. "It is by the manufacture and protection of holy places," says Mr. Oliphant, "that republican France extends and consolidates her influence in these parts." Mr. Oliphant tells us about the plans for the first Palestine railway and the proposed Jordan Valley Canal; describes the manners and customs of the Druses, and reveals the modes of life practiced by the aristocratic Syrians; relates how he made a summer camp on Mt. Carmel, and finally built a house there; gives an account of a fishing excursion on Lake Tiberias; and, as we have intimated, devotes much space to the examination of traditional sites. Visiting Jericho after the lapse of six years, he found the place transformed by the Russians, who, because of their fondness for bathing in the Jordan, have erected a hospice and a good many cottages there. On the whole Mr. Oliphant is disposed to give Jericho the palm as a winter resort for those "not absolutely dependent on society."

There is a peculiar softness and balminess in the air, not to be found elsewhere in the world, for there is no other place in the world eleven hundred feet below the sea line. There is a wide, level, open plain to scamper across on horseback in all directions; there are thickets of nebk and bamboo swarming with wild boar, deer, gazelle, and other animals, some of them not to be found elsewhere, to delight the sportsman. There is the Jordan handy, with first-rate fishing to satisfy the most ardent angler; there is the Dead Sea to bathe in and boat on (only there are no boats) for persons whose tastes are aquatic. There is a flora which would be a source of never-ending interest to the botanist, for it is peculiar to this region; and the same remark applies, to some extent, to its ornithology and entomology. There are ancient ruins in all directions to satisfy the most inveterate archæologist, while the explorer has only to cross the Jordan, and in a few hours he will find himself in a region almost untrodden by the foot of the tourist, with all manner of interesting discoveries awaiting him.

It is not easy to understand why a book like this has been allowed by the publishers to go forth without an index.

A HANDBOOK TO DANTE.*

SERIOUS students of Dante and his works will find great satisfaction and assistance in this manual. Its design and arrangement are admirable; and those who, with varying success, have sought for clues to the enigmas presented by the dim and often contradictory outlines of the biographies of Dante, will appreciate its value. Dr. Scartazzini has made patient research over the whole field of literature which relates to his subject, and has set in order the data from which conclusions may be formed. It is, however, extremely difficult to interpret perfectly the character and writings of a man who was far in advance of his times; and especially is this the case with Dante, of whom comparatively little testimony remains beyond his own writings, which lend themselves to various theories. Of the great array of commentators upon Dante, few would be found to agree on all important points; and in the volume under present notice the translator has found it necessary to revise and moderate Dr. Scartazzini's unqualified admiration of Dante; and in some instances he undertakes to prove, from the same passage cited by the Italian critic in support of his theories, their very opposites. Yet, notwithstanding the close logic and earnest desire for truth with which Mr. Davidson examines the evidence in regard to certain phases of the life of Dante—for example, his supposed lapses into heresy and unbelief, his lack of love for his wife, and Madonna Gemma's own measure of merit or demerit—the fact remains that the nobler and larger the conception that one forms of the nature of Dante, the more just is the mental attitude of the student, and the more readily he receives the message of the great poet of humanity. It is easy, moreover, in this age of positive criticism to mistake a poetic utterance for a fact; and the immense force with which the mind of Dante materialized its images is apt to mislead the less mystical spirit of the present time.

The careful disposition of the material contained in this manual will be gratefully appreciated by students. Biography, comment, bibliography, are so easily found and so concisely arranged in their places, that one almost forgets the great labor which the little volume represents. Dr. Scartazzini rightly considers that Dante's own writings are the best source of knowledge concerning his life; but also recognizes the difficulty of divesting the truth from its manifold wrappings of allegory. Perhaps a thorough acquaintance and sympathy with the Comito, which affords so much exact knowledge of the methods of art which underlie the fanciful imagery of Dante's verse, is the best preparation for the study of his biography in the Divina Commedia.

The first part of the Dante Handbook occupies itself with so much as is known of the personal history of the poet; and throughout the volume a full bibliography is given of the works which may be consulted upon the topics treated. The sympathetic and generous quality of the comment

* Haifa; or, Life in Modern Palestine. By Laurence Oliphant. Edited, with an Introduction, by Charles A. Dana. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

* A Handbook to Dante. Translated by Thomas Davidson from the Italian of Dr. Scartazzini. Ginn & Co. $1.25.

of Dr. Scartazzini is apparent from the first. It would be hardly possible to refrain from quoting his just and eloquent estimate of Dante, except for the certainty that, as soon as the worth of this manual shall be understood by the public, it will be in the hands of every reader who desires more than surface knowledge of the Divina Commedia and its author. In regard to the question, which Dr. Scartazzini considers open for discussion, whether Dante really went upon an embassy to Pope Boniface to prevent the coming of Charles of Valois to Florence, much weight seems given to the argument that Dante must have been in Florence when sentence of exile was pronounced upon him, 27 January, 1302, since it was charged that he had been summoned to appear before the mayor and council of Florence, but had contumaciously absented himself; and that such a charge would not have been preferred when every Florentine would have known whether he were in Rome or in Florence. Leonardo Areino says that the charge of contumacy was made because no other fault could be imputed to him; and perhaps a technical accusation was quite enough for a pretext for banishment, when the mayor, Cante di Gabrielli, and the Nesi were so ill-disposed toward Dante. And the air was so filled with the scandals raised by the envious factions of Florence, that one more false charge might easily pass uncontradicted.

The years between the death of Beatrice and the death of Henry of Luxemburg form a period which, according to Dr. Scartazzini, corresponds to the doubtful wanderings in the dark wood described in the first canto of the Inferno. He believes that, more than once, Dante was led astray into skepticism by imperfect science; and that only in the later years of the poet's life was he able to understand the harmony of knowledge and faith. In the period just noted, Dante was in the power of despair, and this was heightened, the author would have us believe, by the knowledge that Beatrice responded to the love of her poet, and died of a broken heart. Here Mr. Davidson comes to the rescue, and convicts Dr. Scartazzini of bad reasoning, in an admirable note, which is not reinforced, however, by the quotation from Edgar Poe. And in his notes upon the Pitying Lady (p. 58) the translator again displays fine critical power.

The third period of the life of Dante, according to the present manual, includes the time from the death of the Emperor Henry, in 1313, to the death of the poet himself, in 1321. This portion of the work also treats of the personal confessions which, in his utter honesty, Dante saw fit to make in the course of the Divina Commedia; and here Dr. Scartazzini's exposition is masterly; while the translator, in the exercise of that extreme wish to be just which sometimes defeats itself, pronounces opinions less acute and less sympathetic than are usual with him. It is true that Dante has to pass through the ultimate fires that girdle the Earthly Paradise, and that he feels the heat of their burning; but that he is thus attainted of any special sin is fully disproved by the words of the angel:

"No one farther goes; souls sanctified,
If first the fire burn not, within it enter,
And be not deaf unto the song beyond."
Purg. XXVII, 10. Prof. Longfellow, Trans.

Dante, escorted by Virgil and Statius, had been able by giving heed to his steps to pass unscathed along the edge of the seventh circle, whose flames, blown backward by a wind from the circle below, left a narrow path. But to reach the foot of the stairway which led up to the Earthly Paradise — the home of man unfallen from his primal innocence — it was needful to traverse the unbroken ring of flame, since there was no other way of passage. This swift transit through the purifying element was ordained to free every soul made holy by sojourn in its proper circle of expiation, from the last grains of earthly dross left of the inheritance from Adam. The fact that Dante records no expression of suffering on the part of Virgil or of Statius, has no significance in this connection. He only says of himself that he felt the intense burning; but we do not learn that he, more than they, made any utterance unsuited to the place where discipline was eagerly accepted in accordance with the Divine Will.

The final division of the Handbook treats of the various editions and commentaries of the Divina Commedia; notes the harmony existent between the life and writings of Dante; and gives a finely condensed description of the Minor Works; together with a sketch of the argument and episodes of the mystic vision of Inferno, Purgatorio, and Paradiso.

A slight inadvertence in the description of the punishment of souls in the circle where were found Paolo and Francesca, appears in the phrase "incessantly driven by a hurricane, and beaten against a ruin" — which is not the equivalent of "davanti alla ruina" (Inf. V. 34). The spirits were driven, not against, but to the verge of, the ruinous steep slope which lay between their circle and that which was below it.

In conclusion of the review of this excellent manual, the hope may be cordially expressed that Mr. Davidson will increase the obligation already due him for his flexible translation and acute and reasonable comments, by proceeding at once to the projected tasks indicated in his preface, and thus continuing to aid the growth of interest in the works and life of Dante, citizen and poet, not only of Florence and of his century, but of the world, and of all time.

— Ecbatana (and not Gebatana, as the types had it in the Literary World of March 19) is the title of Mr. Lew Vanderpoole's first oriental novel, which we learn was published when the author was sixteen. Mr. Vanderpoole has now nearly ready for publication sixteen of the posthumous stories and sketches of his famous great-aunt, Mme. George Sand; and the book will contain one of the only two novels which she left unpublished at the time of her death. It is entitled "The Lilies of Florence," and comprises about 30,000 words. Among the sketches will be "Lamira," the weird Christmas story published a year ago.

ENGLISH PROSE AND PROSE WRITERS.*

PROF. HUNT'S review of English prose, designed primarily to serve as a classroom manual, is to some extent original in design, careful and thoughtful in execution, and, on the whole, stimulating in style. Yet its method is in the main artificial, and for that reason its usefulness is seriously impaired. Prof. Hunt is not slavish in his adherence to the traditional system of classification. Starting with the rough material gathered for the development of English prose from Bede to Bacon, he divides the interval from Bacon to the present time into four representative historical periods: those of formation (Bacon — Milton); transition (Milton — Addison); final settlement (Addison — Johnson); and expansion (Johnson — Carlyle). After discussing the general characteristics of these periods and the agencies, friendly and adverse, that acted upon them, Prof. Hunt passes to a description of the representative literary prose forms, and finally comes to the main portion of his work — an analysis of the styles of representative prose writers, including, beside those whose names have been already given, Hooker, Swift, Burke, Lamb, Macaulay, De Quincey, and Dickens. The qualities displayed in the productions of each author are concisely set forth, and the merits and defects of his style tabulated and defined; biographical data are confined to a preliminary note, and extracts are so infrequent and so brief as to play but a very minor part in the scheme. The expositions, as far as they go, are of decided merit; we rarely find ourselves dissenting from Prof. Hunt's judgments, and almost invariably follow him with hearty indorsement. The book ought certainly to serve a purpose as an elementary guide for the beginner in the study of literature, for it directs the student at once to original sources.

Yet with all its merits, the volume holds to the time-worn belief that a text-book of literature must deal in classifications and periods, and group and label authors as if they were specimens for a mineralogical cabinet. This belief the present writer holds to be far more harmful than helpful, and one that must be wholly given up if the study of literature as literature is to be made beneficial and popular. He who strives to obtain from the current manuals a knowledge and comprehension of the true dignity and power of English literature is like one who, sailing down the course of a majestic river, pays no regard to the beauty of the scenery, but pauses continually to peep and botanize among the weeds and grasses along the shores. Prof. Hunt refers more than once to the cynicism of "Mr. Taine and the liberal school," but we say without hesitation that the student who takes up Taine's masterly essay in the right spirit will rise from its perusal with his views immeasurably broadened and with spirit refreshed by the counsels of an acute and intensely perceptive, if not always judicious, guide. He may not be able to classify authors by periods, or to distinguish at a glance the finer characteristics of the narrative as distinguished from the descriptive style; but he will possess a far more important faculty—that of understanding what literature really is as an expression of life, and of finding in it the revelation of human struggle and human progress.

* Representative English Prose and Prose Writers. By Theodore W. Hunt, Ph.D. A. C. Armstrong & Co. $1.50.

GIORDANO BRUNO.*

GIORDANO BRUNO, born at Nola, near Naples, in 1548, early became a Dominican monk; but, more of a heretic than a Catholic, was soon tried twice for heresy, and after an adventurous life for a philosopher, was burned at the stake at Rome on the 17th of February, 1600. It was the way of the world then. King James First of England, a number of years later, sent Bartholomew Legate, an obstinate Arian of the highest moral character, to the stake. The Inquisition that condemned Bruno left its plain traces on Protestantism, which too often imitated its inhuman zeal for truth. But rarely, if ever, did the Inquisition martyr a man of a finer genius or more ardent piety than the monk whom Prof. Adamson styles "the most genial and interesting of the Italian philosophers of the Renaissance." The atheism with which the real skeptics of the day charged him is well manifested in these words of Bruno:

In this universe I place a universal Providence, by virtue of which all things live, grow, move, and attain perfection; and I understand it in two ways—the one in that manner by which the soul is present in the body, the whole of the soul in all the body, and the whole in each and every part; and this I call Nature, the shadow and trace of the Divinity; the other, in the ineffable manner in which God by his essence, presence, and power is in all and above all; not as a part, not as a soul, but in a manner not capable of being made plain to the understanding.

In fact, Bruno was a mystic; his German mother gave him his deeply religious spirit, while his speculative intellect was possessed by an unquenchable eagerness and ardor truly Italian; so his great philosophical achievement was the reconciliation of the innocence and the transcendence of Deity. Copernican, an Arian, an enemy of Aristotle, imbued with the finest spirit of the Renaissance, Bruno was verily "the Awakener," as he called himself. In such a time as his those who would not be awakened, either intellectually or religiously, found it easier to burn his body than to refute his arguments or silence his faith.

Bruno was much of a traveler, visiting France, Germany, Switzerland, and England, remaining near the court of Elizabeth two years. His influence on Bacon was great. Himself a disciple of Nicolaus of Cusa, "the speculative Copernicus" of that century, his writings in Latin and Italian have been the admiration of many subsequent philosophers of the first rank, whose obligations are often much larger than their acknowledgments. Mr. Frith's biography, while sometimes a little awkward in style, has the great merits of comprehensiveness and that "admiration" which is the life of true biography. His account of the facts of Bruno's life contains all that is known of him; extracts from his less technical works are interspersed in their due connection, and Bruno's system as a whole is excellently set forth. There is now no reason why any student of philosophy, whether specialist or amateur, should remain ignorant of the life or the ideas of this great genius of the Renaissance. The appendix contains a full apparatus of bibliography, and the letters of Scioppius, the one authority for the facts of Bruno's martyrdom. The whole work has had the great advantage of a revision by the eminent German philosopher, Prof. Moriz Carrière. Giordano Bruno "suffered at Rome," says Coleridge, "for atheism; that is, as proved by all his works, for a lofty and enlightened piety, which was, of course, unintelligible to bigots and dangerous to an apostate hierarchy." Few recent books in philosophy, in its biography, will be found more satisfying than the life of this Italian martyr for truth.

STORER'S AGRICULTURE.*

PROF. F. H. STORER'S name is familiar to the college student as joint author with President Eliot of Harvard of a manual of chemistry which has had a wide use. This, his sole treatise on agriculture, in two handsome volumes, is not so technical as Prof. Storer's reputation as a chemist, or as even the title of the book, would lead one to expect. It is in fact only technical enough to give complete justification to the positions taken in the practical directions for farm culture. Lectures given annually, for the last sixteen years, at the Bussey Institution in West Roxbury, are the basis of the work.

* Agriculture in Some of its Relations with Chemistry. By F. H. Storer, S.B., A.M., Prof. of Agricultural Chemistry in Harvard University. Two vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.

Given without any thought of publication, they are here presented in a form which makes them exceedingly valuable to the many "persons fond of rural affairs," whether practical farmers or amateurs, who occupy country seats. The well-known works of Prof. S. W. Johnson, to which Prof. Storer refers, deserve his praises, but they have a repellent effect upon all but students of chemistry from the abundance of chemical terminology and formulæ with which they abound. Prof. Storer's volumes, on the contrary, are very easy reading for an intelligent farmer who has had no training in chemistry, and few persons we imagine with any taste for country life in its practical aspects will fail to find them extremely profitable.

The first volume opens with chapters on the plants as related to air, soil, and water; tillage and manures occupy the bulk of the pages, and also a third part of the second volume. Rotation of crops, irrigation, sewage, the disposing of farms, with chapters on pastures, grass-lands, and hay-making, and the cultivation of oats and barley, complete the work.

Prof. Storer's accuracy and trustworthiness in all matters of science may well be taken without superfluous words of praise. What we desire to mark for the benefit of our rurally-minded readers is his great comprehensiveness for matters of which people not bred on farms need no little elementary information—a comprehensiveness which extends from enlightening such ignorance to a fullness of information which the most "practical" farmer should rejoice to be able to consult; the skill with which the subject in hand is illustrated by near instances, as that of the Boston Back Bay region in treating of the movements of ground-water, and that of New Hampshire sand-farms, while the "cit" is enabled to understand the doctrine of "puddled earth" by a reference to street-mud after a thaw. Prof. Storer on one hand notes that "manure" is derived from "manœuvre" (to work), and that "fallow soil" means "red soil," and on the other hand discusses fertilizers of all kinds in great detail. The amateur who is interested in etymologies, knowing more of words than of things, and the actual cultivator who has a distrust of "book-farming," will, then, find in these two well-digested and attractively composed volumes a manual of agriculture which in its field has no superior even if any equals.

LINNEUS.*

THE title of this work really covers the life of the great botanist; being a biography with extracts from his diaries and a narrative of the author's journeyings to the

* Through the Fields with Linnæus. A Chapter in Swedish History. By Mrs. Florence Caddy. Two volumes. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. London: Longmans, Green & Co. $4.00.

* Life of Giordano Bruno, the Nolan. By I. Frith. Revised by Prof. Moriz Carrière. Ticknor & Co. $4.50.

birth-place of Linnæus and to other regions associated with his history. Mrs. Caddy is an enthusiastic pilgrim, and describes in an attractive way the places she visited, arriving at night by a lingering train at a town which apparently led "from nowhere to nowhere," and stopping at a small hotel where everything was so novel, where going to bed was "like laying one's self by in a drawer."

This town was Råshult, in the heart of Småland, a province of South Sweden, where, on May 23, 1707, was born Carl von Linné—the family name having been taken from a lime tree near the ancestral home. The child inherited the love of flowers from his father, who, when he became rector of Stenbrohult during Carl's infancy had a garden containing "more than four hundred species, many of them rare and exotic." It was a plain case of heredity, though the parents could not see it and were anxious that the boy should study divinity, but he resisted and followed his bent—to what results every one understands. At twenty young Linnæus "was matriculated at the University of Linde," and then set off on his first important botanical journey, light-hearted but poor, faring on the "flat round rye biscuit, as large as our largest-sized dinner plate, that he had slung round his shoulders by a string threaded through the hole in the center." Poverty was long the intimate companion of this self-made man; at Upsala he was "perhaps the poorest student who ever entered her walls," and long after when he was professor there he would speak to encourage the students of that straitened time when he mended his worn-out shoes with birch bark, stitching and glueing it on. But the good fortune he deserved began to come early, for only three years later he was for a time occupying the chair of the botanical professor at Upsala, his handsome face glowing with the love of lovely things as he joyfully taught the students what his superior talent had enabled him to discover. They relished it as our generation has enjoyed receiving light at Ruskin's hands.

After various changes and delays, botanical trips to the north, foreign travel, and some privations, the position of Linnæus became an assured one; he grew rich, and in his later years was able to make for his family a delightful country home in the midst of a garden, at Hammarby, not far from Upsala, where he spent his days after his own mind, dying there on January 10, 1778, aged seventy years, seven months, and seven days.

Linnæus is described as having an open countenance and general elegance of manners, with "an immense fund of articulate gayety in his composition, beautiful light humor, never flying off into folly"—altogether a most charming man, and in his old age likened to the Vicar of Wakefield.

The two volumes though containing some irrelevant matter, are engaging, and are interesting contributions to biographical literature. There are two maps of the travels and several quaint illustrations; the cover has for decoration the monument to Linnæus, with the flower he adopted for his own, the Linnæa borealis—a crude and awkward representation of one of the most exquisite plants in the world.

MINOR NOTICES.

Village Photographs. By Augusta Larned. [Henry Holt & Co. $1.75.]

It is not often that so much real life, human nature, shrewdness, and humor are found between two covers as in this book. A captivating region the author makes us see, with brooks and rustic bridges, shady roads and woodland paths, and the "old Saddleback" she is so fond of! She says:

I wonder the people out on the prairies do not build themselves mountains as landmarks and objects of affection. A mountain need not be very high nor very beautiful to be so intimately inwoven with life that one would miss it like a household companion. It is a good thing to tie up to. It renders the planet stable. It accents the lowlands and gives them emphasis.

The village characters in these pages are true "photographs," from Jake Small, whose favorite axiom was, "I guess human motives is pretty well mixed," to shiftless Jabez, who thus explained his situation when he had to leave town:

"Wal, you see, we had ter move. The folks up thar kinder took a prejudice, and they lent me a hoss and wagon to move my stuff;"

and to Uncle Hi, who was such a delightful oddity, the farm people think if he had not been born it would have been necessary to invent him.

The irascible and inconsistent old doctor, the minister who "took his doctrine as straight as the swath he mowed in the nine-acre lot," the milliner, and the judge, are all here. "The story of the village," Miss Larned says, "is a story without an end," of lives with ragged edges, of "romantic possibilities which never come to anything;" the lowly persons have experienced something worth telling about, while the great people "have all been greater in their own estimation than in the opinion of the world at large;" but small or great, here they are, just as a keen observer has seen them; and each study of character is as good as the one that went before. The style is of a graceful essayish kind, pleasing and refined, with critical care in the use of words, and the atmosphere is genial and kindly. It is eminently a leisurely book, not one to take a taste of and then leave, but to be enjoyed in little treats and made to last long.

Catalogue of the Nevins Memorial Library, Methuen, Massachusetts. Prepared by Harriet Howe Ames. [Boston: Franklin Press. 2 vols. 8vo, pp. 1,002.]

The Nevins Library at Methuen, Mass., is one of those public benefactions which are becoming so pleasant a feature of American life. It was founded in memory of the late David Nevins by his widow and sons, in fulfillment of a design he himself had cherished but had not lived to execute. The building, of which a heliotype illustrates the first volume of this noble catalogue, is a substantial and handsome one of brick, and contains a public hall as well as the library and reading room. The library begins with nearly 10,000 volumes, and this Catalogue of the books it is a delight merely to look at and a pleasure to examine. Miss Ames, we understand, has had entire charge of the organization of the library, the selection and classification of the books, and the preparation of the Catalogue. Its elegant exterior is only a fitting dress for its real worth. It represents a collection admirably well chosen, and rich in many ways, especially in books of reference, in works upon England, France, and Germany, their languages and literatures, and in histories of our own country. Marked features of it are the divisions of works upon the United States and Massachusetts. Another excellence is the giving of the dates of the births and deaths of authors, and their professions or vocations. The system of cross-references is complete, and with the frequent notes of reference to other books, enables one to ascertain all that the library contains on any subject. The needs of the less learned inquirer are met by placing the titles of books upon scientific subjects under the more common name rather than the technical, in cases where only a cross-reference appears; as "Acoustics, See Sound." One can hardly make any adverse criticisms upon a work which so closely follows all high authorities on cataloguing, though we wish that some of those rules could have been obeyed under a more flexible interpretation. For example: in history, under an author's name, could not the titles of his works be inserted, so that the name of the country of which his history treats might have the first place, rather than the word "History;" or in biography a man's name, rather than "Life of"? Consultation, too, would have been easier had the many biographies been classified by countries. The great number of subjects, and the close arrangement of books under those subjects, show that neither time nor labor has been spared, nor expense considered. The two volumes form a catalogue worthy of the library it represents.

A Day in Ancient Rome. By Edgar S. Shumway. [D. C. Heath & Co. 75c.]

It is a pity that the Latin should be called a dead language, since it forms so important a part of the studies of youths who are nothing if not lively. And, with perception of the difficulty of creating in young minds an interest in people and places chiefly familiar through the formulas of text-books, Professor Shumway has arranged an attractive and useful little volume in which he leads his classes through the streets of Rome, explaining in compact and pleasant language the daily customs or prominent events connected with the ruined monuments which remain the wonder of the world. Here is the forum, once thronged with soldiers and senators, priests and the people; here is the fountain where the great twin brethren watered their heavenly steeds; here comes the poet Horace, rent as to the button-hole by the detaining finger of a bore, avenging himself in a satire; and now a poet, on his promotion, hastens homeward, pale with the fearful pleasure of a morning visit to his imperial patron. The students will read of Galba in other wise than that he built the wall which towers above the early chapters of the Latin grammars; and Acca Laurentia changes from a mere example of a feminine noun of the first declension, to the kindly second foster mother of the babes to whom Charity had already come in the questionable shape of a wolf. Professor Shumway has based his work upon Dr. Lohr's Aus dem Alten Rom, with illustrations in prose and verse from other writers, and with the addition of many wood-cuts. It must be suggested, however, that the use of accents to facilitate correct pronunciation of Roman names takes away somewhat of the holiday aspect of the volume, and reminds the reader that the school-master, though abroad, is always the school-master.

Studies in Italian Literature. By Catherine Mary Phillimore. [Scribner & Welford. $2.40.] The author of this attractively printed volume is an enthusiastic lover of the best Italian literature, and while she pretends to offer no original ideas upon the various authors discussed, she draws her information from critical sources and presents it without that base alloy of meaningless qualification which so many writers of lesser intellectual caliber find essential to their purpose. We could wish that Miss Phillimore had wrought her material into better shape, digested her facts and given them to us in her own words. Her frequent citations from this and that commentator and biographer give a disjointed effect to the narrative, which will rather interfere with the interest of the class of readers to whom the book appeals. The vindication of the "Paradiso" as the glorious culmination of the Divina Commedia, and the exposition of its allegorical form, as made in the opening essay, is a thoughtful and reverent tribute to the genius of Dante that ought not to be without influence. Miss Phillimore considers also the growth of the Italian drama, offers an historical review of the work of the prince printers of Italy, and sketches briefly the lives and work of Petrarch, Tasso, and Manzoni. The versified translations, of which there are many, are of distinct merit.

Moral Philosophy: a Series of Lectures. By Andrew P. Peabody, D.D. [Lee & Shepard. $1.50.] In these twelve lectures, which cover not only the usual topics of ethics, but also the morals of the Hebrew Scriptures, the Stoical ethics, and the influence of Christianity on Roman law, the Rev. Dr. Peabody has had in view three purposes: to present the fundamental principles of ethics, to show "its inseparable alliance at every point with religion and especially with Christianity," and to illustrate the principles of the science from contemporary life. Evidently a volume of three hundred pages is none too large for accomplishing all these ends, and, just as evidently, the mixture of theology with ethics tends to unfit the work for use as a text-book. But Dr. Peabody's well-known genius for practical morality gives its chief value to these sensible pages. "Never do today the work that belongs to the morrow," he says with a wisdom superior to Poor Richard's! Many directions as wise are to be found here. The ethical basis on which Dr. Peabody founds that of "fitness" is not one which tends to extreme views in morals; but the author should have remembered that there is also a historical fitness which gives the morals of Egypt a much higher place than his extreme eulogy of the Ten Commandments allows, while the same sense of fitness should have ruled out the Cambridge provincialism which styles Prof. Asa Gray, the eminent botanist, "the chief expositor of evolutionism." This is certainly a strange saying, while Prof. A. R.

Wallace and Herbert Spencer are both living; but then Dr. Peabody, we may well infer, is a very recent and very mild convert to "evolutionism," as he styles it.

The Whole Truth. By J. H. Chadwick. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] Jane Harding, a wealthy American spinster of thirty, who all her life long has been suppressed by a narrow-minded and invalid mother, conceives the idea, when at length she is free, of passing herself off as Mrs. Grandison of England, a widow. Of course she falls in with near friends of her misappropriated husband, but money and ingenuity accomplish wonders in keeping up a deception which was comparatively innocent at first. At length her falsehood is exposed; but instead of making her meet the exposure bravely, and confess all to the husband she has really wedded, the author has recourse to the flimsiness of a suicide to dispose of her. Such false notes are often struck in the book and make it unwholesome reading, despite considerable cleverness in the narrative.

Mr. Hill's George Canning is the latest volume in the rather "promiscuous" series of "English Worthies." It is a record mainly of English politics, to the details of which English biographers and historians often attach inordinate importance. Canning was a brilliant representative of Toryism; and his literary genius is of much more interest to us than his long career as an official in high place. Mr. Hill does not neglect this side of his subject, and has given many brief extracts showing Canning's satiric wit, and a good sketch of his oratory. [D. Appleton & Co. 75c.]

Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney puts her initials only on the title-page of her Pansies, a collection of her poems which first appeared in 1872, but is now out in a fresh and becoming dress—a sort of waist of white parchment, if we may so describe it, with a skirt of lilac muslin sprinkled with the title-flower in gold. Nine of these Pansies are poems "Of Occasion," dated far enough back—some of them—to catch their inspiration from the grief and passion of the Civil War. Thirteen are poems "Of Suggestion," made out of the common staple of everyday experience. Ten are poems "Of Interpretation and Hope," looking up and on. Mrs. Whitney is a religious poet. Her songs ring with faith, although often pitched in a minor key. If her accents are plaintive, there is a breath of peace about them. Her poems are pansies—just that. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

A most attractive little book externally is The Game of Draw Poker, by John W. Keller, with its blue and gilt cover, ornamented with a temptingly outspread "straight flush" in hearts. After a short introduction on the element of chance and the question of stakes—which, the author holds, should if introduced be always small—there follow definitions of technical terms, the relative rank of different hands, and the laws of the game. Many varieties of playing are then described; of which the popular "jack pot" is vigorously denounced, as turning a really scientific game into a virtual lottery. Besides the author's own instructions, which include a chapter on mathematical probabilities, the celebrated rules of Gen. Schenck are introduced. [White, Stokes & Allen. 30c.]

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Mr. Hardy seems to have fairly settled down into what his biographers will probably call his second manner. He is less vividly "sensational," less broadly comic, than he was in his first few novels. We no longer get scenes like the discovery of the corpse and the rest at the end of Desperate Remedies, or the murder of Sergeant Troy; nor anything so provocative of laughter as some parts of Under the Greenwood Tree; nor, again, incidents quite so far removed from ordinary probabilities as in some of the earlier works. Everything—pathos and humor alike—is in a subdued key, suggested rather than displayed. . . . In point of construction his more recent stories are excellent. The Woodlanders appears to us simply perfect in this respect. Every incident contributes to the development of the story; every touch helps to put the reader in the frame of mind in which the author would have him be. The various aspects of the woodland in the midst of which the story is laid, for example, are worked in with inimitable skill, and without the least appearance of straining after scenic effect. That the general drift of the story is melancholy, and its ending unsatisfactory in any but an artistic point of view, is only another evidence of its belonging to Mr. Hardy's present method. — Athenæum.

Notwithstanding the mass of matter that has been printed relating to Dickens and his works, the numerous "lives," "recollections," "remiscences," "anecdotes," and so forth, we should, until we came across this volume, have been at a loss to recommend any popular life of England's most popular novelist as being really satisfactory. The difficulty is removed by Mr. Marzials's little book. It has, it is true, no claim to originality. There are no new facts or even deductions, but the writer has taken the pains to sift carefully the materials ready to his hand, to preserve what was worth preserving, and to omit the rubbish. He has consequently produced a clear, intelligible, and interesting memoir, and he has further expressed fairly and temperately opinions which will, on the whole, recommend themselves to all but the most blindly devoted admirers of his author's writings. — Athenæum.

Nothing is more wearisome than the constant repetitions and variations of the same material with which inexperienced biographers are apt to overwhelm their readers. What you want to know concerning even the best and most original of men, is what the man was originally like; what were his chief inward gifts, perplexities and trials; what were his outward circumstances; how far his practical endeavors succeeded or failed; to what extent his character grew with his experience of life; and with what measure of force he impressed those with whom he had to act, and those on whom he brought his influence to bear; finally, how far the whole career can be said to have ended brightly or tragically, or with what mixture of brightness and tragedy. All this Mr. Hughes tells us, or rather lets us find out for ourselves—showing, however, no little art in the process—in this lively volume, with respect to his friend and former tutor, Bishop Fraser. — Spectator.

The faculty of true literary criticism is the rarest, the most peculiar of gifts. Literary sympathy, the power of analysis, good taste, sound and proportionate judgment, are doubtless valuable, but they do not by themselves endow their possessor with the essential quality of criticism. The highest literary criticism before all things demands imagination. — Spectator.

The Woodlanders is a very powerful book, and as disagreeable as it is powerful. It is a picture of shameless falsehood, levity, and infidelity, followed by no true repentance, and yet crowned at the end with perfect success; nor does Mr. Hardy seem to paint his picture in any spirit of indignation that redeems the moral drift of the book. — Spectator.

The truth is, we take it, that very little of our best literature is written for the benefit of old people, and that that which is, is not very likely to do them good. A good work on the best way of growing old is greatly wanted. — Spectator.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, APRIL 30, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

BOSTON NOTES.

— Hardly any private individual has been more talked about in Boston lately than Rev. Arthur Wentworth Eaton, the rector of an Episcopal chapel at Chestnut Hill, Newton. With him, as with many other literary people in this vicinity, the idea of an Authors' Club in Boston has been a pleasant one, and when action in the matter was resolved upon he was prominent in sending out invitations to various authors to attend a preliminary meeting held for the discussion of the subject. This was a perfectly legitimate thing to do, and one with which no reasonable person could find fault. While the formation of such a club was still under debate, a somewhat premature account of it appeared in one of the Boston papers, which was made the text of an extremely bitter and abusive column article in the Boston Advertiser of the next day, and also of an editorial bearing upon the same topic. In these two articles in the Advertiser Mr. Eaton was made to appear responsible for the proposed club, was sneered at as a person whom no one knew anything about, and the charge was brought against him that because he had not published a book he had no place in an authors' club. It was a most pitiable exhibition of personal spite, all the more to be regretted because directed against a most inoffensive individual. The course pursued by the Advertiser in the matter was almost universally condemned, and that paper itself, after condescending to explanation, at last stooped to apologize. Rev. Arthur Wentworth Eaton, the object of this cruel newspaper attack, far from being so utterly unknown as the journal before mentioned assumed, has for a number of years been well known in social and literary circles in New York and Boston. A native of Nova Scotia, he has resided for many years in the United States, and was graduated from Harvard University in the class of 1880, and later from the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge. Since that time he has officiated as clergyman in Indiana and Massachusetts, and has been rector of the parish at Chestnut Hill since May last. He is the author of many graceful poems which have appeared in the Youth's Companion and other periodicals. He has recently written a volume of informal sermons or lectures, which those who have seen place a very high estimate upon from a literary, as well as religious standpoint. The broad church view of the essential religious problems of the day has rarely been more clearly or more concisely stated. The work will probably appear next season, and will certainly entitle its author to membership in an authors' club even from the Advertiser's point of view.

— The waning of the season is very perceptible in social and literary circles. Two farewell receptions to Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, who is to sail for Europe on May 5th, seem likely to be among the last events of note.

— In a cosy brown cottage at Auburndale lives Miss Louise Imogen Guiney. Here Miss Guiney's favorite retreat is her study and literary work-room, with its sunny exposure, its interesting bric-à-brac, and its wide, cushioned window-seat. It is quite likely that we shall see a new volume of poems from her pen sometime during another season.

— At the thirteenth meeting of the Browning Society which was held at the Brunswick on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 26th, Prof. Hayes read "Count Gismond," Col. Higginson "Love Among the Ruins" and "The Flower's Name," Mr. Copeland "Youth and Art" and "The Householder," and Mrs. Alice Kent Robinson "In a Gondola."

— Mr. Partridge's many friends filled to overflowing Mrs. Mosher's charming music room on the afternoon of his Cambridge reading. Among the poems heard upon that occasion were Keats's "Ode to a Nightingale," selections from "Endymion," and a number of sonnets; Shelley's "Lines to an Indian Air," and passages from "Prometheus" and "Adonais."

— The course pursued by Mr. Riddle and Mr. Fawcett is universally regarded as most lamentable, and they themselves will be the only sufferers.

— George H. Clements, the artist, is going south with Mr. Cable sometime early in May. Mr. Clements is now engaged in drawing for one of the New York magazines.

— James B. Kenyon, a poet whose work has appeared in the Atlantic, Century, and other periodicals, and who has published two volumes of poems, is making a new collection of his verses. Mr. Kenyon is to be his own publisher. He is a Methodist clergyman, a man yet upon the sunny side of thirty, and resides in Chaumont, N. Y.

— We hear from New York that Frank Dempster Sherman's Madrigals and Catches, recently published by White, Stokes & Allen, is likely to go into a second edition before many months.

— It is reported that "John Philip Varley" (the son of Dr. Weir Mitchell), the author of Sylvian, and Other Poems, has given up the law and gone to his home in Philadelphia to devote himself to literature.

— Samuel Minturn Peck, the Alabama poet, is contributing both in prose and verse to the New Orleans Times-Democrat.

— Since October last Mrs. Abba Gould Woolson has been a resident of Boston, and is frequently seen in literary circles. She and her husband, long a teacher in Concord, N. H., are at present living in charming apartments on St. Botolph Street, and she has lately been giving lectures to literary classes on the minor poems of Spenser.

NEW YORK NOTES.

— Mr. John Bell Bouton, the author of the once popular novel Round the Block, has in the press of D. Appleton & Co., Roundabout to Moscow: An Epicurean Journey, for publication early in May. As the sub-title suggests, the route Mr. Bouton describes is on the line of first-class hotels and as free as possible from hardships and privations. He strongly recommends the summer trip to Russia as most suitable, on all accounts, for American tourists, and devotes nearly one third of his book to his personal observations and experiences in the empire.

— Mr. Henry Marquand, the literary editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser and a son of Mr. H. G. Marquand, has invited a number of friends, among them Mr. R. Swain Gifford, to accompany him on a three months' pleasure trip to Labrador in his schooner-yacht "Ruth."

— Mr. John C. Ropes has written for Scribner's Magazine an article which he calls "Some Illustrations of Napoleon and his Times," to run through two numbers, beginning in June. Both papers are elaborately illustrated with wood engravings of portraits in Mr. Ropes's famous collection.

— The young Virginian author of whom so much was said in praise when her story, "A Brother to Dragons," appeared in the Atlantic, has just written "The Farrier Lass o' Piping Pepworth," for an early number of Lippincott's Magazine.

— Like many other excellent papers, The American Bookseller was inveigled into attributing the authorship of Me, a silly, sensational novel just published by J. S. Ogilvie & Co., to Mr. H. Rider Haggard, through an artful device of the publishers. On the title-page of this book is printed Me: A Companion to She. A Story of Adventure. "By H. Rider Haggard." The title is shrewdly worded, to give the innocent reader the impression that Mr. Haggard wrote Me, of which offense it is unnecessary to say he is not guilty. That writer has been made to suffer in more ways than one on account of his new-found popularity. Although nearly 200,000 copies of King Solomon's Mines have been sold, his profits from the various American editions of the romance issued, as he recently stated, were £13, of which £10 were generously sent to him as a gift by some American publisher.

— Already several branches of the New York Free Circulating Library have been begun through the generosity of prominent New Yorkers, and now Mr. Richard M. Hunt, the architect, has been commissioned by Mr. George W. Vanderbilt to draw plans for a branch of the library to cost $50,000 and to be erected on West 13th Street. Mr. George Vanderbilt has long been regarded by his friends as a book-worm, and it is not surprising that philanthropy, which seems to be a prominent characteristic of all the members of the Vanderbilt family, should, in his case, be expressed in a fine library for the people.

— Few if any living American writers receive so large an income from their works as does the Rev. E. P. Roe. His earlier novels continue to have very large sales, and $7,000 in royalties have already been paid him for He Fell in Love with His Wife, by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. The title of the new story upon which he is now at work in California is a carefully guarded secret.

— The Southern Bivouac, after having been offered to and refused by several large magazines, was finally bought by the Century Company, as a prominent New York writer predicted it would be, when he learned that a large portion of the Bivouac's stock consisted of war papers. The Century Company will fill out all unexpired subscriptions to their new acquisition.

— We learn from the Athenaeum that Chatto & Windus are presently to issue a volume of selections from Mr. Swinburne's poems; that Mr. Ruskin's profits last year on the sales of his works amounted to 4,000*l.*, Sesame having the largest sale; and that Elliot Stock is to bring out a collection of Paul Heyse's stories, translated by John Philips.

THE NOVELS OF GEORGE MEREDITH.*

IN Diana of the Crossways, Mr. Meredith's latest book, one of the characters, Mr. Redworth, who is trying to promote through the press the literary fame of the heroine, will have a "review, and a prompt review—an essential point; none of your long digestions of the contents." If the present article is not "prompt," it is because it has seemed best to wait until the republication in this country of these nine handsome volumes could be spoken of as an accomplished fact. There will be no long digestions, nor any audacities in the way of æsthetic criticism, but simply an attempt to present in outline some account of an author as yet strangely little known among us.

Granting our fondness for making land-falls in literature, it is somewhat curious that Americans who read have not yet "discovered" George Meredith. Many English authors of yesterday and today owe much to our frank enthusiasm for trying a new thing in letters, if it once proves to be of good quality, and in experiments of this kind our judgment does not often err. Especially do we rejoice in decent satire, or in agreeable cynicisms over the prejudices and social usages dear to the mother country. There is really no malice in this; it is not unhealthy human nature to laugh at the foibles of our own kinsmen, if we are in the company of one of the family. It seems a breach of decorum to join in the merriment of some foreigner, like the vivacious person who wrote John Bull et son âle.

With all this alacrity to take up with English cleverness, we do not yet seem to have opened our hearts to one writer who, for nearly thirty years, has been elaborating—the word is properly used—from an immense mass of social raw material, his half score of volumes, each as distinct in its whole as perfected marble, though as to the imperfections of the details no two critics may agree. Now, at that time of life when one naturally becomes retrospective, Mr. Meredith ventures—and ventures successfully, it is understood—to set his house in order and to put forth a permanent and uniform edition of his works. The Messrs. Roberts Brothers, with a courage quite their own for presenting Americans with what is believed to be the best sort of books, have undertaken to reproduce these volumes, of which eight are already before us. The effect of the substantial English sheets and fresh type, inclosed by tasteful dark olive cloth binding, is excellent, and the price is moderate.

It is one whim of book lovers to enjoy the more certain books for the simple reason that they are not and cannot become universally popular, just as woodcock, which is not really half so good to eat as an honest plump chicken, is relished the better because every peasant cannot have such rare fowl in his pot. This is flat snobbishness, and no one defends it; but degenerate man will groan when he discovers, perhaps, that his little Roxburghe-bound quarto of Omar Khayyám is getting reprinted cheaply, is made the fashion, is paraded about, and discussed in village reading clubs. This exclusiveness on the part of his readers, one is led to think, may be a reason why Meredith's reputation is not wider. A sensational popularity is out of the question for him, widely read though he may in time become. But he will be admired by a class and not by a people; and by a class which will be at no pains to enlarge his fame. This is a bad plight for a man of genius, and one for which he must not be held too largely responsible.

The future will probably esteem him, because he is distinctly and admittedly a philosopher who writes fiction, and has categorized English life and manners in their varied phases, and has not so diligently applied him to mere character painting. In one of those rare passages in which he discloses something of his own personality behind the rather mysterious veil through which he has a clear vision of humanity, and is seldom seen himself, he defends his views of philosophy, as applied to the writing of novels. This passage is in one of the earlier chapters of Diana of the Crossways. In spite, however, of the definiteness of his final object, it will be found that his exuberance of wit, which usually takes the form of epigram, his complex, and, it may be, exaggerated conceptions of the motives of social conduct, his frequent literary conceits, and more than all, his style, which shuns the malign influence of Carlyle at his worst—for Meredith entered literature when the Carlyle jargon has reached its perfection of abomination in the Latter Day Pamphlets—all conspire to make him by necessity concise, not only to the general, but also to the intelligently, if not highly, educated. There are passages over which the more fortunate might almost gloat with pleasure, but which would be simply unintelligible to the "general reader." This is not the highest fruition of a man of letters. The greatest writers are not outside the grasp of common intellects. Mr. Meredith, who has an abundance of that not well understood quality which we conveniently call Shakespearean, has himself mostly to blame if he does not gain the laurels of the common arena. His abilities are surely large enough to have enabled him to correct faults which seem too often willful. But at the same time, these very faults endear him to those who admire him, and it may be that he does not look beyond the boxes and orchestra stalls for that applause which most of us are glad to win even from the galleries. We do not readily grant this indifference to popular approval to be a marked characteristic in Meredith, for beneath his usual impenetrability we think we discern a genuine liberalism and scorn of effect which seem to make close affinity with narrow views of human life, only that he may lay on the knotted cords of satire more fiercely and tellingly.

These novels might be classified, if that were desirable, according to the various phases of society which Meredith portrays. Something of the sort is apparent throughout, although no distinct purpose is anywhere manifest—he is too fine an artist for that. The Ordeal of Richard Feverel, for instance, might be called the novel of worldly wisdom, or better, perhaps, the novel of wild oats. It was his first effort which commanded marked attention in England, and it won at the time high, but not unqualified, praise from the Westminster Review. Able though it may be, it must ever be spoken of with reserve. It is truthful, it has no glamour; it, however, has a high purpose if read aright, but it will surely injure those who cannot or will not use discernment. There are certain books which once read leave him who reads not the same morally as before; the change is subtle, but no less certain. Such an effect has Faust, such Les Misérables and such Richard Feverel. To know their contents is to taste of the fruit of the tree of knowledge. There is an innocence which it is well for youth to be content to cherish as long as possible; the stern ethics of older men and women come soon enough. To know that Richard Feverel is or may be true is a blight in springtime. The character of Adrien, the "wise youth," is fairly entitled to be considered a creation in fiction as dreadful in its way as Frankenstein's monster—even more dreadful, because we may recognize the type. Meredith in this book accomplished what Thackeray refused to do, and that was, to tell the career of a young man who gets off the path of right conduct; in Pendennis only half the truth is told. Feverel was no worse than Thackeray's hero, but with a fearful sort of courage Meredith lets him "dree his weird," while the clever novelist gently disentangles Pendennis from the meshes.

In Richard Feverel is seen the decline and fall of great hopes built on the frail foundation of an old man's fatuous theories. Evan Harrington is the opposite of all this; it tells the ascent of the family of an ambitious and altogether splendid tailor from worthy obscurity to a lofty but ever tottering eminence. It is far more agreeable than Meredith's first book, and the character of Evan Harrington is entirely satisfactory, but his sister, the Countess, has set old heads a-wagging. She is very bad, but cautious—as nearly as we may remember she is the most accomplished liar in English fiction, and too ethereal a schemer for so blunt and honest a country as England; she lived a century too late. That wonderful facility which Meredith has for making a rich entertainment for the intellect, displays itself to great advantage in the work.

Against Harry Richmond can be urged none of the objections which it must be admitted have much weight in a final estimate of Meredith's reputation. Of all his novels it has the greatest proportion of "popularity." For once he tells his story straight, and does not assume, as he is fond of doing, that his reader's intelligence and his own are working in perfect harmony. The delicate matter of illegitimacy is finely touched, but never harped upon. Harry's father would have been a common knave had he not been basely born; the taint saves him, and almost makes him admirable. A moral paradox of this sort is something in which Meredith much delights. To keep the ethical balance, the character of Harry's Tory grandfather, with his fearful and irresistible common sense, is thrown into the scales. The proportions of good and evil are exact to a nicety, but withal Mr. Meredith is a puzzle as a novelist, for he surely has in his soul some of that pagan "laughter of the gods" which seems so pitiless. Time will show him to be sound to the core, liberal, perhaps even radical, in his judgment of great evils; but it is not hard to see that socially he prefers that his lines shall fall in pleasant places. He does not affect a love for abstract humanity, but views all mankind with perfect equanimity; he pretends to no impossible equality with a peasant, nor yet would he have an Englishman's exaltation at walking down Pall Mall with a duke. This attitude of aloofness is by no means free from superciliousness, and those who dislike Meredith charge him with the weakness. So long as he keeps to his purpose of treating fiction philosophically, it is no worse for him than for the recent school of philosophical historians to float above in the serene ether, calmly observant of the surge of humanity beneath.

* Ordeal of Richard Feverel; Evan Harrington; Harry Richmond; Emelia in England; Vittoria; Rhoda Fleming; The Egoist; Diana of the Crossways; Beauchamp's Career. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1886. 9 vols., 12mo, uncut edges. $2.00 each, in cloth.

In Harry Richmond may be seen something of a strange resemblance to Jean Paul's style, especially where the fortunes of Harry with his German Princess are told. This resemblance is one of style, for Richter was philister after all, and Meredith is anything but that.

In answer to the common street cry of criticism that there is no creation nowadays, no Faust, no Hamlet, nothing but reproduction by clever copyists, the admirers of George Meredith may with enthusiasm point to the heroine of Emilia in England, or as the author now prefers to call it, Sandra Belloni. Here is a woman fresh to imaginative literature. The blending in her make-up of the eternal and human womanliness gives her a charm which never ceases, though she leads us through six ordinary English novel-volumes: the last three, which some may recall in the Fortnightly Review for 1866, are now put with one under the old title of Vittoria. Some one has called this heroine "genius without culture, goodness without rule, love without worldly restraint."

Of Meredith's women much will have to be said as his fame strengthens. They are almost always the object of man's pursuit; though the game is never so noble, the chase is generally a base one. If Meredith is a faithful observer of the intense life he describes, then must the condition of morals in "high life" in England be ominous. He recurs again and again to the fact that women have to fly men as nymphs would a satyr. Even the high-souled Vittoria is beset with fellows of the baser sort—the selfish and cynical Greek virtuoso Pericles, the weak Wilfred, the swinish Austrian Weisspreiss—all seek to blast in their own fashion this flower of loveliness. Vittoria's exact opposite is Diana of the Crossways, heroine of Meredith's latest book. Diana is wise with worldly wisdom, though rare and lovely likewise; if she never trips, it is because she glides sure-footed over a road which most women travel to their certain ruin. Diana's perfect self-consciousness never leaves her. In Rhoda Fleming, which, like Evan Harrington, discloses its author's intimacy with and love of English country life, is another womanhood, here triumphant through her downfall. Poor Dahlia, unskilled in the doublings and turnings of the hunt, is now down like a hare. Like Donatello, however, she gains by loss. It is a paradox in fiction—English fiction at least—for a woman to lighten her character by refusing to marry him who would make honorable reparation. The virtues of Meredith's characters are often pagan, and not to be understood by being hinted at.

In truth, the customary phrases of praise and blame of ordinary criticism never seem so tame and powerless as when applied to George Meredith. He appears to live in a domain of letters where there is no treaty of extradition to put him in the power of reviewers; he has been let alone because no one can get at him. This one would blame his style; to another he is a snob; and to a third he seems dangerous morally. Like Chaucer's Dame Pertelote he is hominis confusio; no task would be more senseless than to set about seriously upon an æsthetic appreciation of his works. Written, as most of them were, some years ago, they fill worthily that gap which lies between Dickens, Thackeray, and George Eliot, and the present "naturalism." The manner in which he has been ignored by the leaders and followers of the present movement is most significant. It is evident that he has not been in accord with the philosophic and religious thought of this age, but like Carlyle, he has kept a deep silence as to his own convictions. Occasionally something may be guessed at, as when he says in one of his poems:

Irreligious I'm not; but I look on this sphere
As a place where a man should just think like a man.

In common with all intelligent Englishmen he must at times have turned his thoughts to the "kin beyond sea," and somewhere he speaks of Americans as that great people who may bless

Or curse mankind; they have the might.

It may not be ungratifying to those who admire him to hear that the late Mrs. Helen Jackson had so strong a liking for him that, by her request, everything known to have been published by him was sent her.

An English writer, speaking of Meredith a few years ago, said: "It would not even much surprise us to see him spring to a sudden present popularity." There are indications just now of this tardy recognition of his genius in England, and American curiosity, if nothing else, will have to satisfy itself. Whatever may be the verdict of the jury, in the minds of those who are thought to have a right to be judges in the tribunal of letters exists a strong prejudice in favor of these novels of Mr. Meredith.

No one, who reads him in the intelligent spirit in which he has written, can finish one of his books without wishing it longer; there is no page over which the eye of understanding will not linger; almost every line sparkles with a wit which has not an equal in our day. Those leisurely readers, who delight in marking "favorite passages," will find, when they finish a volume, one continuous pencil line on the margin, from page one to Finis. The flavors of such books are as choice as those of rare Tokay. It is no wonder that Meredith gives deep and lasting intellectual pleasure, for he has applied a mind of unusual insight to the observation, often playful, more often serious, of English life, rich as it is in its thousand years of accumulated historical and social diversities.

In an article in the March number of the New Princeton Review are given many details of the hitherto little-known personality of Meredith. There may be other omissions from this edition, but two are noticeable—one of the Shaving of Shagpat, his earliest work of fiction; the other of The Tragic Comedians, which appeared in the Fortnightly Review in 1880, 1881, and involved, without justice, however, the author in a charge of plagiarism from Helene von Racowitza, Schevitsch's famous memoirs of Ferdinand Lassalle.

— Under the title of American Home Rule, a British M. P., Edmund Robertson, has prepared an exposition of the government of the United States.

MINOR FICTION.

Mrs. Hephæstus, and Other Short Stories: Together with West Point, a Comedy in Three Acts. By George A. Baker. [White, Stokes & Allen.] Mr. Baker's charming wit and brilliant style are shown to good advantage in this little volume. If the reader has made the acquaintance of Mr. Anstey's Tinted Venus he will perhaps find the story of "Mrs. Hephæstus" rather flat in comparison, but no such criticism will hold against the other productions from Mr. Baker's pen. "The Child of the Regiment" is capitally conceived and admirably told. "The Invasion of Kleindorf" is a profitable fairy tale, and "The Merman" is full of grisly terror. There is some delicious satire on the tyranny of trades unions in "Labor Troubles on an Island," where some shipwrecked men refuse to eat boycotted canned provisions; and then, the work being distributed on the coöperation basis, continually demand of the only capitalist in the company a decrease in hours of labor, until at last they decided (the capitalist tells the story) that it was degrading to manhood and contrary to nature that human beings should under any circumstances render service to other like beings. They would therefore work for me no longer, but, it being entirely my fault that they were detained here, I must continue their wages as a sort of indemnity. It was simply the theory of the eight-hour movement carried to its logical conclusion.

The comedy that concludes the volume is not a closet drama, but is well adapted for stage presentation, and has in it the elements of success.

Two Gentlemen of Gotham. By C. and C. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] This is a silly book, full of high-flown sentimentality, and equally devoid of wholesome romance or of any reasonable semblance to actuality. The characters talk as men and women never talk in real life unless they are cranks or idiots. The two gentlemen of Gotham alight at a country railway station, and one of them bursts out in this fashion:

See, Sydney! yonder on its pathway of steel flies a symbol of the age of progress that we live in—jarring, grinding, crushing all things in its course, etc., etc.

There is an ostensible poet in the story, who, on being asked why he is so "quiet," delivers an allegory of human life as revealed in the falling of the autumn leaves. The book is mawkish from beginning to end.

A Child of the Century. By John T. Wheelwright. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.] Mr. Wheelwright is at any rate amusing, and his clever story of a modern Bostonian is full of genuine humor, and not without several portentous morals. The child of the century is a Boston lawyer, who, at the age of thirty, after a life of seclusion and hard work, resolves on an outing, and in the transatlantic passage finds his plans for the study of Dante seriously interfered with by the presence of a certain black-eyed daughter of a Cincinnati clothing dealer. Sewell falls in with various types of the traveling American, and they are all admirably depicted. When he comes back he "runs for Congress" in a contest which many readers will regard as historical. Political life in Washington, as well as the social features of that city, are skillfully treated by Mr. Wheelwright, who is always bright and readable, and who says some witty things that will be remembered; among them the remark that "the true Bostonian never denies his birthplace save to the tax collector," and the epigrammatic saying that "the principal pleasure in being in what is called 'society,' is the keeping other people out of it."

Roger Camerden: A Strange Story. [George J. Coombes. 50c.] A psychological problem of much interest is the subject of the story of Roger Camerden's strange career, and it is worked out with no little skill. We shall not spoil the reader's pleasure by unfolding the plot which involves the unfortunate Roger in the tangle of a tragic destiny, but will content ourselves with a word of praise for the ingenuity displayed by the author in maintaining the interest of the tale to the end, and for his style, which is of excellent quality.

The Jesuit's Ring: A Romance of Mount Desert. By Augustus Allen Hayes. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.] Mr. Hayes had a good subject for a story in the legend of The Jesuit's Ring, but the link between the earlier tradition and the later romance is a very flimsy contrivance and does not bear the strain of incredulity. There are several excellent characters in the book, notably Herbert Somers, the young railroad manager; Seaton, the jovial middle-aged bachelor; and Helen Thurston, the beauty of the season. Yet the author does not succeed in making them stand out vividly before us; he lacks the creative touch, and no amount of skill in dressing up lay figures will atone for that defect in a writer of fiction. Life at Mount Desert is depicted with a good deal of pleasant humor, and several incidents of recent notoriety are worked into the narrative.

The Strike in the B—Mill: A Study. [Ticknor & Co. $1.00.] The author of The Strike in the B—Mill may be credited with good intentions and an earnest purpose, and in showing the evils of strikes and the tyranny of trades unions she employs plenty of common sense. Unfortunately her literary ability is of the most commonplace order, and only sheer determination will carry the reader through the book. When we find at the outset of a story a woman "looking up quickly from her work, with an anxious expression clouding her comely face," we know what to expect. Will people ever learn that for the making of a readable novel, something more than good intentions and a sense of human justice are needed? However, we sincerely wish that every commonplace novel were as devoid of harmfulness as this is.

Three of M. du Boisgobey's stories of criminals and criminalities—Cecile's Fortune, The Steel Necklace, and The Detective's Eye—are before us in as many volumes, each volume containing chapters from the other two as baits for the appetites of the reader. There is a painful similarity in M. du Boisgobey's tales which we should think after a time might pall upon the devotee of sensational fiction. [Rand, McNally & Co. 25c each.]

There must be people who like such stories as Teresa Itasca,¹ or publishers would not be at the pains of putting them into a book—stories of unlawful love and betrayal, written in an artificial style, and nearly destitute of literary merit. The three under the above title are evidently from the pen of one who does not know what he is talking about when he ventures upon the subject of the late Civil War, and makes the absurd allusion to "the American Republic's 9th Horse."

*Once Again*² does credit to the author's cleverness in keeping several love stories going at once, and especially in managing the novel complications brought about by a secret marriage; and showing the consequences of the folly and falsehood of a girl who was at the same time weak and obstinate; but such books are pernicious to young readers, and are of little pleasure and no profit to older ones.

That last statement applies likewise to Lil Lorimer,³ for although we find much that is fresh and piquant in its spirited chapters about life on the sheep-farm in the interior of Uruguay and elsewhere in South America, where the story begins, there is the same old trouble to which we have become accustomed in a certain class of English novels—namely, misunderstanding and a quarrel between the passionate young husband and his beautiful but indiscreet young wife, so that she flies from her home to drown herself, as in the present case, or elopes with some other man.

*The Master of the Ceremonies*⁴ is intense, running at a high pressure through all its nearly four hundred and fifty pages. Detestable old dowagers, match-makers, "go-betweens," dissolute men, gambling, duels, murder, suicide, mysteries, a hideous phantasmagoria of bad men and women mixing at parties and balls, intriguing, outraging the conventionalities of society, and persecuting innocence—of such people this repulsive story is made, which as a story is wonderfully well constructed, with enough in it for half a dozen plots, to say nothing of three secrets, one of which is kept with such skill that the most experienced reader of this kind of fiction will be utterly baffled by it.

In *Pure Gold*⁵ there is an eccentric miser who makes a peculiar will, an heir who thinks he shall inherit, an heir who is sure he shall not, and a girl who is the "pure gold," for whom the last-named heir is in search. Unfortunately he does not know gold, and chooses instead the basest kind of dross in the person of Madeline, disappointing the first girl, Lucy, who loves him, and making a mortal enemy of another girl, Fenella, who has gone so far as to tell him of her love, so that affairs are about as much "out of joint" as they can be. But our author proves herself equal to the task of setting them straight, and, on the whole, makes a fairly good novel as novels go, not confusing right and wrong, as some of her sister authors do.

Of a higher grade is That Other Person,⁶ with a lesson of charity for an unfortunate girl that is unmistakable. Unusual treatment at the hands of the novelist a forsaken mistress—"that other person"—receives, and it is this girl, Hester, who is the true heroine, and not "Zeph," the beautiful young wife who drives her husband away by her insane jealousy. The characters of the antiquary and his wife are delicately drawn, and so are those of John Simonds and the noble-hearted old Doctor; no one is perfect, and no one is altogether bad; the different persons introduced act much like human beings, so that, naturally, it becomes a pleasure to follow them from day to day, and see what is to be the outcome. The action takes us into a pleasant region in England, and the realistic descriptions of scenery, of both out-of-door and in-door life, add to the attractions of a book which is well worth reading.

*The Matrimonial Agent of Potsdam*⁷ may be amusing, but the humor hardly offsets the vulgarity, and it is not of a quality to be commended.

The pertinency of the title of "Gloria Victis!"⁸ is not quite apparent. It is a story of several Austrian families, including that of Oswald, the young Count Lodrin, of Count Truyn, to whose daughter he is betrothed, of the noble and impoverished Malzin, and of the new-comer, interloper, and rascal, Conte Capriani, who is intent upon ruining all within his power. Oswald and young Malzin are fine characters, and their misfortunes engage the reader's sympathies. There is an intense realism about the story, and there are scenes of great pathos. It is one of the best of the books from the German published by Gottsberger, though one can not help feeling that the two noble young men around whom the interest centers did not deserve what they suffered.

Ways and Means,⁹ by Margaret Vandegrift, has an admirable motive, and the example of the rich young girl who uses her money in helping other people and making them happy, is praiseworthy. Unfortunately the story is in danger of failing of its high purpose through prolixity and dullness. There is too much explanation, there are too many prosy talks, and long, unbroken paragraphs.

The kind of life depicted in *Foes of her Household*¹⁰ is a something conjured up in the author's brain. There are no such persons as Basil and Mr. Stirling, who, captivated by the same woman, Doris, are treacherous at heart towards their ambitious wives, and at the last safe moment are tided over the peril by the officiousness of the very Doris herself, and at once begin to lead ideal wedded lives. No such unsophisticated little girl-widow ever did change, or ever could change, the characters of an aristocracy-hardened family till each was made over new. Yet this kind of fiction is exceedingly popular with a certain class of readers; they accept its sentimentality and its impossible heroes and heroines without a protest, and, fortunately for the good principles presented, they are not harmed, though any gain of positive good seems out of the question.

*The Martyr of Golgotha*¹¹ tells in rather poetic

⁷ The Matrimonial Agent of Potsdam. A Humorous-Social Romance. From the German of A. Von Winterfeld. By El Rapha. Thomas R. Knox & Co. $1.25

⁸ "Gloria Victis!" A Romance. By Ossip Schubin. From the German by Mary Maxwell. William S. Gottsberger.

⁹ Ways and Means. By Margaret Vandegrift. Porter & Coates.

¹⁰ Foes of her Household. By Amanda M. Douglas. Lee & Shepard. $1.50.

¹¹ The Martyr of Golgotha. A Picture of Oriental Tradition. By Enrique Perez Esrich. From the Spanish by Adèle Josephine Goday. Two volumes. William S. Gottsberger. $1.75.

¹ Teresa Itasca, and Other Stories. By Avery MacAlpine. London: Chatto & Windus. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

² Once Again. By Mrs. Forester. J. B. Lippincott. 75c.

³ Lil Lorimer. By Theo Gift. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

⁴ The Master of the Ceremonies. By George Manville Fenn. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

⁵ Pure Gold. By Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron. J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.

⁶ That Other Person. By Mrs. Alfred Hunt. J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.

language the history of our Saviour, prefaced by some account of the "wandering race," and having a slight story interwoven with it. Naturally it suggests Ben-Hur, though possessing individuality and a charm of its own. It is a work fitted to be popular, and will be potential for good to a multitude of readers who will be fascinated by the picturesque way in which the gospel narrative is presented, and who are not over-critical about the unimportant liberties that have been taken with facts.

The dashing decorations of the cover of *A Plucky One*¹² are typical of the contents. It is a story of mining life in Nevada, of the bitter and prolonged disappointments of a Virginia family who emigrated there, lost everything, and were subjected to constant suffering and terror through the treachery of a former friend. The account of the lawlessness and brutality of the people is not exceeded by anything in Bret Harte, and, on the other hand, that author has no scenes more pathetic than are found here. In the telling, Mrs. Spencer, who seems thoroughly at home, rushes on at a daring rate, yet keeps her subject well in hand till the arrival of Dr. Knowlton, who loses his head as well as his heart. She clearly did not know how to manage this lover, though she had no difficulty with the two noble women, the long-suffering wife and the devoted daughter, nor with the two miners, old Si and poor Bob.

*Half Married*¹³ begins with a piquant free-hand sketch of the garrison life at the far West of a brilliant young girl, daughter of the commander, almost alone with the officers; she prefers rifle practice to womanly work, and says and does daring things, making men desperately in love with her, especially Charlie Waring, with whom she falls into ways of good comradeship, though she cannot feel that he is the right man for her to marry. Then comes the death of her father, and her sudden departure to live in the East, where she marries a man utterly unlike her dear comrade, who has vowed that he will never love another woman. A slight circumstance estranges her from her husband, and, while to outward appearance there is no serious trouble between them, she is to a certain extent disloyal in brooding over the disappointment of Charlie. Only at the end is the cloud driven away. It is a clever story extremely well done, and will be found agreeable reading for an afternoon in the hammock.

The same may be said of A Zealot in Tulle,¹⁴ another garrison story. This time the scenery is Southern, the place Barrancas, and most of the action consists in digging under the old Spanish fort for treasure buried there seventy years before. Meanwhile a perplexing and mysterious misunderstanding between a young widow (the "Zealot") and her first lover is kept well to the front; and this mystery, which is connected with the search, is cleared up only when the digging comes to an end—having been carried along in a manner as skillful as the conduct of the lovers was exasperating. Both these stories show the work of a trained hand, and have an atmosphere of culture and knowledge of society.

MINOR NOTICES.

New York. By Ellis H. Roberts. Two volumes. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.] Editor Roberts of Utica has written a good journalistic history of his State, which can be read with pleasure and profit; but when we have in mind some of the previous volumes of this "American Commonwealths" series, we find his work one of the least satisfactory of all. It is much too long; if he had treated the early history and the political annals with proper brevity, one volume would have given ample room for his tale, and we trust that no later writer in the series will be allowed to sin against proportion as he does. Mr. Roberts is only a clever compiler; he cannot light up his story, as an instructed specialist might, with occasional bits of unfamiliar knowledge. His State pride leads him greatly to exaggerate the part of New York in early American history; while any author who has ever lived in New York City he calmly appropriates as one of the glories of the State. New York properly claims Irving, Cooper, and Drake; Halleck and Bryant may be conceded to her on the score of long residence, but those "vast currents of song and fiction which have flowed from New York's hills and valleys into the ocean of literature" show that Mr. Roberts's fancy inhabits no "pent-up Utica," wherever his corporal frame may reside! His book is a good popular history, but it ought to have been a great deal better.

A History of Modern Europe. By C. A. Fyffe, M.A. Vol. II. [Henry Holt & Co. $2.50.] The second volume of Mr. Fyffe's judicious and well-balanced outline of modern European history begins with the Restoration of 1814, in which the allies, in fact, "restored" only so much as pleased them, and relates the story of the years of reaction from the great Revolution until a new spirit of reform burst forth in 1848. Mr. Fyffe's great candor, for an Englishman, appears in his opening pages on the probable good results that would have followed upon Napoleon's success in his Russian campaign; and, in another direction, he would abate the rigor of the judgment usually pronounced on Lord Castlereagh. "Two more years of life . . . would have given Castlereagh a different figure in the history both of Greece and of America." But he died too soon, and "the vacant post was filled by Canning, by far the most gifted of the band of statesmen who had begun their public life in the school of Pitt." The chapter on Greece and Eastern affairs is very full; and Mr. Fyffe's whole work, the third volume of which he hopes to publish after a shorter interval than has elapsed between the first and the second, covers excellently a period in which histories of the first order are none too many.

The Conception of the Infinite: A Study in Psychological Analysis. By George S. Fullerton. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] The thesis of this able little volume is that a foreign and contradictory element is often inadvertently admitted as part of the conception of the infinite, which, being eliminated, the conception is in no respect inconceivable, and presents no unusual difficulties. The true conception of the infinite is not quantitative, but qualitative. Just as in Prof. Clifford's illustration, "a point is not to be regarded as a part of a line in any sense whatever." So no adding of finite to finite will have any tendency to bring us to a just idea of the infinite, which means "devoid of limits," and is thus qualitatively distinct from any accumulation of finites. This position, elaborately illustrated and defended by Professor Fullerton, as he reminds us to our consolation, in closing his discussion, is, after all, the popular one: the literary use of the word coincides with the proper metaphysical use.

The Conflict of East and West in Egypt. By John Eliot Bowen, Ph.D. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.] This careful compilation of recent Egyptian history is an expansion of a dissertation for the degree which Mr. Bowen worthily bears. Aided by the considerable literature which the Egyptian question has called out in later years in England, the author has traced the political and financial story of the debated land of the Nile from the time of Mehemet Ali, the Napoleon of Egypt, to the death of Gordon, of whom Mr. Bowen is an ardent admirer. The solution of the present difficulties, according to Mr. Bowen, is to be found in the assumption of full control of Egypt by England, and the complete dispersion of Turkish claims to suzerainty. We are not acquainted with any book on Egypt which is equal for handiness and thoroughness to this by Dr. Bowen.

The Philosophy of Education. By Johann Karl Friedrich Rosenkranz. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.] This is substantially the well-known and admirable translation by Miss Anna C. Brackett, rendered still more valuable by the thorough revision and conscientious editing of W. T. Harris. That which was of purely local and temporary interest in Rosenkranz's treatise is here omitted; that which was obscure to the general reader, by reason of its condensed technical style, is made plain by a paraphrastic rendering. A complete analysis of the book serves as a table of contents, and substantially as an index. A still more complete analysis and commentary is appended to each paragraph throughout the book. Thus this treatise of Rosenkranz, which now for nearly forty years has been acknowledged the most complete and satisfactory exposition of pedagogics as a system ever published, is brought within the intellectual grasp of every teacher. No other author handles the whole subject with such masterly strength and brings every department of education so unflinchingly to the highest tests of philosophical principles. No other book is more capable of enlarging and ennobling a teacher's ideal of his vocation, and of inciting and enabling him to fulfill his high ideal.

These Degenerate Days is a rhymed address to James Russell Lowell, written by Rev. M. J. Savage on reading "Credidimus Jovem Regnare" in the February Atlantic. Mr. Savage combats the position taken by Mr. Lowell in that poem, by which, indeed, the latter's reputation is rather diminished than increased. Certainly, it is no advance from the Cathedral to the Atlantic wail. With Mr. Savage's main thought one can fully sympathize; but when he takes in hand not only Lowell, but also Holmes and Wordsworth, in his enthusiasm for the "Science" to which he is pleased to impute all human progress, he calls attention too emphatically to his own narrowness, and the contrast, which his verse can ill bear, with these masters. The conceit which can set down Wordsworth as "senile," because of that magnificent sonnet, "The ¹² A Plucky One. By Mrs. George E. Spencer. Cassell & Co. $1.25.

¹³ Half Married. Agamé Gainé. By Annie Bliss McConnell. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.

¹⁴ A Zealot in Tulle. By Mrs. Wildrick. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.

world is too much with us," is certainly as much proof of "degenerate days" in thought and poetry as any sins Mr. Lowell has committed; and we should candidly advise Mr. Savage to strive after a little such "senility" for the improvement of his doggerel verse, as well as after an appreciation of some aspects of life as to which Holmes, Lowell, and Wordsworth are quite incapable of suffering rebuke from him. [George H. Ellis.]

World Biographies.

Edward Garrett. This is the "nom de plume" of Mrs. Isabella Fyvie Mayo. She is of true Scotch descent, though born in Bedford Street, Strand, London, 1843, where her parents were living at the time. Her father came to London, when a young man, from a homestead in Buchan, which had been held for nearly three hundred years by his ancestors, and spent his life in the house he then chose as his home. The mother, though born in London, was of an influential family in Aberdeen. When Isabella was only eight years old the father died, but so strong was the influence of his life upon her, that he became an abiding presence in her life, and appears as the foundation of many characters in her books. Not brilliant in scholarship, she labored for success, and it was hard work and persistent effort that at last gave her power to command her audiences. She began to write at fifteen. For nearly seven years she labored with little recognition, but when at the age of twenty-four her Premiums Paid to Experience appeared, it was seen to be a book written because it had to be, and from that time on Mrs. Mayo has not lacked for readers. In her girlhood she was fortunate, like many others, to count Mrs. S. C. Hall as a friend and adviser, and to her kindly aid and encouragement she owes very much, for the years that followed were full of hard work and stern struggle; yet out of these years was born her quick sympathy with and keen discernment of the needs of that large class, the world's workers, and from this has come her power to hold out the helping hand, as she does in most of her books, to the patient but often over-laden toilers of today, over-laden with sin, or care, or the burdens cast upon them by others. Her writings are full, not of theories of life, but of hand-to-hand struggles with its realities, and are not so much restful books as helpful ones, to those who feel that the odds in the battle of life are against them. There is much of quaint Scotch humor, as well as a cheery hopefulness, in her writings. In 1868 she married a lawyer of London, with whom for the next seven years her life was most happily spent, and it was during this time that she visited Canada. In 1877 Mrs. Mayo became a widow, and since then she has made Aberdeen her home, where she is surrounded by young people, and devotes herself to an adopted son and to her literary work. Like many another author she suffers from the want of an international copyright. She has written much verse, but it has never been gathered into a volume, and is little known to American readers. The best of her books are these:

Premiums Paid to Experience.
Crooked Places.
Occupations of a Retired Life.
By Still Waters.

Crust and Cake.
Gold and Dross.
Doing and Dreaming.
Family Fortunes.
Her Object in Life.
The House by the Works.
At any Cost.

And of these most readers would give the preference to the first five.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

The "Mermaid Series" of Old Dramatists. Messrs. Vizetelly & Co. of London have begun the publication of "the best plays of the old dramatists" in a series of monthly volumes under the above title. The first volume, devoted to Christopher Marlowe, is admirable in its way; and if those that are to follow maintain the same high standard, the series cannot fail to be a success. It contains a "General Introduction" of twenty pages by the editor of the series, Mr. John Addington Symonds, "on the drama of Elizabeth and James considered as the main product of the renaissance in England." In the closing paragraph Mr. Symonds says:

The object of the series . . . will have been accomplished if the English of the Victorian age be induced to study the best pieces of Shakespeare's fellow-workers, and to comprehend how full and how superb a picture they present of the large and noble life of our Elizabethan ancestors. Only in this way can the reading public understand the truth of what I have attempted to establish, namely, that the Drama is the chief artistic utterance of the Renaissance in England, and that in England the Renaissance was permeated with the free, pure, honest, stalwart spirit of the Reformation.

This introductory essay is followed by another of twenty pages on the life and works of Marlowe, by Mr. Havelock Ellis, editor of the volume. Then come the plays selected as the author's "best," namely, the two parts of Tamburlaine the Great, Doctor Faustus, The Jew of Malta, and Edward the Second. Each has a brief historical and bibliographical introduction, and foot-notes to the text, explaining obsolete words, obscure allusions, various readings, etc. The text is printed without expurgation, as that of the entire series will be. An Appendix gives an account of Edward Alleyn, famous both as actor and manager, whose etched portrait forms a frontispiece to the volume; also the old ballad of Doctor Faustus, and a curious note on Marlowe's "damnable opinions and judgment of religion and scorn of Gods worde," from the Harleian MSS. All the work appears to be done with scholarly care and ability.

The book is a post-octavo of more than 450 pages, excellently printed on fine paper, and sold in England for half a crown, or 62 cents in our money. It ought to be had here for a dollar, making allowance for the barbarian tax our government imposes on foreign literature. Published in as good style in this country, it would probably be priced at $1.50, if not more.

The following volumes of the series, as announced, will be devoted to Massinger, Middleton, Beaumont and Fletcher (2 vols.), Webster and Cyril Tourneur, Shirley, Otway, Ford, Thomas Heywood, etc.

Dr. Ingleby's Edition of "Cymbeline."
A correspondent in Madison, Wis., inquires for the publisher of this book, the last work of the lamented author. He says he has ordered it from New York and London, but has not been able to obtain it. The London man writes to ask him who publishes it. We are somewhat surprised at the lack of enterprise on the part of the New York dealer; but we have long been used to the ignorance or indifference of the average London bookseller concerning books which he does not have in stock when he receives an order for them. Dr. Ingleby's Cymbeline is published by Trübner & Co., one of the best-known houses in the city; and any bookseller there ought either to know the fact or to be able to ascertain it in two minutes, if he would take the trouble to look at trade-lists or catalogues which he should certainly have in possession.

"The Shakespeare-Shapleigh Entanglement." This is the title of an interesting article in the May Atlantic, which comes to hand just as we are writing. It is made up of a series of letters which tend to show that the famous Kesselstadt death-mask, supposed by some excellent judges to be that of Shakespeare, is really that of a Sir William Shapleigh or Shapley, who, according to certain documentary evidence, died on the 23d of April, 1616, or the same day with Shakespeare. One of the letters also refers to a copy of the Lucrece bearing date in 1596 (no edition between 1594 and 1598 has been known to the editors and critics), and containing "a dedication by Shakespeare himself to William Heminge," a brother of the John Heminge who was one of the compilers of the Folio of 1623. The writer of the letter says: "Here is the mysterious initialed 'W. H.' of the dedication of that volume, which has puzzled everybody so long." By "that volume" he appears to mean the folio aforesaid, but he evidently had in mind the 1609 edition of the Sonnets. We do not propose to give an abstract of the correspondence, which the reader will of course want to peruse at length in the magazine. It is introduced, we may add, by a letter from Mr. Justin Winsor of the Harvard Library. As Ben-edick says in Much Ado, "I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it; knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence." Yet it may be a "gull" after all. We decline to commit ourself upon the question until we have heard from Chicago. The Tribune man there will tell us how to take it.

Abraham Lincoln's "Shakespeare." The Philadelphia Press has the following interesting note, which we reprint for the benefit of many readers who may not see that journal:

There is or ought to be somewhere a travel-worn Shakespeare which deserves to be shrined at Washington. Robert Lincoln is fond of saying that his father never traveled without having his copy of Shakespeare packed in a box with him. In the odd moments of cases and trials, in desolate court houses, in the cheerless rooms of more desolate hotels, in the dirt and discomfort of railroad traveling—and few of us know what railroad traveling was on the long stretches of Illinois roads thirty years ago—Abraham Lincoln read this worn copy of Shakespeare, committed great stretches to memory, until, as most men know, he was able to match the acquaintance of most actors with greater passages of the great plays. It is of still more interest, in connection with Mr. Wilson Barrett's theory of "Hamlet," that Lincoln once asked Hackett,

"Why do you actors always play Hamlet as an irresolute, vacillating, vague, middle-aged sort of a man?" "Because he was," said Hackett, with the acute certainty of the actor. "But he was not," said Lincoln; "he was young, impetuous, full of action, prompt. He is always doing something. The play is full of it, and he ought to be played as a young man." I was privileged, the other day, to hear Walt Whitman express his opinion of these conflicting theories of "Hamlet." Said the old man in the slow, ponderous, hesitating tone in which he often pauses for a word, but never for an idea, "Is not that the mystery, the wonder, the fun of it, as the slang word would have it, that Hamlet combines both those phases, the uncontrollable impulse, aggressive temperament, and at the same time the meditative, philosophic, anxious, hesitating man? Is not this the interest of the character which has caused it to be overlaid with great accumulations, which have hidden the poet's real purpose—if he had one?"

PERIODICALS.

Two articles in the Andover Review for April possess unusual interest. One is Rev. S. L. Loomis's account of "The Growth of Modern Cities," in which a great mass of facts and comparisons are presented in a striking way and with much moral effect; the other is the editorial estimate of Henry Ward Beecher, which is by far the ablest statement of his character we have yet seen. This is a singularly calm, self-balanced, but powerful statement of the elements of Mr. Beecher's personality. It deserves separate publication.

The relations and interests of the United States and China are discussed most pessimistically by A. A. Hayes in the Atlantic for May; our relations, he thinks, are as bad as they can be, and we have no interests. W. C. Langdon reviews with animation the career of Marco Minghetti, the last survivor of the Cavour-Mazzini group of Italian patriots. A thoughtful article on the decline of duty, by George Frederic Parsons, deals boldly with the serious vice of the period, the decay of the sense of personal responsibility as displayed in the race for wealth, the growth of trades unions, and the corruption of politics. A more seriously severe indictment of existing social conditions we do not remember to have read. The glimpse of Emerson's boyhood presented by J. Elliot Cabot affords little that is not in some form already familiar. There is a pleasing story, "The Courting of Sister Wisby," by Sarah Orne Jewett. Mr. Aldrich's poem on "The Last Cæsar" contains ten exquisite lines on the outlook at sundown from the old garden of the Tuileries. We cannot repress astonishment at Mr. Aldrich's effort to rhyme "guard" with "esplanade," and "façade" with "charred."

Harper's for May has an agreeable glorification of the leading characters in the literary movement at the South, illustrated with a dozen portraits. It must be confessed that the magazine and newspaper chronicler nowadays fishes with a close-meshed net. A charming article on actors and acting by C. Coquelin is alone more than worth the price of this number of Harper's, for it brings out clearly the eminent artist's doctrine that "art is not identification, but representation;" and enforces vigorously the assertion, "I am always on the side of nature, and against naturalism." The portraits of contemporary actors of note in various parts add much to the interest of M. Coquelin's observations.

A beautifully illustrated account of a tour through the Yellowstone Park, by Alice Wellington Rollins, provokes envious desire to follow the path of westward travel. Mr. Howells continues the diaphanous thread of "April Hopes;" there is a good story of a deaf-mute by W. H. Bishop; and Mr. Warner adds another installment to his depressing notes on Mexico.

The Thackeray letters continue with unabated interest in Scribner's Magazine for May. Their friendly references to Dickens are pleasant to read, but the chief and lasting interest of these epistolary fragments lies in the fact that they are a personal revelation of the inner motives and feelings which inspired the genius of the writer. Commander Chadwick's article on the development of the steamship is well fortified with statistics, and that of Prof. Shaler on the forests of North America shows that in the matter of forestry we are not as badly off as we might be. The illustrations of both articles are admirable. Mr. Stimson's story of "The Residuary Legatee" ends with a brilliant dash of comedy. "Marse Archie's Fight," by Maria Blunt, is a story to be read and admired. The verse of the number includes a last poem by Philip Bourke Marston, with a briefly eloquent note by Mrs. Moulton; and an ethereal lyric, "Lohengrin," by Susan Coolidge. The strength and individuality of Scribner's become more and more apparent with every successive number. It has a field of its own and no rivals.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The early publication of a little volume entitled Life and Public Services of Gen. J. W. Phelps, by Mr. Cecil Hampden Cutts Howard, is announced by Frank E. Housh & Co., Brattleboro, Vt.

—At the auction sale of the library of the late Prof. E. C. Mitchell, at Philadelphia, April 16, a copy of The General Laws and Liberties of the Massachusetts Colony, 8vo, morocco, Cambridge, 1672, was sold for $2.00. Two copies of this book (which is very rare) brought at the Brinley sale in New York in 1878, $130 and $77.50 respectively.

—"Thorold King," author of that romantic tale Haschisch, issued last season by A. C. McClurg & Co., proves to be Dr. Charles Gatchell, of Chicago.

—"Washington Irving at Home," a chapter of reminiscences by Clarence Cook, with a frontispiece portrait engraved by Johnson, will appear in the May Century.

—The Academy reports that Herbert Spencer is writing down reminiscences of his early years "which may possibly grow to the dimensions of an autobiography."

—The first volume to be published of the New History of English Literature, announced by Macmillan & Co., will be the second in chronological order—Elizabethan Literature, by Mr. George Saintsbury.

—Joel Munsell's Sons of Albany have now in course of publication The Campaigns of Carleton and Burgoyne from Canada in 1776-1777, "being a diary by Lieutenant William Digby, of the British army." This important work, which will be edited by James Phinney Baxter, A.M., the compiler of the Trelawny Papers, will consist of 300 pages, printed from old English type, on antique paper, and will form the sixteenth volume of "Munsell's Historical Series." Only a limited edition will be published.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons announce that when they have completed the publication of their edition of Franklin's Works, of which the third volume is about to be delivered to subscribers, they will follow this with an edition of the Writings of Washington, printed in similar style. The set, which will probably be comprised in twelve volumes, will contain the diaries, the addresses, and the correspondence, and will include a number of papers not before printed. The limited edition printed of Franklin's Works is now all subscribed for.

—Rev. W. C. Winslow (429 Beacon Street, Boston), treasurer for America of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, reports that of the $8,751 expended during the last year, $3,920 was from the United States. It is well to remember that the Fund is absolutely dependent on voluntary contributions for the continuance of its noble and world-important work during the present year; and that all donors of not less than $5.00 are entitled to the season's Memoir, and can secure past memoirs at $5.00 each. This nominal rate is made on behalf of the many scholars of limited resources who need the books.

—Our New York contemporary The Epoch is to be congratulated on the addition to its staff of Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole, a journalist of exceptional ability and experience, who has for some years been connected with the Philadelphia Press.

—The Rev. Henry Woods Perris, now on his way to represent the British Unitarians at the Boston meetings in May, hopes to lecture a few times in America on "English Characteristics" and "Some Eminent Englishmen now Living."

—The first book by Mr. Thomas Nelson Page is announced by the Scribners under the title of In Ole Virginia. It will consist of a number of the author's most clever stories descriptive of life in Virginia, including "Marse Chan," all of which are especially strong in that faithful portraiture of Southern scenes and people which has won for Mr. Page so wide an audience of readers. A handsome cover has been designed for the book by the Tiffany Art Company of New York.

—By arrangement with the English publishers, D. C. Heath & Co. will add to their list of pedagogical books Notes on the Early Training of Children, by Mrs. Frank Malleson, a book which has already had a reception in England that strongly commends it to the attention of mothers and educators.

—The collection of Colonial Ballads, by Mrs. Margaret J. Preston, shortly to be published, is not, as we inadvertently asserted in our penultimate issue, a compilation, but is made up of Mrs. Preston's original verse.

—The success of Marion Harland's Common Sense in the Household, of which nearly 150,000 copies have now been sold, has induced the publishers to have the work translated into German, and an edition in that language will shortly be issued.

—The partnership of Cupples, Upham & Co. expired by limitation on April 1, and Mr. J. G. Cupples has withdrawn from the "Old Corner Bookstore" and established himself at 94 Boylston Street, where he will deal in special lines of books after the manner of the New York uptown bookstores, and will also send out occasionally books bearing the imprint of Cupples & Co. The "Old Corner" passes into the hands of Damrell & Upham, both members of the former firm, by whom the business will be continued on the traditional lines of that historical literary focus.

—Ticknor & Co. publish on May 7 the Final Memorials of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, by Samuel Longfellow; The Devil's Hat, a story of the Pennsylvania oil regions, by Melville Philips; and Lights and Shadows of a Life, a novel by Madeleine Vinton Dahlgren.

—A new magazine called Dress, to be devoted "to the practical and beautiful in women's and children's clothing, physical culture, hygiene, and kindred subjects," conducted by Mrs. Annie Jenness Miller, is to make its initial appearance in New York in May.

—Was Shakespeare Shapleigh? "A Correspondence in Two Entanglements," edited by Justin Winsor, is to be issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. early in May. This house will also issue next month the remaining volumes in their new edition of Browning's works; The Appeal to Life, a volume of sermons, by Rev. Theodore T. Munger; and a volume of The Phillips Exeter Lectures delivered at that academy by Dr. Hale, President McCosh, Dr. Phillips Brooks, President Porter, and others, during the year 1885-6.

—Mr. W. D. Howells has prepared for the Youth's Companion an autobiographical sketch of his boyhood life in Ohio. It is called "A Year in a Log Cabin," and will be published, with several illustrations, complete in the issue of the Companion for May 12th.

—Publication of Mr. J. Elliot Cabot's Memoir of Emerson has been postponed until the end of the year.

—The fourth and concluding volume of Halkett and Laing's Dictionary of Anonymous and Pseudonymous Literature is to be published immediately in this country by Laughton, Macdonald & Co.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

April.

The Contemporary Review.—The Call of Savonarola. Emilio Castelar—The Day After Tomorrow. Robert Louis Stevenson—The Service of Man. R. H. Hutton—Commercial Museums. Kenric B. Murray—The Imaginative Art of the Renaissance. Vernon Lee—Prohibition in the United States. Axel Gustafson—The Decline of the Drama. Harry Quilter—Captain Conder and Modern Critics. Prof. Robertson Smith—For Better, for Worse. Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman"—The Plan of Campaign. Samuel Laing—Contemporary Life and Thought in Germany. Dr. H. Geffcken—Contemporary Record: Church History. Prof. G. T. Stokes.

The National Review.—England's Unreadiness for War—Madame de Maintenon. Rev. H. N. Oxenham—Mr. Gladstone's Claims to Confidence. Earl Fortescue—Wanted: An English Musical Style. Frederick J. Crowest—The Endowed Schools Inquiry. Lord Colchester—Modern Greek Myths. J. Theodore Bent—Party Politics and National Life. W. Earl Hodgson—The History of an Old English Family. T. E. Kebbel—Representation of the Laity. Canon Gregory.

Nineteenth Century.—Science and Pseudo-Science. Prof. Huxley—A "Friend of God." Matthew Arnold—The Closer Union of the Empire. The Hon. John Merriman, Member of the Cape Legislative Assembly—Athletes of the Present and Past. H. Ellington—An Act for the Suspension of Parliament. H. D. Traill—England and Europe. Edward Dicey—Demeter and the Pig. Andrew Lang—A Militia Regiment. Lord Wolmer, M. P.—A Glimpse of Russia. The Countess of Galloway—The "Nineteenth Century School" in Art. Walter Armstrong—On Well-Meant Nonsense about Emigration. The Right Hon. G. Osborne Morgan, M. P.—A Warning to the S. P. R. The Rev. Dr. Jessopp—The Liberal Unionists and Coercion. 1. By the Hon. Reginald B. Brett. 2. By the Right Hon. Earl Cowper.

Blackwood's Magazine.—Sarracinesca. (Conclusion.) F. Marion Crawford—Free Trade and Depressed Trade. A. Williamson—Irene—Are Ironclads Doomed?—Diane de Breteuille. (Conclusion.)—The Old Saloon: James Fraser, Second Bishop of Manchester. Randolph

Caldecott: his Early Art Career, etc.—The Fortnightly Review and Russia. Col. Malleon, C. S. I.—The Song of the Bell. Trans. by Sir Theodore Martin, K. C. B.—Two Months of the Session.

Drama, "Lady Clancarty" and the Historical. Macmillan's.

Mowbray Morris. Westminster Rev.

Greville Memoirs, Conclusion of the. Macmillan's.

Hazlitt, William. George Saintsbury. Cornhill.

Jubilee, a Literary. Murray's.

Opera, English. Carl Rosa.

May.

Acting and Actors. C. Coquelin. Harper's.

Books, the Best, Popular Appreciation of. W. D. Howells. Harper's.

Emerson's Boyhood, A Glimpse of. J. Elliot Cabot. Atlantic.

Greek Question, Present Status of the. Prof. E. J. James. Popular Science.

Literature, the Recent Movement in Southern. C. W. Coleman, Jr. Harper's.

Shakespeare-Shapleigh Entanglement, The. Atlantic.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Art.

CLAUDE GELLÉE DE LORRAIN. By Owen J. Dullea. Scribner & Welford.

Biography.

CHARLES READE. A Memoir. Compiled Chiefly from his Literary Remains. By Charles L. Reade and the Rev. Compton Reade. Harper & Bros. Franklin Square Library. 25c.

TWO ROYAL LIVES. By Dorothea Roberts. Illus. Scribner & Welford. $1.25

MEMOIRS OF MY LIFE. By John Charles Frémont. With a Sketch of the Life of Senator Benton. By Jessie Benton Frémont. Parts I and II. Belford, Clarke & Co. Each 50c.

PRÆTERITA. By John Ruskin, LL.D. Vol. II. Chap. X. Crossmount. John Wiley & Sons. 25c.

Fiction.

KNIGHT ERRANT. By Edna Lyall. Harper & Bros. Franklin Square Library. 20c.

THE CONFESSIONS OF CLAUD. A Romance. By Edgar Fawcett. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

GEBIR AND COUNT JULIAN. By Walter Savage Landor. Cassell's National Library. 10c.

DROPS OF BLOOD. By Lily Curry. J. S. Ogilvie & Co. Fireside Series.

THE WOODLANDERS. By Thomas Hardy. Harper & Bros. 75c.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES. By H. Rider Haggard. Harper & Bros. 75c.

SABINA ZEMBRA. By William Black. Harper & Bros. $1.25

NORWOOD; OR, VILLAGE LIFE IN NEW ENGLAND. By Henry Ward Beecher. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25

WOODLAND TALES. By Julius Stinde. Thomas Whitaker. $1.00

THEOPHILUS TRENT. Old Times in the Oak Openings. By Benj. F. Taylor. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.00

SARRACINESCA. By F. Marion Crawford. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

DINAH MITE. A Story for To-day. By Brenda Thomas Whitaker. 90c.

"THAT CHILD." By the Author of "The Atelier du Lys." Thomas Whitaker. $1.25

HANNAH THURSTON. By Bayard Taylor. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50c.

THE LOVELY WANG. A Bit of China. By the Hon. Lewis Wingfield. Henry Holt & Co. Paper 25c.

THE FEUD OF OAKFIELD CREEK. A Novel of California Life. By Josiah Royce. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

THE TRAGEDY OF BRINKWATER. A Novel. By Martha Livingston Moody. Cassell & Co. $1.00

WEE WIFE. A Novel. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.

WORTH WINNING. A Novel. By Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.

HARCOURT; OR, A SOUL ILLUMINED. By Annie Somers Gilchrist. J. B. Lippincott Co. Second edition. $1.25

History.

A HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINES OF COMETS. By Andrew D. White. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 25c.

PHILADELPHIA, 1681-1887. A History of Municipal Development. By Edward P. Allinson and Boies Penrose. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University.

RAMBLES IN OLD BOSTON, NEW ENGLAND. By the Rev. E. G. Porter. Illustrated by George R. Tolman. Cupples, Upham & Co.

A HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD. By the Hon. G. C. Brodrick. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. 80c.

Literature and Language.

A LOOK ROUND LITERATURE. By Robert Buchanan. London: Ward & Downey. New York: Scribner & Welford.

POPULAR TALES AND FICTIONS. Their Migrations and Transformations. By M. A. Clouston. In two volumes. Scribner & Welford.

A HANDBOOK TO DANTE. By Giovanni A. Scartazzini. Translated from the Italian with Notes and Additions. By Thomas Davidson. Ginn & Co. $1.25

STUDIES IN ITALIAN LITERATURE, CLASSICAL AND MODERN. Also the Legend of "Il Cenacolo." By Catherine Mary Phillimore. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington. New York: Scribner & Welford.

THE DEDICATION OF BOOKS. To Patron and Friend. A Chapter on Literary History. By Henry B. Wheatley. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25

AMERICAN LITERATURE: AND OTHER PAPERS. By Edwin Percy Whipple. With Introductory Note by John G. Whittier. Ticknor & Co.

ENGLISH WRITERS. An Attempt Towards a History of English Literature. By Henry Morley. Cassell & Co. Vol. 1.

Pamphlets.

THE BEST 100 BOOKS. E. L. Kellogg & Co.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT OF ST. LOUIS. By Marshall S. Snow. Baltimore: N. Murray. 25c.

THE LATEST STUDIES ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS. By J. B. Harrison. Indian Rights Association.

CAPTAIN GLAZIER AND HIS LAKE. An Inquiry. Ivison, Blakeman & Co.

QUARTERLY INDEX TO THE LEONARD SCOTT PUBLICATION COMPANY'S PERIODICALS. Vol. I. No. I. January, 1887.

INDIANA HISTORICAL SOCIETY PAMPHLETS No. 3. The Acquisition of Louisiana. By Judge Thomas M. Cooley. Indianapolis: The Bowen-Merrill Co.

Poetry.

IN DIVERS TONES. By C. G. D. Roberts. D. Lothrop & Co.

ARTELOISE. A Romance of King Arthur and Knights of the Round Table. By J. Dunbar Hylton. The Hylton Publishing Co.

SONGS AND SONNETS. By John Howell. John P. Morton & Co. 60c.

ENOCH ARDEN, AND OTHER POEMS. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited with Notes by William J. Rolfe. Ticknor & Co. 75c.

POEMS. By Edgar Allan Poe. Select. Acme Printing Co.

PANSIES. By A. D. T. W. [Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.] Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

THE KERNEL AND THE HUSK. Letters on Spiritual Christianity. By the Author of Philochristus and Onesimus. Roberts Bros. $1.50

DAFFODILS. By A. D. T. W. [Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.] Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Religious and Theological.

THE BIRD'S NEST, AND OTHER SERMONS. For Children of All Ages. By Rev. Samuel Cox. Thomas Whitaker. $1.50

ECHOES OF BIBLE HISTORY. By W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D. Thomas Whitaker. $1.50

PULPIT TREES AND HOMILETIC UNDERGROWTH. By Rev. Thomas Kelley. Funk & Wagnalls.

SERMONS. By the Rev. George Leeds. With a Preface by the Rev. Thomas F. Davies. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.75

DAILY PRAYERS FOR YOUNGER BOYS. By the Rev. William Baker. Thomas Whitaker. 25c.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL DOCTRINE AND CHURCH UNITY. By Rev. C. M. Butler, D.D. Thomas Whitaker. 60c.

OUR FATHER. Illustrations of the Lord's Prayer. From Saints of Every Name and of All Times. Compiled by Annie L. Hyde. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00

THESE DEGENERATE DAYS. By Minot J. Savage. Geo. H. Ellis.

CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL HANDBOOK TO THE REVELATION OF JOHN. By Friedrich Dürstedeck. Translated from the German and edited with notes by Henry E. Jacobs, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls.

Science and Philosophy.

PRISONERS OF POVERTY. Women Wage-Workers, their Trades and their Lives. By Helen Campbell. Roberts Bros. $1.00

PRACTICAL CHEIROSPHY. A Synoptical Study of the Science of the Hand. By Edward Heron-Allen. With Explanatory Plates and Diagrams by Rosamond Brunel Hossley. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

NATURAL LAW IN THE BUSINESS WORLD. By Henry Wood. Lee & Shepard.

YACHTS AND YACHTING. Illus. By Fred. S. Cozzens and Others. Cassell & Co. $2.00

COOKERY FOR INVALIDS. By Thomas J. Murrey. White, Stokes & Allen. 50c.

A CENTURY OF ELECTRICITY. By T. C. Mendenhall. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

AGRICULTURE IN SOME OF ITS RELATIONS WITH CHEMISTRY. By F. H. Storer. 2 vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00

THE FACTORS OF ORGANIC EVOLUTION. By Herbert Spencer. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00

LEVELLING; BAROMETRIC, TRIGONOMETRIC, AND SPIRAL. By I. O. Baker. D. Van Nostrand. 50c.

NEW BOOKS.

DANTE.

A Sketch of his Life and Works. By MAY ALDEN WARD. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, price $1.25.
A delightful study of the Poet's life and works, written with remarkable clearness and lucidity, both of style and arrangement. The book contains an index and a bibliography of the most useful works on the subject.

DANTE AND HIS CIRCLE.

With the Italian Poets preceding him. (1100-1200-1300.) A Collection of Lyrics edited and translated in the Original Meters. By DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. A new American edition, revised and rearranged, and containing a Preface to the first English edition. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, gilt, price $2.00.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI'S COLLECTED WORKS.

Edited, with Preface and Notes, by WILLIAM M. ROSSETTI. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, gilt, price $6.00.
CONTENTS: Vol. I. Poems—Prose Tales—and Literary Papers. Vol. II. Translations—Prose—Notices of Fine Arts.

The original poems are rearranged, so far as was practicable and convenient, in order of date. Eight minor poems, which appeared in print while Rossetti was alive, but which were not included in his volumes, are added; also twenty-two others (besides some "versicles and fragments"), of which the great majority have never yet seen the light. All the prose writings of Rossetti are also printed.

MRS. SIDDONS.

By NINA H. KENNARD, author of "Rachel Félix." The fifteenth volume in the Famous Women Series. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

BETWEEN WHILES.

A Collection of Stories. By HELEN JACKSON ("H. H."). 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, price $1.25.

The opening story, "The Inn of the Golden Pear," occupies more than one-third of the book, and is printed from Mrs. Jackson's original mss.

LONDON OF TODAY.

An Illustrated Handbook for the Season. 1887. By CHARLES EYRE PASCOE. 12mo, $1.50.

This handbook will be found both practical and entertaining, and so not undeserving the patronage of wayfarers, tourists, and holiday visitors generally.

Our complete descriptive catalogue sent.
* Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

THE SEASHORE SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE TENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE

Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute,
AT COTTAGE CITY, MASS.,

W. J. ROLFE, A. M., President,

Will begin Monday, July 11, 1887, and continue five weeks.

DEPARTMENTS: Art; Book-keeping and Writing; Botany; Chemistry; Civics; Elocution; English Literature (under the charge of the President); French; German; Geography; Geology and Mineralogy; History; Kindergarten; Latin and Greek; Mathematics; Microscopy; Vocal Music; Pianoforte Music; Pedagogy; Phonography; Physics; Physiology; Zoology.

Good table-board at low rates on the Institute grounds.

For Circular giving full information, address

BENJAMIN W. PUTNAM,
Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass.

For Sale—"Fewacres."

THE HOMESTEAD AT FARMINGTON, MAINE, so long occupied by the late Jacob Abbott and his sisters, is now offered for sale. The property consists of a roomy and rambling gold-furnished Cottage, with outbuildings, containing in all fifteen or more rooms, and something over two acres of land, charmingly situated just outside the village, and combining seclusion with convenience in an unusual degree. With a few trifling exceptions, the entire premises are in good order. The house is home-like and comfortable, and the grounds, richly endowed by nature, and tastefully improved by Mr. Abbott himself, are adorned with paths, terraces, groves, hedges, seats, arbors, and magnificent elms. The beauties of Farmington as a New England village, its excellent school privileges, the famed loveliness of the Sandy River Valley, and the proximity of the Rangeley Lakes, Old Blue, and other pleasure resorts in Western Maine, make "Fewacres," even apart from its associations, a singularly desirable estate for a family wishing a summer abode or a country residence all the year round. Price low. Address the executor,

EDWARD ABBOTT,
11 Dana Street, Cambridge, Mass.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

Routledge's superb five volume edition, with illustrations from designs by De Neuville, Bayard, Morin, Valnay, and other eminent French Artists.

MCDONNELL BROTHERS beg leave to announce that they have arranged with Messrs. George Routledge & Sons for the exclusive sale of the above work.

An edition will be ready about May 15th, and will be sold only by subscription.

Parties wishing to sell this work on the subscription plan please write for terms etc., to

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES,

Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS,

25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

NOW READY, AND MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS.

Descriptive and Priced CATALOGUE

Of an Interesting Collection of Books in Good Condition.

Henry Miller, Bookseller and Importer,
79 Nassau Street, New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 181 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

Spring and Summer 1887 WOOLENS.

We are in receipt of one of the finest exhibits in the market. Novelties from London and Paris. Full assortment of Staple Woollens, as usual.

We guarantee the excellence of our garments in all particulars.

GEORGE LYON & CO.,
TAILORS,

No. 459 Washington Street, Boston,
BETWEEN TEMPLE PLACE AND WINTER ST.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

American School and College Dramas.
EDITED BY EDWARD ROTH.

The Gray Tigers of Smithville; or, He Would and He Wouldn't. An Extravaganza, in Three Acts. Supplied by booksellers, or mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.
1125 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

"THE WORLD WENT WELL WITH YOU THEN,"
AND it will now if you are wise and drive out DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION with
D. K.'s.

They will do it every time, and will cure CONSTIPATION, neutralize the acidity of your stomach, and prevent HEARTBURN. Dr. MARK R. WOODBURY'S DYSPEPSIA KILLERS will be sent by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of 50 cents for a large box, or 25 cents for a trial box, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

MAY 14 1887
LIBRARY

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 10. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 323. Publishers.

113 BOSTON, MAY 14, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

WORD STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

By MARVIN R. VINCENT, D.D. The Synoptic Gospels Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistles of Peter, James, and Jude. 8vo, $4.00.

The scope of this scholarly and important contribution to the critical study of the text of the New Testament is broad and comprehensive, the work being the fruit of many years' laborious research. Dr. Vincent outlines the purpose of the work in these sentences from his preface: "The present work is an attempt in a field which, so far as I am aware, is not covered by any one book, though it has been carefully and ably worked by many scholars. Taking a position midway between the exegetical commentary and the lexicon and grammar, it aims to put the reader of the English Bible nearer to the stand-point of the Greek scholar, by opening to him the native force of the separate words of the New Testament in their lexical sense, their etymology, their history, their inflection, and the peculiarities of their usage by different evangelists and apostles."

THE STORY OF A NEW YORK HOUSE.

By H. C. BUNNER. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Cloth, 12mo, $1.25.

A strong story, outlining the great social changes wrought in New York City since the early part of the present century, dramatic in development and tender in feeling. The action is brought down nearly to the present time. Concerning the early chapters, the New York Evening Post said:

"In Mr. Bunner's 'Story of a New York House,' the first years of the century are picturesquely set before us, and in the treatment one perceives the union of grace and strength which may denote the work of a writer of the first contemporary rank in America."

NEW EDITION IN PAPER COVERS.

THE CHRISTMAS WRECK, AND OTHER STORIES.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Including: A Story of Assisted Fate, An Unhistoric Page, A Tale of Negative Gravity, The Cloverfields' Carriage, The Remarkable Wreck of the "Thomas Hyke," My Bull Calf, The Discourager of Heritancy, and A Borrowed Month. Price 50 cents. Also in cloth, 12mo, $1.25; uniform in both styles with THE LADY OF THE TIGER and OTHER STORIES.

"We are sometimes tempted to think that his finest and some like in such inimitable sketches as the Cloverfields' Carriage and An Unhistoric Page."—The Atlantic Monthly

JUST PUBLISHED.

DR. SEVIER.

By GEORGE W. CABLE. A new and cheaper edition, uniform with "Old Creole Days" and "The Grandissimes." 1 vol., 12mo, $1.25; also, in paper, 50 cents.

"It is a story that deepens and broadens and lightens, with an indescribable charm, over its deep study of human nature."—The Critic.

SECOND PART NOW READY.

THE BUCHHOLZ FAMILY.

Translated from the German. In two parts, cloth, 12mo, $1.25 each.

"The sketches are as graphic in their way as those of Dickens. They are very entertaining."—London Times.

* These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
742-745 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLAINS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 5 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated. COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PAPY'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

THE PERFECT WAY;

Or, The Finding of Christ. By ANNA BOWEN KINGSFORD (M.D. of the Faculty of Paris) and EDWARD MANTLAND (B.A. Cantab.). Revised and Enlarged Edition, being the first with the authors' names. Square 8vo, cloth, uncut tinted paper, $3.75.

"It is a book that will be largely read by students of esoteric philosophy, theosophists, and investigators of recondite branches of thought and philosophy."—Boston Transcript.

LIFE OF ROSINA, LADY LYTTON.

With Numerous Extracts from her Manuscript Autobiography and other Original Documents, published in Vindication of Her Memory. By LOUISA DEWEY, Literary Executrix to the Dowager Lady Lytton. With Steel Portrait and Fac-simile Letter. 8vo, cloth, $7.50.

"A book of painful interest."—St. James's Gazette.

ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS.

Ophelia, Juliet, Portia, Imogen, Desdemona, Rosalind, Beatrice. By HELEN FAUCIT, Lady Martin. Royal 8vo, with portrait, cloth, $3.60.

"This is one of the books we dare hardly criticize. . . . Altogether, we have seldom met with a book which has given us more refined enjoyment as we read and more original matter for meditation afterwards."—London Times.

New Volume of the

"HANDLEY CROSS SPORTING NOVELS." A LOOSE REIN.

By "WANDERER," author of "Across Country." With colored illustrations by G. Bowers. 8vo, cloth, $4.00.

SPORTS AND ANECDOTES OF BY-GONE DAYS

In England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, and the Sunny South. By C. T. S. BIRCH REYNARDSON, author of "Down the Road." With numerous illustrations in color. Demy 8vo, cloth, $4.50.

A COMTIST LOVER,

And Other Studies. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN, author of "The New Godiva," "A Tourist Idyl," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New Catalogue of Musical Literature ready. New Catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 Broadway, N. Y.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s

NEW BOOKS.

CONNECTICUT.

Vol. 10 of American Commonwealths. By ALEXANDER JOHNSTON, author of a "Hand-book of American Politics," Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy in the College of New Jersey. With a Map. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Professor Johnston was for years a resident of Connecticut, and has written of the State from full knowledge of its history, institutions, and achievements in industry, commerce, education, and social life.

THE POETIC AND DRAMATIC WORKS OF ROBERT
BROWNING.

An entirely New Edition from new electrotypes plates, after the latest revised English Edition. In six volumes, crown octavo. Vols. III and IV. Gilt top, $1.75 a volume; half calf, $3.00.

Volume III contains The Ring and the Book; Volume IV, Christmas Eve and Easter Day, with Men and Women, in a Balcony, Dramatis Personæ, Balaustion's Adventure, Prince Hohenstiel-Schwangau, and Flâne at the Fair.

The volumes represent the very best American work—with all the care, the taste, and the sound judgment in book-making which the Riverside Press has come to represent.—Christian Union (New York).

ZURY: THE MEANEST MAN IN SPRING COUNTY.

A Novel by JOSEPH KIRKLAND. With Frontispiece Illustration. 12mo, $1.50.

This is a striking story of the rugged pioneer era of Illinois, and depicts in strong lines the vigorous, stern life of the early settlers. It includes noteworthy types of character, careful studies of social conditions, deeply interesting incidents and situations, and is told with marked power.

RURAL HOURS.

By SUSAN FENIMORE COOPER. New Edition, abridged. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

A new and abridged edition of a book which, when published several years ago, was received with great favor. Mrs. Sarah J. Hale said of it: "The scenery described so charmingly is that surrounding her own fair home in Cooperstown. Out of these simple materials Miss Cooper has formed one of the most interesting volumes of the day." It is so agreeable a book, so attractively written, that it is amply entitled to a fresh lease of life and popular favor.

ANDOVER REVIEW

FOR MAY CONTAINS:

The "Andover Theory" of Future Probation, Thomas P. Field, D. D.;

The Social Composition of American Cities, Rev. Samuel Lane Loomis;

The Color Line in Worship. Testimony of the Educated Negro, Rev. Pearse Pinch;

The Origin of the Feudal System. II. Professor George B. Adams;

Mission Work in China. Rev. Edward A. Lawrence;

"The Emancipation of Massachusetts," Mr. Hamilton Andrews Hill;
Editorial, Christianity and its Modern Competitors. V. Pseudo-Christianity.

35 cents; $4.00 a year.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

READY NEXT WEEK.

I.

Volumes V and VI of Lecky's History of England
in the Eighteenth Century.

* The new volumes of Lecky's great work cover the period from the acknowledgment of the Independence of the United States in 1783 to the declaration of war with France in 1793. One more volume will complete the work.

12mo, cloth, price $3.95 per volume.

II.

Roundabout to Moscow; an Epicurean Journey.

By JOHN BELL BOUTON, author of "Round the Block."

The author's epicurean circuit for getting in and out of Russia includes nearly every country of Europe. This genial book gives, the author claims, the first truly American view of the land of Nihilists and novelists.

12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

III.

John Sevier, the Commonwealth Builder.

A sequel to "The Rear Guard of the Revolution." By JAMES R. GILMORE (Edmund Kirke).

The career of John Sevier, the founder of the State of Franklin, afterwards Tennessee, and first Governor of the State, was one of the most remarkable and thrilling in history. Mr. Gilmore has here given a little known but most stirring chapter of national history.

12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

D. APPLETON & CO.,

PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

LONGFELLOW.

FINAL MEMORIALS OF HENRY W. LONGFELLOW. By SAMUEL LONGFELLOW. 8vo, uniform with the "Life." With two new steel plates. In cloth, $3.00; half calf or half morocco, $5.50.

"The beauty of this treasure of a book, which makes us love and honor the lamented poet more and more, and which rounds out the beautiful record of a beautiful life."—Cambridge Tribune.

"What richness of revelation concerning his personal life is to be found in this book! Everything in this volume has the character of a summer afternoon about it. You are attracted to the life of the poet as you are drawn to his poetry, because he makes you forget the cares and anxieties of life."—Boston Herald.

"At the appearance of the 'Life,' we remarked upon the loveliness of spirit, the tenderness of feeling, and the amiability of temper that always characterized the poet. One rises from the present volume of 'Memorials' with a sense of the same qualities in him of whom it treats, and with a feeling that it was good to have spent so much time in the company of so beautiful a spirit."—Advertiser.

"This book introduces the reader into the most intimate life of the beloved poet. His sweetness and charm of nature, his playful gentleness, his fine discrimination and inclusive sympathies, are revealed here in a manner that could hardly be borne by any other character in literary history."—Traveller.

Sold by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co.'s LIST.

A FULL AND COMPREHENSIVE LIFE OF HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA. In crown 8vo, fancy covers, 50 cents; cloth, design stamped in gold and colors, 75 cents; or Fine Edition, on thick paper, handsome cloth, beveled boards, $1.25.

THE QUEEN: HER EARLY LIFE AND REIGN.

This volume contains 384 pages, illustrated with about 100 wood engravings. It is written by Mrs. L. VALENTINE, who is well known as a graceful writer and compiler of juvenile and historical works, and within its pages will be found a complete résumé of the home life of Victoria, as well as of the material and enlightened progress of England during the last fifty years, and can be recommended as a capital book to place in the hands of young and old.

Also, in small foolscap, 8vo, cloth, gilt, price 75 cents, printed in one color, on fine paper; or, a Choice Edition, printed in two colors, on thick paper, and elegantly bound in cloth, gilt, and gilt edges, price $1.25.

THE VICTORIA BIRTHDAY BOOK.

Containing portraits of all the members of the Royal Family on their respective birthdays, and selections from the Poets for every day in the year, with Ruled Memoranda pages, etc. The $1.25 edition has borders and ornaments specially engraved for it.

Visitors to Europe should provide themselves with a copy of the Fourteenth Edition of

MANNERS AND RULES OF GOOD SOCIETY;

Or, Solecisms to be Avoided. By a Member of the Aristocracy. This little manual has long since taken its place as the standard on all questions of Etiquette in English Society. In 12mo, cloth, price $1.25.

CONTENTS: Card Leaving—Paying Calls—Precedency—Royalty—Travelling Abroad—Drawing-rooms—Levées—Dinners—Parties—Weddings—At Homes—Garden Parties—Luncheons—Country House Visits, etc.

The popular science of Fencing is fully explained in

THE MODERN FENCER.

With the most recent means of attack and defense when engaged with an adversary. Illustrated with sketches showing the various positions of the body. By Captain T. GRIFFITHS, Professor of Fencing. 12mo, cloth, 50c.

Uniform with the above in size and price,

THE MODERN GYMNAST.

Being Practical Instructions on the Horizontal Bar, Parallel Bars, Vaulting Horse, Flying Trapeze, etc., Somersault Throwing, etc., with Description of the Apparatus. By CHARLES SPENCER. With 120 illustrations.

* For sale by all booksellers, or sent free by mail on receipt of price by

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., Publishers,
20 Lafayette Place, New York.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, MAY 14, 1887. No. 10.

CONTENTS.

RAMBLES IN OLD BOSTON	147
A MEMOIR OF CHARLES READE	147
MR. BUCHANAN'S LOOK ROUND LITERATURE	148
CLOUSTON'S POPULAR TALES AND FICTIONS	148
THE WOODLANDERS	149
MR. HORACE EATON WALKER'S POEMS	150
EGYPT AND PERSIA :
The Story of Ancient Egypt	150
The Story of Persia	150
A LIFE OF HENRY WARD BEECHER	151
PROF. MORLEY'S ENGLISH WRITERS	153
THE DEDICATION OF BOOKS	153
SERMONS :
Creed and Character	154
Bread in the Desert, and Other Sermons	154
The City Youth	154
MINOR FICTION :
Knight-Errant	154
Juanita	155
The Lovely Wang	155
The Feud of Oakfield Creek	155
MINOR NOTICES :
Watson's Phonographic Instructor	155
A Club of One	155
English as She is Taught	155
Livres des Enfants pour l'Étude du Français	155
Handy Helps, No. 1	155
Machine Politics and Money in Elections in New York City	156
On the Study of Literature	156
Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit	156
Enoch Arden and Other Poems	156
The Essentials of Perspective	156
Claude Gellée de Lorraine	156
Rural Hours	156
Etc., Etc., Etc.	156
ORIGINAL POETRY :
Literary Iconoclasm	152
James Berry Bensei	152
Lilla Pura	152
LUDWIG UHLAND	152
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	152
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES :
Samuel Minturn Peck	153
THE PERIODICALS	157
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe :
Mr. T. L. K. Oliphant's "The New English"	157
April Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society	157
NEWS AND NOTES	158
NOTES AND QUERIES. 821	158
ENGLISH OPINIONS	151
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	159
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	159

RAMBLES IN OLD BOSTON.*

POPULAR ignorance and popular indifference concerning historical antiquities are proverbial and are not easily overcome; but if anything can arouse the interest of Bostonians in the memorable ancient buildings still existing within the borders of this city, Mr. Porter's sumptuous volume will serve both as a stimulus to curiosity and as a storehouse of piquant knowledge. Mr. Porter has the unfailing enthusiasm of the true antiquarian; he has full command of his material; the topography of early Boston, its architectural appearance, the location of streets and dwellings are to him as present realities. Naturally he pursues his investigations chiefly at the North End, where he discovers and describes upwards of three score structures, concerning each of which he has a collection of unfamiliar details gathered at much pains from obscure sources. To these descriptions Mr. Tolman has contributed a series of drawings which have been printed in brown ink from plates 4 1-2 by 6 3-4 inches in breadth and length; the illustrations of themselves are a treat to eye and mind. The book is a stately quarto got up with a high degree of mechanical excellence, and in every respect deserves earnest praise. Not only every Bostonian, but every New Englander and every American will find in its pages the essence of an honorable and romantic past.

* Rambles in Old Boston, New England. By the Rev. Edward G. Porter. Illustrated by George R. Tolman. Cupples, Upham & Co.

At every point in his Rambles Mr. Porter calls attention to scenes and incidents which ought not to be forgotten. At the end of Marshall's Lane on the corner of Union Street, he shows us the "low-studded, three-story brick building, worn and wrinkled with age," where in the autumn of 1769 a lad named Benjamin Thompson, who afterwards became Count Rumford, was apprenticed to Hopestill Capen, the silk merchant. Near by, imbedded in a wall opposite the Marshall House, is the old paint mill, the "Boston Stone," supposed to have been brought from England about 1700. When he gets to the Painters' Arms on Hanover Street, Mr. Porter solves, to his own satisfaction at least, the cabalistic letters "T C K" which have long puzzled the antiquarians. They refer, Mr. Porter thinks, to "Thomas Child, painter, stainer, and Katherine his wife," who held the property in 1693. In Corn Court (a narrow passage leading from the south side of Faneuil Hall Square into Merchants' Row) still stands the oldest inn in Boston, first kept by Samuel Cole at least as early as 1634; here the patriots of the Revolution gathered; here Talleyrand stopped in the summer of 1794, and here two years later Louis Philippe, under the name of M. d'Orleans, was a guest; here also, by tradition, Washington dined and Franklin read his Gazette in the coffee-room; here the early Federalists met; and here during the war of 1812 many officers of the army and navy found hospitable welcome.

Mr. Porter is a capital guide. He gives us a chapter on Master Tileston, whose house is still standing at the west corner of Prince and Margaret Streets, the old schoolmaster's parlor now turned into a corner grocery and a clothes shed concealing the traces of the once stately front door; takes us to the Galloupe House on Hull Street, where General Gage had his headquarters during the battle of Bunker Hill; relates anecdotes of Henry Ward Beecher's boyhood in connection with Mr. Eliot's house on Salem Street; tells the romantic story of the pirate and grandee, Captain Gruchy, who once owned the Phips mansion; points out the spot "under Concert Hall at the head of Hanover Street," where the first cooked oysters were sold in Boston by Peter T. Brigham; pilots us to the remote confines of North Square and tells us about the Hichborn house and the home of Paul Revere; and does not fail to remind us that in Williams Court (that unsavory passageway which Rufus Choate characterized as "ignominious, but convenient") is still displayed the "bell in hand" which in 1795 served James Wilson, the town crier, as a sign at his brush shop in the Exchange Coffee House. But we must content ourselves with indicating a few of the salient points of interest in a book sure to gratify many readers.

A MEMOIR OF CHARLES READE.*

THIS memoir of Charles Reade is a rough and unliterary performance, dealing overmuch in trivialities, abounding in digressions, loose and disjointed in style—but it portrays the man and the novelist with what seems like unerring fidelity. The Rev. Compton Reade, a nephew of Charles Reade, who is responsible for the narrative portion of the work, or the biography proper, is not a graceful writer. He delights in antiquated forms of diction, revels in familiar phrases from the French and Latin, and delights in such words as "energized" (p. 64), "judgmatically" (p. 78), and "pernoctate" (p. 99); and he does not hesitate to attack with acrimony the rivals or enemies of his uncle's fame. The diatribe against George Eliot, for instance (p. 303), is at least in bad taste and might better have been omitted. The Cloister and the Hearth is not made a greater novel by any decrying of Romola or any denunciation of the "animalism" of its author or of the "venal pæans" which it is asserted she was able to command. All such considerations may safely be left, as Mr. Compton Reade acknowledges, "to the judgment of the twentieth century." Charles Reade was a hard fighter, but he was chivalric, and if he were living he would not sanction mud-flinging at the memory of a woman whose only defect as a writer of fiction in his eyes was a lack of the dramatic instinct.

An introductory chapter deals at length with matters genealogical, and shows the curious blending of inequalities that, through a long ancestry, contributed to the contradictory nature of Mr. Reade. Catholics, High and Low Churchmen, courtiers and artisans, ascetics and spendthrifts had united to form this robust and virile character. His father was a gentleman of the old school, a friend of literati and statesmen, his mother a brilliant woman of society, with a decided vein of Puritanism and a contempt for mediocrity which acted as a persistent spur upon the ambition of her children. We are shown Charles Reade in babyhood, the youngest of eleven children, the inmate of a refined family circle where self-denial was the general law, the pet and the special charge of his beautiful sister Julia, to whose fond care it was due that "at six he could play a fine game of chess, and at seven had acquired the rudiments of a sound English education, plus that love of literature which he retained throughout his life, and which, in a degree, proved the basis of his success." At the age of eight he was sent to school to a flagellating divine, Slatter of unsavory memory, by whom he was beaten black and blue and in a fair way to be brutalized in heart and brain; then to Mr. Hearn, curate of Staines, a wise and gentle master; and at seventeen he became a demy of Magdalen, Oxford, by special favor and the originality of an essay on ambition. At Oxford he neglected his lectures, played the fiddle, wore long curls, "footed the double shuffle like a professional," was shy of companionship, eschewed wine and beer, and "read voraciously;" withal he became a famous cricket player; and after five years of this desultory life went in for honors and a fellowship, which he won by cramming and sheer luck. Then comes the account of his nominal study of law at Lincoln's Inn, of how he won another fellowship by a dexterous piece of electioneering, of travels in Scotland and a tour to Paris and Geneva, of his craze for collecting violins, of experiences in Paris during the revolution of '48, of his honorable friendship with Mrs. Seymour—and at length of collaboration with Tom Taylor in the writing of plays and the actual beginning of his literary career. All this time for a period of fourteen years he had been studying the art of fiction and collecting material for novels and dramas. A passage from his journal written in 1853 when he was at work on the first draft of Never Too Late to Mend expresses his determination to read "at least eight considerable volumes" to know "what is in the head and the heart of a modern Jew," and to cross-examine at least a dozen men about Australia. "Such," he says, "is the mechanism of a novel by Charles Reade. . . . If I can work the above great system, there is enough of me to make one of the writers of the day; without it, NO, NO."

* Charles Reade, D.C.L., Dramatist, Novelist, Journalist. A Memoir Compiled Chiefly from his Literary Remains. By Charles L. Reade and the Rev. Compton Reade. Harper & Bros. $1.25.

Through all we have brought vividly before us the methods of the playwright and novelist and the character of the man. We see him sitting coatless in scantily furnished rooms, surrounded by books and the litter of manuscripts; roaming from jail to jail and interrogating prisoners; silent to the verge of taciturnity regarding himself, yet open as the day to all the demands of friendly intercourse; working constantly at the voluminous mass of newspaper cuttings (which, we are assured, he never used); now "lashed to fury by a lawsuit, or writhing beneath the double thong of some critical censor;" retaining to advanced years the eager motives, rash impulses, and warm heartedness of youth; virile, impetuous, a scorner of shams, inspired by the zeal of the social reformer—the nature of Charles Reade as here depicted is worthy of knowledge and of the honor which energy, when allied with sincerity in whatever walk of life, is sure to receive. A book like this, with all its defects and shortcomings—and they are many—is an addition to biography which every admirer of genius will be glad to read and remember.

MR. BUCHANAN'S LOOK ROUND LITERATURE.*

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN is known here in America as a novelist of strong but uneven talent; as a versifier of significant merit; and, to some few, as a manufacturer of commonplace melodramas; in the matter of criticism he is also known for his virulent attack upon "the fleshly school" as represented chiefly by Rossetti. In all departments of literature, with the possible exception of his stage plays (which, properly speaking, are not literature at all), Mr. Buchanan has displayed a certain wholesome zest of living; an intense sympathy with and a remarkable skill in interpreting nature; a sincere if sometimes erratic enthusiasm for the amplest expression of man's aspiration toward the ideal of universal brotherhood; and a fine scorn for dilettantism, cultivated conventionality, and the exaggerated graces of literary form as distinguished from or superior to thought.

When such a mind enters the field of criticism and surveys the literary product of the ages from Æschylus to Walt Whitman, we know pretty much what to expect. Mr. Buchanan carries no keen-edged rapier; he wields a sledge hammer and with it deals titanic blows—some of them into the air, some of them on images of straw set up by his own fancy, some of them on foemen worthy of his weapon, and then he makes the bones crack and knocks down his victims with a fine show of indifference which adds vastly to the pleasure of the spectacle. For ourselves, while we find much in Mr. Buchanan's book that seems ill considered, distorted in view, and crude of utterance, we also find much with which we can heartily agree. It is refreshing to get the impressions of one who has escaped the enervating influences of current hot-bed theories regarding literature, and who can look at things at a broad range, free from hackneyed prejudices if not free from personal caprice and self-contradiction.

Mr. Buchanan begins his volume with an elaborate comparison between Æschylus and Victor Hugo. The latter he celebrates as "the Frankenstein of the Democratic Idea," and as without a rival "for producing in colossal cipher the abstract forms of masculine forces." And when he says that in Hugo he "misses the benediction of divine purpose" he expresses himself finely, and touches a momentous truth. As regards Goethe, Mr. Buchanan at once ranks himself with the Philistines. "The TITANIC TUTOR of modern literature" is his phrase for the author of Faust, whose life he remorselessly dissects. This is rank heresy, of course, but no doubt there are here and there a few thoughtful souls who will secretly agree with Mr. Buchanan:

I rather prefer to believe that Goethe was the greatest Stage Manager of the literary sort that ever lived; a man whose worldly knowledge was wonderful, whose sagacity was endless, whose power of taking pains has scarcely ever been equaled, but whose chief claim to distinction was his power of grouping his company of performers and economizing, as Novalis would say, the resources of his establishment.

One chapter in Mr. Buchanan's book is devoted to "Free Thought in America," of which, with a curious obliquity of vision, he takes Robert Ingersoll as the leading exponent, but aptly likens him to "the boy in the gallery, cracking nuts and making precocious comments during the performance of the tragedy of life." Of O. B. Frothingham the assertion is made that his message "lacks the fertilizing energy and superb bigotry of a logical belief." Against M. Zola Mr. Buchanan brings the charge, often reiterated in the columns of the Literary World, that it is not so much his fondness for the pathology of sensualism as his deliberate misrepresentation of humanity, in a word his unmitigated pessimism, which deforms and sterilizes his art. But we cannot now follow Mr. Buchanan further. He says some hard things of America and of American literature; they must not be taken too seriously, and they hold perhaps a few grains of truth. At any rate, we can commend this book as a wholesome stimulus to thought.

CLOUSTON'S POPULAR TALES AND FICTIONS.*

MR. CLOUSTON has made a valuable contribution to the comparative study of folk-lore in his voluminous and widely varied collection of Popular Tales and Fictions—a work which, notwithstanding its importance to the specialist, has distinctly a literary flavor and will interest and instruct all cultivated persons. Mr. Clouston's method is to select a number of typical stories, most of them familiar as nursery tales, and then to trace them back by means of variants to the remote sources from which they took their rise. The method is scientific as well as literary and carries conviction with it at every step in the marvellous migrations of popular fictions which, starting perhaps on the plains of Asia or in the valley of the Nile, have passed through all the countries of Europe, and found in the hut of the peasant, in chap-book and ballad, in fairy tales for children, a local habitation and a name. In gathering his material Mr. Clouston has been indefatigable, and many of the examples which he gives appear in English for the first time. He has been particularly successful in the discovery of Asiatic prototypes, and it must be remembered that in nearly every instance he quotes the legend as it appears in the original text, so that the reader may with the utmost ease trace the process of migration and transformation and observe how each nationality has stamped its own characteristics on world-wide traditions.

* A Look Round Literature. By Robert Buchanan. Scribner & Welford. $2.25.

* Popular Tales and Fictions: Their Migrations and Transformations. By W. A. Clouston. Two vols. Scribner & Welford. $10.00.

As may readily be imagined, Mr. Clouston has little sympathy with the "solar myth" theory, which he boldly says "is carried by some of our comparative mythologists to the verge of absurdity." Many believe that these earnest and ingenious investigators passed the verge of absurdity long ago, and have been for some time floundering in the abyss. It is a comfort at any rate to find some one who is ready with stores of knowledge to assert that Mr. Baring-Gould and Dr. Rhys David are "both absurdly wrong" when they attempt to prove that the legend of the goose and the golden egg is a myth of "the dawn-produced sun" or a mystical "word-puzzle." Very curious it is to find familiar jests and anecdotes having their analogues in the literature of a distant past. Thus the story of the Irishman who looked over the shoulder of a gentleman while the latter was writing a letter, and at a written reference to his impudence exclaimed "I haven't read a word, sorr!" was told centuries ago in the Bhāristān of the Persian poet Jāmf. The saying attributed to Foote, "It is very little of its age," referring to a diminutive glass of wine highly praised by his host, is told by Athenæus. Sir Walter Raleigh's method of weighing tobacco smoke may have been imitated from that of Demouax in Lucian's story. The nursery jingles of the "House that Jack Built" and the "Old Woman and the Crooked Sixpence" have their prototype in a sacred hymn of the Talmud. The charming tale of Aladdin (properly, Alā-'u-'d-Dīn, Exaltation of the Faith), and his wonderful lamp does not appear in any known Arabian text of The Thousand and One Nights, but is a typical Eastern fiction of which Mr. Clouston gives several variants, ancient and modern.

Mr. Clouston in his first volume deals with fictions having as their motives some magical or supernatural element, and brings together in the successive chapters the comparative legends of invisible caps and cloaks, of gold-producing animals, of bird-maidens, fairy hinds, "thankful beasts," enchanted horses, imprisoned demons, and hunchbacks and fairies. In the second volume are collected stories of common life, of which "all may be true; some are certainly founded on fact." With regard to the story of "Whittington and his Cat," Mr. Clouston finds it to be common to all Europe, and quotes its prototype from the pages of a Persian historian who wrote at the close of the 13th century, sixty years before Richard Whittington was born. The tale of "Llewellyn and his Hound" is traced back by Mr. Clouston to the Sanskrit Panchatantra, a collection of tales composed not later than the 5th century. Among other legends similarly exploited are those of "The Silent Couple," "The Heir of Linne," "The Three Travelers and the Loaf," and Chaucer's "Pardoner's Tale;" the last-named seems to have come from The Thousand and One Nights. But we cannot follow Mr. Clouston further. Whoever looks into his volumes will find them to be a treasury of entertaining knowledge, and a revelation of that essential unity of imagination which makes all mankind kin. The book is handsomely printed and admirably indexed.

THE WOODLANDERS.*

THE incomparable touch of a master's hand is perceptible on every page and in every line of The Woodlanders. When one has yielded fully to the magical fascination of Mr. Hardy's style; to the firm sway of a philosophical mind which pours forth its liberal treasures of thought without stint; to the sure, swift delineation of character which never loses sight of the details that render character individual, and yet never exaggerates or colors too highly; to the marvelous pictures of inanimate nature which stand forth with the vividness of actuality; to the even, unrelenting development of a clear dramatic purpose—when, we say, one yields fully to these enticing elements, manifested in The Woodlanders as well as in all of Mr. Hardy's novels, there is no drawing back even if as in the case before us the dominant note is somber, bitter, tragic, inspired by "the Unfulfilled Intention, which," in Mr. Hardy's view, "makes life what it is," among the apple orchards and forests of southwestern England no less obviously than "among the depraved crowds of a city slum." It is a fact which the admirers of Mr. Hardy will deplore that the optimism expressed in his earlier fictions has through gradations of paling vigor descended at length to a pessimism which, if not blank, is at least depressing. In The Woodlanders, as in The Return of The Native, everything is in the grasp of an iron destiny, only in the author's later story it is a destiny that hopelessly mars and despoils. In the vision of humanity here unfolded malign influences are ceaselessly at work frustrating happiness, mocking hopes, thrusting worthless husks into hands that yearn for the fair fruits of ideal endeavor. It is a story of innocence in the toils of selfish passion. Mr. Hardy paints the primitive inhabitants of Little Hintock with all their picturesque quaintness, but he sees something more than Arcadian simplicity. How these honest rustics were brought to sorrowful experiences chiefly through the juxtaposition of two weakly sinful creatures above them in rank and cultivation, is shown as plainly as Mr. Hardy shows us in the umbrageous silence of the forest the lobes of fungi, the deformed leaves, the crippled curve of tree trunk, the lichen-eaten stalk, the promising sapling slowly strangling in the clasp of the ivy.

The Woodlanders is a disagreeable novel; there is no disguising this melancholy conclusion. It arouses the keenest sympathies on the part of the reader, may, indeed, if he be of sensitive fiber, wring him with anguish, and leaves him at the last, baffled, stupified, cast down. The quality of inevitableness is there, and gives the book high rank as a work of art, but the inevitableness is too irresistible, too implacable. Edgar Fitzspiers is a monster of selfishness—a man who, while engaged in a shameful intrigue with a village wench, is pursuing the courtship of the sweet girl who soon becomes his wife, and whom within a few months he forsakes for the companionship of an adventuress. And when one night it is thought that Fitzspiers has been killed by a fall from his horse, these three women meet and shed their tears together; while the wife, although in love with another—poor Giles Winterbourne, the most pathetic of all these victims of circumstances—the wife, wooed again by the returned husband, succumbs to his blandishments and consents to a reunion before the grass has grown upon the grave of the guileless, chivalric lover who gave up his life to save her from open shame. By the side of Giles Winterbourne Mr. Hardy places another figure whose consistency of purpose and unyielding fidelity are equally pathetic and devoid of fruition. Marty South is a supremely successful embodiment of homely, faithful love, one who, made to play a thankless and even absurd part, at the last touches sublimity. Standing by the grave of Giles:

"Now, my own, own love," she whispered, "you are mine and only mine; for she has forgot 'ee at last, although for her you died. But I—whenever I get up I'll think of 'ee, and whenever I lie down I'll think of 'ee. Whenever I plant the young larches I'll think that none can plant as you planted; and whenever I split a gad, and whenever I turn the cider-wring, I'll say none could do it like you. If ever I forget your name, let me forget home and Heaven!—But no, no, my love, I never can forget 'ee; for you was a good man, and did good things."

Here, after all, in the final vindication of Marty South's devotion, lies, if we do not utterly mistake the author's meaning, the moral and moving lesson of this impressive book. It is love that in spite of unfulfilled intentions conquers at last, and seeing this we can understand Mr. Hardy's calm underlying purpose which it is easy to mistake for indifference, but which is in fact simply the deliberateness of the true artist working toward the solution of a definite problem in the great mystery we call life.

* The Woodlanders. A Novel. By Thomas Hardy. Harper & Bros. 75c.

MR. HORACE EATON WALKER'S POEMS.*

JUDGED by the size of his first volume Mr. Horace Eaton Walker is amply justified in posing at once as the bard of the nation. Bulk and brass count for a good deal nowadays, and the titanic proportions of this book are certainly imposing. It has a cubic content of 117 inches; it contains 608 pages, comprises (we take the author's word for it) 300 poems, and it weighs 2 lbs. 3 ozs.—all for $2.00, with the portrait of the author thrown in! The preface tells us that Mr. Horace Eaton Walker came of poor but honest parents, and led a virtuous and upright life until the age of twenty-five, when he forsook the path of rectitude and began writing "poetry," most of which was composed in a cotton factory at Claremont, N. H., where he tends a "slasher." With the time and space at our command we cannot undertake to give anything like a complete analysis of Mr. Horace Eaton Walker's book. The first poem in it, "The Lady of Dardale," fills 122 pages of close-set type. There is something esoteric and generally theosophical in Mr. Horace Eaton Walker's method. As nearly as we can tell the plot concerns the fate of a boy and a girl pledged by their parents to betrothal. Of course they hate one another. John Elmer comes back to his native town, and while he is chatting with a farmer round the bend a steed in maddest flight

Came dashing with a two-wheeled chaise, a lady
Wildly upon the seat imploring aid.

The hero starts after her on his "frothing black," and we are wrought to the highest pitch of expectation. Is our idle curiosity to be gratified? Mr. Horace Eaton Walker is prepared to keep up the interest. The hero lets his fancy fly back over the past, remembers how he promised to write a poem for Mabel—"a knightly tale," and then he gives the tale (it fills 110 of the 122 pages)—a woeful parody on "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and all this time the horse is running away with Mabel, and John Elmer is in pursuit, till we cry with Keats:

Forever wilt thou love and she be fair!

But there must come an end to all things. The "knightly tale" with its terror-inspiring footnote which speaks of "a thousand verses destroyed," gets itself spun to a finality; then

The chaise is turned! Good heavens! my Mabel Martin!
"Oh, Mabel! are you hurt?" "John Elmer!
And not among the dead! 'Twere joy to die—"
"No, no! my Mabel Martin. Live and be My bride!"

Of the other productions in the volume we must speak briefly. There is a "Legend of Gafton" (twenty-four pages) in all kinds of meter, including this:

Le-ô-nie! — Le-ô-nie!
A pretty maid to sleep!
And dream of springs and blossomed things,
And realms of the classic Greek!

There is an ode to May, quite touching in its spontaneity and gentle artlessness:

Oh by-by, May, oh by, oh by,
I hate to see you go;
That such a lovely month should die
With roses all in blow!

There is also a pathetic lyric of a butcher boy walking the streets of Brooklyn, "unknown to fame," but on seeing "the Greeleys and Beechers pass," bursting into tears at the thought that he too would some day be great. Mr. Horace Eaton Walker's masterpiece, we are inclined to think, is "A Reverie." It tells how the hired man fell in love with the farmer's daughter, and how the farmer drove him away:

She waited till her teens were by,
The light had faded from her eye,
And she was fair, and she was fair.
Her pa repented long ago,
But love alone could heal her woe,
And she was fair, and she was fair.
The years had gone, and she was old;
The suitors came with bags of gold,
And she was fair, and she was fair.

A stranger comes to town driving "mettled steeds," and there is another runaway:

The farmer stood within his door;
He saw the carriage hurled o'er,
And she was fair, and she was fair.
He picked the stranger from the sod;
"And O my God! and O my God!"
And she was fair, and she was fair.
"My daughter, this thine early love!
The very gods be blest above!"
And she was fair, and she was fair.
He had more gold than East or Ind!
They nursed him back, but Cupid's blind,
And she was fair, and she was fair.
The wedding came with rose and flower,
And never earth such happy hour,
And she was fair, and very fair.

If a national poet is to be selected by a popular vote, we are quite sure that Mr. Horace Eaton Walker may be considered as a candidate. He has, as the phrase goes, made his record, and he is now in the hands of his friends.

EGYPT AND PERSIA.

*THE Story of Ancient Egypt*¹ opens with a graphic description of the country and its inhabitants, the long, irregular valley, with its expanding delta, being compared to the stem and top of a lily, upon which the flat basin of the Fayoum on the left or west side may correspond with a bud. Of the domestic life, habits, and pursuits of the early Egyptians the book gives a minute knowledge. Then comes an instructive chapter upon the religion of the ancient Egyptians—describing the gross polytheism of the multitude, with its good and its bad deities, and the purer, esoteric faith of the few who were more intelligent. Prof. Rawlinson thinks this latter in reality almost a form of monotheism, and suggests that the idea of the future life culminated, after ages of transmigration, in that of absorption into Deity, apparently the Buddhist nirvana. The virtues most esteemed by the Egyptians—and claimed most unblushingly in mortuary inscriptions—were of high order but limited in number.

In the chapter on "The Dawn of History" Prof. Rawlinson shows clearly that the myths of the ancient dwellers in the Nile valley, of which some specimens are given, were comparatively of the grosser and duller kind. Scarcely more certainly real than the heroes of myth is the earliest king, M'na, the Menes of Greek nomenclature; who is said, however, first to have united upper and lower Egypt under one rule, and to have turned the course of the Nile eastward in order to obtain a site for Memphis, which he founded as his capital city. Indeed the same twilight of dim antiquity shrouds the succeeding monarchs and their doings until the first king of the fourth dynasty, Sneferu, of whom some monuments have been preserved. But although history as distinct from legend may begin here, it is noticeable that Prof. Rawlinson does not venture to assign any exact dates until the death of Rameses III, 1280 B. C. He however states that the earliest civilization of the Nile valley must be placed as far back as B. C. 2700; and a comparative chronology results, in a few cases, from the concurrence of Egyptian history with that of the Hebrews. The building of the three pyramids of Ghizeh is attributed to three consecutive kings immediately following Sneferu, the first and greatest being that of Khufu. The interesting chapter on these wonderful structures introduces explanatory diagrams and pictures. The writer dismisses with small ceremony as wholly improbable the ingenious and even fascinating theories of metrical or astronomical design in the great pyramid, preferring the old idea of a place of burial. So the story runs on full of picturesque detail, affording a clear and brilliant picture of the fluctuations of Egypt's fortunes through the earlier periods, and in the long contests with the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian empires, until at last the narrative closes with the complete subjection by the Persians under Ochus in the fourth century B. C.

The work is scholarly in form and finely finished in style, full of instruction and well adapted to popular reading. It is a curious fact, however, that the authors utterly ignore the important work done by the Egypt Exploration Fund during the last four years. No record is made of the significant discoveries at Zoan; nor of Mr. W. M. F. Petrie's explorations at Tel Defenneh, which identified that place with the biblical Tahpanhes, and "cleared up a whole group of historical problems which connect Egypt not only with Greece, but with Babylon and Judea;" no allusion is made to the discovery of the site of Goshen; and the discoveries at Naukratis are passed over in silence. And yet the book abounds in biblical citations and continues the narrative up to the time of Abraham, with a special chapter on "Shishak and his Dynasty." Whether this attitude on the part of the authors was due to intention or ignorance, it is discreditable and a serious imperfection in an otherwise trustworthy and instructive manual.

Mr. Benjamin's Story of Persia,² like its

* The Lady of Dardale, and Other Poems. By Horace Eaton Walker. Manchester, N. H.: Browne & Rowe. $2.00.

¹ The Story of Ancient Egypt. By George Rawlinson, M.A., with the collaboration of Arthur Gilman, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

² The Story of Persia. By S. G. W. Benjamin. With Maps and Illustrations. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

predecessors in the series to which it belongs, is historical rather than descriptive, yet of a profound interest. The long checkered narrative of centuries is clearly traced. With regard to the earliest or legendary period Mr. Benjamin gives a romantic narrative of kings and heroes, told in an interesting and sprightly style. Especially noteworthy are the sparing introduction of the element of the marvelous, so prominent in the Arabian Nights, and the total absence of all dates, until suddenly one of the national kings, Kei Khosros, is identified with the Greek Kyros, often known as Cyrus the Elder, and the story is thus well launched into the current of oriental history as told by writers in the Greek language. Similarly great variations between Persian and Greek forms appear in other names, the Greeks reducing words to sounds euphonious to the Greek ear; thus the grandfathers of Cyrus, Kei Kaoos and Afrasiab, appear respectively as Kyasares and Astyages. There is further some serious disagreement as to the kingdoms over which these sovereigns ruled. These discrepancies the author does not attempt to reconcile. With the rise of the house of Sassan, about A. D. 220, begins a period to which, in the author's judgment, historians generally have attached too little importance. This was the time when the original province of Persis became again the center of government, after the victory of its hereditary satrap Ardeshir or Artaxerxes in the battle of Hormuz in 227. It was Ardeslur who revived the national Zoroastrian religion, by causing the translation of the sacred writings from the original Zend, then obsolete, into the vernacular, called Pehlevee, and the importance of this event is not overestimated. The reigning Shah, Nasr-ed-Deen, descendant of the cruel Mohammed Khan, is described by Mr. Benjamin as able and intelligent, and remarkable for a wise clemency. In the judgment of the author the Persian race has lost nothing of its natural ability and great tenacity of life, and a revival of its greatness is confidently predicted.

A LIFE OF HENRY WARD BEECHER.*

THOSE who have been led by the publishers' announcements to think that this life of Mr. Beecher would be a complete and adequate biography will be disappointed. It is not a new work save as regards an introductory paragraph of five lines attached to the preface, which—again by the ingenuity of the publishers—is in the copy before us dated "188;" and fifty pages interpolated toward the close of the volume, headed "closing years." These fifty pages are made up as follows: A six-page record of the tour made by Mr. Beecher in the Northwest, the celebration of his seventieth birthday, his course during the presidential election of 1884, and his views on evolution; the reminiscences he gave in London as reported in the Christian World; an elaborate account of his last hours, taken from the Brooklyn Eagle; and a full report of the funeral ceremonies. Only in the last two pages of this continuation do we discover the hand of the biographer-in-chief; these two pages, in the form of a personal tribute, are worth many times more than the patchy narrative which immediately precedes it; they constitute at once an apotheosis and a confession of faith. Here is an estimate of character given by that one of Mr. Beecher's disciples who knew him and loved him best:

He was a great preacher, that we all know; the greatest preacher certainly of his age, if not of church history. He was a great preacher because he was a great and good man; that all know who knew him. He was pure as a pure woman; simple as a little child; frank to a fault. His most intimate friends never heard from his lips a suggestion of a salacious jest; I never knew the man bold enough to venture on one in his presence. He was incapable of deceit or artifice. He could conceal, when concealment was necessary, only by maintaining an absolutely impenetrable reserve. The charges of duplicity and falsehood which a foul conspiracy brought against him some years ago were to all who knew him as intellectually absurd as they were morally monstrous. . . . He was not logical; the seer never is. He was a revelator. What he had seen in the closet he disclosed in the pulpit. . . . For no one who knew Mr. Beecher intimately could doubt that he was preëminently a man of God and walked with God.

Before such earnest and eloquent words as these detraction should be dumb. We have said that this life of Mr. Beecher, or as the writers prefer to call it, this sketch of his career, is not new. It was published in 1883 and has been received with the favor it deserved as an authentic, sagacious, sympathetic outline of the growth and action of a character which had already become historical. It is not, in our opinion, the final biography of Mr. Beecher. A great deal of the material necessary for the final story of his life is in this volume, but it will need to be recast and some extraneous matter sifted out before the lines of a broader perspective can be applied to enforce the doctrine of relative values. Meanwhile the work stands and will stand because of the strong personal element which has gone into it. Its simplicity and enthusiasm touch the heart and inspire wholesome emotions. No one can read it without profit. It is a faithful sketch, painted in warm, living colors, of a many-sided personality to whose complexities of manifestation it is a faithful key.

—A reception in honor of Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton was given by Mr. Oscar Fay Adams at Felton Hall, Cambridge, on the afternoon of the 3d inst., the eve of Mrs. Moulton's departure for England. There was a good five score present, including Mr. C. P. Cranch, Col. T. W. Higginson, Mr. Scollard, Rev. Bernard Carpenter, Professor Palmer, Dr. B. A. Gould, Mrs. Abba Gould Woolson, Mrs. General Lander, and Miss L. I. Guiney.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Those who have learned to love Dickens in his books will find much to disappoint them in his character and life. It is difficult to doubt that he was hard, domineering, and selfish. His conduct to his wife, so far as the public is enabled to judge of it, was inexcusable. He was so little alive to natural sensibilities as to introduce his nearest relations to our notice under the humiliating presentments of Mr. Micawber, Mrs. Nickleby, Dora, Flora Finching, and Mr. F.'s Aunt. Sir Arthur Helps pronounced the amazing judgment that Dickens was a man of refinement; but this view is surely inconsistent with his acknowledged uneasiness in any society where his supremacy was not unquestioned. And he avowed a clinging sense of degradation in the remembrance of his earliest struggles, which was unworthy alike of his genius and his social creed. It is with unaffected relief that we turn our contemplation from his character to his writings.—The Spectator.

Dante Rossetti is one of the poets whom poets love. They are a small brotherhood—quite an inner circle among the great congregation of singers—for they are chosen, not because of their preëminence, but for the ineffable tenderness and sweetness and beauty of their work. It is for these qualities that Shelley and Keats, and, in a smaller measure, Coleridge, are beloved beyond others. And these are qualities which abound in Rossetti. He did not write great poems—great in subject, or ambitious in form; but all that he wrote was beautifully and perfectly done. His emotions were of the deepest; his sense of the loveable and the pure was keen and responsive beyond almost any other man's of his time; and the result is an exquisite beauty of form and spirit, alike in his poems and his pictures.—The Academy.

Mr. Fitzgerald's purpose in compiling this work [Lives of the Sheridans] appears to have been to prove that the greatest of the Sheridans was a worthless fellow. He admits that Sheridan's plays continue popular, and that some of his parliamentary speeches are not devoid of merit; but he seems convinced that Sheridan stole the best parts of his plays, and that as an orator he was merely a master of clap-trap. . . . There is little originality in Mr. Fitzgerald's view, as Mrs. Oliphant, in the least admirable of her writings, has set it forth already. Mr. Fitzgerald has intensified the feeling with which we read Mrs. Oliphant's estimate of Sheridan, and has made us regret the more deeply that the late Mrs. Norton did not write the life of her illustrious grandfather.—The Athenæum.

Sir Richard Burton and his wife have certainly conferred a great boon on the reading public, great and small, by this edition of The Arabian Nights [edited by Justin McCarthy]. The Arabian Nights has hitherto been known to us chiefly as Aristotle is said to have been known to the Schoolmen, in a translation of a translation. The work of Galland, a Frenchman who was, according to Lane and Burton, not over well skilled in Arabic, and who knew little of Arabic manners and customs, has hitherto, in various translations and adaptations, been the source of popular knowledge of The Arabian Nights. Lane's own translation was a little too much like Sir Richard Burton's magnum opus, in being too close to the original for modern manners or drawing-room use. And, to tell the truth, it is also a trifle bald and dull. Moreover, it is disfigured to the ordinary eye, much like Grote's Greece, by uncouth renderings of more or less familiar names. Sir Richard Burton, indeed, does not wholly spare our old friends. But Wazir for Vizier is better than Weezer; and while Lane converts Nouriddin and the fair Persian into Noor ed-Deen and Enees-al-Jalees, Sir Richard Burton only goes so far as Nur al-Din and Anis al-Jalis. Above all, this edition may be placed in any one's hands and laid on any drawing-room table. It has been edited with the greatest care, and is as fit for household use as Alice in Wonderland.—The Spectator.

* Henry Ward Beecher: A Sketch of his Career. By Lyman Abbott, D.D., assisted by Rev. S. B. Halliday. Funk & Wagnalls.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, MAY 14, 1887.

(Entered, at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.)

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Literary Iconoclasm.

In antique years when Homer's muse was young,
The poet's name was passed from tongue to tongue.
Now his identity has grown so dim,
Some modern minds have lost all faith in him.

And Shakespeare, robbed of his self-centered fame,
Becomes the adumbration of a name,
Whene'er in him the mental skeptics find
All unknown attributes of Bacon's mind!

Augusta, Ga.

WILLIAM H. HAYNE.

James Berry Bensel.

A gentle singer through the field and wood
He wandered, heeding not if praise or blame
He gained from those who held the crown of fame
Aloft before a struggling multitude.

Few heard the clear young voice, or understood
The simple meaning of the buds half blown
That on the dusty road were slowly thrown;
Few saw the gifts — much less their inner good.

Attuned to Nature's peace, with quiet pride
He ruled his spirit, and did onward pass
To sooner make his round of life complete.

O wind of censure, blowing far and wide,
"In the King's Garden" linger mid the grass
And bear away some scent of violets sweet!

Elizabeth, N. Y.

KATE ELIZABETH CLARK.

Lillia Pura.

Written in Mr. Swinburne's "Century of Roundels."

Where summer-time is only perfect spring,
Rare frail exotics wither, languishing
For those clear depths of air, unstirred, provençal,
Warm-ripe with love where minstrels pass and sing.

While resonant silver floods their lips bedew,
Splendid and redolent my garden through,
These pure great-petalled even-numbered lilies
Have all the vigor their wild meadow knew.

Frederickton, N. B.

BLISS CARMAN.

LUDWIG UHLAND.

ON April 26 the anniversary of the hundredth birthday of Ludwig Uhland was universally celebrated in Germany. Not the smallest penny paper neglected to contribute its sheet to the memory of the beloved poet. For Ludwig Uhland is the poet par excellence of the German people. Germany has produced greater poets than Uhland; but of none, not even Heine excepted, are there so many poems really alive in the memory of the common people as of him. Little children who have just learned to read find in their primers those charming songs of the "White Sky" ("Es giengen drei Jäger wohl auf die Birsch"), of the "Comrade" ("Ich hatt' einen Kameraden"), or of the "Einkehr" ("Bei einem Wirthe wonderwild"), and learn them by heart. When a little older they are made acquainted with "Keiser Rothbert, lobesam, zum heiligen Land gezogan kam," or the "Ueberfell im Wildbad;" and the "Herr Quar-taner" deems it the greatest honor to be allowed to scan the beautiful song "Des Saengers Fluch" on exhibition day. Sentimental youths and maidens adore the tender "Fruchlings-lieder," and the student sings the melancholy "Was klinget und singst die Strass' herauf," etc. Other songs, as "Es zogen drei Bursche wohl ueber den Rhein," "Droben stehet die Kapelle," "Das ist der Tag des Herrn," are, together with the beautiful melodies of Gölcher and Kreutzer, in the memory of everybody. Everything of Uhland is natural, so charmingly simple that no one needs an æsthetical commentary to point out beauties possibly hidden, that the intellect of the common reader would not perceive. There is nothing ambiguous, nothing romantic, though Uhland produced most of his works at a time when Tieck, Tiedge, Hoffmann, and Novalis were at the height of their fame, and the romantic school was in its most flourishing stage in Germany. His works are healthy, vigorous, full of character. Uhland sings from out the heart of his nation; this explains his immense popularity. Outside of Germany he is almost unknown, though his works offer the best opportunity for the alien to become acquainted with the German intellect in its most genuine, and at the same time most amiable, form.

But Uhland was not only a poet. He did not withdraw exclusively into the realms of dreams, where, separated from the miseries surrounding him and the whole Fatherland, he might have indulged in his poetical fancies. There was nothing in him of the traditional German poet, who does not condescend to regard himself as a member of this prosaic world, and consequently to perform his duties as such. Uhland offered his sacrifices to liberty not only in abstract, as it behoves a true poet, according to the German æsthetic code; he was a man as well as a poet, a valuable citizen, a fervent patriot, and an intrepid apostle of liberty. He felt with his people and groaned with them under the yoke of Napoleon, and later, under the tyranny of the King of Wurtemberg. Elected by the people to represent their interests at the Landtag, he immediately sacrificed his professorship at the University of Tübingen, and dauntlessly vindicated their rights. Uhland is a positive contradiction of the saying, so eagerly advocated by German poets and æsthetics, that a poet cannot actually participate in the struggle for the welfare of his nation without sacrificing the poetical inspiration. Whatever he wrote during or after the period of his political activity is the work of a poet, and some of his most perfect poems date from that time. By actually taking part in the struggle of his people Uhland acted upon the idea that in those hard times his nation stood more in need of the active arm of the strong and the clear head of the wise than of dreaming verse-makers. The great cis-atlantic German community, which includes many members who with Uhland fought in 1848 the same resultless fight against despotism, and, despairing of their cause, fled the Fatherland, has shown by its universal celebration of Uhland's anniversary how much it values in him the man who so intrepidly defended their liberal ideas. The memory of the poet is cherished in countless German homes, and will not be forgotten for generations.

The Woodlanders is decidedly the best and most powerful work Mr Hardy has produced since Far from the Madding Crowd. With the possible exception, also, of Two on a Tower, it will be regarded as his most disagreeable book, not only by the ordinary clients of Mr. Mudie, who feel dissatisfied unless Virtue passes a coercion bill directed against Vice at the end of the third volume, but even by those of Mr Hardy's own admirers who complain, as Mr. Morley complains of Emerson, that he is never "shocked and driven into himself by 'the immoral thoughtlessness' of men," that "the courses of nature and the prodigious injustices of men in society affect him with neither horror nor awe." — The Academy.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

BERLIN, April 13, 1887.

WHAT would your countrymen say if a Boston or New York publisher or author had the idea of issuing a magazine entitled The Women's Enemy? You say that I am fancying an impossible thing. Yet it is a fact that such a monthly has not only been planned, but is also being actually published; it has been so for the last half year. Its editor is no less a personage than our leading feuilleton writer, clever Ferdinand Gross, of Vienna, and its exact title is the one given above — Der Frauenfeind. I pride myself on being very fond of the fair sex, and still I must own that a publication like this is useful as well as necessary; and this confession is not more unchivalrous than Gross's assuming the editorship of such a periodical. But don't imagine that I speak of a "comical" journal; no, it is quite a serious one, though many funny, queer things are said of women in it. To tell the whole truth, the enmity towards the female world is exclusively in the title, an alarming and "catching" one, to be sure; the contents, however, are very friendly to women, inasmuch as they try to show up the folly of the contradictory position the women of Western civilization are placed in by the conflicting demands upon them to serve simultaneously as playthings, servants, and scholars. The contributors, as the case may be, make merry over, or are harsh upon, the manifold faults and weaknesses of the larger half of humanity, but they do so with a view to showing the way to improvement; and fortunately many of them do not forget to lay stress on the undeniable fact that the evil is mostly due to masculine tyranny and legislation prolonged through thousands of years, and to appeal to the male sex to use its influence to make good what it has spoiled in the past. Still, the fatal title causes the periodical in question to be almost universally scorned by the fair ones whose "enemy" it professes to be, and the consequence was the starting of a Women's Friend in Vienna, but it is a most inconsiderable and useless concern, whereas Der Frauenfeind is written by prominent authors, of whom not a few are women.

While speaking of a literary publication dealing with all sorts of women's questions, I must not omit to mention another important German publication treating of the same class of subjects. It is likewise unique in its way and likewise issued periodically, not however monthly, but annually. It is a yearly volume entitled The Aspirations of Contemporary Women, and is now in its third year. Its editor and compiler is Frau Lina Morgenstern, of Berlin, one of the most active workers in the movement for the advancement of women, the editor-in-chief of the Deutsche Hausfrauenseitung, founder of the Berlin "soup kitchens for the people," President of the Berlin Society of Housewives, and author of a great many useful books for women. The volume for 1887 I speak of is a wonderfully rich repertory of information on the actual practical state of the woman question, without being at all bulky; it has only 331 octavo pages, but it is an almost complete cyclopædia of data of every description. biographical, statistical, legal, educational, etc. Its chief features are an extensive chronicle of important women's societies all over the world; alphabetical lists of female artists, writers, and scholars; information as to the legal position of women in Germany; a critical history of the development and recent suppression of the German working women's movement; biographies of remarkable women, high and low; and a description of the part women play in the Russian charity system.

Useful not for women alone, but for both sexes, is Emil Peschkau's new volume of essays, causeries, and satires, entitled Zeitglossen (Comments on Topics of the Time). This gifted and witty writer, whose talent much resembles that of Ferdinand Gross—both of them are Viennese—is wont to hold a mirror before men in which to see their follies and prejudices, but his satire has never been sarcastic; on the contrary, it is always so mild that you feel the impossibility of being angry with the author, who is among our leading essayists and enjoys great popularity. The present book consists of about a dozen and a half spirited sketches on all sorts of subjects of life, practical, every-day and literary. Whatever he writes about, he always knows either how to allure us into a broad smile of harmless malice or to inspire us with a feeling of moral indignation. The thoughtful volume in question, although written in a light vein, is at the same time the production of a poet and a philosopher; I think I cannot bestow any higher praise on it than this.

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

World Biographies.

Samuel Minturn Peck, youngest son of Hon. E. W. Peck, formerly Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, was born at Tuscaloosa in that State, in 1854. He was educated in the schools of his native town and afterwards in the public schools of a Western State; graduated from the State University of Alabama in 1876; and attended lectures at Bellevue Medical College, New York, taking his degree of M.D. in 1879. He has never practiced his profession. Mr. Peck wrote his first verses at the age of twenty-four; several years later his first published poem, "The Orange Tree," appeared in the New York Evening Post. A number of his songs have been set to music, the most popular being "A Knot of Blue," which has been published with a musical setting in both England and this country. Having a cultivated and acute ear for harmony of sound, and being partial to lyric verse, his writings are popular with musicians; for, as a critic has said, "To read his verses is to sing them." His productions up to this time have all been songs and the light society verses so popular at present, and they have been copied by the press of every State in the Union. In the autumn of 1886 about eighty of his poems were brought out in a neat volume, under the title of Cap and Bells, which is meeting with encouraging comments from the critics, and has been received with especial favor in the South and West. Mr. Peck is an extensive but not a methodical reader. His happy style may be attributable to the fact that he writes, as he expresses it, only when he feels "cheerful and comfortable." After he has written, however, he cuts out, transposes, substitutes and rearranges with great care. Mr. Peck is affable and pleasant in manner, tall and well formed in person, with brown hair and eyes, broad high forehead, full face, and rather more color than is usual in a native of the South. His work is done at the old homestead, in a beautiful suburb of Tuscaloosa, where he draws inspiration from the charming Southern scenery and the bright Southern sky.

PROF. MORLEY'S ENGLISH WRITERS.*

SOME twenty years ago Prof. Morley published in three volumes an account of English Writers down to the epoch of the invention of printing. His aim was to supply that abundance of detail which he believes to be necessary to interest readers in general. "But the volumes," he tells us, "chiefly passed into the hands of students, and the book was credited with having hit a mark at which it did not aim." The author came also to see that to carry out his task on the lines he had projected he must gather more material. "After waiting and working on through yet another twenty years, the laborer has learnt that he knows less and less. Little is much to us when young; time passes and proportions change. But however small the harvest, it must be garnered. Scanty produce of the work of a whole life, it may yield grain to some one for a little of life's daily bread."

As now planned the work is to fill twenty volumes like the one before us—a handy octavo of 365 pages, noteworthy for the attractiveness of its typography, thoroughly indexed, and tastefully bound in dark green cloth. "It is intended," says Prof. Morley, "to include notes of the literature of all offshoots of the English race." The narrative is to be continuous, but the volumes are to be grouped by sections. Two volumes are to be issued yearly till the work is complete.

The volume before us opens with an introductory review of the history of English literature from the earliest period down to the present day. This review, covering about 120 pages, is a clear and comprehensive survey for which we can be thankful. Prof. Morley at the outset defines "the soul of literature" as "the soul of man at work through his best mind under the conditions to which he is born," and literature itself he defines as "the full mind of a nation." With these principles always in view he marks out his preliminary chart, emphasizing the importance of nationality, pointing out the underlying unity that binds period to period, and makes literature as we know it a continued expression of national growth. Such growth Prof. Morley traces, taking into account the transformation of language, the reaction of Italian and French influences, and at length the power of democracy, from the early Celtic bards to Walter Scott and the development of journalism. Throughout this portion of the book the author displays the fruits of wide research, a philosophical grasp of governing principles, and, generally speaking, sound judgment. He is never dogmatic; he is always ready to give both sides of a disputed subject; and he encourages his readers to examine and decide for themselves.

The remaining portion of the book is, it seems to us, more open to criticism. Prof. Morley in dealing with ethnological and philological questions is not always satisfied with giving the views of different scholars or theorists; he obtrudes his own opinions, and these opinions do not carry the weight that forces agreement. His etymologies are in many instances fanciful in the extreme, and do not apparently depend upon the learning of specialists who alone are capable of deciding upon such themes, and even specialists sometimes make strange work of them. Putting aside the question of technical scholarship, there can be no doubt that readers in general, and even students of literature, will derive profitable instruction from the many illustrative specimens of the early Gaelic, Cymric, Teutonic, and Scandinavian literatures, which Prof. Morley has brought together and which constitute the chief value of his narrative. To these chapters are added excellent analyses with copious translated extracts of "Beowulf" and "The Fight at Finnesburg," a full bibliography of "Beowulf," and complete indexes. It is safe to say that the work as a whole, if it be carried to completion in accordance with Prof. Morley's design, will constitute a treasury of information such as has never yet been brought within ready access of the many, which will in fact be a work indispensable to those who, without special training, desire a satisfactory knowledge of the genesis and growth of the literature of the English race.

THE DEDICATION OF BOOKS.*

MR. WHEATLEY has made an exceedingly readable volume upon the subject of book dedications, wherein, as he justly observes, is to be found the material for a not unimportant chapter of literary history. As far as English literature is concerned Mr. Wheatley covers the ground fully and well. He has collected specimen dedications many scores in number, ranging from Thynne's edition of Chaucer to Mr.

* English Writers. An Attempt Towards a History of English Literature. By Henry Morley. Vol. I. Cassell & Co. $1.50.

* The Dedication of Books to Patron and Friend: A Chapter in Literary History. By Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25.

Coventry Patmore's Angel in the House, quoting liberally from each, and interspersing with these illustrative extracts an agreeable and suggestive commentary.

In the history of English dedications Mr. Wheatley discerns three distinct periods. In the first, a dedication was the spontaneous expression on the part of an author of sincere love and respect; in the second, centering upon the eighteenth century, it was in general simply a shameless bid for money or preferment; in the third, we find the earlier conditions again dominant, and a dedication is once more a testimonial of regard without the flavor of patronage. Mr. Wheatley takes us, as we have intimated, through the entire range of English dedications, many of the earlier ones being culled from rare and little-known editions. A separate chapter is devoted to the Shakespearian dedications; but no new light is thrown upon the famous crux, "Who is W. H.?" although Mr. Wheatley is inclined to accept the theory identifying the dark lady as Mary Fitton, and "W. H.," of course, as Pembroke. He notices some of the absurd suggestions made by various commentators, the most absurd being perhaps that of a German, Herr Barnstorff, who holds that "W. H." stands for nothing less than William Himself! Political and satirical dedications get a chapter to themselves, and then we come to Dryden's sycophantic appeals to patrons and to specimen dedications from the works of leading authors of the eighteenth century. Dr. Johnson's manly eloquence in the epistles which he wrote for others are a refreshing contrast to those of his immediate predecessors and open the way to the attractive modern dedications filling nearly fifty pages. Here we find Byron inscribing as an "obliged ward and affectionate kinsman" his Hours of Idleness to the Lord Carlisle whom he afterwards lampooned so mercilessly in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. Nearly all of Byron's leading productions had dedications upon their first appearance. The "Giaour" was dedicated to Rogers, the "Corsair" to Moore, "Sardanapalus" to Goethe, and "Don Juan" — one would be glad to forget it — to Southey! Thackeray inscribed Pendennis to Dr. John Elliotson, who during the composition of that novel saved the author from a serious illness and "would take no other fee but thanks." Landor in 1847 dedicated his Hellenics to Pope Pius IX, inspired by emotions which he probably afterward repented. There is no more touching dedication in literature than that of Stuart Mill's Liberty to the memory of the author's wife, or more simply eloquent than Sir William Napier's dedication of the History of the Peninsular War to the Duke of Wellington: "because I have served long enough under your command to feel why the soldiers of the Tenth Legion were attached to Cæsar."

In an extended introduction Mr. Wheatley calls attention to some of the curiosities of dedicatory writing. Dedications originally had their source undoubtedly in patronage, for as Antoine Furetière said, the first inventor of them must certainly have been a beggar. But no charge of material greed can be brought against those who "dedicated their books to the Virgin Mary, to Jesus Christ, and even to God the Father." On the other hand Fuller's Church History, as first printed, contained twelve particular dedications and fifty or sixty inscriptions addressed to benefactors. Otway was the first, we believe, to dedicate a book to a bookseller. Marston dedicated his Scourge of Villainy "to his most esteemed and beloved Selfe." Of course the custom of dedications has given rise to many tricks. "Thomas Jordan prefixed high-flown dedications to his books, with blanks for the name, to be filled in by a hand press. By this means he dedicated one book to several persons, and lived upon his wits." A few years ago a Berlin sharper dedicated two thousand copies of a historical compilation to as many different tradesmen, sent each his special copy, and had no trouble in collecting the money. Sometimes a patron fell into obloquy just as a work dedicated to him was about to appear, and authors were forced into humiliating positions. One of the most amusing entries in the Diary of Samuel Pepys depicts the writer as making his way with all haste to "St. Paul's churchyard to cause the title of my English Mare Clausum to be changed, and the new title, dedicated to the king, to be put to it, because I am ashamed to have the other seen, dedicated to the Commonwealth." However, Bishop Walton was no less astute, if not so undignified. His magnificent polyglot Bible was dedicated to Cromwell, and when Charles II ascended the throne, the praises of the grateful author were quietly transferred to the ruling sovereign.

SERMONS.

Creed and Character. By the Rev. H. S. Holland, M.A., Canon of St. Paul's. [Chas. Scribner's Sons. $1.50.]

The thought underlying the selection and arrangement of these twenty-two discourses is, as expressed in the preface, that a personal will shows itself in two forms — mind, in the sense of motives, ends, instincts; and character, in the sense of the will's actions thereunder; "the kingdom of Christ being the manifestation of Christ's sole will, it must embody these two forms." There must, therefore, be no divorce between the mind of our Lord, as phrased in the Church's creed, and the Christian life — two things divinely joined together. The sermons meant to exhibit this union are grouped under the heads of "apostolic witness," "the Church in the gospels," "conversion," "newness of life," and "the Christian life here on earth." The thought is strong, dignified, scholarly, expressed in a wealth of language, and in places so deep as to require close attention and perhaps even careful study.

Bread in the Desert, and Other Sermons. By Randolph H. McKim, D.D. [Thomas Whitaker. $1.50.]

These discourses deal largely with difficulties in the Christian faith; as the delay in the promise of Christ's coming, the silence of God, and the function of pain: a few with practical conduct; as that on the government of the tongue. One entitled a plea for total abstinence seems to us the best thing of its kind we have seen; urging that rule with argument most manly, sensible, and forcible, and yet recognizing the right of individual liberty, as does the New Testament. The sermons are admirable for clearness of language, due appreciation of difficulties, forcible presentations of helpful suggestions, strength, brevity, and a thoroughly devout, Christian spirit. They constitute a book which we can unhesitatingly commend.

The City Youth. By J. Thain Davidson, D.D. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25.]

In these sermons, delivered in London to young men, the leading characteristic is great earnestness in exhortation to avoid irreligion and vice and to be faithful to Christian life and duty. There is everywhere the burning zeal of a soul intensely resolved to persuade; and it is difficult to see how any hearer can have failed to be at times deeply stirred towards right. The rare glimpses of the preacher's theology indicate what is known as an evangelical form of Protestant dissent. The style seems to us interesting and popular.

MINOR FICTION.

Knight-Errant. A Novel. By Edna Lyall. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.]

Like all the stories that have come from the pen of Edna Lyall, Knight-Errant is a thoughtful, earnest work, strong in the portrayal of character, glorifying truth, goodness, and beauty, and teaching with the fidelity of one who knows the possibilities of existence, the stern yet noble duty of self-sacrifice. The knight-errant, Carlo Donato, is an Italian youth who, to save his sister from a great wrong, goes upon the stage as an opera singer in order that he may be by her side and protect her from her own weakness and the machinations of the man who means to work her ruin. Carlo is betrothed to a beautiful English girl, and when he decides upon his career it is with the knowledge that their engagement must be broken. Through the most baffling circumstances he remains faithful alike to duty and to love. There is one fine chapter wherein it is related how Carlo, a prisoner at the behest of his enemy, awaits the signal which is to tell him of his sister's fall or his own death — when the announcement is made that he is free his thought is "Nita is ruined! I have failed;" and he drops unconscious to the ground. All of the characters in the book are depicted in life-like colors, Carlo himself being a noble yet never supra-human person, distinctly not of the goody-goody order, but one who conquers by hard fighting. Such a story is a vigorous protest against the sentimental cant of the day which has so much to say about the elevation of the "masses" and the good of "humanity," while ignoring so completely the charity that begins at home.

Yuanita: A Romance of Real Life in Cuba Fifty Years Ago. By Mary Mann. [D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.]

This affecting romance by the late Mrs. Mann embodies personal experiences and has the eloquence which comes of a quickly responsive, intensely sympathetic soul confronted by new conditions. Mrs. Mann went to Cuba in the days before emancipation was seriously thought of in this country, and in the name of Helen Wentworth she records her observations and emotions. The book is chiefly valuable, perhaps, as a confirmation of the worst charges that have been brought against slavery, and as showing once more and irrefutably that the ultimate, the inexpugnable injury wrought by slavery was inflicted upon the slaveholders rather than upon the slaves. Mrs. Mann wrote her narrative with the reserve of a pure-minded woman, but she reveals glimpses of social depravities which are horrible to contemplate. We are assured that a number of the characters described are personages from real life; the assurance only confirms an antecedent impression, for the reality is self-evident. The book has the tone of reality and is inspired by genuine passion; one forgets in reading it the absence of cultivated literary graces. It is spontaneous, artless, fervid, holding closely to the nobler impulses of the heart, and is therefore a work of vitality and power. Those who read it in the proper mood will be grateful for the privilege of association with a mind so full of zeal for the elevation of humanity.

The Lovely Wang. By the Hon. L. Wingfield. [Henry Holt & Co. 25c.]

Japanese and Chinese stories are apt to be curious and grotesque rather than entertaining. The squalor and indifference to human life in the one land, the somber tragedies of the other; the ronins and two-handed swords and hari-karus and bloody vengeance, form lurid points of sensation to which the thin, warbling accompaniment of love-making affords as little relief as would the light tinkle of a mandolin amid the thunder bursts of a great storm. In fact, Japanese and Chinese love affairs seem as unreal to the Western reader and as inoperative as the bowings and prostrations of the painted figures on a screen. The Lovely Wang is in marked contrast to the national romances, being not a Chinese tale, but a tale about Chinese by a Western writer. It is eminently an amusing story, and turns upon the fortunes of Wang Yu, son of a Tartar statesman, temporarily exiled to his estates for the crime of speaking the unveiled truth to his imperial master. Wang Yu is betrothed to the daughter of Hung, a merchant of the city of Foochoo. According to Chinese etiquette he has never met his bride, but falling into a decline, the sickly fancy possesses him that nothing can save his life but the sight of her. His unconventionally voracious father therefore writes to entreat that she may be sent under the care of Mrs. Wei, a professional "marriage maker," to visit his son. This request throws the Hung family into great perplexity. That Wang Yu should see his bride unveiled before the performance of the marriage ceremony is to compromise her in the eyes of "society;" but on the other hand Hung fears to refuse lest it may break off a desirable alliance, for, unknown to all, he is on the verge of bankruptcy. In this emergency a brilliant idea occurs to the perplexed elders, and on the development of this the humor of the story depends. There are certainly capacities for humor in this double plot and counter-plot, and of these, as well as the droll peculiarities of Chinese life and landscape, Mr. Wingfield has availed himself skillfully.

The Feud of Oakfield Creek. By Josiah Royce. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

This novel of California life by Prof. Royce is not a philosophical romance, as some might expect from its author's eminence as a teacher and writer in philosophy; it is not even a story abounding in striking thoughts epigrammatically expressed, such as the author's great literary ability and his highly original view of things would naturally promise. On the contrary, it is an exceedingly straightforward tale of action and character, in which everything else is subordinated to the presentation of the episodes of recent California life which it describes. The feud of Oakfield Creek arises from disputed land-claims; to avert the bloody struggle which had to come, the son and the daughter-in-law of Alonzo Eldon, the great millionaire, exerted themselves in a peaceful conspiracy, trying to reconcile him to Alfred Escott, an ex-professor and journalist, who had taken up the cause of the settlers. But their efforts were frustrated, with tragic consequences in every direction, by the arts of a Bohemian journalist of San Francisco. It is a stern and sad narrative that Prof. Royce tells with restrained power. Artistically the novel is weakened by the device of having much of the story rehearsed later by the actors in the earlier episodes; but apart from this it is surely a fine novel of decided power. Its scene is new, its portrayal of the crude civilization of the Pacific Coast is masterly; and the whole effect is of a story from real life told by a spectator who can see far below the surface doings of the harassed and confused actors, to do justice to their most inward selves.

MINOR NOTICES.

Watson's Phonographic Instructor. An Advanced Method. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00.]

We cannot see wherein the method employed by Mr. Watson is in any way better than the methods employed in teaching the best systems of shorthand now in use; in fact we cannot believe that any method which makes light of the present vowel system can be successfully taught or used. Vowels, as every stenographer knows, are the very life of shorthand, and if omitted in advanced practice, must first be well learned. They govern position, and the more familiar the pupil becomes with them (and in spite of the misleading statement in the first part of the book, they are but few in number), the easier it is to write by position. One of the very last things Mr. Watson calls the attention of the pupil to is a vowel system, and his explanation is much more complicated than that of Isaac Pitman. In general Mr. Watson employs about the same means used by most authors, the difference being in the order in which the various principles are elaborated. His system is based on Pitman's, but in many places is so distorted as to be hardly recognizable; the construction is often very faulty; the double lengthening principle is, as he says, a special feature of the book, and one which is hardly in keeping with the most advanced ideas of our best authors. Short-hand, it is true, is hard to master; but the reporting style cannot be reached by "cutting off" and "leaving out" the very foundations. There is none too much to learn in the "old" systems, and Mr. Watson's method and system, when put to the test with those of the Pitmans, Grams, or Munson, is seriously defective and impracticable.

A Club of One: Passages from the Note-Book of a Man Who Might Have Been Sociable. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] This is a graceful piece of book-making: title-page rubricated, wide margins, marginal notes, exquisite typography, flexible back, covers of dark green cloth with no attempt at ornamentation save the lettering. It is, in fact, one of the best specimens of the recent noteworthy productions of the Riverside Press. What a pity that the publishers could not have found better material upon which to expend their enviable resources! The commonplace maunderings of a supposititious invalid eked out with "elegant extracts" from familiar authors and interlarded with stupid disquisitions on "the best books" were hardly worthy of so choice a setting.

English as She is Taught: Genuine Answers to Examination Questions in Our Public Schools. Collected by Caroline B. Le Row. [Cassell & Co. 50c.] There is something extremely pathetic about this collection of answers to school examinations, which constitute a severely forcible indictment of the "cramming" system. Through the infelicities and incongruities of expression here brought together, one can see plainly the child-mind struggling ineffectively toward comprehension, like a poor plant covered with a heap of debris trying vainly to make its way into the sunlight. Sad, inexpressibly sad, is the impression got from a reading of this book, and underneath it is a feeling of wrath at the colossal stupidity of the instructors whose only ideal of education is to heap up the rubbish of facts. Every school teacher ought to have a copy of this book to read and think about.

Livre des Enfants pour l'Etude du Français. Par Paul Bercy, B.L., L.D. [William R. Jenkins.] Prof. Bercy in his Livre des Enfants goes one step further back in the development of his series of text-books for the study of French by the natural method, and carries it into the nursery, where, as we have before remarked, it properly belongs. Written entirely in French, Prof. Bercy's primer is an intelligent guide to lessons calculated to stimulate the ideas of pupils and to excite a continued interest. We are glad to see that Prof. Bercy does not favor English rules for French pronunciation, concerning which he justly remarks:

Employer des mots barbares pour figurer la prononciation des mots simples et faciles, jetterait dans l'esprit des enfants une confusion extrême, sans avoir d'autre effet sur la prononciation que de la rendre fautive et détestable.

Handy Helps, No. 1. A Manual of Curious and Interesting Information. By Albert P. Southwick, A.M. [E. L. Kellogg & Co. $1.00.] This is a clumsy and idle piece of book-making, the compiler apparently having gathered up odds and ends from all sorts of sources into a scrap-book, and put over each scrap superfluous questions: "How high was Gilderoy hung?"

— "What poem was written by 'Bob' Ingersoll?" — "What noted graves have recently been opened?" — "What poet has been honored by school teachers?" — "What noted writer was engaged in a fatal duel?" The book is the most useless piece of imbecility imaginable. The index is a marvel. Among its entries are: "Author of 'Give me a place to stand,' etc.;" "Cause of the blue color of air;" "Derivation of the name Canada;" "First discovery of iron;" and "How man obtained the use of language!"

Machine Politics and Money in Elections in New York City. By William M. Ivins. [Harper & Bros. 25c.] Mr. Ivins, who is the City Chamberlain of New York, has already won a reputation among the more thoughtful class of citizens by his articles on the mechanism of municipal elections. These articles are now brought together in a volume of the "Handy Series," in which shape they are sure to obtain a wide circulation. Mr. Ivins tells us exactly what the "machine" is, how it works, and exactly how much money is required to "run" it. In this respect the volume is practically exhaustive. There are statistics in plenty, and they are used in a very eloquent way. But Mr. Ivins does not content himself with a statement of evils. He points out also the remedy in an elaborate explanation of the English ballot act of 1872, although he does not favor strict adherence to all the details of that admirable enactment. The several chapters are written in an attractive style, and the thought is always clearly expressed. Every American who is cognizant of his political duties and responsibilities ought to master this little manual, which is distinctly a power for good; to young men especially, a thorough knowledge of its contents would amount in politics to a liberal education.

On the Study of Literature. By John Morley. [Macmillan & Co. 50c.] Mr. Morley's address to the students of the London Society for the Extension of Universal Teaching expressed the views of an able thinker, a thorough scholar, and a man of affairs. It is a strong plea for the value of literary as distinguished from scientific culture, if any distinction is to be made, which Mr. Morley deprecates. The tone of the whole address is optimistic to a wholesome degree. Mr. Morley is not the one to shrink from the effort to spread a love for good books among the masses. He welcomes the modern ideal of democratic culture, which he places far above the Athenian level, inasmuch as "our object is to bring the Periclean ideas of beauty and simplicity and cultivation of the mind within the reach of those who do the drudgery and the service and rude work of the world." Mr. Morley does not favor lists of "a hundred books" as bases for culture. "To fill a man," he pertinently says, "with a hundred parcels of heterogeneous scraps from the Mahabharata, and the Sheking, down to Pickwick and White's Selborne, may pass the time, but I don't think it would strengthen or instruct or delight." Mr. Morley, in urging upon his hearers the value of reading for a short time every day, places a limit which few of them, we should think, would be able to reach, for he tells them that half an hour is enough to give to "fifteen or twenty pages of Burke," or one third of a book of the Iliad.

Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit. Selected from the Writings and Sayings of Henry Ward

Beecher. By William Drysdale. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.] These selections from Mr. Beecher's writings are admirably comprehensive, as indeed they ought to be, for Mr. Drysdale says that he has worked at the collection and arrangement of them during the last ten years. About one third of the book was revised by Mr. Beecher before his death, and this portion, we are told, was largely modified and re-written. The arrangement is topical; something like forty headings are given, such as "nature," "man," "business," "character," "wealth," "the family," "morals," "taste," "religion." An index would have been serviceable, but the publishers have thought such an aid unnecessary. The terse simplicity, the homely force, the real eloquence of Mr. Beecher's style are plainly indicated in the book, which is a fair representation of his ideas on nearly all matters of vital interest. Mr. Beecher did not deal in epigrams; he was often diffuse in expression; a great many of these selections are not sufficiently concise and direct to justify a title which seems to have been chosen purely for alliterative reasons. Yet not infrequently we find a condensed utterance that approaches the epigrammatic in form and intensity of meaning. Here are a few chosen at random:

Many men use their ears as a bolting-cloth, only to catch the bran and let the flour go.

We steal if we touch tomorrow.

Clothes and manners do not make the man; but, when he is made, they greatly improve his appearance.

The ignorant classes are the dangerous classes. Character, like porcelain ware, must be painted before it is glazed. There can be no change of color after it is burned in.

There is nothing in the world so intolerable as the doing everything on purpose.

You will seldom find in New England a saint in a ragged coat and with clouded shoes. It is contrary to the drift of centuries of teaching.

It is not well for a man to pray cream and live skim milk.

Enoch Arden and Other Poems. By Alfred Lord Tennyson. Edited with Notes by William J. Rolfe, A.M. [Ticknor & Co. 70c.] The Tennysonian range is well exemplified in this handy volume which Mr. Rolfe has edited with his customary skill and care. Beside "Enoch Arden" the book contains "Aylmer's Field," "Sea Dreams," the two "Marianas," "Lady Clara Vere de Vere," "The Golden Year," "Tithonus," the two "Freedoms," "Rizpah," and "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After." The notes, which fill some forty pages, include selections from contemporary criticisms, that of Mr. Gladstone on the later "Locksley Hall" being given in copious extracts. As usual, Mr. Rolfe pays a good deal of attention to variant readings. He says that he knows of but one copy of the 1830 edition in the United States, of but two copies of the 1832 edition; copies of both of these rare editions have been at his disposal.

The Essentials of Perspective. With Illustrations Drawn by the Author. By L. W. Miller. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.] Mr. Miller, who is principal of the School of Industrial Art connected with the Pennsylvania Museum, claims for this book that it contains as much information about the science of perspective as the artist or draughtsman has need for except under the most unusual conditions. Mr. Miller claims no new principles; he has simply made a practical guide, free from technicalities, ample in scope, and clear and simple in form—a guide adapted to the beginner, and one from which the advanced pupil will be pretty sure to get useful hints. In fact, Mr. Miller, of all the writers upon perspective, seems to be the only one who, with an adequate comprehension of the importance of his subject, has embodied direct classroom instruction into a complete and trustworthy text-book.

Claude Gellée de Lorraine. By Owen J. Dullea. [Scribner & Welford. $1.25.] Mr. Dullea has not attempted in his hand-book on Claude to give more than a digest of data concerning the life and works of that renowned artist. He balances Baldinucci against Sandart with no little dexterity, and concerning the later period draws freely, perforce, from Lady Dilke's memoir. The compilation has, however, been faithfully done, and in spite of the lack of attractiveness in his style, which is devoid of individuality, Mr. Dullea has accomplished a needed work. An appendix gives Claude's will for the first time in English; there is a table giving the inscriptions on the drawings in the "Liber Veritatis;" and another list of the present whereabouts of 265 works attributed to Claude. The illustrations are serviceable as indicative of Claude's style in composition, but are not otherwise of any value, except the reproductions from the "Liber Veritatis"—these last are a decided addition to the interest of the book.

Rural Hours. By Susan Fenimore Cooper. New and Revised Edition. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] It is pleasant to have these charming records of Rural Hours in a new dress. Miss Cooper has a talent for observation, a clear eye for the analogies of nature, and she has set down her impressions in a style at once spontaneous and graceful. Miss Cooper takes notes from day to day of all the changes of a sylvan year, and concerning the most familiar things has something to say worth hearing. For one thing, she does not attempt to read into nature reflections of varying personal moods. She is always calm, always perceptive, yet always guided by a gentle sympathy that permits no merest trifle to be slighted. He who desires to live over again country experiences, to recall scenes endeared by long association, will be glad to have this warmly vitalized chronicle at hand for leisure moments. To open it at random and read a few pages is to get a breath of air laden with the fragrance of the woods and fields.

We have on our table demanding comment: The Universal Cookery Book, a handsomely printed volume in large type made up of recipes selected mostly from such acknowledged authorities as Mrs. Lincoln, Marion Harland, and Miss Parloa—a desirable compilation [White, Stokes & Allen]; Canning and Preserving, by Mrs. S. T. Rorer, a very comprehensive little handbook [Arnold & Co. 25c.]; a well-chosen volume of Selected Essays of Joseph Addison, with a graceful introduction by Prof. C. T. Winchester [Chautauqua Press]; a low-priced edition of John Denison Champlin's unromantic Chronicle of the Coach [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25]; a pamphlet giving the text of The Inter-State Commerce Law, with analytical subject-headings and an index [Rand, McNally & Co.]; the 65th issue in Cassell's National Library, Macaulay's two essays on The Earl of Chatham [Cassell & Co. 10c.]; a learned manual on the production, storage, shipment, and uses of Petroleum [D. Van Nostrand. 50c.]; and A Manual for Infantry Officers of the National Guard, embodying all the latest decisions and regulations [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00].

PERIODICALS.

The new literature of Norway and Denmark is the subject of an interesting paper by Prof. Boyesen in The New Princeton Review for May. Prof. Boyesen indicates in a series of careful generalizations the changes that have been brought about in the intellectual spirit of Scandinavia during the last thirty years, chiefly through the efforts of Björnson and Ibsen. But Prof. Boyesen does not neglect the minor spirits in this notable renaissance, and characterizes happily the aims and work of Jonas Lie, Alexander Kiell, and Schandorph, Jacobsen and others. M. Taine's masterly dissection of Napoleon is completed, the political work of the emperor being defined as the product of a colossal egoism served by genius. President Porter discusses trenchantly, but good-humoredly, Leslie Stephens's physiological ethics. Ellis H. Roberts takes the trouble to argue that a protective tariff is preventive of monopoly and therefore highly moral. Prof. Young tells us what we may expect from the use of improved methods in astronomical photography. A detailed record of the political, literary, and scientific matters of the last six months is an addition to the volume which will be appreciated. This number also contains the analytical index to volume three.

The Century for May has two papers on the recent noteworthy event in Egyptology—the identification of the mummy of Rameses II as that of Pharaoh the Oppressor. Edward L. Wilson tells how the mummy was found by Prof. Maspero and supplies a number of illustrations from photographs made by himself. And Prof. John A. Paine makes a comparative study of the monumental portraits of Rameses and of those of his daughter-queen, Nefer-ari. The illustrations accompanying both of these articles are of significant merit. A paper on the Apaches by Frederick Schwatka adds to our knowledge of Indian character and capacity for civilization. Prof. W. O. Atwater begins in an attractive way a promising study of the chemistry of foods and nutrition, in which the comparative food value of—among other things—salted pork and turnips is strikingly depicted in an ingenious series of diagrams. Karl Blind contributes recollections of Louis Blanc which are worth reading. Anna Clarence Cook provides a fragmentary sketch of the home life of Washington Irving. "Whitsun Harp, Regulator," by Octave Thanet, is another Southern story, and like a good many of the Southern stories nowadays, is admirably original.

In the Forum for May Judge Edmund Bennett suggests revisions in the marriage laws on the theory that if marriage were not so easy divorce would not be so frequent; Francis A. Walker explains that socialism is likely soon to create serious disturbances among old world governments, but that we, having a free government, need not fear "the red spectre;" Prof. W. G. Sumner makes a concise statement of the condition of the Indians and says they must be treated as individuals; President Bascom writes rather vaguely of the books that have helped him, from Scott's novels to Amiel's Journal; Gen. W. F.

Smith pleads for a new executive department to be in charge of a secretary of public works; Prof. N. S. Shaler says that the natural gas supply is not likely to outlast the present generation; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe condemns the fashionable undress of women as derogatory to health and morals; and James Q. Howard indulges in a spirited diatribe with regard to the system of fee-giving, which he happily characterizes as "dining-room mendicancy."

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Mr. T. L. K. Oliphant's "The New English." When Mr. Oliphant published his Old and Middle English in 1878, he said in the preface: "I hope to bring out my work on the New English three or four years hence." The task has evidently been a greater one than he expected, but at length, after the lapse of more than eight years, we have The New English in two goodly volumes of 625 and 527 pages respectively. The earlier work brought the history down to the beginning of the 14th century; the new one continues it to the present day. "In 1303 the first well-formed specimen of New English appears"—the Handlyng Synne of Robert of Brunne, whom elsewhere our author calls "the Patriarch of the New English."

As an excellent critic has said, these scholarly volumes "will serve as a compendious historical dictionary till the great work of the Philological Society is available. . . . Its distinctive feature and eminent merit is the exhibition of numbers of words and phrases together as they are found together in books." Another well calls it "the most valuable collection of materials for the lexical history of the English language that has hitherto been published." One may judge of the number of words and phrases discussed in it from the fact that the Index—though, as Mr. Oliphant tells us, he has generally confined himself in it to Teutonic and Celtic words, giving Romance words only when they have some peculiarity—fills more than half of the second volume, or from page 245 to page 527.

"Shakespeare's English" gets a fair share of space—a hundred pages in all, including the other writers grouped with him. The plays are taken up one by one, and the new or peculiar words and phrases in each are noted. Special attention is called to the dramatist's compounds. Mr. Oliphant says:

Our English speech had undergone a sore wound in the thirteenth century, when she lost to a great extent her old power of compounding; her great Poet was led, so it would seem, by some unconscious instinct to try and make good the loss as far as in him lay. Here is an example for all later poets; let them bestow upon us any number of new and happy compounds.

Among the other writers analyzed, Tyndale and Coverdale, the Bible translators, are examined with special thoroughness. A few bits from the comments on the former will give an idea of the author's method:

Tyndale is fond of the words churl, man of war, loving kindness; he employs Barclay's new term dronkard, and other innovations of that fashionable author. . . . We may credit him with coining the word atonement; this he uses in 2 Cor. v., putting a few verses later that ye be alone (at one) with God; the new noun has been altered into reconciliation. In Exod. xxix. 33

this new word atonement is employed for an expiatory offering, and this is the sense in which we now use the word; it was copied from Tyndale by Coverdale in this particular verse. . . . In Col. iii. 15 men are called in one body, a new sense of the noun. In 1 Cor. iv. 17 St. Paul is made to talk of his ways, Queen Margaret's new sense of the word. . . . Tyndale's softness, which is to be known unto all men, has been altered into moderation. We here first find busy body. . . . There is yeres (anni) instead of the old year, the plural that had lasted down to 1400; on the other hand, Tyndale talks of five yooke and ten pounde. . . . There is a curious token of the popularity of the old English ballads; in them the line often occurs By Him that died on tree; in the first chapters of the Acts Tyndale twice uses the phrase hanged on tree, dropping the definite article. . . . There is a new noun from fry; Tamar is said to cook frytters for Amnon; Wickliffe here used soupynges. . . . The old leopard here appears (also in Coverdale) as call of the mountayne (Rev. xiii.); hence the American catamount. [The Shakespearian cat-o'-mountain supplies an intermediate form.] . . . The word thing was in high honor; the Virgin had often been called that sweet thing, and Tyndale speaks of Christ as a thing soft and gentle. . . . Among the verbs we see the new play bo-peep, make an ensample of, . . . catch hold, give room, run at riot, set by the ears, sink or swim, cost him his life, tell tales out of school, . . . meet him half way (not mid way), . . . go to pot, put him to his proofs. . . . The word merchant may be used for trickster, and this lasted for some years [compare Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4. 153: "What saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?"—that is, roguery.] . . . Courtesy (humanity) must be shown to beasts; humanity had been earlier used for courtesy. . . . Tyndale's works fill two goodly volumes, yet these contain only about twelve Teutonic words that have become obsolete since his time; a strong proof of the influence his translation of the Bible has had upon England in keeping her steady to her old speech.

No student, and certainly no teacher, of English can afford to do without this work, or the Old and Middle English, of which it is only a continuation and conclusion. Both are published by Macmillan & Co.

April Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society. The meeting was held at the usual place, the President, Appleton Morgan, Esq., in the chair. Hon. Alvey A. Ade presented a paper, which was read by Mr. Fleming. It was entitled "A Plea for a Reference Canon of Shakespeare's Plays, with a Uniform System of Notation applicable to all Critical Reprints of the Folio or Quarto Texts." Mr. Ade said that the frequent and necessary reference to the old texts, and the collations of the original readings, demanded by modern methods of study, caused loss of time and annoyance from the absence of a standard system of line-numbers. The student of Shakespeare, however humble a way, is not content to follow blindly the teachings of the editors, but reserves the indefeasible right to scrutinize the processes by which conclusions are reached, and bear the testimony of his own judgment to the soundness of the result. To insure uniformity in comparative research, the consensus of opinion should, in the first place, decide what are to be treated as canonical plays and what as apocryphal; and in the next, should adopt some definite text as the standard by which all others are to be compared. Like most of the presswork of the early seventeenth century, the known copies of the original texts differ widely, so that, as has been said, it is probable that no two copies of the 1623 Folio exactly agree, and even the possession of an original is insufficient to settle a textual dispute. The reprints, which the general student must consult, differ among themselves for the same reason; and not only are the issues by Wright in 1807, by Lionel Booth in 1864, by Howard Staunton in 1866, and by Chatto and Windus in 1876, discrepant, but it is impossible to fix the original copy from which they were made. Wright's and Booth's are from unascertained texts, and Staunton's superb photo-lithograph is a patchwork from the Ellesmere and Granville Folios, which belong to different periods and differ in minor typographical points. The four reprints have variations of their own, that of Booth being the most accurate, and from its wide diffusion among students, the most available as a common standard. None of the reprints are line-numbered, and the location of cited passages by the aid of the line-numbers of modern editions is troublesome. The numbering of these is discordant, for, despite the general acceptance of the Globe notation among critics, no other edition precisely follows it. Some critical editions resort to paragraph-numbering, which cannot help to locate a cited line in the original. Reference to page, column, and line of the Folio, or to signature, page, and line of the Quartos, is cumbersome. Act, scene, and line references are worse, for of the Quartos preceding the first Folio, only one, the Othello of 1622, is divided into acts and scenes; and of the Folio plays only six are divided in agreement with the Globe standard. Hence it is suggested that a uniform standard of notation be adopted by the Societies, whereby the lines should be numbered continuously from the beginning to the end. The stage directions, and act and scene divisions when they occur, should be included in the numeration, for they are a part of the record. Examples were given of the essential character of the stage directions to critical, textual, and historical study, although the editors ignore and alter them and interpolate their own silently. By adopting the continuous system of line-numbers, we could conveniently refer to "Temp. F., 2936" or "Ham. Q. 2, 3153," instead of inconveniently resorting to some such barbarous construction as "Com. Errors, F., p. 88 (misprint for 86), col. 1, line 24." The notation, so adopted by common consent, could be followed in all future critical reprints of the original text, and should be introduced and consistently adhered to in the forthcoming "Bankside" issues of parallel quarto and folio texts now in preparation by the New York Society. Mr. Price, in moving the reference of Mr. Adees's paper to the Publication Committee, said that the plan urged by Mr. Adees seemed sound and wise. In respect of easy reference and of a standard system of citation, English philosophy was far behind the classics. Students of English literature were made to suffer loss of time and constant irritation. Most of all, students of Shakespeare were troubled by lack of a recognized standard in editing and in the numbering of lines. Thus if the Society could do aught to bring the other societies to adopt such a standard, great good would come. But he felt that if the numbering of the lines was to be used as reference, no agreement could be reached, for the numbering of the lines varies according to each editor's system of reckoning such lines as poetry, and such and such others as prose. In the old editions, and in the reprints of old editions, many lines that the poet made metrical are printed as prose. See, for example, Mr. Goldsmith's excellent reprint (1886) of Thomas Heywood's Green's Masque of 1640. Here many passages of verse are printed as prose. No reference in such cases to the numbers of the lines would be possible. This difficulty may, however, be avoided by giving up the numbering of the lines, and adopting the page number of some preferred edition — e.g., the singularly perfect Granville copy of the Folio in the British Museum. If the pagination of this edition were used by scholars for reference purposes, all difficulty would, the speaker thought, disappear. Mr. Frey called attention to a letter from Dr. Furnivall of the London new Shakspeare Society to our esteemed brother-member, Mr. W. J. Rolfe, taking issue with the remarks of Mr. Morgan as to Shakespeare's "later style" compared with Tennyson's, at the last meeting. Mr. Morgan replied that having confessed himself unable to see anything whatever of value in Dr. Furnivall's verse texts, he could hardly expect Dr. Furnivall's approval. His (Mr. Morgan's) point was that, while doubtless the style of a writer changes by lapse of time, perhaps we cannot always be sure just how and upon what lines. If, for example, Tennyson's style were found to change on exactly the lines which Dr. Furnivall assigned to Shakespeare, that was a most important argument in favor of Dr. Furnivall's theory, no doubt. But argument is not evidence — and Dr. Furnivall must remember that here was no evidence of any sort — presumptive, conclusive, direct, accumulative, or even corroborative; or, if evidence at all, only at the uttermost, evidence of a tendency in Tennyson which might also have been a tendency in Shakespeare. But then, again, it might not. The chronology of Shakespeare as established by the verse tests either conforms to the chronology established by the printers' dates and the copyright entries, or it does not. If it does, the verse tests are superfluous. If it does not, then verse tests are of no value unless corroborated by external and circumstantial evidence. But external and circumstantial evidences are precisely what Dr. Furnivall declines to consider as against the conclusions reached by his verse tests. Besides, the chronology indicated by these dates and entries may itself be false. Who can say that an author's first success may not, in Elizabeth's day as in our own, have led to the printing of manuscripts which before no publisher could be found to touch, and whether it might not have been so in Shakespeare's case? Our friends must not be impatient with us if we are unable to accept argument for evidence in these matters, however unimpeachable from their own standpoint such argument may be. On motion of Mr. Price, the Chair then appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Price, Adees, and Fleming, to devise a plan of calling the attention of Shakespeare societies to the advisability of a convention on the subject of a uniform system of text reference — and on motion the Chair was added to such committee.

From the notices which, within a few days of its publication, fell under the eyes of every diligent surveyor of the public prints, it is clear that this book [Life of Anne Gilchrist] is to have a success at the libraries. Let us, even thus early, be permitted to trust that it may be due to the record this book affords of a high, a refined, an independent, what the Americans call a "lovely" character, rather than to the chronicle of literary small beer which in certain of its pages it does afford also. In editing the book some effort appears to have been made "to make the best of both worlds" — to satisfy Mrs. Gilchrist's grave and appreciative friends, and to let the "many-headed beast" know some things which it was not after all quite "fit" that he should know. — F. Wedmore in the Academy.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

821. Who Wrote "Cock Robin"? Can you tell me the author of "Cock Robin," which is now embodied in Mother Goose's Melodies, but was originally not considered of them?

Natchez, Miss.

E. S.

NEWS AND NOTES.

— Recent changes in prominent book publishing firms include the retirement of Mr. Theodore Roosevelt as special partner from G. P. Putnam's Sons and his superseding by Mr. Walter Howe; the withdrawal of Mr. Stokes from the firm of White, Stokes & Allen and the formation of a new partnership, White & Allen; and the establishment of a new publishing business in Chicago by Mr. John C. Buckbee, for fifteen years a member of the firm of S. C. Griggs & Co.

— We are glad to be able to say that the newspaper reports with regard to the blindness of Mrs. Margaret J. Preston are untrue. Mrs. Preston is not blind at all, but because of over-taxed eyes has had to do all her literary work, for some time, through an amanuensis.

— Mr. Henry T. Wharton, whose beautiful edition of Sappho will be remembered, has prepared a new and enlarged edition of that work, including an autotype fac-simile of a newly discovered fragment of Sappho, from the Egyptian Museum at Berlin. The book will be published in this country by A. C. McClurg & Co.

— Mr. Frederick A. Stokes continues, at 182 Fifth Avenue, New York, the publishing business formerly controlled by White, Stokes & Allen. Mr. Stokes was in charge of the manufacturing department of the late firm, and to him the fine make-up of the books bearing their imprint is due.

— Miss Bayle's Romance, a transatlantic novel dealing with the fortunes of a Chicago girl on European soil, and a highly successful performance, if we may judge by foreign notices of the book, is to be brought out here immediately by Henry Holt & Co.

— Rev. W. C. Winslow's valuable article on "Naukratis," which appeared in the Church Review for March, has been reprinted in pamphlet form by Darnell & Upham.

— In a remarkable Catalogue of Autograph Letters, just issued by William Evarts Benjamin, 744 Broadway, New York, the original MS. of Hawthorne's sketch, A London Suburb (31 pp., 4to.), is priced at $125.00. Three of Keats's love letters to Fanny Brawne are marked respectively $150.00, $125.00, and $75.00. An autograph poem by Thomas Moore is offered for $10.00; a letter by John Howard Payne at the same price; a letter by James Thomson to his bookseller at $20.00; a letter by Lord Tennyson ("crabbed sort of a letter, rather characteristic") at $10.00; an original MS. by Voltaire, Du Théisme, at $35.00. Several remarkable specimens of Persian palæography are enumerated in this catalogue, which is of quite unusual interest.

—At the sale of the Kellogg collection of autographs in this city last week a letter by Hawthorne brought $80.00; the MS. of Leigh Hunt's "Abou Ben Adhem," $96.00; and a few lines of verse by John Keats, $26.50.

—From English sources we learn that Mr. Spencer Walpole is to write the life of the late Earl Russell.

—A beginning has been made with the proposed English Dialect Dictionary, the Rev. A. Smythe Palmer, the author of A Word-hunter's Note-book, having been appointed editor, and an appeal issued for funds to complete the undertaking. Prof. Skeat has accepted the duties of treasurer and secretary, as it has been deemed desirable to form a separate organization for the carrying out of the preparation of the dictionary, leaving the English Dialect Society to pursue its own work as heretofore. It is estimated that at least £5,000 will be required. The printing and publication of the dictionary will be undertaken by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press.

—Mr. A. Lawrence Lowell will contribute an article on "The Theory of the Social Compact" to the June number of The Atlantic. A paper on "Nursery Classes in School" by Horace E. Scudder will also appear in the same number.

—President Barnard has received many evidences of the favor with which Columbia's doctorate of letters to Miss Amelia B. Edwards is received by the public.

—Button's Inn, a story of New York in stage-coach days, by Albion W. Tourgée, is to be published by Roberts Brothers, who have also in press Ourselves and Our Neighbors, familiar essays on social topics, by Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, and Songs of the Mexican Seas, by Joaquin Miller. The next Balzac translation will be The Alkahest, by which title only Balzac readers will recognize La Recherche de l'Absolu.

—The Crusade of the Excelsior, by Bret Harte, is to be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

—Still another change in the book publishing business is to be recorded in the formation of a partnership between Mr. J. G. Cupples and Mr. Alfred Dennis Hurd, the latter gentleman having been for some time connected with the firm of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Messrs. Cupples & Hurd will conduct a general publishing and retail business at 94 Boylston Street, where handsome quarters are preparing, Mr. Hurd devoting himself to the publishing department and Mr. Cupples to the retail business. The new firm starts out under the most favorable auspices.

—The figure of Mr. John S. Lockwood is once more perceptible on Boston streets after a prolonged absence. Mr. Lockwood has been traveling through the Western States, and returns in renewed health to continue his valuable services as literary agent for public or private buyers of books. It is not because Mr. Lockwood's advertisement appears in this issue of the Literary World that we commend him to all persons engaged in the formation of libraries, as a more than usually intelligent and trustworthy guide.

—Mrs. Margaret J. Preston will contribute to Lippincott's for June "Some Records of Philip Bourke Marston," which include private letters of great interest.

—The Blind Brother, the $1,500 prize story, by Homer Greene, just published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., is selling rapidly—being already in its second thousand.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

(Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.)

April.	Quarterly.
Biography, National.	London Quarterly.
Dante's Life.	English Historical Rev.
Greville's Latest Journals. W. E. Gladstone.	Quarterly.
Hobbes of Malmesbury.	Quarterly.
Plantin, Christopher, the Antwerp Printer.	Quarterly.
Shelley, the Character of.	Quarterly.
May.
Books that Have Helped Me. John Bascom.	Forum.
College Fraternities. Andrew P. White.	Forum.
Irving, Washington, a Glimpse of, at Home.	Century.
Norway and Denmark, the New Literature of.	Princeton Rev.
H. H. Boyesen.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

HENRY WARD BEECHER. A Sketch of his Career. By Lyman Abbott, D.D., assisted by Rev. S. B. Halliday. Funk & Wagnalls.

THE EARL OF CHATHAM. By Lord Macaulay. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND EPISCOPATE OF THE RIGHT REVEREND ROBERT BICKERSTETH, D.D., BISHOP OF RIPLEY, 1857-1884. By his Son, Montagu Cyril Bickersteth, M.A. E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.50

MRS. SIDDONS. By Nina A. Kennard. Famous Women Series. Roberts Bros. $1.00

DANTE: A SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By May Alden Ward. Roberts Bros. $1.25

FINAL MEMORIALS OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW. Edited by Samuel Longfellow. Ticknor & Co. $3.00

Essays and Sketches.

SELECTED ESSAYS OF JOSEPH ADDISON. With an Introduction by C. T. Winchester. Chautauqua Press.

ON THE STUDY OF LITERATURE. By John Morley. Macmillan & Co. 50c.

RURAL HOURS. By Susan Fenimore Cooper. New and Revised Edition. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Fiction.

GLOW-WORM TALES. By James Payn. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 20c.

AS COMMON MORTALS. Cassell & Co. 50c.

DAWN. By H. Rider Haggard. Harper & Bros.

THE FLAMINGO FEATHER. By Kirk Munroe. Harper & Bros.

THE PRACE EGG AND A CHRISTMAS MUMMING PLAY. By Juliana Horatia Ewing. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 30c.

DANDELION CLOCKS, AND OTHER TALES. By Juliana Horatia Ewing. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 30c.

THE EPICUREAN. A Romance. By Thomas Moore. Leisure Moment Series. Henry Holt & Co. 25c.

ZURY: THE MEANEST MAN IN SPRING COUNTY. A Novel of Western Life. By Joseph Kirkland. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

KING SOLOMON'S MINES. By H. Rider Haggard. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

CUORE. An Italian Schoolboy's Journal. A Book for Boys. By Edmondo de Amicis. Translated by Isabel F. Hapgood. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

SIGRID, AN ICELANDIC LOVE STORY. By Jon Thoroddsen Thoroddsen. Translated from the Danish by C. Christ. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

THE BUCHHOLZ FAMILY. Second Part. By Julius Stinde. Tr. by L. Dora Schmitz. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

GARRISON GOSSIP: GATHERED IN BLANKHAMPTON. By John Strange Winter. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 15c.

THE DEVIL'S HAT: a Sketch in Oil. By Melville Phillips. Ticknor & Co. $1.00

LES MISÉRABLES. Par Victor Hugo. Première partie: Fantine. William R. Jenkins. $1.00

THE BLIND BROTHER: a Story of the Pennsylvania Coal Mines. By Homer Greene. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 90c.

BETWEEN WHILES. By Helen Jackson (H. H.). Roberts Bros. $1.25

LE CHIEN DU CAPITAINE. Par Louis Énault. Contes Choisis. William R. Jenkins. 25c.

History.

ABRAHAM, JOSEPH, AND MOSES IN EGYPT. Being a Course of Lectures Delivered Before the Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. By Rev. Alfred H. Kellogg, D.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50

PAPERS OF THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION. Vol. I. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE DISCOVERY OF GUIANA. By Sir Walter Raleigh. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.

Poetry.

THE DREAM OF HOLY ALSACAR. By Charles Rufus Lathrop. Belford, Clarke & Co.

DANTE AND HIS CIRCLE. With the Italian Poets Preceding Him (1100-1200-1300). A Collection of Lyrics, Edited and Translated in the Original Meters by Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Revised and Re-arranged Edition. Roberts Bros. $2.00

Science and Philosophy.

ELEMENTS OF PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY. A Treatise of the Activities and Nature of the Mind from the Physical and Experimental Point of View. By George T. Ladd. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50

POETRY AND PHILOSOPHY OF GOETHE. Comprising the Lectures and Extempore Discussions before the Milwaukee Literary School in August, 1886. Edited by Marion V. Dudley. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50

ANALYSIS OF ROTARY MOTION, AS APPLIED TO THE GYROSCOPE. By Major J. G. Barnard. D. Van Nostrand. 50c.

MICROSCOPY FOR BEGINNERS; OR, COMMON OBJECTS FROM THE PONDS AND DITCHES. By Alfred C. Stokes, M.D. Illus. Harper & Bros. $1.50

CAPITAL. A Critical Analysis of Capitalist Production. By Karl Marx. Tr. by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and edited by Frederick Engels. 2 vols. Scribner & Welford. $12.00

THE NEW PSYCHIC STUDIES. In Their Relation to Christian Thought. By Franklin Johnson, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls.

BRIDGE DISASTERS IN AMERICA. The Cause and the Remedy. By George L. Vose. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

Text-Books.

LIVRE DES ENFANTS POUR L'ÉTUDE DU FRANÇAIS. Par Paul Bercy. W. R. Jenkins.

A MANUAL FOR INFANTRY OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD. Compiled by Col. J. G. Gilchrist. Revised by Lieut. E. C. Knower. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

PETROLEUM: ITS PRODUCTION AND USE. By Bonerton Redwood, F.I.C., F.C.S. D. Van Nostrand. 50c.

P. TERENTI AFRI ADELPHOR. Text with Stage Directions by Henry Preble. Ginn & Co.

A JUNIOR COURSE OF PRACTICAL ZOOLOGY. By A. Milnes Marshall, assisted by C. Herbert Hurst. London: Smith, Elder & Co. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

WATSON'S PHONOGRAPHIC INSTRUCTOR. An Advanced Method. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

GERMAN NOVELETTES FOR SCHOOL AND HOME. Selected by Dr. Wilhelm Bernhardt. Vol. I. D. C. Heath & Co. 80c.

A PRIMER OF BOTANY. By Mrs. A. A. Knight. Ginn & Co. 35c.

COPARTNERSHIP NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that a copartnership has this day been formed between JOSEPH GEORGE CUPPLES (late of the firm of Cupples, Upham & Co.) and ALFRED DENNIS HURD (late with Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) for the purpose of transacting a general publishing, bookelling and importing business, under the firm name of Cupples & Hurd, at No. 94 Boylston Street.

JOSEPH GEORGE CUPPLES.
ALFRED DENNIS HURD.

Boston, April 30, 1887.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harpers' Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. Titus MURSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

American School and College Dramas.

EDITED BY EDWARD ROTH.

The Gray Tigers of Smithville; or, He Would and He Wouldn't. An Extravaganza, in Three Acts. Supplied by booksellers, or mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, 25 cents.

1185 Pine Street, Philadelphia.

A FAMOUS LETTER.

WE give you two famous letters, and they are "D.K." They mean Dr. MARK E. WOODBURY'S DYSPEPSIA KILLERS. A little lozenge, which cures

DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, And all stomach troubles. Price 50 cents a box (trial box, 25 cents). Sent anywhere in the United States, by mail, on receipt of price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY:

THE STORY OF ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By JOHN P. MAHAFFY, Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. With the collaboration of Arthur Gilman. Being Volume XV in the Story of the Nations Series. 12mo, with maps and 37 illustrations, $1.50.

"The Story of the conquests of Alexander has been told many times, and his name is familiar in our mouths as household words; but the history of the different portions of the great Empire that he founded, how they rapidly gained and lost their independence, and finally were absorbed into the dominions of Rome, is by no means equally well known."—Extract from Author's Preface.

HOW TO TRAVEL. Hints, Advice and Suggestions to Travelers by Land and Sea, all Over the Globe. By THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "Life of Fulton," "Marco Polo and His Travels," "Decisive Battles since Waterloo," etc. Revised edition, 16mo, $1.00.

VOICE, SONG, AND SPEECH. A Practical Guide for Singers and Speakers, from the combined view of Vocal Surgeon and Voice Trainer. By LENNOX BROWNE and EMIL BEHNKE. Seventh and cheaper edition, 8vo, with 37 illustrations, cloth extra, $2.00.

"An epoch-making book."—Cologne Gazette.

"A book to be read and to be studied."—London Times.

"Every singer, actor, and public speaker and instructor should possess a copy."—London Echo.

A New Volume by the Author of "The Leavenworth Case."

7 TO 12. A Story. By ANNA KATHERINE GREEN. 16mo, uniform with "X. Y. Z.," 25 cents.

New Impressions, also, of the Other Stories of this Popular Writer:

THE LEAVENWORTH CASE. $1.00 and 50 cents.

HAND AND RING. $1.00 and 50 cents.

THE SWORD OF DAMOCLES. $1.00 and 50 cents.

A STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE. $1.00 and 50 cents.

THE MILL MYSTERY. $1.00 and 50 cents.

X. Y. Z. 25 cents.

. List of Publications for the Spring Season mailed on application.

TWO NEW VOLUMES

BY THE LATE

Juliana Horatia Ewing,

Author of "Jackanapes," etc.

DANDELION CLOCKS,
AND OTHER TALES.

(Now first published in Book Form.)

THE PEACE EGG,

AND

A CHRISTMAS MUMMING PLAY.

(Now first published together.)

Both the above are ILLUSTRATED by GORDON BROWNE, ENGRAVED and PRINTED by EDMUND EVANS. Small 4to, paper board, 30 cents each; by mail, 33 cents.

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO.,
Cooper Union, New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 181 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

JOHN S. LOCKWOOD,

COMMISSION BOOK-BUYER,

82 EQUITABLE BUILDING,

BOSTON.

Mr. John S. Lockwood, senior member of the late firm of Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Booksellers and Publishers, Boston, having established himself independently as an agent and buyer of books on a commission basis, both in home and foreign markets, offers his services to donors of new public libraries, trustees of new or established public and college libraries, individuals, societies and town committees.

His experience of more than twenty-five years in this direction, his relations with the trade, and his thorough acquaintance with the catalogues and books of American and Foreign Publishers, give him peculiar advantages, and enable him to relieve those engaging his services of all labor of detail, and also to make an appreciable saving in cost.

He will submit to patrons for examination approved Manuscript lists of books of an absolutely standard character, in all departments of literature, from which selections can be made covering any desired expenditure, and will personally execute orders intrusted to him, in this country and Europe.

Mr. Lockwood solicits correspondence, and refers by permission, to the gentlemen whose names appear below.

REFERENCES:

Hon. John D. Long, Hingham, Mass.
Hon. Charles Allen, Justice Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, Boston.
Mark Hopkins, LL.D., Williamstown, Mass.
John N. Denison, Esq., Sears's Building, Boston.
W. I. Fletcher, A.M., Librarian of Amherst College, Amherst, Mass.
Arthur Gilman, A.M., Cambridge, Mass.
Frederick L. Ames, Esq., Equitable Building, Boston.
H. B. Hannewell, Esq., 87 Milk Street, Boston.
David Nevins, Esq., 82 Chauncy Street, Boston.
Charles F. Clark, Esq., President of The Bradstreet Company, New York.
Hon. H. O. Houghton of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Company, Boston.
Messrs. Lee & Shepard, Publishers, Boston.
Messrs. Roberts Brothers, Publishers, Boston.
Rev. Edward Abbott, Cambridge, Mass.
Col. T. W. Higginson, Cambridge, Mass.
Edwin M. Bacon, Editor of the Boston Post, Boston.
Charles E. Hurd, Literary Editor of the Boston Transcript, Boston.
Horace E. Deming, Esq., Mills Building, New York.
Prof. George H. Howison, University of California, Berkeley, Cal.
Edwin L. Bynner, Librarian of Boston Bar Association Library, Boston.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000

Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

13 Astor Place, New York.

THE BLIND BROTHER. By HOMER GREENE. 12mo, cloth, 230 pp., 14 illustrations, 90 cents.

"The recent prize competition for stories, held by the publishers of the Youth's Companion, called forth about 5,000 aspirants for literary honors; among that multitude, Mr. Homer Greene of Honesdale, Pa., whose story, 'The Blind Brother,' took the first prize of $1,500, probably the largest sum ever paid for a story to a hitherto comparatively unknown writer. 'The Blind Brother' deals with life in the coal mining region of the Wyoming Valley, and is remarkable for its dramatic intensity, power of characterization, humor and pathos."

CUORE, an Italian School Boy's Journal. By EDMUND DE AMICIS. Translated from the 39th Italian edition by Isabel F. Haggood. 12mo, $1.25.

SIGRID. An Icelandic Love Story. Translated from the Danish of JON THORSSON THORSSON. 12mo, $1.25.

THE PICTURE OF PAUL. (The Disciple.) By the Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A. The fourth volume of "Christ and Christianity." 12mo, $1.25.

INITIALS AND PSEUDONYMS. A Dictionary of Literary Disguises. By WILLIAM CUSHING, A.M. Revised edition. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

PROFESSOR JOHNNY. By the author of "Birchwood Fitch Club" and "Riverside Museum." 12mo, $1.25.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

THE SEASHORE SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE TENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE

Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute,

AT COTTAGE CITY, MASS.,

W. J. ROLFE, A.M., President,

Will begin Monday, July 11, 1887, and continue five weeks.

DEPARTMENTS: Art; Book-keeping and Writing; Botany; Chemistry; Civics; Elocution; English Literature (under the charge of the President); French; German; Geography; Geology and Mineralogy; History; Kindergarten; Latin and Greek; Mathematics; Microscopy; Vocal Music; Piano-forte Music; Pedagogy; Phonography; Physics; Physiology; Zoology.

Good table-board at low rates on the Institute grounds.

For Circular giving full information, address

BENJAMIN W. PUTNAM,
Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.*OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 15 "
Or $30.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 11. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 324. Publishers.

BOSTON, MAY 28, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

NOW READY.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE FOR JUNE.

CONTENTS:

Naparte. Frontispiece. From a painting by APPIANI.

Some Illustrations of Napoleon and His Times. By JOHN C. ROPES. With illustrations from the author's collection.

A Collection of Unpublished Letters of Thackeray.—III. Illustrated by portraits and reproductions of drawings by Thackeray. (To be continued in further numbers.)

Miss Pringle's Neighbors. By Mrs. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

An Uncommercial Republic. By W. T. BRIGHAM. With illustrations from photographs by the author.

Miss Peck's Promotion. By SARAH ORNE JEWETT. Illustrated by E. W. KEMBLE.

The Ethics of Democracy. By F. J. SIMSON.

Seth's Brother's Wife.—Chapters XXI-XXIII. By HAROLD FREDERIC.

Two Russians. By NORA PERRY.

The Magic Flight in Folk-Lore. By H. E. WARNER.

The Stone-Cutter. By ELIZABETH AKERS.

Poems by H. C. BUNNER, JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY, HENRIETTA CHRISTIAN WRIGHT, ELLEN BURROUGHS, MRS. JAMES T. FIELDS, GRAHAM R. TOMSON, ELIZABETH AKERS.

WITH this number is completed the first volume of Scribner's Magazine, and the publishers have prepared a unique and handsome form of binding in English buckram cloth especially imported for Scribner's Magazine.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

25 CENTS A COPY. $3.00 A YEAR.

Charles Scribner's Sons,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by F. A. ABBOTT, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Nordsee, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A. THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 3 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONIUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 8 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPTE'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN FIGURES.

SPINOKA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUDEN'S Uebers d'1898)) K.

* * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare and Second-hand Books ready. Special Net Catalogue of Books greatly reduced in price ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

CUCUMBER CHRONICLES.

A Book to be Taken in Slices. By J. ASHBY-STERRY, author of "The Lazy Minstrel," "Tiny Travels," etc. Foolscap 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, with Four Colotype Illustrations, $2.00.

OUTLINE OF CONTENTS: In Search of a Giant—Tumbleton's—A Lazy Morning—The Superior Animal—Change for Sixpence—An Ancient Hostelry—A Lounge on the Lawn—For Babies Only—The Wooden Midshipman—My Village—Christmas Travellers—Bachelors—Amid Autumn Leaves—Miss Betsey Trotwood's—An Early Walk—A Few Cigarettes—Windows—The Haunted Precinct—A Firelight Sonata.

* * A volume of light and charming essays for summer reading.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "IDEAL" SERIES.

THE LAZY MINSTREL.

By J. ASHBY-STERRY. Printed on hand-made paper, with charming vignette. 16mo, vellum cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

"Quaint and droll, perfect in design and diction, light, bright and musical, these poems are the most cheerful verses we can meet with in latter-day literature."—Sheffield Weekly Telegraph.

"A delightful little book—delightful to read, and not less delightful to look upon."—Liverpool Mercury.

"The meter is perfect, the music of the verse well sustained, and there is that fun and merry quip in 'The Lazy Minstrel' which becomes vers de société."—New York Times.

THE PERFECT WAY;

Or, The Finding of Christ. By ANNA BONUS KINGSFORD (M.D. of the Faculty of Paris) and EDWARD MAITLAND (B.A., Cantab.). Revised and Enlarged Edition, being the first with the authors' names. Square 8vo, cloth, uncut tinted paper, $3.75.

"It is a book that will be largely read by students of esoteric philosophy, theosophists, and investigators of recondite branches of thought and philosophy."—Boston Transcript.

"The more this book is read carefully—as it deserves to be—the greater does the wonder grow as to its production, and the interpretative genius that pervades each well-weighted sentence."

"A veritable gospel of interpretation."

"Those marvellous appendices."—From Light and elsewhere.

COURT LIFE IN EGYPT.

By A. J. BUTLER, author of "The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt." Demy 8vo, with illustrations, cloth, $4.50.

Dr. Munger's New Book.

THE APPEAL TO LIFE.

A volume of Sermons. By THEODORE T. MUNGER, D.D., author of "The Freedom of Faith," "On the Threshold," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.50.

CONTENTS: The Witness from Experience—Christ's Treatment of Unwilling Skeptics—Truth through and by Life—Life not Vanity—The Gospel of the Body—The Defeat of Life—The Two Prayers of Job—Trust and Righteousness—The Twofold Force in Salvation—Faith Essential Righteousness—Evolution and the Faith—Immortality and Modern Thought—Man the Final Form in Creation—Music as Revelation. (Nearly Ready.)

PHILLIPS EXETER LECTURES.

Lectures delivered before the Students of Phillips Exeter Academy, 1885-1886. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50.

CONTENTS: Physical, Mental and Spiritual Exercises, by Rev. EDWARD E. HALE—The Influence of Habit in College Training, by President MCCOSH of Princeton—Socialism, by President WALKER of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology—The Spontaneous Element in Scholarship, by President BARTLETT of Dartmouth—Men, Made, Self-made and Unmade, by President ROBINSON of Brown University—The Ideal scholar, by President PORTER of Yale—The Sentiment of Reverence, by President CARTER of Williams—Biography, by Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS. (Nearly Ready.)

HENRY CLAY.

Vols. XV and XVI in Series of American Statesmen. By CARL SCHURZ. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50.

Henry Clay was so conspicuous and fascinating a figure in American politics, and took a leading part in discussing so many important questions, that the story of his life cannot fail to be equally instructive and interesting. The signal ability of Mr. Schurz, his profound understanding of the principles, history, and public men of the United States, and his remarkable candor, assure a work of unusual value.

COLONIAL BALLADS, SONNETS, AND OTHER VERSE.

By MARGARET J. PRESTON, author of "Cartoons," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Mrs. Preston holds an enviable place in the regard of thoughtful readers. Her elevation of purpose, her dignity and repose, give to her verse a character which commands respect, while her lyrical skill lends to it an attraction that wins admiration. This new volume will find favor with all to whom poetry is a stimulus and a delight.

THE PERSONAL MEMOIRS, AND MILITARY HISTORY OF U. S. GRANT vs. THE RECORD OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

By CARSWELL McCLELLAN, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. Volunteers, Assistant Adjutant-General, and Special Aide, on Staff of General Andrew A. Humphreys, June, 1862, to April, 1864. With five maps. 1 vol., crown 8vo, $1.75.

Colonel McClellan, who served on the staff of both Generals Meade and Humphreys, in this volume aims to correct certain errors in General Grant's Memoirs, which, he thinks, do grave injustice to those admirable officers. The work is not controversial, or an attack on General Grant, but points out his mistakes, and offers ample documentary proofs for their correction.

WAS SHAKESPEARE SHAPLEIGH?

A Correspondence in Two Entanglements. Edited by JUSTIN WINSON, Librarian of Harvard University. 1 vol., 16mo, 75 cents.

This is a curious addition to Shakespeare literature. It is a careful and ingenious discussion of certain coincidences, which indicate that possibly Shakespeare was confounded with a Mr. Shapleigh, and will interest Shakespeare students.

THE ENGLISH DRAMATISTS.

THE WORKS OF JOHN MARSTON. Edited by A. H. BULLEN, B.A., of the British Museum. In three volumes, octavo. Cloth, $9.00 for the set; Large-Paper Edition, $12.00.

Under Mr. Bullen's very competent editorial care this edition of Marston is worthy to be added to the volumes of English Dramatists previously issued in this form—Marlowe in three volumes, and Middleton in eight.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

New Volumes of Lecky's England.

Lecky's History of England in the Eighteenth Century. Volumes V and VI.

The new volumes of Lecky's great work cover for England the period from the acknowledgment of the independence of the United States in 1783 to the declaration of war with France in 1793; and for Ireland they include the early days of Grattan's Parliament and the foundation of the Society of the United Irishmen. One more volume will complete the work.

Large 12mo, cloth, price $2.25 per volume.

II.

Roundabout to Moscow.

AN EPICUREAN JOURNEY. By JOHN BELL BOUTON, author of "Round the Block." 12mo, cloth, ornamented cover, Russian title-page, 421 pages, price $1.50.

"This genial book gives the first truly American view of the land of Nihilists and Novelists. The author exposes and playfully ridicules the current English misrepresentation of Russia. His epicurean circuit for getting into and out of the empire includes nearly every country of Europe. He keeps on the track of all the comforts and luxuries required by American travelers. Tourists will find the volume a boon companion. But it is no less designed to please those who stay at home and travel only by book."

III.

John Sevier, the Commonwealth-Builder.

A Sequel to "The Rear-Guard of the Revolution." By JAMES R. GILMORE (Edmund Kirke). 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

John Sevier was among the pioneers who settled the region in Eastern Tennessee. He was the founder of the State of Franklin, which afterward became Tennessee, and was the first Governor of the State. His innumerable battles with the Indians, his remarkable exploits, his address and genius for leadership, render his career one of the most thrilling and interesting on record.

IV.

An Index to the Works of Shakspeare.

Giving references, by topics, to notable passages and significant expressions; brief histories of the plays; geographical names and historical incidents; mention of all characters, and sketches of important ones; together with explanations of allusions and obscure and obsolete words and phrases. By EVANGELINE M. O'CONNOR. Crown 8vo, 420 pages, half leather, price $2.00.

There are a multitude of books on Shakspeare's works, but the combination of information here presented is new, and hence it is believed it will prove of great value to all students and readers of Shakspeare.

V.

Dick's Wandering.

A NOVEL. By JULIAN STURGIS, author of "John Maidment," "An Accomplished Gentleman," etc. A new edition. 12mo, paper cover, 60 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

For Every Household.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING.

12mo, extra cloth, $1.00 each.

THE NURSING AND CARE OF THE NERVOUS AND THE INSANE.

By CHAS. K. MILLS, M.D.

"It is by one of the ablest, best-known specialists in our country, who has devoted his attention to diseases of the mind and nervous system. It treats of such topics as the management of epileptics, sleeplessness, delirium, the alcohol and opium habits, and the care of the actually insane. In addition to this, we find plain, practical directions about massage, the movement cure, baths, the clinical thermometer, and the administration of the various forms of electricity. A number of illustrations are inserted."—Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter.

"A very unique and instructive work on the treatment of patients suffering from either functional or organic nervous trouble."—Philadelphia Press.

"It will serve a most excellent purpose as a guide to the care of a class of troubles always requiring the closest attention and most intelligent watchfulness."—Nashville Journal of Medicine and Surgery.

MATERNITY; INFANCY; CHILDHOOD.

The Hygiene of Pregnancy; the Nursing and Weaning of Infants; the Care of Children in Health and Disease.

By JOHN M. KEATING, M.D.

The fact of the enormous mortality of children under three years of age has for a long time attracted the attention of physicians, rendering it of the utmost importance that some manual, embracing the latest researches on the subject of the care of children, be prepared. The work which Dr. Keating presents, covers the ground faithfully.

IN PREPARATION.

OUTLINES FOR THE MANAGEMENT OF DIET.

Or, The Regulation of Food to the Requirements of Health and the Treatment of Disease.

By E. T. BRUEN, M.D.

There is probably no more important branch of physical culture than that pertaining to the subject of which this work treats. A proper recognition of the laws of health can only be maintained by careful observance of dietary laws.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, MAY 28, 1887.

No. 11.

CONTENTS.

FINAL MEMORIALS OF LONGFELLOW	163
GENERAL FREMONT'S MEMOIRS	163
AN EPICUREAN JOURNEY	164
PROF. ROBERTS'S IN DIVERS TONES	164
MR. RUSKIN'S PRÆTERITA	165
SARACINESCA	165
DANTE AND HIS CIRCLE	166
DR. J. DUNBAR HYLTON'S ARTELOISE	166
THEOLOGY:
The Star in the East	166
Protestant Episcopal Doctrine and Church Unity	167
The New Psychic Studies in their Relation to
Christian Thought	167
Echoes of Bible History	167
Sermons	167
MINOR NOTICES:
A Sketch of the Life and Episcopate of the Right
Reverend Robert Bickersteth, D.D.	167
The World as We Saw It	167
Papers of the American Historical Association	169
Prisoners of Poverty	170
Natural Law in the Business World	170
The Factors of Organic Evolution	170
American Literature and Other Papers	170
Apotheosis of the Ideal	170
Athisis	170
Practical Chelosophy	170
Præterita	170
Etc., Etc., Etc.	170
MINOR FICTION:
Between Whiles	168
Sabina Zembra	168
Zury	169
Sigrid	169
Cuore	169
The Tragedy of Brinkwater	169
A Banker of Bankersville	169
Saint Michael	169
Baldine, and Other Tales	169
Harcourt	169
PARAGRAPHS	168
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Labor Question in Fiction	168
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
The Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford-
on-Avon	172
A Standard Line-Numbering of Shakespeare	172
Pears in Shakespeare	172
NOTES AND QUERIES. 822	173
NEWS AND NOTES	173
ENGLISH OPINIONS	167
THE COST OF MAKING A BOOK. Selection	174
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	174
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	174

FINAL MEMORIALS OF LONGFELLOW.*

WITH these Final Memorials the story of Longfellow's life, as depicted in his letters and journals, is rounded out and made complete. The two preceding volumes from the hands of the same discriminating and careful editor were wonderfully rich in the records of the poet's personality and life-work, but the wealth of material was not exhausted, as the decided interest of this supplementary volume demonstrates. Beginning with a fragment from an early journal, written during Longfellow's first visit to Europe in 1829, and a picturesque account of the burning of Riddarholms Church at Stockholm in 1835, the book contains some fifty pages of correspondence made up of letters from and to George Ticknor, Nathaniel Hawthorne, N. P. Willis, E. A. Poe, G. W. Greene, Esaias Tegnér, Charles Sumner, J. L. Motley, Josiah Quincy, John Forster, R. W. Emerson, Frederika Bremer, A. H. Clough, and others whose names are equally familiar. The correspondence with Charles Sumner is of especial interest and is extended. Then come extracts from journals and selected letters, covering the last fifteen years of Longfellow's life with admirable fullness. These are followed by a number of reminiscences from valued sources, selections from the poet's note-book, fragments of unpublished verse, an appendix containing among other things the genealogy of Longfellow, and a bibliography from the Literary World. Among the illustrations are two portraits not hitherto known to the public, one from a photograph taken in 1868, the other from the crayon drawing made by Samuel Lawrence in 1854; fac-similes of three pencil drawings by Longfellow himself, one representing the poet in his easy-chair; views of the Cragie House from the west and north; and a view of Longfellow's bust as it stands in the poets' corner of Westminster Abbey.

* Final Memorials of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Edited by Samuel Longfellow. Ticknor & Co. $3.00.

Only with difficulty could one find a page without a record worthy of being treasured. Of Hyperion Longfellow writes to G. W. Greene in 1841: "It is a sincere book, showing the passage of a morbid mind into a purer and healthier state." On February 10, 1848, Hawthorne says in a friendly note: "The idea of a history of Acadie takes my fancy greatly. . . We will talk it over." And later on, in the same year, Hawthorne commends Thoreau as "well worth knowing; he is a man of thought and originality, with a certain iron-poker-ishness, an uncompromising stiffness in his mental character which is interesting, though it grows rather wearisome on close and frequent acquaintance." In a letter by T. G. Appleton, written from London in 1856, we come upon this:

The Brownings are a happy couple—happy in their affection and their genius. He is a fine, fresh, open nature, full of life and spring, and evidently has little of the dreamy element of Wordsworth and others. She is a little concentrated nightingale, living in a bower of curls, her heart throbbing against the bars of the world.

Naturally, however, the greatest interest attaches to the selections from the journals of Longfellow and to his own letters. In 1866 he writes to Charles Sumner an urgent appeal in behalf of a copyright convention between the United States and England. Of his translation of Dante he writes in 1867: "The only merit my book has is that it is exactly what Dante says, and not what the translator imagines he might have said if he had been an Englishman." As may be imagined, Longfellow records in his journal the impressions made upon him by men and books. Under the date of 1866 is a mention of Mr. Howells as "a very clever and cultivated young man." "I never read a book that made me sadder," is the comment on the Greek Anthology. George Eliot's Legend of Jubal he found to be "a poem of a good deal of power, but in parts rather confused." He objects to parodies because "the better they are done, the worse they are in their effects; for one ever after sees them making faces behind the original." Taine's history of English literature he praises warmly as "a prodigiously clever book." The most deeply pathetic lines in the volume are those referring to a visit from Agassiz. "He said, 'I cannot work,' and put his face in his hands and wept."

There can be no doubt that all devoted admirers of Longfellow's genius will be glad to have this volume, which contains so much worthy of preservation. Its careful and skillful compiler closes his preface with these words:

There remains yet one book to be written, as it is hoped, by some intimate friend of Mr. Longfellow—a compact Life, for which this volume and its predecessors may be mémoires pour servir; but as far as the present editor is concerned, these memorials are final.

GENERAL FREMONT'S MEMOIRS.*

AFTER the lapse of a third of a century we are at length to have from General Frémont a full account of the explorations which, during the period from 1842 to 1854, opened the way for the westward course of American empire. If to these we add the momentous political and military events in which General Frémont has taken part—the conquest of California, the presidential campaign of 1856, and the Civil War—we realize at once the scope of his reminiscences and their probable importance as a contribution to history. Mrs. Frémont in an introductory note tells us how for thirty years the boxes containing the materials for the book have been carefully guarded, passing once through the ordeal of fire and fortunately escaping unscathed. The narrative of the expeditions was to have been issued in 1856 by Mr. George Childs, but the work was delayed, the contract finally cancelled, and Mr. Childs reimbursed for all expenditures. "The time for writing did not seem to come. Private affairs in California, then our war, and again private business until now."

Meanwhile the memory of the ante-bellum earth conquest has passed from the public mind. The new generation knows nothing of the romantic experiences of these advance guards of the western expansion, and to them the story will be like a vital chapter from the chronicle of a forgotten era. With General Frémont at the opening of these memoirs we are at once taken back to primitive conditions, to the time when almost the whole region beyond the Mississippi was terra incognita save to a few wandering fur traders or daring hunters of the wild animals that abounded throughout the Rocky Mountain fastnesses. General Frémont shows us the characteristics of this country as it appeared in all its pristine grandeur and beauty to his unaccustomed eyes. Two introductory chapters relate to events in the author's early life, including the two expeditions with Nicollet, ending in 1840. Then we enter upon the account of Frémont's first expedition to the South Pass, when he traced the Great Platte to its source, looked out upon the head-waters of the Colorado, and ascended the loftiest peak of the Rocky Mountains, "until then untrodden by any known human being."

* Memoirs of My Life. By John Charles Frémont. With a Sketch of the Life of Senator Benton by Jessie Benton Frémont. Parts I-III. Belford, Clarke & Co. Each 50c.

The narrative flows on evenly and simply without pretentious claims and devoid of rhetorical embellishments. General Frémont tells the story of his deeds in a manner that never fails to hold attention and with modesty and convincing sincerity. In rehearsing the many trials, hardships, and dangers to which he and his companions were subjected, he magnifies nothing, gives each fact its proper place, relates everything as if he were an outside observer. When, after incredible toil and suffering, his little party gain the summit of Frémont Peak, he pauses to tell us about "a solitary bee" that "came winging his flight from the eastern valley, and lit on the knee of one of the men." The barometrical observations are recorded, the outlook briefly described, the bearing of distant ridges noted, the geological formation explained—all in the space of a quarto page. At two o'clock the descent was begun and a "little cache of dried meat and coffee" reached at nightfall.

Though the moon was bright, the road was full of precipices, and the fatigue of the day had been great. We therefore abandoned the idea of rejoining our friends, and lay down on the rock, and, in spite of the cold, slept soundly.

The superb illustrations which accompany General Frémont's Memoirs must have a word or two of comment. The views of scenery are largely from a series of daguerre pictures made into photographs by Brady under General Frémont's supervision, and exquisitely engraved on wood and steel. There are also a number of fine portraits of historical personages from authentic sources.

AN EPIQUEUREAN JOURNEY.*

MR. JOHN BELL BOUTON has no liking for tramp trips or for any sort of roughing it. The best is good enough for him. The story of his epicurean journey begins with an account of the passage from Paris to Nice by the train de luxe—two first-class fares with "special charges," $95.13! The train de luxe is got up in the "Mann boudoir" style, and Mr. Bouton found the service to justify the outlay. The remainder of the journey is not associated with such assertive luxury, but the story is told with the air of a man who stops only at first-class hotels and to whom "money is no object." There is nothing offensive, however, in Mr. Bouton's manner of narration—far otherwise. He shows himself to be a bright and observant traveler; one not disposed to accept traditional views, but on the contrary inclined to see things with his own eyes and to judge them by the standards of a cultivated American. Naturally, because of the favorable conditions under which he made his roundabout tour, he finds little to grumble at. It is certainly a pleasure to make the rounds of Europe with a guide so uniformly good-humored and so well qualified to extract pleasure even from the most hackneyed scenes.

Mr. Bouton goes on his way from Nice to Rome, taking a look at Monte Carlo, describing two or three of the "types;" passes a night in Genoa harbor on board a freight steamer; and gets to the Eternal City in time for the Good Friday and Easter services at St. Peter's. Mr. Bouton goes by rail to Pæstum, where "quinine is as indispensable to the cautious visitor now as a pistol was thirty years ago;" has something to say about the fresh diggings at Pompeii; spends an hour in the seismological observatory on Vesuvius; studies the question of the value of the eucalyptus as a check on malaria; hears a fine sermon in the Duomo at Florence; observes the Florentine election methods, finding them to be curiously similar to those of New York. In the Protestant cemetery at Rome he visits Shelley's grave, curious to see if anything had been done for Shelley by his ardent admirers since 1883. Not there is the old small stone flat on the earth, looking moldier than ever. The inscription "Cor Cordium" is filled in with dirt. A weed, looking like burdock, grows rankly about the grave. There is not a flower near it, unless one should count in a withered and blackened rose which some pitying soul had thrown down on the center of the dingy marble slab. This may have been lying there for two or three months. I dare say fragments of it will be found there a year hence unless the wind blows them away; for it is evident that Shelley's tombstone is never swept and cleaned except by the elements.

The journey continues northward into Switzerland through the New England-like meadows and neat villages of upper Italy. Alpine matters are treated with discretion, and then come glimpses of Carlsbad, Prague, Dresden, and the military atmosphere of Berlin.

If up to this point Mr. Bouton has found only pleasurable impressions to record, with the crossing of the Russian frontier he is in a mental condition which can best be described as chronic ecstasy. Russian conveniences for travel are perfect; the summer climate is delightful, for there is no dust to speak of and the mercury rarely rises to 80° F. in the shade; St. Petersburg, except for its signs and golden domes, is like a compound of Chicago and Washington. Mr. Bouton warns his readers not to accept English estimates of Russia, which, he says, are inspired by jealousy. He saw not a single case of intoxication in the Russian dominions; officials he found to be considerate and polite, and free from taint of bribery; Russian seriousness of countenance is the characteristic gravity of semi-Orientals; there are, proportionately, no more Nihilists in Russia than there are Socialists in Germany or Anarchists in Chicago; "the Tsar enjoys the confidence and love of the vast majority of his people."

Russia may safely challenge the rest of Europe to exhibit a parallel to the comparative progress, social and political, which she has made in the past thirty years. When the Cossack waters his horse in the Bosphorus, and looks down into India from his outpost in the Solymon mountains, jealous powers will lament his irresistible advance. But Americans cannot share their regrets, believing that civilization and liberty may be borne in his train as surely as in that of any other aggressive member of the great European family.

Mr. Bouton's book closes with several agreeable chapters devoted to Russian Finland, Sweden, and Norway. Here as elsewhere the volume is instructive and entertaining, with that air of amiable camaraderie which characterizes all that Mr. Bouton writes.

PROF. ROBERTS'S IN DIVERS TONES.*

THE title of Prof. Roberts's second volume of poems is aptly chosen. The contents are indeed In Divers Tones, and, we may add, of very unequal merit. The author has a quick but untrained imagination which is not always capable of sustained flights. Yet the dominant note is thoroughly poetical, for here is a man who is capable of seeing new things and of seeing old things in new lights; whose many-colored fancies come thick and fast under adequate stimulus; who looks for beauty and finds it more or less complete on every hand; who holds to the ennobling emotions; and who sings of his Canadian home-haunts with a high and earnest patriotism. Prof. Roberts's verses have therefore the essential and fundamental element of sincerity; they are not manufactured in conformity with artificial ideals; and they are in respect to technique of a quality that elicits admiration. The workmanship is strong and sound if not always finely finished. Metrical blemishes and inharmonious attempts at rhyme are not frequent enough to annoy a reader who looks for something better than skillful word-mongering. There is in the book both promise and performance of more than ordinary significance.

The themes to which these poems are fitted are as varied as the tones in which they are expressed. An apostrophe to Canada as the "giant-limbed" "child of the nations" about "to front the world alone"; the fate of Actæon; an afternoon reverie by "the green plains of Tantramar"; a dream of Pompeii; a serenade worthy of a Spanish minstrel; an Indian legend; a love song—these follow one another in unstudied sequence. The verbal felicity of many of Prof. Roberts's lines is noteworthy. He

* Roundabout to Moscow: An Epicurean Journey. By John Bell Bouton. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* In Divers Tones. By Charles G. D. Roberts. D. Lothrop Co.

speaks of the gods indifferent to human welfare,

Girt with their purples of perpetual peace.

He walks the marshes along the dikes of Westmoreland:

Waist-deep in dusty-blossomed grass
I watch the swooping breezes pass.

In sudden, long, pale lines, that flee
Up the deep breast of this green sea.

Nor are the homeliest themes distasteful to Prof. Roberts's swift-flitting muse: witness this sonnet:

THE POTATO HARVEST.

A high bare field, brown from the plough, and borne
Aslant from sunset; amber wastes of sky
Washing the ridge; a clamor of crows that fly
In from the wide flats where the spent tides mourn,
To yon their rocking roosts in pines wind-torn;
A line of gray snake-fence, that zigzags by
A pond, and cattle; from the homestead nigh
The long deep summonings of the supper horn.

Black on the ridge, against that lovely flush,
A cart, and stoop-necked oxen; ranged beside,
Some barrels; and the day-worn harvest folk,
Here emptying their baskets, jar the hush
With hollow thunders; down the dusk hillside
Lumbers the wain; and day fades out like smoke.

MR. RUSKIN'S PRÆTERITA.*

NO one can complain that Mr. Ruskin's Præterita abates in interest as the story of the author's life proceeds; indeed we are inclined to say that every installment is more fascinating than that which went before. This tenth chapter of the second volume has some particularly enticing bits of autobiography. At the beginning of it Mr. Ruskin records the completion of Modern Painters, which was written, he tells us, with two ends in view. The first was to explain to himself and demonstrate to others the nature of beauty as manifested "through all the happy conditions of living organism;" the second, "to explain and illustrate the power of two schools of art unknown to the British public"—that of Angelico and Tintoret. As to how far these ends were accomplished he is uncertain. The book he thinks "is usually read only for its pretty passages; its theory of beauty is scarcely ever noticed, its praise of Tintoret has never obtained the purchase of any good example of him for the National Gallery." The style of Modern Painters was "formed on a new model," suggested by Osborne Gordon.

I was old enough now to feel that neither Johnsonian balance nor Byronic alliteration were ultimate virtues in English prose; and I had been reading with care, on Gordon's counsel, both for its arguments and its English, Richard Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity. I had always a trick of imitating, more or less, the last book I had read with admiration; and it further seemed to me that for the purposes of argument (and my own theme was, according to my notion, to be argued out invincibly) Hooker's English was the perfectest existing model. At all events, I did the best I then knew how, leaving no passage till I had put as much thought into it as it could be made to carry, and chosen the words with the utmost precision and tune I could give them.

After that he was really tired for the first time in his life, and with his father and mother went sight-seeing to Italy. Then it was that the younger man began showing the older all the new discoveries in architecture and painting; and Ruskin, senior, although he had often wept over the "pretty passages" of Modern Painters, as they were read to him at the breakfast table, being unreconciled to his son's "total resignation of the art of poetry," and impatient with his "constant habit of making little patches and scratches of the sections and fractions of things in a note-book," was inclined to hold to other opinions.

We had been entirely of one mind about the carved porches of Abbeville and living pictures of Vandyck; but when my father now found himself required to admire also flat walls, striped like the striped calico of an American flag, and oval-eyed saints like the figures on a Chinese teacup, he grew restive. . . . And I was the more viciously stubborn in taking my own way, just because everybody was with him in these opinions; and I was more and more persuaded every day that everybody was always wrong.

Crossmount was the shooting-lodge of William Macdonald in Scotland, whither Mr. Ruskin went on invitation of the "thin, dark Highlander" with whom he had formed a friendship. Here he foreswore fashionable amusement and set himself "to the laborious eradication of a crop of thistles."

The thistle-field at Crossmount was an inheritance of amethystine treasure to me; and the working hours in it are among the few in my life which I remember with entire serenity—as being certain I could have spent them no better. For I had wise—though I say it—thoughts in them, too many to set down here (they are scattered afterwards up and down in Fors and Mynera Pulveris) and wholesome sleep after them, in spite of the owls, who were many, in the clumps of pine by Tummel shore.

And then he goes on to explain how half his power of ascertaining facts of any kind connected with the arts is in his stern habit of doing things with his own hands. When he had to direct road-making at Oxford he learned to break stones; learned of an Irish street-crossing sweeper what could be taught of sweeping, but found himself in that matter nearly a match; worked with a carpenter till he "could take an even shaving six feet long off a board; and painted enough with properly and delightfully soppy green paint to feel the master's superiority in the use of a blunt brush." Of all mechanical instruments he found the trowel most difficult of management, and abandoned all hope of attaining skill with it except at the sacrifice "of any future literary or political career."

The chapter closes with references to home-life again; to morning hours spent in the study of tree-branches and fine days passed in minutely sketching the herbage of the fields, learning once for all that flowers were not to be dissected or magnified, but to be watched as they grow in association with earth, air, dew, and sunshine, that we may thereby discover "the constant working of Omnipotent kindness." At the last come hints of a time of spiritual trial ("all that I had been taught had to be questioned; all that I had trusted, proved"); and of the solace got from communion with nature in lonely walks, of which the impressions are given in a final outburst of the purest poetry ever written in prose.

SARACINESCA.*

WITH the possible exception of A Roman Singer, we do not remember that Mr. Crawford has ever given to the public more true, sound, brilliant work than is to be found in the pages of his Saracinesca. It is a story of Rome, of the Rome of twenty years ago, when the Eternal City was still peopled solely by Romans, when Cardinal Antonelli was making the struggle for the preservation of the temporal power, when a paternal government administered state and municipal affairs, when, finally, patriarchal family life—of which foreigners generally know so little, and of which Mr. Crawford tells us so much—was still the dominant factor in Roman society. Mr. Crawford takes us to the inner circle of the patricians of those days and shows us every phase of their existence. The unmistakable Roman manner, the clannish and federative spirit, the Italian simplicity, aiming always at immediate expression of its emotions, are clearly depicted in Mr. Crawford's book. The characters are not always perhaps as human as we could wish. Don Giovanni Saracinesca and the Duchessa d'Astrardente move sometimes in the clouds of immaterial romance, but the story of their love is told with a passionate reserve which leads to striking effects. The scoundrel, Ugo del Ferice, and his tool, Madame Mayer, form an effective contrast to the principal personages, their machinations being rewarded with poetic justice. Then there are the old prince, Giovanni's father, a primitive soul, full of fire and holding firmly to the traditions of his race; the Duca d'Astrardente, a grotesque yet pitiful specimen of an aged fop; and the French painter, Anastase Gouache, whose charming qualities render him very lovable. But what one remembers with most pleasure is the general effect of the whole book, which remains in the memory as a notably successful delineation of a by-gone era. Still the narrative is not wanting in incidents and descriptions of a kind to stir the emotions. The account of the duel between Giovanni and Del Ferice is not soon to be forgotten; or the death scene of Astrardente; or the interview between Donna Tullia and Corona; or the splendid pictures of scenery scattered through the chapters dealing with the lives of the two lovers at their country estates. The story itself is direct and simple; there is not much attempt at a plot, and the climax is easily foreseen; yet there is no lack of dramatic situations, and all is managed with a skill that may be

* Præterita. Outlines of Scenes and Thoughts Perhaps Worthy of Memory in My Past Life. By John Ruskin, LL.D. Vol. II. Chap. X: Crossmount. John Wiley & Sons. 25 cents.

* Saracinesca. By F. Marion Crawford. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

unequal, but is nevertheless capable of remarkable results. In Giovanni and Corona the author has created two characters whose possibilities are boldly foreshadowed. Giovanni, a noble type, strong of mind, self-centered, cool-headed, ambitious; Corona, idealistic, firm of spirit, passionate—what may they not accomplish? And it is to the development of the possibilities so foreshadowed that Mr. Crawford proposes to devote a separate narrative. If it fulfills the promise of this first part, it will be a masterpiece.

DANTE AND HIS CIRCLE.

EXCELLENT guides for those entering upon an examination of the life and works of Dante are appearing nowadays in significant number. A few weeks ago we noticed Dr. Scratzini's Handbook as translated by Mr. Davidson—a book designed for the student, and perhaps not wholly within the grasp of the reader who without special qualification demands a general knowledge of Dante as man and poet. This demand the Sketch,* by May Alden Ward, is well qualified to meet and gratify. The author's aim is to give a bird's-eye view of the times in which Dante lived, of his own life, and of the great works upon which his fame rests. The best authorities have been consulted and have been used with discretion. In a series of gracefully written paragraphs we are shown the growth of Florence, the strife between Guelph and Ghibelline, and the events in which Dante took a part up to the time of his exile; then comes a glance at his wanderings, as far as they can be traced, his manly rejection of pardon, and his last years at Verona and Ravenna—all clearly depicted, largely in well-selected quotations from contemporary sources, with no attempt to introduce details (which would be out of the question in a book of such small compass), but in a way to preserve a picturesque interest and to express by suggestion the ideas which held sway during the period of Dante's life. Seven chapters are given to expositions of Dante's writings from the Vita Nuova to the Paradiso, the De Monarchica and other Latin works getting a chapter by themselves. At the end an account of the six hundredth anniversary; a select bibliography, brief but useful to the beginner in Dante study; and a good index. It must be borne in mind that Miss Ward makes no attempt to unfold the symbolism of Dante, but simply undertakes to tell the story of what he wrote, leaving any and all allegorical interpretations for further investigation. Her book is a modest, helpful, suggestive outline, from which readers may go to Miss Rossetti's Shadow of Dante with a firm basis of fact as a foundation for speculative inquiry.

More scholarly and recondite and taking the reader to the very heart of the Italian poetry of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and exhibiting the author of the Divine Comedy in his relations to immediate predecessors and contemporaries, is Rossetti's Dante and His Circle,* of which this handsome American reprint of the revised and rearranged edition is very welcome. First published in 1861 as The Early Italian Poets, the book was practically made over and reissued under its present title in 1874, and has found many to cherish its fine qualities, for to the majority even of advanced students it brings a wonderfully rich store of poetry gathered with loving care and rendered into forms of rare originality and lasting charm. The Vita Nuova is here, exquisitely translated, and Dante's miscellaneous minor verse; and after these, selections from the writings of the thirteen who made up the Dantean circle, undue prominence being given, perhaps, to that graceless scamp, Cecco Angioliere; and then the predecessors of Dante—in all nearly three score poets, exhibited in melodious English faithful to the antique metres, and elucidated by abundant comment. The book is one to attract not alone the prospective student of Dante, but every lover of true poetry, and to all such it is of priceless value.

* Dante: A Sketch of His Life and Works. By May Alden Ward. Roberts Bros. $1.25.

* Dante and His Circle: with the Italian Poets Preceding Him. By Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Roberts Bros. $2.00.

DR. J. DUNBAR HYLTON'S ARTELOISE.*

J. DUNBAR HYLTON, M.D., LL.D., has broken loose again, this time with a production of some 8,640 lines called Arteloise, purporting to be a romance of "King Arthur and Knights of the Round Table." To the concoction of this astonishing epic Dr. J. Dunbar Hylton has devoted his magnificent energies with a fervor that shrinks from no situation of "derring do." To say that in Arteloise Dr. J. Dunbar Hylton revels in gore is to put it mildly. We could not, in the comparatively brief space at our disposal, undertake a bare enumeration of the times that his champion hero, Sir Beau de Main, carves a ferocious demon and deluges the surrounding landscape with the creature's exuberant life blood. It is safe to say that something of the sort happens once in every three pages of the narrative. On one "eventful occasion" the hero, being hard pressed, seizes "a fallen tree" from the "mountain's craggy side" and immediately jams it down the dragon's throat:

Right to its mouth of roaring flame
The keen, sharp-pointed timber came,
Then down that gulf of flame with force
Immense that timber took its course.

* Arteloise. A Romance of King Arthur and Knights of the Round Table. By J. Dunbar Hylton, M.D., LL.D. Palmyra, N. J.: The Hylton Publishing Co.

Whichever way he turn'd or strove
The spear the knight still deeper drove,
Still held the monster on his fair,
And saw his eyeballs fiercer glare.

Then Griselda, who is standing by, makes a speech, in which she proclaims her purpose of aiding the knight to "quell" the "grisly foe"; so she shoots an arrow into each "eyeball's horrid glow," and the "riven orbs" "gush out" in "streams," after which Dr. J. Dunbar Hylton remarks that the "structure" of each "orb" was "ghastly rent," and "all trace of light" thereby "destroyed." Sir Beau de Main "lopped off the monster's head," the usual "torrent grim of reeking gore" follows, and the useless occiput cast from the hero's hand:

O'er giddy heights down mountains sped
With sounds infernal, grim, and dread.

It will be seen that when Dr. J. Dunbar Hylton gets hold of a poetical idea he plays it, as a crude Westerner would say, for all it is worth. Of Clotilda he tells us:

Her white round arms were like the down
That waves upon the autumn field,
That with snowy loveliness doth crown
The dark brown hulls that it did yield—by which ingenious paraphrase, we take it, the poet means to say that her arms were like rolls of cotton. The "sporting nymphs" described on page 103 show a fair degree of determination:

Though sun and moon and earth should fall,
And ruin wreck the planets all,
They would not fail that lip to taste
And feel that arm around their waist.

Whose arm and whose lip deponent saith not; this is one of the mysteries which the romance of Arteloise leaves unsolved.

THEOLOGY.

His Star in the East. By Leighton Parks. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.] This "Study in the Early Aryan Religions," by the broad-minded rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, is based on a course of lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute in 1885. Its generous spirit toward other faiths than that in which we have been reared is indicated by the motto on the title-page from Matthew Arnold:

The Unseen Power, whose eye
Forever doth accompany mankind,
Hath looked on no religion scornfully
That man did ever find.

Mr. Parks has traveled in China, Japan, and India, and returned convinced that "in every nation he that feareth God is accepted of Him," and he disposes of the vexed question of the salvation of the heathen from a true appreciation of the good in every religion. Like James Freeman Clarke, he finds that all other religions have been preparatory to the best of all. Christianity is, however, not to be forced upon India as the absolute truth in place of Hinduism and Buddhism, considered to be only falsehood; but it is to stand the test of judicial comparison with other faiths, and to win its way gradually through the force of its superior reasonableness. With the exception of "Kamma" for "Karma," we have found Mr. Parks's "study" true to the best authorities, while making no pretense to special scholarship; and we wish it may obtain the wide reading its fine and catholic spirit deserves.

Protestant Episcopal Doctrine and Church Unity. By Rev. C. M. Butler, D.D. [Thomas Whittaker. New York: 60c.] Rev. Dr. Butler is an opponent of the exclusive and sacerdotal views which he maintains prevail in the Episcopal Church, and hopes for a union of evangelical churches on the basis of a moderate episcopacy. But until Rev. Dr. Butler and his sympathizers can arrest the development which he discovers to be taking place "into a doctrinal and spectacular semi-Romanism," which "seems to be going forward with accelerated speed," it would seem to an outsider that invitations to other denominations to come in and join the controversy between High and Low must remain fruitless. The book, therefore, reduces itself to an argument against the "semi-Romanists," and as such is of interest.

Organic Union of Canadian Churches. By the Very Rev. James Carmichael, Dean of Montreal. [Montreal: Dawson Bros.] Dean Carmichael makes a very earnest plea for the incorporation of Methodism and Presbyterianism into the Church of England in Canada, based on a minute comparison of the doctrines, ceremonies, and politics of the three bodies. The crucial point is, he sees, the question of government, and he leaves this to the Divine Being for settlement. The worldly would be apt to say that the gods help those who help themselves, and that so strong a friend of union as Dean Carmichael might have suggested some feasible method by means of which the change he advocates is to be brought about.

The New Psychic Studies in their Relation to Christian Thought. By Franklin Johnson, D.D. [Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.] This is simply an extended book notice of the very miscellaneous mass of matter shot out in three large volumes by the English Society for Psychical Research, the actual managers of which show, as some one has said, an industry only equaled by their gullibility. Rev. Dr. Johnson does not appear to be a person qualified to sift out the few grains of wheat in all this monstrous amount of chaff, and why "Christian thought" will trouble itself much about the whole business, he fails to make plain.

Echoes of Bible History. By W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D., Bishop of Ossory, etc. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.] As "corroborative testimony" of the truth and accuracy of holy writ—echoes, so to speak, heard in regions silent during many long centuries—Bishop Walsh cites in this volume examples of minute agreement between the Old Testament and ancient monumental records of oriental countries, both as to historical statements, including some cases where discrepancy has been supposed to exist, and as to manners and customs. The most important topics, it seems to us, are: the deluge; the genealogy of the sons of Noah; the experiences of Joseph and other descendants of Israel in Egypt, and their relation with the history of that land of wonderful antiquity; and the interconnection of the Jewish nation in late ages with the great empires of Eastern Asia. The writer believes that these historical evidences of the Old Testament's accuracy have been growing more abundant at a period when most needed because of recent attacks made from the side of science. Probably the chief value of this work, for private libraries and those of Sunday-schools and guilds or other societies, lies in its freshness, its variety of information, rendered more useful by the illustrations and index, and its clearness and simplicity of language.

Sermons. By the Rev. George Leeds, D.D., late rector of Grace Church, Baltimore. With Portrait. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.75.] In these sermons, written without thought of publication, the style is clear and graceful rather than deep and logical; there is almost entire absence of doctrine, but plain evidence of the author's ripened Christian character. We notice occasional small errors, either of writer or of proof reader, and apparently the unorthodox application (p. 68) of the pronoun it to the Holy Spirit. The author's friends and parishioners who may purchase the book will doubtless prize highly the handsome portrait on steel which forms the frontispiece.

MINOR NOTICES.

A Sketch of the Life and Episcopate of the Right Reverend Robert Bickersteth, D.D., Bishop of Ripon, 1857-1884. By his son, Montagu Cyril Bickersteth, M.A. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.50.] The character depicted in this earnest memoir is of a type concerning which the world cannot hear too much. Purity of principle, singleness of aim, unwearied industry, inexhaustible cheerfulness—these qualities he possessed to a high degree, and he devoted them zealously to his chosen life work "as a standard bearer in the front ranks of evangelical churchmen." Robert Bickersteth belonged with the working bishops, and in all the dignity of his high office he never lost an opportunity however humble for doing his Master's work. The most interesting chapters in the biography are those devoted to his six years' labors as rector of St. Giles's from 1851 to 1857. This parish embraced a population of about 40,000 souls, composing "a dense mass of pauperism and crime, like a festering sore in the heart of London." In one street there were thirteen houses in a row containing a population of 1,300; frequently from ten to twenty persons were found living in one room. Dr. Bickersteth saw at once that social or moral amelioration was out of the question till the physical condition of this wretched multitude was relieved, and to this he turned his energies, obtaining remarkable results. The same clear judgment and administrative ability were exemplified throughout his entire career, which is here related with sincerity and discrimination.

The World as We Saw It. By Mrs. Amos R. Little. [Cupples & Hurd. $7.50.] This journal of a "leisurely trip around the world" is made into a sumptuous quarto volume which ought to gratify the writer and her friends. We are sorry to say that it contains nothing of any value to the reading public, for it traverses well-worn roads and reveals no new thing throughout the entire route from Philadelphia to London. The illustrations, of which there are many, deserve a word of praise. They are photographs, full-page in size, are admirably selected as to subjects, and are exquisitely printed. In looking at them one could wish that he had them and a few hundred more of the same sort in a portfolio convenient for inspection.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Mr. Crawford is a first-rate story-teller, but he is not a poet, and therefore his characters, "thought out as ethical specimens," types themselves and studied from types, want the ideal touch, the spark of divine life which would give them a human claim to our sympathy. He sees them in a white light, from the outside, without that background of imagination which a novel wants to be perfect just as much as a picture. And this matter-of-fact-ness, mixed as it is with noble thoughts, fine descriptions, vivid and stirring situations—these drawn with a pencil not always the most refined, but this is another side of the want we have hinted at—is the reason why we call the book unequal. It is to be found, if we consider, in all the books Mr. Crawford has written. All of them have cleverness, strength, interest, brilliancy; not one of them has pathos, or that strange gift which in far weaker hands can fill the eyes with tears, and without which no picture of human life can have that ideal truth which is the highest. — The Spectator.

Given his characters—and they do not vary very much, except over a long period—any constant reader of Mr. Black would be able to construct any of his novels with a considerable degree of accuracy. This makes them rather difficult to review, because almost any indication of the general structure of the story is enough to give such a reader as we have suggested (and who that reads novels at all is not a constant reader of Mr. Black's?) a pretty correct idea of the details and denouement. We must therefore confine ourselves in this regard to saying that Sabina Zembra, though, like most of the author's books, it is over-diluted with description, and at times a little irritating by reason of mannerisms—such as the trick of making people say "Oh! yes," in the middle of their discourses, or the constant use (borrowed from America) of a pleonastic "along" with verbs of motion—has more stuff in it than anything Mr. Black has produced for some time past. — The Athenæum.

There is not, to my mind, any true criticism in mincing matters, in qualifying the good as abstractedly imperfect, or the bad as containing the potentiality of goodness. If to be reminded in every line of the Homeric method and fluency of narration; if to have the figures of Odysseus, and Nausicaa, and Alcinoos, acting and speaking with the same straightforward simplicity as they use in the original; if to find on every page lines that recall Homer at his best, and Mr. Morris's best work elsewhere; if to feel everywhere the sunlight "of that old-world morn"—if, I repeat, the presence of these merits makes a good translation of Homer, then I think this is not only the best verse translation of any part of Homer that I have ever seen, but one of the best literary efforts, in this kind, that we possess. — E. D. A. Morshead in the Academy.

We read Mr. Morris with the sense that, with all his talent, he is giving us not Homer, but Homer lamed and hobbled through the translator's totally false conception of Homer's childishness and inarticulateness. We should have thought that never was a poet so perfectly articulate as Homer, so strong in his sense of the dignity and simplicity of life and home, of war and peace, of love and hate, of truth and craft, of Nature and Art, of gods and men. Mr. Morris has dressed up the most vivid and masterly of poets in a quaint garb, borrowed from a number of different and inconsistent costumes, and the effect to us is very undignified. In Homer himself, dignity is never lost. — The Spectator.

Mr. Whipple is an example of a good deal of what is best in American letters and society. He was a literary business man of peculiarly unassuming character. He seems to have had the gift of making friendships without pushing for them, and his critical ability, though not of the highest order, was studious and cultivated. His mind was receptive and appreciative, contemplative rather than acute. One would say that he was too sympathetic to keep his judgment independent, and that his admiration often carried him too far. — The Athenæum.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, MAY 28, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

. There is talk of the establishment in this city of a weekly journal devoted to social matters, the fine arts, the drama, music, and literature, and to be called The Twentieth Century. The editorial staff as announced contains favorably known names. The title is so optimistic that for the present we shall content ourselves with hoping that the projected periodical may live to see its proposed cognomen justified. The new craft manifestly has Youth on the prow; we trust that Pleasure may preside at the helm.

. As far as we can learn the much-heralded "Authors' Club" of Boston perished before it had achieved the dignity of actual existence. The projectors have the fact to console them that Boston has an abundance of clubs where authors are welcomed, and it is not probable that the intellectual environment will suffer by the failure of the proposed organization. Still, the scheme was so good in theory that it cannot be allowed to perish without regret. We picture the aforesaid "Authors' Club" in ghostly reverie, quoting that famous epitaph of Cheltenham Churchyard:

It is so soon that I am done for,
I wonder what I was begun for.

. A sensation has been made in London by the publication of the Life of Rosina, Lady Lytton, by her executrix, Louisa Devey, who has included in the work extracts from Lady Lytton's autobiography and other highly significant documents. Lady Lytton is compared as a writer to Mrs. Carlyle, and the book in its portrayal of Edward Bulwer is regarded as an astonishing revelation. The author of Kenelm Chillingly, as depicted by his wife and servants, appears as "one of the most brutal men that ever attained a niche in the temple of fame," a life-long humbug, "a bully, a liar, and a miser." This, however, is only one side of the story. The present Earl of Lytton is not the man to allow his father's character to go undefended, so we may expect from him an equally lively refutation.

. The exigencies of current criticism sometimes make trying demands upon the versatility of newspaper reviewers. When book after book is heralded as "the greatest of the age," or, with conspicuous conservatism, as "the finest of the season," one wonders where the stream of laudation will stop, and what the result would be if the superlative adjectives were by any chance to be applied to books which were not the greatest of the age or the finest of the season! Or do the habitual readers of such notices accept them as they do patent medicine advertisements, and make the usual discount of seventy-five per cent in the interest of truth? For "greatest" and "finest," etc., etc., read in commercial phraseology "fair to middling"—and for "fair to middling," what? Well, one must not carry the reduction of scale too far. A book that is only "fair to middling" in these days is not worthy of consideration.

. An ambitious undertaking in periodical literature is outlined in the prospectus of the Modern Muse, a quarterly magazine, of which C. W. Moulton & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., are to be the publishers. The Modern Muse will be devoted exclusively to poetry and the study of poetry; it will publish contributions from the best known American and English writers, and authors living and dead will be represented by selections and extracts, accompanied by biographical and critical notes, while "all the best and brightest productions that appear in the current American and English periodicals" will be reprinted in the Modern Muse. In connection with this unique review bibliographical supplements will be issued. With the first number (announced for Jan. 15, 1888) is to be sent out a bibliography of the periodical verse of 1887, and with the second number a bibliographical list of all the verse, English and American, issued in book form during the same year. The plan is not without attractions; if every "poet" in the United States subscribes to the Modern Muse its success is unquestionably assured!

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Labor Question in Fiction.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

I have become so accustomed to look to the Literary World for fair, candid, and intelligent criticism that I confess to surprise when I read the notice of the recent story, entitled The Strike in the B— Mill, which appeared in your issue of the 30th April. There are two ways of looking at a book, especially if it be a work of fiction: the style and the purpose, both. If a work has an earnest purpose, dealing with a great and live question in which all are interested, it is to shirk his duty for the critic to ignore the scope of the writer because of supposed or actual defects in the style. Style and subject matter are both equally objects of criticism to be judged, and blamed or praised without flippancy or prejudice. Now setting aside the question of the style of this spirited little story, which in my judgment is destitute neither of literary nor dramatic power, I find in it an earnest attempt to deal with the labor question and the relations of labor and capital in a manner that commends itself to thinkers and masses alike. While, perhaps, not accepting all its conclusions, I find in it much that is capable of profit to our people at this particular time. It certainly is not a work which a serious periodical should lightly dismiss with a stroke of the pen, for it deals with a great problem of our time and should be widely read. As a citizen of a country now disturbed by the agitation of this question, I feel that any work which tends to throw light on this subject should be carefully considered. Is it not so? S. G. W. B.

New York, May 10, 1887.

[We are glad to give our correspondent's views on this matter, but we assure him that the notice in question was written in no flippant spirit, and we still think that the moral purport of the book was amply characterized in the opening sentence of our criticism.—ED.]

A full and accurate biography of Charles Reade, dealing kindly but justly with all the important events of his life, and duly indicating his main characteristics as a writer, would not be an easy book to produce; but the task having been undertaken by two of his kinsmen claiming special competence for it, the public had a right to expect something better than this compilation. . . . A better book than this one must be written, by a more capable if not a better-informed biographer, before we shall know all that would be worth knowing about the remarkable man . . . to whose memory these volumes are, quite unintentionally, an insult.—The Athenaeum.

MINOR FICTION.

Between Whiles. By Helen Jackson (H. H.) [Roberts Bros. $1.25.] There are six short stories in this volume, and all of them bear the touch and imprint of genius. The author's swift perception of character, sure dramatic instinct, intense and poetical style, show to the best advantage in these stories, of which each one is a masterpiece. "The Inn of the Golden Pear"—the first part of a longer story which Mrs. Jackson planned, but never finished—is concerned with an alliance between a gentleman of colonial New England and a beautiful, vulgar French girl. The theme is Hawthornesque and is worked out with decided power. "The Mystery of Wilhelm Rütter" is a tragic tale of an episode among the Pennsylvania Dutch. "Little Bel's Supplement" will be remembered by all who read it on its first appearance in a magazine some time ago as a charming story of life in Prince Edward Island, and "The Captain of the 'Heather Bell'" is no less strong in motive and faithful in detail. "Dandy Steve" relates to an Adirondack guide, a professed misogynist, who keeps in his cabin a woman's shawl and a bracelet. "The Prince's Little Sweetheart" is an allegory written down with the hope that "some of the princes may read it;" surely the fickleness of man in matters of the heart never was more sternly arraigned than in this rigorously simple characterization of a forsaken woman. Every lover of vital literature should read this last book from the pen of Helen Jackson.

Sabina Zembra. By William Black. [Harper & Bros. $1.25.] Mr. Black is the most attractive of all the purely descriptive novelists—the writers who aim at no analysis of character, but whose only aspiration is to please and instruct their readers with representations of life and nature as seen by the pictorial artist. Mr. Black never yet has portrayed a man or woman au fond, but his sketches are nearly always firm and true in outline, and their freshness and graceful vigor constitute an unfailing charm. In Sabina Zembra we have the tall, beautiful, reticent heroine in whom Mr. Black delights. She is the daughter of a rich, mean, snobbish member of Parliament, and finding little to gratify her ideals at home, devotes herself to charitable work. For no discernible reason she marries a contemptible young sporting man who drags her into the depths of poverty and ignominy. Mr. Black, in dealing with the lives of Sabina and her husband, is rather disagreeably realistic at times, but it all goes to the making up of a strongly impressive picture. There are a great many beautiful descriptions of out-of-door scenes in the book, most of them as seen through the eyes of Walter Lindsay, the landscape painter, whose unflinching devotion to Sabina, at last—we may as well reveal this much of the plot—gets its reward. Sabina Zembra is one of the thus far few significant novels of the year.

Zury: The Meanest Man in Spring County. A Novel of Western Life. By Joseph Kirkland. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.] There is an abundance of good material in Zury and a good deal of it is well used. The author has evidently a thorough knowledge of frontier life as it existed in the middle West two generations ago. The book relates in detail the career of Usury Prouder, from the time when with his parents he came to the newly preëmpted section and began with them the laborious task of making a homestead—on through toil, privation, and niggardliness to affluence and power as "the meanest man in Spring County." Zury starts with great natural gifts, and the author's aim, as far as he has any moral purpose, is to show how these gifts were distorted by circumstances and forced into narrow, selfish channels. There is a lack of unity in the narrative, however, which tends to break the interest and to reduce the story to a series of disconnected incidents. The part which Anne Sparrow plays is not brought out clearly, more particularly in the closing chapters, which are vague and rambling in purpose and lead to no definite conclusion. As a whole, however, the book is well worth reading. Its humor is often rude and uncouth, as befits the subject and the characters, but it is genuine. The stories of Zury's meanness are of the sort that tradition is sure to perpetuate, and some of Zury's wisdom deserves to be proverbial. "Mebbe ye're right about th' esteem o' fools," is one of his sayings; "but I pity yew ef y'e've have t'live amongst 'em after ye've lost it!"

Sigrid: An Icelandic Love Story. By Jon Thordsson Thoroddsen. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] Mr. C. Chrest and Mr. Thomas Yapper, Jr., are the sponsors of this simple story of Iceland, the first as translator and the second as editor; the result of their combined labor is one of the poorest translations from any foreign tongue with which we have the misfortune to be acquainted. The story itself is amusingly crude in its plot, as if it were the production of some precocious school-boy who had a natural gift for simplicity of style. The value of the tale is entirely in its descriptions of Icelandic life in country and city; it is a pleasant way of acquiring knowledge of men and manners abroad to take it in moderate doses in a novel, rather than in a set book of travel.

Cuore: An Italian School-boy's Journal. By Edmondo de Amicis. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] This book for boys, which Miss Isabel F. Hapgood has admirably translated from the thirty-ninth Italian edition, is the record of a year's life in the public schools of Turin. It seems as if it must be autobiographical in large degree, so straightforward and charmingly naïve is its style and so entirely lifelike the whole action. Under each school-month are placed stories told by the beloved master of the first floor: they are tales of patriotism and moral courage well fitted to rouse these virtues in boyish hearts. The tone of this volume is pure and high. We can think of no better corrective of the slang and impudence which make up too many "juveniles," than this simple, earnest, and refined story of Italian boyhood.

The Tragedy of Brinkwater. A Novel. By Martha Livingston Moody. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] In The Tragedy of Brinkwater we have at the very outset a murder that is unmistakably a murder, and all that follows has to do with the attempts to clear up the mystery connected with it. The author keeps to that one purpose with a singleness and tenacity which promise well for her success in future work; the plan is arranged with skill, and the secret is remarkably well kept; great pains have been taken to construct a theory and make the characters sustain it, but there are weak links in the chain, flaws in the argument that it would not take a very shrewd lawyer to discover, and the conduct of the sheriff is, for a sheriff, too absurd for comment. By a few allusions we see that the tragedy occurred in America, though by general internal evidence we should have said it was England. There is an intangibility about the scene of the events and a lack of lifelikeness; but in spite of this and the incongruities, it has merit and will be of absorbing interest to many.

A Banker of Bankersville. A Novel. By Maurice Thompson. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] A Banker of Bankersville is a thoroughly American story. In no other country could there be such conditions and such people, and in no part of America could they be found except in the West. Bankersville is in Indiana, and is a typical Western town, with its characteristics and characters dashed off in a few bold, free-hand strokes, the "force, pluck, cheerfulness, heartiness, and personal bravery" receiving a warm tribute. "True," says the author, the Western town is not conventional; its accent is rather broad and raw to the ears of over-nice people, but it has vivacity in its character and sincerity of purpose in all it says and does; from all of which it results that a Western town is open to the operations of the swindler and the adventurer.

Here the adventurer is young Lawson, whose animal force, aggressiveness, and ability for taking the lead by sheer tact and push, is strongly contrasted with the sensitiveness, conservatism, and high sense of honor of his law partner, Milford. Here, again, it is a murder which forms the central point, but in this case it is not the murder itself that interests, but the effect on Milford and on the woman he loves of the verdict, which, though the prisoner was guilty, was gained by the eloquence of the former inspired by her ambition for him. The unexpected relief, the culmination of Lawson's daring movements, the escape, arrest, scene outside the jail, and Lawson's address to the mob, are highly dramatic, but so naturally have circumstances led to the outcome that the reader accepts it all as legitimate and most real. There is intense vitality in these pages; the people are flesh and blood; and the author uses his material with the ease that indicates power in reserve.

Saint Michael. A Romance. Translated from the German of E. Werner. By Mrs. A. L. Wister. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] The books that Mrs. Wister translates are as a rule of a high order, and Saint Michael is one of the best, a strong, enjoyable story of northern Germany, with a hero of the sort that old-fashioned novel readers have a partiality for—one who has been defrauded of his rights in his youth, but rises superior to poverty and ill usage and comes to a noble manhood, brave, honorable, and true; asserts himself, and wins the girl he loves. What better hero could one ask than the conquering Michael Rodenberg? Hans, the artist, is as good in his way, and the old genealogist, Gerlinda, who repeats genealogy like a parrot, is delightful; and the scenes where Hans gets the advantage of his father, and where the two fathers are made to accept the situation, are capital bits of light and wholesome comedy.

Baldine, and Other Tales. By Karl Erdmann Edler. Translated from the German by the Earl of Lytton. [Harper & Brothers. 75c.] The author of Baldine and the two stories with it is, in Lord Lytton's opinion, "a consummate master of the idiom of his own language." Born in 1844, he is classed among the young poets and romance writers of Germany; and these three idyls have been selected as perhaps best illustrating the delicacy of his workmanship and his refinement. They are full of pathos and beauty, dealing with some of the tenderest and most profound emotions of the heart. The child Baldine, with her dumb companion and her aged grandfather, is a touching little figure. The treatment of her confidence in the dumb god, the overthrow of the pitiful creature's faith, and her final awakening, is something unique in fiction. There is in each of the stories a deep underlying significance, a "far-reaching suggestiveness."

Harcourt; or, A Soul Illumined. By Annie Somers Gilchrist. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] How such a novel as Harcourt could ever have come into a second edition is among the unaccountable things of book-making. One has no patience with the gushing, sentimental, stilted style, though feeling some pity for an author who, having set out with it, is under the wearing necessity of keeping it up. One of the young ladies is pictured (one aspect) with her violet eyes rivaling the sheen of winter's midnight stars, her cheeks two blush roses, and her lips as red as the scarlet cups of woodbine that clambered in at the window; even her hair, which swept in massive luxuriance to the carpet, seemed instinct with joy.

Another feminine creation was perfectly regal. Her morning wrapper, with its creamy lace ruffles, swept in long, billowy folds far out on the rich carpet, her proud head, coroneted with its heavy fluffy coils of lustrous black hair, was thrown back, and her eyes were blazing with haughty pride, as she looked at the man she loved with all her fiery, impetuous soul.

It is of minor consequence that one should accumulate epithets without any true sense of their bearing; but it is of consequence that a writer should know something about human nature before she undertakes to give the "heart history" of eight or ten lovers.

MINOR NOTICES.

Papers of the American Historical Association. Vol. I. [G. P. Putnam's Sons.] No better vindication of the aim of this new association for the promotion of historical studies could be asked for than is to be found in the substantial first volume of the papers read before it during the last two years. The reports of organization and proceedings at the Saratoga meeting of 1884 and of the proceedings at the meeting of 1885 are given; and, forming the solid center of the book, President White's masterly address on studies in general history and the history of civilization; Dr. George W. Knight's elaborate monograph on the management of federal land grants for education in the Northwest territory; Bishop Robertson's essay on the Louisiana purchase; and Miss Lucy M. Salmon's careful historical examination of the appointing power of the President as exercised from its establishment to the passage of the Pendleton bill. Throughout the whole volume one can easily perceive the influence of the idea so admirably expressed by President White and which is the basis of the American Historical Association—"the philosophical synthesis of all special results in a large, truth-loving, justice-loving spirit." The work thus far accomplished by the association amply justifies the views of its founders, and is of so much value that no careful student of the times can afford to neglect its more salient features.

Prisoners of Poverty. By Helen Campbell. [Roberts Bros. $1.00.] Mrs. Campbell made, not long since, a careful personal investigation of the condition of women wage workers in New York city, the results of which were printed in the Tribune, and this volume is a reprint of the newspaper articles. It is a terrible indictment of our complacent civilization which this photograph presents. Mrs. Campbell would have made it stronger, even, had she suppressed a part of the rhetoric which sometimes is superabundant; but her collection of undeniable facts is itself the most convincing of logic to show the rottenness of much of our condition. There is no more complete picture of the actual state of the two hundred thousand workingwomen of New York than this, and Mrs. Campbell deserves the thanks of all friends of humanity for the thoroughness with which she has searched out the evil. Two chapters toward the close discuss the advantages and disadvantages of domestic service as a remedy for the over-crowding of other pursuits in which women are engaged. But Mrs. Campbell's hopes are centered in industrial education (which will qualify women to work better than the great majority of them can do now), in coöperation, and most of all in a decrease of the enormous love of wealth in all classes. Of these three medicines we are inclined to believe the first is by far the speediest and surest.

Natural Law in the Business World. By Henry Wood. [Lee & Shepard. 75c.] Mr. Wood is a business man who writes without pretense or ambitiousness on the natural laws of success in the world of labor, trade, and manufacturing. He stands, as we judge most shrewd and kindly-hearted business men do stand, in an attitude of sincere regard for laboring men, joined with great distrust of the aims of the labor organizations. Following in an eclectic fashion after the best of the later political economists, he has put forth a great deal of excellent good sense on the various phases of the manifold labor question. He opposes combination among masters and among men and sees in profit-sharing the most feasible way of settling labor troubles. He favors consolidation, as it plainly benefits the public at large, but he does not discriminate, as President Walker should have taught him to do, between perfect and imperfect competition, or he would not have such strong trust in the adequacy of competition as a solvent of difficulties. Among the briefer books on economics, and they are many today, we know but two or three which we should recommend so cordially for general reading as this one on the natural laws of business.

The Factors of Organic Evolution. By Herbert Spencer. [D. Appleton & Co.] Mr. Spencer has reprinted, in this slender volume of some eighty pages, two articles first published in the Nineteenth Century for April and May, 1886, with some enlargement. Their purport is to vindicate against extreme Darwinians, although not against Darwin himself, the importance of the principle of organic modification by function, which is identified especially with the name of Lamarck. Prof. Cope's able volume on the Origin of the Fittest, recently noticed in these columns, seeks to establish Lamarck's doctrine on the wide basis of the latest investigations. Mr. Spencer, taking no notice of Prof. Cope, follows the same general line of thought in recurring to Lamarck to supply plain deficiencies in the doctrine of natural selection; he is chiefly interested in the mental and moral phenomena to which the idea of inherited modification, by use or disuse of organs or faculties, is applicable. The thought is simple and comparatively familiar; but many will probably be more impressed by it when enveloped in Mr. Spencer's elaborate terminology than when stated, as it often has been, more directly and plainly.

American Literature and Other Papers. By Edwin Percy Whipple. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] This second volume of Mr. Whipple's posthumously-collected essays is divided between Emerson, treated as a poet and in comparison with Carlyle, Daniel Webster as a master of English style, and the centennial article on American Literature, reprinted from Harper's Magazine. The latter is an encyclopædic sketch which could have been very much improved by careful revision. Beecher certainly did not deserve two pages under theology mainly devoted to showing that he was not a theologian, while Col. Higginson receives three or four lines of allusion to work of a high literary strain. Mr. Whipple was too fond of dilating upon the plain, especially in humor. What can be less needful than the page he devotes, in the best paper in this volume, the one on Webster, to commenting on the saying "as slow as cold molasses"! If the would-be author, however, will disregard the style of the comments on Webster and take them for their matter, he will find Mr. Whipple a most profitable teacher of vigor and directness of speech. The closing article on Starr King is a brief eulogy of that attractive personality.

Apotheosis of an Ideal. [Boston: Privately Printed.] The "foreword" of this "interior life-drama" assures us that "the authorship is a matter of no importance." We can heartily agree with this remark; we should, however, "move to amend" by striking out "the authorship," and inserting "this book." We make bold to say this inasmuch as we are sure we do not belong to the class named in the last sentence of this remarkable allegory:

Whoso, looking calmly out upon Entirety's face,
Can straightway introvert the amplate gaze . . .
Ensamples and autotypes the real immaculate, immutable, consummate.

Athothis: A Satire on Modern Medicine. By Thomas C. Minor. [Robert Clarke & Co.] Mr. Minor makes some exceedingly clever hits at the modern practice of medicine in his Athothis, which is written in no savage spirit, although some phases of the "healing art" as now conducted are severely handled. The author evidently has the history of medicine at his command, and when he summons up the spirit of an Egyptian astrologer to confute the wisdom of the nineteenth century he is tolerably sure of his ground. The book, although somewhat broad in manner now and then, is sufficiently amusing to entertain while it also is likely to induce reflection.

Practical Cheiroscopy. By Edward Heron-Allen. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.] This entertaining little book, illustrated with thirteen plates, is an expansion of the author's first lecture delivered in this country. Mr. Heron-Allen is the author of several more elaborate works on the hand; but most readers will find this sufficiently full, although the author is astonished at his own "temerity, in attempting to discuss within such narrow limits . . . a subject so vast as that of the Hand." After the introduction on the importance of the human hand, we come to chapters on superstitions and customs and physiology. We then discover that this vast science is divided into cheirognomy, which treats of the shapes of hands, and cheiromancy, or palmistry, which declares the connection of the lines of the hand with individual destiny. Of cheirognomy, as here expounded, we may truly say, as of physiognomy, that it is a very instructive science, and of cheiromancy, as of phrenology, that it is a very amusing pseudo-science. Mr. Heron-Allen is an enthusiast in both sciences, and he is therefore able, in his lively way, to impart no little instruction and amusement to the discerning reader.

Præterita. By John Ruskin, LL.D. Volume II. Chapter IX. The Feasts of the Vandals. [John Wiley & Sons. 25c.] "The Feasts of the Vandals" is of less interest than some other numbers of Præterita. It contains laudation of "modern painters," sketches of several artists, and a slight exposition of some of the elder Ruskin's methods in the wine business. George Richmond, says Ruskin, "painted a charming water-colour of me sitting at a picturesque desk in the open air, in a crimson waistcoat and white trousers, with a magnificent port-crayon, and Mont Blanc, conventionalized to Raphaellesque grace in the distance." Of the intercourse with artists in his own home there is this pleasant picture:

When on any, to us, peculiarly festive occasion—the return from a journey, publication of a new volume, anniversary of a birthday, or the like—we ventured to ask our artist friends to rejoice with us, most of them came, I believe, with real pleasure. The early six o'clock dinner allowed them usually a pleasant glance over the meadow and the Norwood Hill in the evening light; the table was just short enough to let the talk flow round without wandering into eddies or lingering into confidences; there was no guest whom the others did not honour; there was neither effort, affectation, nor restraint in the talk . . . and when the candles came, and the good jests over the nuts and olives, there was "frolic wine" in the flask at every right hand, such as that never Prince Hal nor Jack Falstaff tasted cup of brighter or mightier.

The Gentleman's Magazine Library. Edited by George Laurence Gomme, F. S. A. Romano-British Remains; Part I. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.] The latest issue of The Gentleman's Magazine Library is part one of Romano-British Remains, covering the local discoveries in England, and classified by counties. In twenty pages of introduction the editor calls attention to the importance of the subject, and throws light upon the implements, ornaments, armor, and other remains described in the body of the work. He suggests that a complete record of Roman remains should be made by a competent person that an accurate estimate of the degree of Roman influence in England may be ascertained. He claims only to have gathered together in this and the volume on Scotland and Wales, which is to follow, "a hitherto undigested and unclassified mass of material which is much needed for future research," and for which, let us add, all archæological students should be grateful. To the diligence and painstaking of Mr. Gomme we are largely indebted for putting into shape valuable matter which otherwise would have been practically unavailable; and the importance of the subject can hardly be overlooked. To him the amount here gathered seems comparatively small, but the general reader will be apt to wonder that so much should have remained after all the changes, the vandalism, and the ravages of time in Great Britain.

How to Travel: Hints, Advice, and Suggestions to Travellers by Land and Sea all Over the Globe. By Thomas W. Knox. Revised Edition. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.] Colonel Knox is a veteran in travel; and if he has not put all that he knows about that multiplex subject into this little handbook, he has included all the concentrated wisdom that the amateur globe-trotter will be able to assimilate. This book will tell him how to prepare for journeys by land and sea in America and in Europe; how to travel by stage-coach, diligence, and post, or with the aid of camels, reindeer, dogs, jinrikshas, and sedan chairs; how to get his money's worth at hotels, how to climb mountains, how to distribute fees with the least possible annoyance, how to travel without money, and how to plan a trip around the world. There is a chapter of "special advice to ladies, by a lady," another on the legal rights of travelers by a lawyer, and another on sea-sickness, and how to avoid it. With regard to sea-sickness, strong testimony is given in favor of bromide of sodium as a preventive. Every one who contemplates making an extended journey will do well to master the contents of How to Travel; it will be dollars in his pocket and peace and comfort to his mind.

Voice, Song, and Speech: A Practical Guide for Singers and Speakers. By Lenox Browne, F.R.C.S., Ed.; and Emil Behnke. Seventh Edition. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00.] We are not overstating the fact when we say that this practical guide of vocal physiology and hygiene is the standard book on the subject for all readers of English. It is scientific in method, comprehensive in scope, fortified by an astonishing array of special knowledge, yet so clear in exposition that the unlearned may easily master the principles it enumerates and explains. All who use the voice in a professional way will hardly venture to be without so safe and suggestive a guide, while every intelligent person who desires to make the most of his vocal powers, either in song or speech, cannot fail to benefit largely by its teachings.

Miss Parloa's Kitchen Companion. A Guide for All who would be Good Housekeepers. By Maria Parloa. [Estes & Lauriat. $2.50.] This book of Miss Parloa's is nothing less than a culinary cyclopædia, for it is a large octavo of 964 pages, and it provides in excellent form all the information required by the housekeeper who would be ranked among the "good." Miss Parloa tells us how the ideal kitchen should be built and furnished, and the ideal seems not very difficult of attainment; every one who thinks of building a house some day will certainly make a note of her suggestions. Into the minutiae of the selection and preparation of food Miss Parloa enters fully, her opinions being always given concisely. Of the recipes "many hundreds" are claimed as new; those of a simple character are marked with an asterisk, so that the inexperienced may not unwittingly venture beyond their depth. Happy the household whose daily needs are ministered to in conformity with Miss Parloa's instructions!

The Century Illustrated Magazine. November, 1886, to April, 1887. [The Century Co. $3.00.] The eleventh volume of The Century Magazine holds well up to the high average of that popular periodical, although its contents, aside from the Life of Lincoln, do not include so many articles of special significance as have appeared in some previous volumes. In fiction, particularly, the showing is weak, Mr. Cable's "Carancro" and "Grande Pointe" being about the only noteworthy contributions in this field. Among the more solid matter are the biographical papers, all important, on Clay, Stanton, and Father Taylor; Mr. Atkinson's economic-sociological discussions on food supply and the relative material strength of nations; Prof. Lanciani's account of recent archæological discoveries in Rome; and Dr. Waldstein's speculations concerning the temple of the Ephesian Artemis. Nor must we forget to mention with praise Prof. Langley's fascinating contributions on astronomy.

Here and There in Yucatan. By Alice D. Le Plongeon. [J. W. Bouton.] We cannot say much for Mrs. Le Plongeon's book. The author is the wife of Dr. Le Plongeon, and according to her own assertion, sojourned for several years in Yucatan with every opportunity for examining the vestiges of Maya civilization and for studying the natives. "Thus we became acquainted with their mode of life, religion, sacred rites, superstitions, fables, and traditions; as well as learning something of their philosophy, and observing how communism is practiced among them." Of all this the fragmentary papers here collected tell us little or nothing. Concerning the life of the turtle-catchers, legends of buried treasure, superstitions regarding the evil eye, and the caverns of Bolonchen, Mrs. Le Plongeon has something to say; she even attempts to give us an idea of idolatry in Yucatan and of the lost literature of the Mayas, but without any definite success. The description of the terrible snake nolpoch savors of romance; it attacks its victim without provocation; its venom causes the blood to ooze through every pore of the skin and is always fatal; "it is two feet long, about an inch and a half in diameter throughout its length, the tail terminating as if cut obliquely, and the mouth shaped like the beak of a quail!"

Poetry and Philosophy of Goethe. Lectures and Discussions before the Milwaukee Literary School in August, 1886. Edited by Marion V. Dudley. [S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50.] Mr. Johnston, the President of the Milwaukee Literary School, in the address of welcome which opens this volume, calls attention to the fact that the citizens of his progressive town "are no longer slaves to merely mercenary and sordid aims. We have advanced," he says, "beyond the merely utilitarian." Of these assertions the book before us is ample and sufficient proof. The lectures and discussions here reported are pitched in no provincial tone, but are inspired by universal ideas, and cultivated persons everywhere will read them with enjoyment. Indeed we are tempted to say that for an introduction to a sane comprehension of what is best in Goethe, the beginner in the study of world literature could hardly do better than to master the larger part of the contents of this book. We except from the commendation Mr. Denton J. Snider's "Anniversary Ode," with its sounding line:

Goethe, thou art a true American;

because Mr. Snider is too transcendental for babes and sucklings. But we do not now call to mind anything better in their way than Prof. W. T. Harris's exposition of Wilhelm Meister, or the papers on "The Divine Comedy and Faust" and "The Elective Affinities," by Mrs. Caroline Sherman and Mrs. Maria Shorey, with the accompanying discussions. Noteworthy also are Prof. Harris's analysis of "Faust," and Mr. James MacAlister's essay on "Goethe as a Scientist." Among the "birthday tributes" we notice a graceful critique on "The Erl-king" by Aubertine Woodward.

We have received the first volume ("Fantine") of Mr. Jenkins's edition in the original of Les Misérables, an exceedingly creditable piece of book-making. The form is convenient to hold, the paper good, the type large and clear, the presswork irreproachable, the margins ample, and the edges uncut. The same publisher sends us No. 12 of his "Contes Choisis" — Le Chien du Capitaine, an amusing and pathetic story by Louis Énault. [William R. Jenkins. $1.00 and 25c.] — Mrs. Knight's Primer of Botany calls for a compound microscope, and undertakes to initiate young minds into the mysteries of protoplasm, the tissue systems, the circulation of sap, assimilation of food, movements of plants, and so on. The details are brought within the range of bright children, and no doubt teachers who can find two or three spare minutes in the daily routine will be glad to avail themselves of this little book. They may even, as the author suggests, use "recess" for the lessons here unfolded. What is a child for nowadays except to learn "facts?" [Ginn & Co.] — Dr. Bernhard's German Novelles are chosen with discretion, and his notes are ample and pay particular attention to etymologies. But no possible plea can excuse the use in an American school-book of the myopia-inducing Gothic text. [D. C. Heath & Co.] — Miss Anna B. Badlam's Suggestive Lessons in Language and Reading for Primary Schools are the work of an experienced teacher. The first part of the book is devoted to methods for oral instruction, the second part to "phonic word building" and blackboard exercises. [D. C. Heath & Co. $1.50] — The newly-issued pocket map of Kansas shows the eleven new counties marked out by the Legislature of that State last February. [Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.] — No. 67 of "Cassell's National Library" is composed of the first volume of the Rev. Gilbert White's Natural History of Selborne, with the usual careful prefatory note by Prof. Henry Morley. [Cassell & Co. 10c.]

— The book centers in New York are in Lafayette Place, Astor Place, Broadway between Eighth and Thirteenth Streets, and West Twenty-third Street between Fifth and Sixth Avenues. In these localities are many of the largest book stores and publishers. Another cluster of publishers is near the great establishment of Harper & Brothers, Franklin Square, in the extreme lower part of the city.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

The Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford-on-Avon. We have before referred to this library, and have urged American authors and publishers of works relating to Shakespeare and his times to send it copies of these books. The attention of the British public has been again called to the subject by a meeting in the interests of the library, which was held at the Lyceum Theatre in London on the 22d of April. Mr. Henry Irving presided and many eminent persons, literary and other, were present; among them Sir Theodore and Lady Martin (Helena Faucit), Dr. Furnivall, Mr. C. E. Flower (to whom, as our readers are aware, the Memorial building owes its existence), the American minister, et al.

Mr. Irving introduced the subject in a happy way, and was followed by Sir Theodore Martin, who, after remarking that Shakespeare was the author on whose works, more than those of any other, his mind had fed, and that the magic of the poet's power had through life been vividly brought home to him by the best interpreters on the modern stage (of whom, he might have added, his wife was one of the most brilliant and charming), offered the following resolution:

That it is desirable that the Shakespeare Memorial Library, now partially formed in the Shakespeare Memorial Building at Stratford-upon-Avon, should be extended so as ultimately to include a complete collection of the editions, English and foreign, and the translations, of Shakespeare's works, and of all the best critical and other literature, illustrative, not only of these works, but also of Shakespeare's life, and of Shakespeare's England.

Mr. Phelps, our minister to England, was loudly cheered when he rose to offer a second resolution, which was as follows:

That it is desirable that in the same library should be included all the best dramatic works, both English and foreign, and all works, historical, biographical, and critical, which illustrate the rise and progress of the acted drama in Europe and America.

Mr. Phelps went on to say, according to the report sent us by an English friend:

It is a very commonplace and frequent observation that we of America and of England belong to the same race. I think the remark is not quite original — (laughter) — few remarks at the present day are. Still, I think it is not always remembered upon what precise foundation that vague observation stands. We separated ourselves from you a hundred years ago, for the benefit of both sides. (Laughter and applause.) We established a separate nationality, and we have ever since been a different nation. But a national difference may be, and in our case is, only a difference that is political and geographical. (Hear, hear.) The family remains the same. Some things we carried away with us, and we never mean to part with them. We enriched ourselves without robbing you when we took the English literature, the English language, English traditions, and English laws — (loud applause) — and it has been my wish, and will be my wish so long as I have the honor to be the guest of this country and the representative of my own, to preach constantly from this text — separated geographically, separated politically; possibly, though I trust never to see that time, opposed to each other politically, we are still one. (Cheers.) We have created out of the materials we carried away, and what we have created is yours as well as ours; our future belongs to you as well as to us. It is the future of your children as well as ours. In all that stirs our humanities, in all charities, in science, learning, literature, and art, we are and ever shall be one people, whatever the geographical difference. So, sir, it comes to pass that your Shakespeare is our Shakespeare. (Applause.) We are not second to you in the admiration, the reverence, the affection that is felt for all the sacred names in the annals of literature. Their writings are studied and regarded and loved in America as much as in England; and I put it to you, sir, whether in those charming personations you have given my countrymen — your visits were, unfortunately, too rare and brief — you have ever been confronted, whenever you have had occasion to personate Shakespeare, by audiences more appreciative or enthusiastic? (Loud applause.) Sir Theodore Martin has said that some of you have not visited the birthplace of Shakespeare. He would not have made that observation if he had been addressing an American audience. (Laughter and applause.) Of all Americans who have been in this country, and who have had the leisure, I have not met a man or woman who has not visited Stratford-on-Avon, and, in fact, if you want to see all the Americans who come to this country, to make sure that you do not miss any of them, just plant yourself at the birthplace of Shakespeare. (Laughter and applause.) So, if a monument is to be raised anywhere, if contributions are to be sought for the purpose of producing such a memorial, we of America shall not only consent to contribute to it, but we shall claim a right to contribute. (Renewed applause.) . . . A library is one of the best monuments, perhaps the best monument, that can be raised in honor of a worthy man. Statues are not always successful — monumental architecture where it succeeds once fails a hundred times — sometimes fortunately they fall down — (laughter) — but a library continues. It cannot be created any more than a full-grown tree. It must grow, and under proper auspices it will continue to grow. This library that we are inaugurating today will be growing when we are all sleeping. It will be a work of time, and a work which those who come after us will look upon with satisfaction. Let it rise as the best and most appropriate monument formed from the contributions of all English-speaking people, who have reaped an abundant harvest from the seed which Shakespeare has sown. (Loud applause.)

Sir Arthur Hodgson, the mayor of Stratford, seconded the resolution. In the course of his remarks he said that of the thirteen thousand people who annually visit the tomb of Shakespeare, full one-fourth are "our American cousins."

At this point Mr. Irving stated that he had just received a telegram from Paris stating that a committee of the members of the Comédie Française had been formed, with M. Mounet-Sully as chairman, to assist in the establishment of the library. The resolutions were then carried with great enthusiasm. Sir F. W. Pollock next proposed to add the following:

That the public be invited to take part in the formation of the Shakespeare Memorial Library by contributions either of books or of money, and to form a general committee, and that the following gentlemen be appointed, with power to add to their number, as the executive committee of the library for the purpose of carrying out the foregoing resolutions — viz., Walter Besant, M.A., Charles E. Flower, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, M.A., Frederick Hawley, Sir Arthur Hodgson, K.C.M.G., Richard R. Holmes, F.S.A., Alfred H. Hall, Henry Irving, Sir Frederick Leighton, Bart., P.R.A., Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B., and Sir F. W. Pollock, Bart.

Several speakers followed, one of whom stated that of the 600 or more editions of Shakespeare only 84 are in the library, which now numbers about 3,000 volumes.

A Standard Line-Numbering of Shakespeare's Works. Professor Henry Johnson, of Bowdoin College, a careful student and judicious critic, sends us the following sensible hints on this subject:

"If, as seems necessary, the line-numbering must be referred to the practice of a single collective edition, the First Folio has manifestly the best claims. The fact that the division into acts and scenes is lacking in the Folio is now not an argument against an act-scene-line reference, because the modern editors have practically agreed in settling the question of acts and scenes. There is an advantage in the ordinary threefold reference, in so far as it would enable one to look up a reference more easily in any edition other than one with the new numbering. Then the prose lines must have an arbitrary numbering, that is, must accord with the practice of some one printer. Why not with that of the 1623 edition? Any variation among the copies of that date as to line-arrangement offers less forcible objections to the adoption of their alignment than can be urged against any other edition. Verse which has been printed in the 1623 edition as prose could be numbered to accord with the metrical and not with the typographical arrangement. In cases where there may be always a difference of opinion as to whether a passage is in verse or prose, a settlement can be reached only by common agreement; but here the running-line number would be less desirable than an act-scene-line number, as a difference of opinion would not affect all subsequent line-numbers in the play. In case the Folio omits a line or more, allowance could be made for it in the numbering, without deciding any question as to the right of the passage to a place in the text."

Pears in Shakespeare. A writer in the London Garden says:

It is curious that Shakespeare, country bred, should never have mentioned pears by name, save once, in Romeo and Juliet, when he alludes to the Popperin Pear, now known in Worcestershire as the Poplar Pear, still one of the common perry pears of the county. It is evident from this meager notice of pears that Shakespeare's tastes were not gratified by good fruit. In The Merry Wives of Windsor he uses the phrase, "crestfallen like a dried pear." The plump and juicy pears of our century when fallen rot before they wither, but the tough perry pears wither before they rot. Worcestershire abounds with pear orchards, and Shakespeare, had he seen these orchards in full bloom, would surely have expressed his admiration. There is no allusion in any of his plays, poems, or sonnets to the beautiful spectacle of a pear, tree sheeted with its snow-white blossoms. Another country poet, Robert Herrick, although enthusiastic in praise of strawberries and cherries, never alludes to pears. Herrick spent the best years of his life in Devonshire, which must have been almost destitute of pear-trees. Sir John Suckling celebrates the charms of a young lady in his lines:

Her cheeks are like the Katharine Pear,
The side that's next the sun.

The writer has overlooked the reference to the "warden" pear in the Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 48: "I must have saffron to color the warden pies." According to Mr. Hudson Turner (Archæological Journal, vol. v. p. 301) this warden pear "had its origin and its name from the horticultural skill of the Cistercian monks of Warden Abbey in Bedfordshire, founded in the 12th century. Three warden pears appeared in the armorial bearings of the Abbey." We see, however, that Skeat, in his Etymological Dictionary, adopts the ordinary derivation of the name from ward (keep, preserve), the pear being a variety that kept well.

In the first scene of All's Well there is also a reference to "one of our French withered pears," of which it is said that "it looks ill, it eats drily."

There was no lack of good pears in Shakespeare's day. Gerard, in his Herbal (1597), says that the varieties "are not to be numbered; every country hath his peculiar fruit, so that to describe them apart were to send an owle to Athens, or to number those things that are without number."

It is probably through mere accident that the poet does not oftener refer to pears, and that he never alludes to a pear-tree in blossom. He speaks of apples some twenty-five times—referring to varieties then in vogue, as "caraways," "apple-johns," "pippins," "pome-waters," "leather-coats," "bitter-sweetings," etc.—but the blossom is nowhere mentioned in his works. So the cherry is alluded to seven or eight times, but its blossom not at all. Apricots are spoken of twice under the earlier and more correct (etymologically) form of the name, "apricocks;" but the only allusion to the peach is in the adjective peach-coloured, which occurs twice in the plays. Plums, including damsons and prunes, are served up in about a dozen passages. The almond is alluded to once, but we have no glowing description of the tree, like that in the Faerie Queene, l. 7. 32:

Like to an Almond tree ymownted hye
On top of greene Selinis all alone,
With blossoms brave bedecked daintily,
Whose tender locks do tremble every one
At every little breath that under heaven is blowne.

Indeed, we believe that Shakespeare refers to no tree whatever in blossom.

Errata. Owing to one of those provoking delays to which all printed matter—everything indeed except letters—is liable in our Yankee mails, the corrected proof of the Report of the New York Shakespeare Society Meeting in our last number did not reach the printer until after the paper had gone to press, though it was sent from Cambridge in ample season. As a result of this accident—if that is the proper word for it—several typographical errors that had been duly marked in the proof were reproduced in the paper. The worst of these is in the reference to Mr. Goldsmid's reprint of Heywood's Queen's Masque. Slips in spelling, like "pagenation," and in punctuation, the reader doubtless corrected for himself as he perused the report. We flatter ourself that he is not often obliged to do this in our department of the World, or in any other; but mistakes will now and then occur in the best of printing.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

822. Fra Paola's History. Is there an English translation of the History of the Council of Trent, by Fra Paola (Father Pietro Sarpi)?

This is the author that so charmed Macaulay, who says: "The truth is that I admire no historians much except Herodotus, Thucydides, and Tacitus. Perhaps in his way, a very peculiar way, I might add Fra Paola." And again in a letter dated September, 1850: "Fra Paola is my favorite modern historian. His subject did not admit of vivid painting; but what he did, he did better than anybody."

W. E. L.
San Francisco.

One of the treasures of the Boston Public Library is thus catalogued:

The Historie of the Covnceill of Trent. Containing Fight Bookes. In which (besides the ordinarie Actes of the Councell) are declared many notable occurrences. And, particularly, the practises of the Court of Rome, to hinder the reformation of their Errors and to maintaine their Greatnesse. Written in Italian by Pietro Soave Polano, and faithfully translated into English by Nathanael Brent. London: Robert Barker and John Bill. 1620. (10) 825 (15) pp. Fo.

The edition published in 1676, "whereunto is added the Life of the Learned Author and the History of the Inquisition," is probably more accessible. See Dr. Johnson's Lives of Eminent Persons, Miss Georgina Campbell's biography of Sarpi, T. A. Trollope's Paul the Pope and Paul the Friar, and Mr. Howells's Venetian Life for an account of Fra Paola and his work.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Benson J. Lossing's History of the State of New York is being published by Funk & Wagnalls. This author's popularity is so great that the manuscript of his new work was accepted without being read. As but one other trustworthy history of this State has been published, and that some years since, a large sale is predicted of Mr. Lossing's latest literary venture.

—The same publishers will soon print the poems of Marietta Holley, better known as "Josiah Allen's Wife." These verses are said to be of a pathetic character, and quite unlike this author's usual style of writing. Miss Holley is a resident of Adams County, New York, and has made a fortune out of her writings in a very few years. Funk & Wagnalls have paid her over $7,000 royalty, and Hubbard Brothers, of Philadelphia, at one time paid her a draft for $10,000 for the manuscript of Josiah Allen's Wife at Saratoga, without reading a word of it.

—A publisher of New York says that on an average he has five books, in manuscript, offered to him every day. These literary efforts are for the greater part novels and poems. He admits that a "catching title" has something to do with his acceptance of these offerings, but says that however accurate the judgment of his readers may seem to be as to what will, or will not, take with the public, he finds their mistakes numerous in such directions. The success of a book is always problematical.

—One can understand how certain booksellers grow rich in hearing that a gentleman recently was attracted by the titles of some books he saw in the windows of Charles Scribner's Sons, and entering the store, purchased some $12,000 worth to be sent to his residence the following morning, to add to his already extensive library purchased from the same firm.

—Illustrations for books are being made in black and white, those in colors seeming to have lost favor with publishers, excepting where they are made with exceptional originality and beauty.

—The Historical Society of Brooklyn, which is so closely connected by the "eighth wonder of the world" with New York, has a wonderfully fine library of 42,000 volumes, and is especially rich in rare books and some fine historical paintings.

—The most enjoyable meeting of the Nineteenth Century Club during the last winter was that which was addressed by Col. T. W. Higginson. His talk was without notes; quiet, elegant, witty, and persuasive, and to the effect that literary people and literary efforts have a better and juster appreciation in America than in Europe.

—The fifth and sixth volumes of the "Riverside Edition" of Robert Browning's Works, issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., will appear about June 1st. The last volume will have a full index to all Browning's poems, together with a table of first lines.

—The Century for June contains an account of a recent interview with Count L. N. Tolstoi, by George Kennan; Scribner's for June has nineteen pages of the Thackeray letters, and an article on "The Ethics of Democracy," by F. J. Stimson; the June Harper's gives an illustrated paper by Mme. Jane Dieulafoy on "The Excavations at Susa," and another on "The Kentucky Pioneers," by John Mason Brown; the June Atlantic has a sketch of "The Theory of the Social Compact," by A. Lawrence Lowell, and an article on "Nursery Classics in Schools," by H. E. Scudder; the Forum begins a series of papers on "The Object of Life" with a contribution by Prof. George J. Romanes.

—A hymn and tune book for congregational use is announced for issue in the early autumn by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. It is edited by Professors Harris and Tucker, of Andover, with the coöperation, as musical editor, of Mr. E. K. Glezen, of Providence. The book will contain about 650 hymns and a portion of the Psalter.

—A six-page Ode, by George E. Woodberry, will appear in the Atlantic for July. It is called "My Country;" and excellent things are said of it by the few critics by whom it has been read.

—Mr. Robert Grant's name appears on the title-page of a new paper edition of the clever novel Face to Face, which was anonymously published by Charles Scribner's Sons a year ago.

—The ninth term of the Concord School of Philosophy is to begin on July 13. Twelve morning lectures will be devoted to Aristotle, ten evening lectures to dramatic poetry, and four brief papers on ontology will be presented. The list of lecturers includes Prof. Luigi Ferri, of Rome, Italy, Prof. Thomas Davidson, Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, Prof. W. T. Harris, Brother Azarias, Rev. Dr. C. A. Bartol, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and Rev. George Willis Cooke.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons will print at once in their series of "Questions of the Day" the recent debate by Edward Atkinson and others before the Boston Labor Union, on the subject of The Margin of Profit; they also announce Taxation, its Principles and Methods, a translation of "First Principles of the Science of Finance," by Prof. Luigi Cossa, of the University of Pavia, with an introduction by Horace White; and Gleanings from Malinecock, and Other Studies, sketches and stories illustrating the Dutch traditions of Long Island and the banks of the Hudson, by John Quod.

—Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. will publish immediately: The Church of the Early Fathers, External History, by Alfred Plummer (Epochs of Church History Series); Sundays at Balmoral, sermons by the late Principal Tulloch

Our Sovereign Lady and her People, by the author of English Hearts and English Hands; Outlines of a Gentle Life, by Maria V. C. Havergal; Abide in Christ and Like Christ, by Rev. Andrew Murray; Men of the Bible: Abraham, by Rev. W. J. Deane; Moses, by Rev. Geo. Rawlinson; Gideon, by Rev. J. M. Lang; Solomon, by Archdeacon Farrar; Isaiah, by Canon S. R. Driver; Jeremiah, by Canon T. K. Cheyne; also, Jesus the Christ, by Rev. F. J. Vallings; and The Biblical Illustrator, Vol. I.—"St. Matthew", by Rev. J. S. Exell.

The Cost of Making a Book.

The discussion with regard to publishers' profits and authors' royalties calls forth the following statistical statement from the American Book-seller: Now, if we wish to make a handsome 12mo volume, say of 400 pages, well printed, well bound, and on good paper, and to sell, "retail price," at $1.50, what figures do we have? First there is here the cost of the plates, say $350. If 5000 copies of the book are sold, the cost of the plates for each volume is 7 cents. The cost of manufacturing, paper, binding, etc., will be about 40 cents. To this cost of manufacturing there ought to be added a commission for the publisher's experience, his plant, advertising, etc., of 20 per cent on the selling price; then comes the author's royalty, 10 per cent on the "retail price." The retail price being $1.50, the price to the trade is 90 cents, a discount of 40 per cent being allowed at the very least. We have then these figures per copy on an edition of 5,000: Plates, 7 cents; manufacturing, etc., 40 cents; commission, 20 per cent on trade price at 90c., 18 cents; author's royalty, 15 cents; total, 80 cents—leaving the publisher 10 cents profit. If, however, the book sells only to the extent of 1,000 copies, the cost of the plates is 35 cents per copy instead of 7, and the result is a loss of 18 cents a copy to the publisher, who has nothing to show but a pile of metal good only for the foundry. This estimate is for a first-class, well-made book, not fiction. If we take a $1.50 novel we may put down: Plates, 7 cents; paper, 3 cents; press-work, 6 cents; binding, 15 cents; advertising, 15 cents; royalty, 15 cents; total, 61 cents; but the trade generally obtain on fiction at least 40 per cent and 10 per cent—that is, they pay for the book 81 cents. The publisher in this case gets 20 cents profit if his sales reach 5,000 copies, or makes a loss of 2 cents a copy if only 1,000 copies are sold. The difference in the publisher's profits between this and the preceding case arises from the greater risk in the latter. We do not think that we are very wide of the mark if we say that for one $1.50 novel that passes 5,000 copies, ten fail to reach 1,000.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

May.

Nineteenth Century. Up to Easter. Matthew Arnold.—Playing at "Coercion." R. Barry O'Brien.—Mental Differences between Men and Women. George J. Romanes.—Decay of Bodily Strength in Towns. Lord Brabazon.—How to Ensure Breathing Spaces. C. L. Lewis.—Deer Forests: Past, Present, and Future. George Malcolm.—The Ruin of Aurangzeb; or, The History of a Reaction. Sir William Wilson Hunter, K.C.S.I.—Fallacies of the French Press. Sir Arthur Orway.—German Life in London. Leopold Katscher.—A Volunteer Battalion. Col. R. W. Routledge.—The Greater Gods of Olympus. H. Apollon. W. E. Gladstone.—Science—Falsely So Called: A Reply. The Duke of Argyll.—A New Title for the Crown. George Baden Powell, M.P.
The National Review. The Real Truth about Tory Democracy. Earl of Dufferin.—Boycotting no Remedy in Music. Charles L. Graves.—The Russian Frontiers of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. C. H. Atteridge.—A Spring Holiday. Rambler.—Poetry and the Fine Arts. The Professor of Poetry at Oxford.—The Law of Theft. Hugh Hall.—Lothair and Endymion. F. Hitchman.—The Reorganization of the Indian Army. C. B. Norman.—A French Critic on Victor Hugo. Francis Paul.—The Municipalities on their Trial. Stanley Leighton, M.P.—Politics at Home and Abroad.—Correspondence.
Blackwood's Magazine.—Joyce. Chaps. 1-4.—The Transylvanian Triganes.—A Magnetic Mystery.—Recollections of Kaiser Wilhelm.—Labour and Capital in Australia.—French Contemporary Novelists.—Burma Reformed. A. C. Yate.—"Her Majesty's Opposition" in 1887.—The Rev. W. Lucas Collins.

The Contemporary Review. Oxford After Forty Years. E. A. Freeman, D.C.L.—An Apology for Armies. A Modern Soldier.—Holes in the Education Net. Millicent Garrett Fawcett.—Our Self-Conscious Selves. H. D. Traill.—Notes on Colonial Zoology. St. George Mivart.—Confessions of a Metropolitan Member. Prof. Thorold Rogers.—The American State and the American Man. Albert Shaw.—The Playwrights of Paris. Theodore Child.—Chautauqua—A Popular University. Dr. J. H. Vincent.—How We Became Home Rulers. James Bryce, M.P.
Beecher, H. W., at School and College.
G. C. Fisher. Education.
Comedies, Three Elizabethan. Prof. Hales. Macmillan's.
Literature, English, The Study of. Cornhill.
Scandinavian Studies in the United States.
Daniel Kilham Dodge. Science and Education, No. 7.
Vitzthum's (Count) Journals. Longman's.
G. W. E. Russell. Temple Bar.
Voltaire's Romances, The Philosophy of.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Fiction.

MISS BAYLY'S ROMANCE. A Story of To-day. Leisure Moment Series. Henry Holt & Co. 30c.
TAKEN BY SIEGE. A Novel. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25
IN THE NAME OF THE TSAR. A Novel. By J. Belford Dayne. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 15c.
WHO IS JOHN NOLAN? By Charles Henry Brackett. Cassell & Co. $1.00
THE STORY OF MARGARET KENT. By Henry Hayes. Tenth Edition. Ticknor & Co. 50c.
AUNT HENRY'S FOUNDLING. A Novel. By Mrs. Leith Adams. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.
7 TO 12: A DETECTIVE STORY. By Anna Katherine Green. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 25c.
WHO IS GUILTY? By PHILIP WOLFF, M.D. Cassell & Co. 25c.
WITHOUT BLEMISH. To-day's Problem. By Mrs. J. H. Walworth. Cassell & Co. 50c.
THE YOKES OF THE THORAH. By Sidney Lusk. Cassell & Co. $1.00
THE STORY OF A NEW YORK HOUSE. By H. C. Bunner. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25
THE WITCH'S HEAD. A Novel. By H. Rider Haggard. Harper & Bros. 75c.

History.

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY STUDIES. Fifth Series. V-VI. Local Government in Canada. By John George Bourne, LL.D. Baltimore: N. Murray. 50c.
AMERICAN COMMONWEALTHS: CONNECTICUT; A Study of a Commonwealth Democracy. By Alexander Johnston. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
THE STORY OF THE NATIONS: ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By Prof. John Pentland Mahaffy. With the Collaboration of Arthur Gilman, M.A. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
A HISTORY OF ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By William Edward Hartpole Lecky. Vols. V-VI. D. Appleton & Co. Each $2.25
JOHN SEVIER AS A COMMONWEALTH BUILDER. By James R. Gilmore. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

Poetry.

BETWEEN THE CENTURIES, AND OTHER POEMS. By Jane Maria Read. Henry A. Young & Co.
HALLO, MY FANCY. By Charles Henry Liders and S. D. S., Jr. David McKay.
THE ANGEL IN THE HOUSE. By Coventry Patmore. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.
THE POETIC AND DRAMATIC WORKS OF ROBERT BROWNING. Riverside Edition. Vols. III and IV. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each $1.75
SEED THOUGHTS FROM ROBERT BROWNING. Selected and Arranged by Mary E. Burt. Third Edition. Revised Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

Text-Books.

SUGGESTIVE LESSONS IN LANGUAGE AND READING FOR PRIMARY SCHOOLS. A Manual for Teachers. By Anna B. Badlam. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.50
AN INDEX TO THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE. By Evangelina M. O'Connor. D. Appleton & Co. $2.00
OUTLINES OF LOGIC AND OF ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PHILOSOPHY. Dictated Portions of the Lectures of Hermann Lotze. Translated and Edited by George T. Ladd. Ginn & Co. $1.00
THE ESSENTIALS OF PERSPECTIVE. With Illustrations Drawn by the Author. By L. W. Miller. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50
ELEMENTARY TREATISE ON DETERMINANTS. By William G. Peck, Ph.D., LL.D. A. S. Barnes & Co.

Theology and Religion.

THE RUSSIAN CHURCH AND RUSSIAN DISSENT. By Albert F. Heard. Harper & Bros. $1.75
ORGANIC UNION OF CANADIAN CHURCHES, WITH A COMPARISON OF AUTHORIZED STANDARDS. By the Very Rev. James Carmichael, M.A., D.C.L., Dean of Montreal. Montreal: Dawson Brothers.
TOLERANCE. Two Lectures Addressed to Students of Several of the Divinity Schools of the Protestant Episcopal Church. By Phillips Brooks. E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.

THE CHURCH AND THE FAITH. A Philosophical History of the Catholic Church. By the Rev. William Brevoort Bolmer. E. & J. B. Young & Co. $3.00
THE DICTIONARY OF RELIGION. An Encyclopedia of Christian and other Religious Doctrines, Denominations, Sects, Heresies, Ecclesiastical Terms, History, Biography, etc., etc. Edited by the Rev. William Benham, B.D., F.S.A. Cassell & Co. $5.00
A HEBREW GRAMMAR. By the Rev. W. H. Lowe, M.A. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.
AN INTRODUCTION TO THE TEXTUAL CRITICISM OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. Benjamin B. Warfield, D.D. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.
MY CREED. By M. J. Savage. Geo. H. Ellis.
EXPOSITIONS. By the Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D. Third Series. Thomas Whittaker. $2.25
WORD STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Marvin R. Vincent, D.D. Vol. I. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00
POPULAR LECTURES ON THEOLOGICAL THEMES. By the Rev. Archibald Alexander Hodge, D.D., LL.D. Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25
THE GROWTH OF CHURCH INSTITUTIONS. By the Rev. Edwin Hatch, M.A., D.D. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50
FUTURE RETRIBUTION VIEWED IN THE LIGHT OF REASON AND REVELATION. By C. A. Row, M.A. Thomas Whittaker. $2.50

Travel and Observation.

THE WORLD AS WE SAW IT. By Mrs. Amos R. Little. Cupples & Hurd. $7.50
HERE AND THERE IN YUCATAN. Miscellanies. By Alice D. Le Plongeon. J. W. Bouton.
ROUNDOABOUT TO MOSCOW. An Epicurean Journey. By John Bell Bouton. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

General Literature.

FAMILIAR STUDIES OF MEN AND BOOKS. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25
EPISODES IN A LIFE OF ADVENTURE; OR, MOSS FROM A ROLLING STONE. By Laurence Oliphant. Harper & Bros.
RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS. By Henry B. Stanton. Harper & Bros. $1.50
MEMOIRS OF THE LITERATURE COLLEGE, IMPERIAL UNIVERSITY OF JAPAN. No. I. The Language, Mythology, and Geographical Nomenclature of Japan Viewed in the Light of Aino Studies. By Basil Hall Chamberlain. Tokyo: The Imperial University.
VOICE, SONG, AND SPEECH. A Practical Guide for Singers and Speakers from the Combined View of Vocal Surgeon and Voice Trainer. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S.Ed., and Emil Behnke. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00
HOW TO TRAVEL. Hints, Advice, and Suggestions to Travelers by Land and Sea all Over the Globe. By Thomas W. Knox. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00
COLONIAL LIQUOR LAWS. Part II of "Liquor Laws of the United States; Their Spirit and Effect." By G. Thumann. New York: United States Brewers' Association.
MISS PARLOA'S KITCHEN COMPANION. A Guide for All Who Would be Good Housekeepers. By Maria Parloa. Estes & Lauriat. $2.50
A SUMMER IN ENGLAND WITH HENRY WARD BEECHER. Edited by Jas. B. Pond. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $2.00
INDEXED COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP MAP OF KANSAS. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.
THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE. Vol. XXXIII. The Century Co. $3.00
THE NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. By the Rev. Gilbert White, A.M. Vol. I. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.
THREE PHASES OF COOPERATION IN THE WEST. By Amos G. Warner. American Economic Association. 75c.
MACHINE POLITICS AND MONEY IN ELECTIONS IN NEW YORK CITY. By William M. Ivins. Harper's Handy Series. Harper & Bros. 25c.
ATHOTHIS: A SATIRE ON MODERN MEDICINE. By Thomas C. Minor. Robert Clarke & Co.
CANNING AND PRESERVING. By Mrs. S. T. Rorer. Arnold & Co. 25c.
THE UNIVERSAL COOKERY BOOK. Practical Recipes for Household Use, Selected from the most Eminent Authorities. By Gertrude Strohm. White, Stokes & Allen. $1.50
THE INTER-STATE COMMERCE LAW. With Analytical Subject-Headings and a Copious Index. Rand, McNally & Co. 10c.
PROVERBS FROM PLYMOUTH PULPIT. Selected from the Writings and Sayings of Henry Ward Beecher. By William Drysdale. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00
CHRONICLE OF THE COACH: CHARING CROSS TO ILFRACOMBE. By John Denison Champlin, Jr. Illustrated by Edward L. Chichester. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25
REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR THE YEAR 1884-'85. Washington: Government Printing Office.
HANDY HELPS. No. I. By Albert P. Southwick. New York: E. L. Kellogg & Co. $1.00
INITIALS AND PSEUDONYMS. By William Cushing. Revised Edition. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $5.00
THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY. Being a Classified Collection of the Chief Contents of the Gentleman's Magazine from 1731 to 1868. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50
THE ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE. 1886. New York: Office of the Publishers' Weekly.
ENGLISH AS SHE IS TAUGHT. Genuine Answers to Examination Papers in Our Public Schools. Collected by Caroline B. LeRow. Cassell & Co. 50c.

READY MAY 24.

THE ALKAHEST;

OR, THE HOUSE OF CLAËS.

BY HONORE DE BALZAC. Uniform with "Père Goriot," "The Duchesse de Langeais," "César Birotteau," "Eugénie Grandet," "Cousin Pons," "The Country Doctor" and "The Two Brothers." 12mo, half morocco, French style, price $1.50.

THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT.

A Novel. By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Evan Harrington," "Harry Richmond," "Sandra Belloni," "Rhoda Fleming," "Vittoria," "Diana of the Crossways," "The Egoist," "Beauchamp's Career," in our new and handsome uniform 12mo edition, bound in English cloth, uncut, price $2.00.

A NEW "NO NAME" NOVEL.

CRACKER JOE.

One volume, 16mo, brown cloth, black and gold, price $1.00.

"Cracker Joe" is a story of Florida life, written by the author of some of the most popular novels of the day, who now seeks the anonymousness of the "No Name Series." It makes the eleventh volume in the third "No Name Series."

A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME.

One volume, 16mo, tasteful cover, price $1.25.

"A Week Away from Time" is the record of delightful days which some happy summer idlers passed on "the very tip end of the heel of Cape Cod," where time is of no account. It is a kind of modern Decameron, with stories related by the various members, while still another recites their daily adventures. It is a charming summer book, and will be found in all tourists' traveling bags.

ROBERTS BROTHERS,

3 Somerset Street, Boston.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 West 23d Street, New York,

HAVE NOW READY:

Mechanics and Faith. A Study of Spiritual Truth in Nature. By CHARLES TALBOT PORTER. Octavo. Second Edition. $1.50.

"Written in the interest of a high Christian faith and a pure theistic philosophy. . . One of the very best of recent works vindicating the fundamental truths of Christianity."—Buffalo Express.

"Written in a lucid style, and with a devout and reverent spirit. The argument is ingenious and the conclusions most important."—The Occident.

"It is remarkable for the clearness of its statement and illustrations. It is no less remarkable for its very lofty Christian tone. . . It is a volume to be in every clergyman's library, and one for every intelligent layman to read and study."—The Churchman.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 121 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harpers' Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUMFORD COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

HOW AVARICE WAS CURED.

IT wasn't by using O. K.'s. But D. K.'s will cure DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION, which cause more suffering than does avarice. They will neutralize acidity of the stomach, cure heartburn and all stomach troubles. Dr. Mark R. Woodbury's DYSPEPSIA KILLERS Do their work perfectly, completely and quickly. They cost only 50 cents (25 cents for a trial box). DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, will send them to you by mail, on receipt of price, to any part of the United States.

Books for Travelers.

HOW TO TRAVEL.

Hints, Advice, and Suggestions to Travelers by Land and Sea all over the Globe. By THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "Life of Fulton," "Maroo Polo and His Travels," "Decisive Battles since Waterloo," etc. Revised edition, 16mo, $1.00.

THE TRAVELERS' SERIES.

SKETCHES OF PEOPLE AND PLACES. 16mo, paper, per volume, 50 cts.

THE GREAT FUR LAND; or Sketches of Life in the Hudson Bay Territory. By H. M. ROBINSON.

ITALIAN RAMBLES. By JAMES JACKSON JARVES.

STUDIES OF PARIS. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS.

THE ABODE OF SNOW. Observations of a tour from Chinese Thibet to the Valleys of the Himalayas. By ANDREW WILSON.

A LADY'S LIFE IN THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS. By ISABELLA BIRD.

TENT LIFE IN SIBERIA, AND ADVENTURES AMONG THE KORAKS AND OTHER TRIBES IN KAMTCHATKA AND NORTH-EASTERN ASIA. By GEORGE KENNAN.

BY-WAYS OF NATURE AND LIFE. By CLARENCE DEMING. A series of essays covering a wide variety of topics.

CUBAN SKETCHES. By JAMES W. STEELE.

UP THE RHINE. By THOMAS HOOD. With two steel engravings, and with the author's original illustrations on wood.

WHIMS AND ODDITIES. By THOMAS HOOD. Illustrated.

CANOEING IN KANUCKIA. The Haps and Mishaps on Sea and Shore of the Statesman, the Editor, the Artist, and the Scribbler. By C. L. NORTON and JOHN HARBERTON. Very fully illustrated.

PICTURES AND LEGENDS FROM NORMANDY AND BRITTANY. By KATHERINE S. and THOMAS MACQUOID. With thirty-four illustrations.

THE GREEKS OF TO-DAY. By HON. CHARLES K. TUCKERMAN, late Minister-Resident of the United States at Athens.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS, 27 & 29 West Twenty-third St., N. Y.

THE SEASHORE SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE TENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute, AT COTTAGE CITY, MASS., W. J. ROLFE, A. M., President, Will begin Monday, July 11, 1887, and continue five weeks.

DEPARTMENTS: Art; Book-keeping and Writing; Botany; Chemistry; Civics; Elocution; English Literature (under the charge of the President); French; German; Geography; Geology and Mineralogy; History; Kindergarten; Latin and Greek; Mathematics; Microscopy; Vocal Music; Pianoforte Music; Pedagogy; Phonography; Physics; Physiology; Zoology.

Good table-board at low rates on the Institute grounds.

For Circular giving full information, address BENJAMIN W. PUTNAM, Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass.

Dodd, Mead & Company

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

Familiar Studies of Men and Books.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,

Author of "An Inland Voyage," "Treasure Island," "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Kidnapped," "The Merry Men," etc.

12mo, cloth, $1.25.

CONTENTS: Victor Hugo's Romances—Some Aspects of Robert Burns—Walt Whitman—Henry David Thoreau, His Character and Opinions—Yoshida-Torajiro—François Villon, Student, Poet and House-Breaker—Charles of Orleans—Samuel Pepys—John Knox and Women.

PEPYS'S DIARY.

Translated by MYNORS BRIGHT.

With Notes, Maps, Index, etc. A new, cheaper student's edition, complete in five volumes.

12mo, $5.00.

Dodd, Mead & Company,

752 & 755 Broadway, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A Superb Book of Travel.

THE WORLD AS WE SAW IT. By Mrs. AMOS E. LITTLE. Profusely illustrated with full-page phototypes and numerous cuts, head and tail pieces, etc. Quarto, gilt top, $7.50.

"One of the finest books of travel ever issued by an American woman. It is magnificently illustrated."—Boston Gazette.

CHARMING! UNIQUE!

YESTERDAYS WITH ACTORS. By KATE REYNOLDS WINSLOW. 8vo, cloth, illustrated with portraits of famous actors, $2.00.

"The book is kindly, sweet and pure. . . Altogether it is a deeply interesting book, mainly because it is so honest and true."—Boston Beacon.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

CUPPLES & HURD, Publishers, 94 Boylston Street, Boston.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 P. M. Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston. A. A. FOLSOM, Supt. P. & R. R.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $2.00 per year in advance.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A New Story by the Author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," etc.

SARACINESCA.

— BY —
F. MARION CRAWFORD

AUTHOR OF

"Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," "Zoroaster,"
"A Tale of a Lonely Parish," etc.
12mo, $1.50. Now ready.

"In the multitude of crude workers is there at least one novelist whose power is so brilliant, so fascinating, as quite to suggest a vision of paradise in the happiness of reading his fiction, and this delight is touched at high-water mark in the late novel, 'Saracinesca.' . . . The scene is laid in Rome; the grand, historic, Eternal City lending a fitting background and scenery to one of the most fascinating romances that has been written of late years. . . . In the desert of mediocrity of late fiction here is a novel that re-weaves all the old spell of imaginative romance." Boston Evening Traveller.

"One of the most engrossing novels we have ever read. Crawford is always interesting, in this instance particularly so. . . . 'Saracinesca' is a worthy follower of this author's previous novels and can be strongly recommended. It is interesting throughout, well told, high in its lessons, and ends satisfactorily."—Boston Times.

"Is Mr. Crawford's matured and most satisfying work. . . . Will give very great pleasure, and it will add vastly to Mr. Crawford's reputation for writing the most readable novels in our language."—Boston Beacon.

"Delights and interests more than anything he has written since he surprised the world with 'Mr. Isaacs.' . . . He has in 'Saracinesca' written a powerful story of modern Roman life, which is better even than his 'Roman Singer.'"—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

"Moves forward with an easy and even flow of which even Bulwer, who wrote novels of adventure very much of this sort, need not have been ashamed."—Boston Transcript.

"'Saracinesca' is a very remarkable book, and a great advance upon any of the author's previous work. . . . It would be difficult to conceive of a more gracious presence than that of the Duchess Coroua. She is so pure and true, so brave under trial, and withal such a thorough woman—no angel, just a passionate, loving, lovable woman—faithful to her high ideal of right, loyal to her husband. . . . If the conclusion of the story is to be as good as the opening, we cannot have it too soon. In any case this is one of the most effective romances since 'John Inglesant.'"—London Academy.

By the same author. Price $1.50 each.

MR. ISAACS,
DR. CLAUDIUS,
ZOROASTER,
A TALE OF A LONELY PARISH.

Macmillan & Co., N. Y.,
112 FOURTH AVENUE,

NOTABLE NOVELS.

I.

THE YOKE OF THE THORAH.

By SIDNEY LUSKA, Author of "As It Was Written," "Mrs. Peixada," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"The story of a young Hebrew painter's love for a Christian maiden. The scene is laid in New York, and the atmosphere is thoroughly local. It is Mr. Luska's best and strongest work."

II.

WHO IS JOHN NOMAN?

By CHARLES HENRY BECKETT. 1 vol., 16mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

"Head and shoulders above many American novels which we are constantly bidden to love and to praise."—N. Y. Herald.

"We advise those who want to have a literary palate plucked and refreshed to read 'Who is John Noman?'"—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

III.

"A Powerful Novel of New York Life."

TWO GENTLEMEN OF GOTHAM.

1 vol., 16mo, extra cloth, price $1.00.

"The most remarkable romance of the season."—Boston Traveller.

"A wonderfully bright and entertaining book, and flashes with wit on every page."—Albany Argus.

Complete catalogue sent free to any address.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,
739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

THE TRAVELERS
INSURANCE COMPANY
HARTFORD CONN.
ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY
OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst. Sec'y.

LES MISÉRABLES,

— BY —

VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lascelles Wrixall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30; Half Morocco, $33.50; Full Morocco, Gilt Edges, $45.

... Sold only by subscription. ...

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

JUST PUBLISHED.

KATIA.

By COUNT LÉON TOLSTOÏ.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH.

AUTHORIZED EDITION.

"Every page is a pleasure to those who can feel the beauty of truth."—Harper's New Monthly Magazine.

In one volume, price, paper, 25c.; cloth, 50c.

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

WM. S. GOTTSBERGER, Publisher,
11 Murray Street, New York.

"THAT SUPPRESSED BOOK."

A Woman in the Case.

By Professor Cones.

"If there had been a woman in the faculty," says the author, "she would have told them that to try to suppress my speech would give it the widest possible publicity."

FOR SALE AT BRENTANO'S,

1015 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.

ANY PERSON WISHING TO ACQUIRE a sound and practical knowledge of the German language, one that is of real use in business, reading, or travel, without waste of valuable time and without unnecessary labor, will find

"GERMAN SIMPLIFIED"

eminently suited to every requirement.

It is published in two editions: (1.) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cts. each. (2.) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York.—Prospectus mailed free.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 12. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 325. Publishers.

BOSTON, JUNE 11, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

Three Delightful Volumes of Essays.

OBITER DICTA.

SECOND SERIES.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

The remarkable reception which was accorded to the first series of this work, and the large sale which it met with in all parts of the country, almost immediately on publication, warrant the belief that a still larger demand will arise for the second series. The subjects of the essays included in this volume are: Milton, Pope, Johnson, Burke, The Muse of History, Charles Lamb, Emerson, The Office of Literature, Worn-out Types, Cambridge and the Poets, and Book-buying.

"Some admirably written essays. . . . Amusing and brilliant. . . . The book is the book of a highly cultivated man, with a real gift of expression, a good deal of humor, and a happy fancy."—Spectator.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

OBITER DICTA.

By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL.

FIRST SERIES.

The contents of the first series of Obiter Dicta are: Carlyle, On the Alleged Obscurity of Mr. Browning's Poetry, Truth-Hunting, Actors, A Rogue's Memoirs, The Via Media, and Falstaff.

"The book is pervaded by freshness, manliness, fine feeling, and intellectual integrity."—New York Times.

"The book is neat, apposite, clever, full of quaint allusions, happy thoughts and apt, unfamiliar quotations."—Boston Advertiser.

"This brilliant and thought-compelling little book. . . . Apart from their intellectual grip, which we think really notable, the great charm of these essays lies in the fine urbanity of their satirical humor."—The Academy.

UNIFORM WITH "OBITER DICTA."

LETTERS TO DEAD AUTHORS.

By ANDREW LANG.

This little volume is made up of letters addressed to Thackeray, Dickens, Herodotus, Pope, Jane Austen, Isaac Walton, Alexandre Dumas, Theocritus, Poe, Scott, Shelley, Molière, Burns, etc.

"The book is one of the luxuries of the literary taste. It is an astonishing little volume."—New York Evening Post.

"A gallery filled with melodious laughter, with felicitous hits, with poetic and ingenious pages and images."—The Critic.

Uniform Edition. Elzevir 16mo, gilt top, $1.00 each.

The three volumes in a box, uniform binding, $3.00.

* * * These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
745-746 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—B. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING

STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.

687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

BANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A. THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMAS. 3 vols.

PRESTON'S SMITH. 4 vols.

FOSTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT, AND TREE PINOES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STANTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

A NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "SYRIAN STONE-LORE."

ALTAIC HIEROGLYPHS and HITTITE INSCRIPTIONS.

By CLAUDE CONDER, R. E., with Illustrations. Published for the Committee of "The Palestine Exploration Fund." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Captain Conder, in the "Quarterly Statement" of the Palestine Exploration Fund, April, 1887, says that he desires in this volume "to restore the known sounds of the symbols to the language to which they belong, to show that this was the Hittite language, and to put into the hands of specialists the key which will enable them to make final and complete translations of the text."

SYRIAN STONE-LORE;

OR, THE MONUMENTAL HISTORY OF PALESTINE.

Canaanite, Phœnician, Hebrew, Jewish and Samaritan, Greek, Herodian, Roman, Byzantine, Arabian, Period of Crusades. By CLAUDE CONDER, R. E. Crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

TWENTY-ONE YEARS' WORK IN THE HOLY LAND.

A RECORD AND A SUMMARY.

June 22, 1865—June 22, 1886. Published for the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund. In 1 vol., large crown 8vo, with 50 illustrations, $1.25.

"Likely to prove of invaluable service to all those who are interested in work in the Holy Land."—Record.

F. C. BURNAND'S

INCOMPLEAT ANGLER.

After Master Isaac Walton.

Edited by F. C. BURNAND, author of "Happy Thoughts," and illustrated by Harry Furniss. 8vo, paper, 40 cents.

"The little book is funny enough."—Athenæum.

CUCUMBER CHRONICLES.

A TROOP to be Taken in Silence.

By J. ASHBY-STERNY, author of "The Lazy Minstrel," "Tiny Travels," etc. Fcap 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, with Four Colotype Illustrations, $2.00.

* * * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare and Second-hand Books ready. Special Net Catalogue of Books greatly reduced in price ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

VOLUMES V AND VI OF Mr. Lecky's History of England
in the Eighteenth Century.

Large 12mo, cloth, $2.25 each volume.

These volumes contain the History of England from 1783 to 1793, and the History of Ireland from 1782 to 1793. One more volume will complete the work.

"The two last published volumes of Mr. Lecky's work are most valuable contributions to the recent history of our country."—The London Athenæum.

"Mr. Lecky's volumes show no falling off in interest or in excellence. He still retains all the mastery of detail and the perfection of style which won for his earlier works a recognized place among English classics."—London Literary World.

D. APPLETON & CO.,

PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

LETTERS OF
HORATIO GREENOUGH

With Biographical Sketches. Edited by FRANK BOOTT GREENOUGH. With portrait, $1.25.

Biographical Sketch of this Greatest of American Sculptors—First Visit to Europe (Marseilles and Rome) in 1825—Life in Washington in 1828, with Bulfinch, Harding, Perce, Marshall, Story, Crauch, Adams, et al.—Return to Florence in 1829—Boston in 1830, described in many letters, with details and opinions of the Danas, Allston, Willis—Journey to Paris by Genoa and Lyons—Life at Washington in 1843—Travels in England Forty Years Ago—Letters from E. H. Dana—Friendships with Allston, Thorwaldsen, Sumner—Life in Austria—Experiences with Pissnitz—The Florentine Revolution of 1848.

"Private treasures for the public enjoyment. Has much of the local color which especially delights the true Bostonian."—Boston Advertiser.

"These letters record the trials, the successes, the failures, of a young sculptor in a natural, impulsive way; they describe his travels abroad and the people he met with, and contain not a little criticism of value concerning men and events in the social, artistic, and literary worlds."—The Capital (Washington).

THE SUNNY SIDE OF SHADOW

($1.00) is a collection of twelve delicate and lovely little essays and reveries of a convalescent, written by Mrs. S. G. W. BENJAMIN. It is a calm, trustful and noble work, commended to the congregation of saints and all quiet hearts. The Boston Advertiser praises it as "Refined from cover to cover—expressed in language of singular beauty. The most beautiful passages in this book would not appear to advantage in other surroundings, as the most delicate, fresh fragrance of the violet cannot be bottled by the perfumer."

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lascelles Wrixall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30;
Half Morocco, $35.50; Full Morocco,
Gilt Edges, $45.

...Sold only by subscription...

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

FOR EVERY HOUSEHOLD!

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING

12mo, extra cloth, $1.00 each.

II. MATERNITY; INFANCY;
CHILDHOOD.

Hygiene of Pregnancy; Nursing and Weaning of Infants; the Care of Children in Health and Disease.

ADAPTED ESPECIALLY TO THE USE OF MOTHERS OR THOSE ENTRUSTED WITH THE BRINGING UP OF INFANTS AND CHILDREN, AND TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR NURSES, AS AN AID TO THE TEACHING OF THE NURSING OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

By JOHN M. KEATING, M.D.

This little work is intended for mothers, and for those who have undertaken the care of infants and children in health and sickness. The enormous mortality of children under three years of age, the greater part of which is preventable, has attracted the notice not only of physicians, who have long ago insisted that the methods adopted in general for the weaning of children were unscientific, but of the public also, who are beginning to realize this fact, and now willingly accept the advice of those who are giving especial attention to the subject.

I. THE NURSING AND CARE OF
THE NERVOUS AND THE INSANE.

By CHAS. K. MILLS, M.D.

"It is by one of the ablest, best known specialists in our country, who has devoted his attention to diseases of the mind and nervous system. It treats of such topics as the management of epileptics, sleeplessness, delirium, the alcohol and opium habits, and the care of the actually insane. In addition to this, we find plain, practical directions about massage, the movement cure, baths, the clinical thermometer, and the administration of the various forms of electricity. A number of illustrations are inserted."—Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter.

III. OUTLINES FOR THE MAN-AGEMENT OF DIET;

Or, The Regulation of Food to the Requirements of Health and the Treatment of Disease.

By E. T. BRUEN, M.D.

There is probably no more important branch of Physical culture than that pertaining to the subject of which this work treats. A proper recognition of the laws of health can only be maintained by careful observance of Dietary laws.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equalled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1887) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. C., "Literary World" Office, Boston.

"THAT SUPPRESSED BOOK."

A Woman in the Case.

By Professor Cues.

"If there had been a woman in the faculty," says the author, "she would have told them that to try to suppress my speech would give it the widest possible publicity."

FOR SALE AT BRENTANO'S,
1015 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JUNE 11, 1887. No. 12.

CONTENTS.

THE STORY OF A NEW YORK HOUSE	179
MR. STEVENSON'S LITERARY STUDIES	179
THE HISTORIC TOWNS OF ENGLAND	180
MR. OLIPHANT'S ADVENTURES	181
PROF. LADD'S PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY	181
A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME	182
MR. STANTON'S RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS	182
MRS. PRESTON'S SONNETS AND BALLADS	183
KARL MARX'S CAPITAL	183
SIX BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE:
Professor Johnny	185
The Fairfax Girls	185
The Bird's Nest, and Other Sermons, for Children of All Ages	185
The Peace Egg	185
Dandelion Clocks, and Other Tales	185
The Blind Brother	185
MINOR FICTION:
The Yoke of the Thorah	185
The Devil's Hat. A Sketch in Oil	185
The Confessions of Claud	185
Cracker Joe	186
Woodland Tales	186
7 to 12. A Detective Story	186
Miss Bayle's Romance	186
Etc., Etc., Etc.	186
MINOR NOTICES:
Mrs. Siddons	187
Outlines of International Law	187
The Mystery of God	187
Tolerance	187
Philadelphia, 1681-1887	187
Etc., Etc., Etc.	187
ORIGINAL POETRY:
A Fancy—Lanier. By Maude Annet Andrews	184
PERIODICALS VS. BOOKS	184
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Egyptian Explorations. Wm. C. Winslow	184
A LETTER FROM ENGLAND. A. M. F. R.	184
PERIODICALS	188
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
O'Connor's "Index to the Works of Shakespeare"	189
Massinger in "Mermaid Series"	189
The Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford	189
A Prophet is not without Honor, etc.	189
NOTES AND QUERIES. 823-826	190
ENGLISH OPINIONS	190
NEWS AND NOTES	190
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	191
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	191

THE STORY OF A NEW YORK HOUSE.*

HOW much romance there is in what, with wearisome iteration, we are wont in these times to stigmatize as "material progress," Mr. Bunner has charmingly shown in his Story of a New York House, which traces with graceful outline the development of the great city from the first decade of the century down to the present day, and reveals the momentous influence that development exerted upon the lives of a number of interesting people. At the beginning of the story New York is just passing from the old era to the new. The Battery is still a favorite pleasure ground, State Street has not lost its prestige as a place of fashionable residence, and the rear of the new City Hall is being constructed of red stone, "because red stone was cheap, and none but a few suburbanians would ever look down on it from above Chambers Street." Yet important changes were in progress. A few audacious persons were setting up their carriages; a distinction in trades was growing up, and in the social scale a timber merchant stood far above a ship chandler; women were forming societies for special improvement and general charity; there was talk of free schools and of a plan for laying out the northern suburbs on a system of rectangular streets and avenues; far-sighted persons, like John Pintard, were drawing up statistics of increase in population, and trying to realize the probability that New York in half a century would number three quarters of a million inhabitants.

* The Story of a New York House. By H. C. Bunner. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

Moved by these considerations, it was no wonder that Mr. Jacob Dolph determined upon building a country house far out of reach of this threatening advance of brick and mortar; so by the side of a country road among the rolling meadows and wooded hills adjoining Greenwich Village, the new house was built, and there during the yellow fever panic of 1822, Jacob Dolph and his son, young Jacob, took refuge and remained for good and all. Then the story goes smoothly on, telling how young Jacob, grown a gay buck, gave dinner parties to his bachelor friends, whose mild revelries astonished the old gentleman with his memories of "bumpers and no heel taps;" how, little by little, the elder Dolph lost his hold on life and drifted toward the unknown; how young Jacob went a-wooing, and brought back a bonny wife to cheer his father's last days; how he at length became the head of the Dolph family, and based his hopes upon his own son Eustace, who brought sorrow to his heart; until at last we come to the closing chapters with their simple pathos; and with the death of Jacob Dolph, and the destruction of the house where his mother died, the tale is ended.

All this Mr. Bunner has told with an unobtrusive beauty of style that is very winning. His characters—beside the Dolphs there are others equally well drawn—are of flesh and blood; zeal for antiquarian detail does not lessen his fidelity to his work as a novelist. The old manners and customs, and the old-fashioned garments which they wear, lend to these men and women a stately dignity which Mr. Bunner has known how to render effective. It is a charming story, this Story of a New York House; and with Mr. Frost's exquisite illustrations it will go down to future generations of Dolphs and Van Rippers to show how their nineteenth century ancestors lived and loved, and battled with destiny, and passed away.

MR. STEVENSON'S LITERARY STUDIES.*

THOSE who know Mr. Stevenson through the bewitching glamour of his essays in fiction will have some idea of the originality and acumen with which he discusses the realities of life and literature in this, the most readable of volumes connected with the products of contemporary criticism. One takes it for granted at the outset that he will treat his subjects, whatever they may be, in his own way; that he will show no special reverence for traditional opinions, but will give us of his own thought free from the contamination of current prejudices; that he will have ideas of his own to express and will not be backward in expressing them; and that whatever other influence the book may have upon its readers, it will not fail to broaden their intellectual horizons and shake their faith in the ostensible validity of popular judgments.

* Familiar Studies of Men and Books. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.

For, as Mr. Stevenson explains in the delightful preface to these Familiar Studies, everything depends upon the point of view. "For my part," he says, "I have small idea of the degree of accuracy possible to man, and I feel sure these studies teem with error." Errors there may be, but certainly they do not detract from the value of the keen, brilliant analyses of characters and methods here unfolded. The author takes a wide range—discusses Victor Hugo's romances; the life of Robert Burns; Walt Whitman; Thoreau; Yoshida-Torajiro, the Japanese patriot; François Villon as "student, poet, and housebreaker;" Charles of Orleans; Samuel Pepys; and John Knox, not only as preacher, but in the marvelous guise of lover. Now on all these varied themes Mr. Stevenson has a great deal to say worth saying, and he says it with a felicity, earnestness, and humor that are enlivening and unforgettable.

Of the studies, those upon Burns, Whitman, and Thoreau are the most noteworthy. Of Burns Mr. Stevenson writes with ready sympathy, and yet with the determination to show once for all the worst in the poet's nature, the feet of clay, as he himself expresses it, that upheld the image of gold. He is moved to do this because of Principal Shairp's monograph, which he defines as a picture of Burns "as he may have appeared to a contemporary clergyman, whom we shall conceive to have been a kind and indulgent but orderly and orthodox person, anxious to be pleased, but too often hurt and disappointed by the behaviour of his red-hot protégé." Certainly the tragedy of Burns's fate and the essential nobility of his atonement to the woman he had chiefly wronged have never in brief compass been more cogently set forth than in Mr. Stevenson's judicious narrative.

To Whitman Mr. Stevenson deals out alternate praise and blame with the semblance of even-handed justice. He is ready to shake hands with any one "who sees no more in Walt Whitman's volume, from a literary point of view, than a farrago of incompetent essays in a wrong direction." Particularly does he deprecate Whitman's "favorite endeavors" to get the whole matter into a nutshell; to knock the four corners of the universe, one after another, about his reader's ears; to hurry him, in breathless phrases, hither and thither, back and forward, in time and space; to focus all this about his own momentary personality; and then, drawing the ground from under his feet, as if by some cataclysm of nature, to plunge him into the unfathomable abyss sown with enormous suns and systems, and among the inconceivable numbers and magnitudes and velocities of the heavenly bodies.

Probably the cosmic recklessness of the author of Leaves of Grass could not be better described. But Mr. Stevenson's summing up is in the main kindly; the chief interest of Whitman's work is found in its value as an expression of individuality—and with this opinion all who find interest in it at all must sooner or later agree.

Thoreau seems to possess for Mr. Stevenson a rather mysterious fascination, as of a human curiosity too odd to be passed by with indifference and too grotesque to be admired. The treatment is semi-humorous, as befits the subject, for it is in vain to expect the world to take Thoreau altogether seriously. "Something essentially youthful," Mr. Stevenson suggests, "distinguishes all Thoreau's knock-down blows at current opinion. Like the posers of a child, they leave the orthodox in a kind of speechless agony. These know the thing is nonsense. They are sure there must be an answer, yet somehow cannot find it." As for Thoreau himself he is labeled "dry, priggish, and selfish"—and we do not feel disposed to cavil at a verdict so creditable to Mr. Stevenson's manly sympathies. What was bracing and vivifying in the writings of Thoreau is here set forth with charming art, but the fact of his morbid egotism is not blinked for a moment. We heartily agree with the judgment that sees in his career more of a warning than an example.

THE HISTORIC TOWNS OF ENGLAND.*

THE series to which these volumes belong is to include the stories of those English towns which claim in various ways historic fame, and aims to give the chief characteristics of each. Of the two towns, Bristol is to Americans far more interesting than Exeter. Next to London, indeed, no English city probably should be more interesting to us, and the succinct and well-written book of the Rev. W. Hunt ought to find many readers upon this side of the Atlantic. The story of Bristol finds its first authentic date in the year 1000 A. D., the same in which the Norsemen discovered that continent which a Bristol merchant was to rediscover five hundred years later. The town owed its early prosperity to its trade with the Danes, or Ostmen, who held the western coast of Ireland. The chief trade of the town with Ireland consisted in slaves, the traffic in whom flourished in spite of the church, and even defied the iron will of the Conqueror himself. The shameless kidnapping of children was a source of infinite scandal, and was afterward declared by the Irish clergy to be the cause of the evils which tormented their own land. Mr. Hunt's pages give ample evidence of the barbarity which attended the commerce in men, a commerce which by no means belonged exclusively to antiquity. It continued to be a principal factor of the prosperity of Bristol down to our own century, the consciences of men through all the ages until the days of Wilberforce and Clarkson being for the most part quite untroubled by the traffic which we think so abominable.

It has of late been suggested that it is well worth the while of students of politics to give attention to the guilds of the mediæval cities, and that possibly a partial revival of them, with adaptations to modern life, might have an excellent effect upon the difficulties of modern municipal management. The pages of Mr. Hunt which relate to the ancient guilds of Bristol are well worth reading. These associations, at first more or less religious, were sometimes connected with crafts, sometimes were wholly for the performance of social or religious functions, and one of the most ancient was the Kalendars, to which both men and women belonged, and which attended the sick, provided masses for the dead, and looked after education. The early town government of Bristol had been in the hands of its freemen, the lord's tenants, with a reeve or King's steward at the head. In the twelfth century the communal form was adopted, the town choosing its own officers, who paid and collected the rent due to the King, the governing body being the richer burghers who formed the Merchant Guild. This aristocratic rule yielded later on to the pressure of the so-called "Craft Guilds," and its political privileges became more widely diffused, although not without much disturbance.

At the end of the fifteenth century comes the interesting connection of Bristol with America. Before Columbus there was a general belief in transatlantic lands, and it is said that in 1480 two ships sailed from Bristol "to the Island of Brasyllie to the west of Ireland," but failed to reach it. But in 1497 John Cabot, merchant of Bristol, set sail upon that voyage which planted the flag of England upon the shores of North America, making the splendid discoveries which were to be continued by his son Sebastian. Mr. Hunt pays a high compliment to Mr. Deane's treatment of the Cabots in the "magnificent history of America now in course of publication under the editorship of Mr. J. Winsor." He differs from Mr. Deane, however, as regards the birthplace of Sebastian Cabot, whom he believes to have been a native as well as a citizen of Bristol.

That it was the home of the great navigators is enough to make Bristol memorable to Americans, but this was only the beginning of a long connection between the city at the Severn's mouth and the new world. Bristol sailors tried to push through the northwest passage, fished on the Banks of Newfoundland, and mapped out in their bold voyages a large part of the outline of the North American coast. When at last, with the coming in of the seventeenth century, colonization begins, Bristol plays a leading part. Long before the "Mayflower," the ships of Martin Pring, a Bristol captain, anchored in Plymouth harbor; and through the efforts of Bristol men, among whom appear the well-known names of Hakluyt and Sir Ferdinando Gorges, the effort was made to colonize Maine. The Massachusetts company was more successful, but that was saved from starvation in February, 1631, by the arrival of the "Lion," a Bristol ship which cast anchor at Nantasket just as "the Governor himself had his last batch of bread in the oven." Throughout our colonial period Bristol is foremost among English towns in American commerce, unless we are to except London, an energy, as Mr. Hunt candidly shows, not always beneficently exerted; many a Bristol ship was a slaver, and mayors and aldermen grew rich by selling men and women guilty of slight offenses, and even kidnapped children into bondage beyond the seas.

In the English Civil War Prince Rupert, besieging Bristol, has among his most efficient troopers a Colonel Washington, cousin of the grandfather of George Washington. He was mainly instrumental in the capture of the city, fighting there and elsewhere to break down that cause of the people which his American kinsman was to sustain so memorably in the century following.

When the trouble began between Great Britain and her American colonies, Bristol merchants, alarmed, petitioned for the repeal of the Stamp Act, and sent an address of thanks to Lord Rockingham for effecting it. In consequence of their feeling in this regard they elected Edmund Burke to represent them in Parliament, but afterwards quarreled with him, mainly because of his attempts to lessen restrictions upon Irish trade and to remove Catholic disabilities. In connection with Burke's representation of Bristol nothing, perhaps, is better worth remembering than his definition of the relation of a representative to his constituents, one of his most valuable contributions to the science of politics and as important to America as to England. Burke's colleague, says Mr. Hunt, had promised the electors that he would obey their instructions. Burke, however, saw that obedience to the mandates of a constituency degraded a representative to the position of a delegate, that it implied a sacrifice of independence, the ruin of statesmanship, and the betrayal of duty. He spoke of all a member owed his constituents, the sacrifice of his repose, his pleasures, his satisfaction. "But," he said, "his unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living,"

* Bristol. By W. Hunt. Exeter. By E. A. Freeman. London: Longmans, Green & Co.

and he declared that mandates and authoritative instructions arose from a fundamental mistake of the whole order and tenor of the constitution. (p. 194.)

Of literary fame Bristol has had some share. Chatterton was born in the town, and Mrs. Hannah More, born near by, kept there a fashionable school; while Southey, the son of a Bristol tradesman, and Coleridge often lectured in Bristol, where they both married.

Looking at the story of Bristol as a whole, we see how the early trading town, with its exclusive privileges, has nevertheless made a part of the nation and contributed to its general welfare, and that in the end most of its privileges have contributed to the good of the whole. From being but a portion of a royal manor, she has been a leader in the most daring of commercial enterprises, and through good and bad days has pursued a career the story of which is full of interest, and which this book tells most charmingly.

We have left ourselves small space in which to consider the Exeter, though written by so great a historian as E. A. Freeman. Though the city has an unbroken record from the times of the early Cæsars until our own day, its story has no such attractions for the far-away descendants of Englishmen as that of the great seaport on the Severn. Such an account, however, presents much that is picturesque and instructive. Mr. Freeman treats his theme with his usual power. Subtle analogies are traced with acuteness and the broadest scholarship between the events and institutions in the English town and what has happened or existed in distant lands and ages. The lessons of the cities' municipal career are derived and applied with the finest philosophical reach and grasp.

We commend these books especially to library committees making up their lists. In every community are people who would read them with interest and profit, and such people should have them within reach.

MR. OLIPHANT'S ADVENTURES.*

THE old proverb that a rolling stone gathers no moss is, Mr. Oliphant thinks, worth more as an epigram than as an expression of universal truth. He has been a rolling stone pretty much all his life, and judging from this volume of Episodes does not regret his erratic method of existence. Moss of one sort or another he has gathered in plenty. The reminiscences he has recorded are all of exceptional interest, for they deal with significant events, extraordinary experiences, or startling adventures, and they are told in a way to keep the reader's attention ever on the stretch. From his first passage across the overland route to India forty-six years ago, down to his observations on the Schleswig-Holstein hostilities, with which the narrative ends, Mr. Oliphant has much to tell that throws new light upon military movements and diplomatic undertakings in various parts of the world. He seems to have had the luck of being "on hand" whenever anything especially noteworthy was to occur, and no one can say that he has not made the most of his opportunities.

Mr. Oliphant begins, as we have intimated, with an account of the overland route in 1841, when the journey was made through France by diligence, and it took three days to travel the distance from Alexandria to Cairo. In the course of this chapter the author suggests as a practical solution of the Egyptian question a railway from Cairo to Damascus. There is no line probably in the world more certain to pay, is his comment. After this comes a description of a daring ascent of Adam's peak in Ceylon. Mr. Oliphant was in Italy in 1848, and figured in the mobs that tore down the arms from the Austrian legation in Rome, and battered in the doors of the Propaganda. He had in the same year some experiences in Greece, then traveled through Russia and the Crimea, and in 1854 came to Washington as secretary to Lord Elgin, Governor-General of Canada, who was charged with negotiating the commercial treaty between the Dominion and the United States. The accounts of Washington, "its population consisting chiefly of politicians and negroes," and of how a majority of senators were obtained in favor of the treaty by the blandishments of soft-shell crabs and champagne, are sufficiently amusing. As for the treaty, Mr. Oliphant stoutly maintains that it operated for the mutual benefit of both parties, and that if it were still in operation Nova Scotia would not be agitating secession from the confederation.

It is not easy to enumerate the various episodes in Mr. Oliphant's life of adventure. We find him at one time Superintendent-General of Indian affairs for Canada, penetrating into the wilderness and fraternizing with his red-skinned protégés; then dodging Russian bullets in the advanced trenches before Sebastopol, or penetrating to the interior of Circassia; taking part in a filibustering expedition to Central America in behalf of Walker, rescued by a British admiral, and listening to seductive offers from potential revolutionists in Honduras; witnessing the scenes at Calcutta during the mutiny, and then, a few pages further on, scaling the walls of Canton with the troops that opened China to foreign commerce; helping Garibaldi in his scheme for preventing the cession of Nice; serving as secretary of legation at Yedo during the murderous attack upon the British legation in 1861; and in 1862 traveling in Italy and Albania. Three chapters are devoted by Mr. Oliphant to the Polish insurrection, concerning which he tells us a great deal of inside history. He also has a chapter of sporting reminiscences, and another on a visit to the convents of Moldavia. Once in Montenegro, Mr. Oliphant found lodging at Cetinje in a house where the chamber he occupied was furnished only with a bed, a huge chest, and a chair. The chest he utilized as a dining table, till a huge Montenegrin entered, and, unlocking it, took out a handful of gold, revealing the fact that it was filled to the brim with money. The guest was left alone that night, and the next day learned that the chest upon which he had dined was the treasury of Montenegro, and that the official who had opened it was the chancellor of the exchequer!

PROF. LADD'S PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.*

PROFESSOR LADD is a writer of big books on great subjects. His Doctrine of Sacred Scripture, teaching a generous and rational view of inspiration, is still fresh in our memory, and there now comes to match those two weighty volumes this treatise on mind from the physiological point of view. We are not surprised to find it a volume of the first order of merit in its arrangement, its comprehension, and its judicial spirit. The first part contains the full discussion of the facts of the nervous mechanism, which is indispensable to the more debatable matters which follow, but which, of course, must be familiar in all but a few comparatively minor details to students of psychology. We need only say that this third of the book, like the remaining part, is everywhere marked with the signs of thorough study of the latest authorities and impartial statement of the results of investigation precisely as they stand today.

Part second, on the correlation of the nervous mechanism and the mind, constitutes the body of the book. Ten chapters treat of the peculiar matters of physiological psychology apart from the more theoretical and philosophical aspects which fail to be considered in part third. The first subject, naturally, is the question of the localization of cerebral function. In the two chapters given to the matter Prof. Ladd seems to us to have stated the existing situation of research most fairly. The three principles which he lays down, the law of specific energy and habit, the law of localized function, and the law of substitution, must all, as he says, be admitted; but no one can dogmatically define the limits of the action of either one; they interact, indeed, in a most complex way, and it will be a long time, if ever the time comes, before Dr.

* Episodes in a Life of Adventure; or, Moss from a Rolling Stone. By Laurence Oliphant. Harper & Bros. $1.25.

* Elements of Physiological Psychology. A Treatise of the Activities and Nature of the Mind from the Physical and Experimental Point of View. By George T. Ladd. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.50.

Ferrier's confident statements can be properly regarded as verified. The subjects next treated are, in succession, the quality and quantity of sensations, the presentations of sense, time-relations of mental phenomena, feelings and motions, the physical basis of the higher faculties, and certain statical relations of the body and mental phenomena. This part of the work constitutes the most thorough treatise on the science of psychology from the physiological point of view to be found in our language—it has indeed only one predecessor in any language (Wundt's Grundsätze). For use as a textbook and in private reading it will have no competitors; the field is all its own, since no work known to us even attempts to do what Prof. Ladd has excellently done. He has covered the ground, to separate portions of which innumerable monographs have been devoted, and, as a complete survey of the normal phenomena of the mind in its physical aspects, the work is exhaustive, candid, and fully abreast of the very latest researches.

Part third treats of the nature of the mind. Here, in his last hundred pages, Prof. Ladd, as a worthy disciple of Lotze, whose Outlines he has lately been translating, completes the discussion of mind as a mechanism, with a truly philosophic statement of the rank and energy of mind as a real being. We have space only, in closing this inadequate notice of a work which is an honor to American scholarship, for Prof. Ladd's emphatic words on this main point—words which are only the more emphatic when one has followed the long and impartial exposition of facts and laws which precedes:

The assumption that the mind is a real being, which can be acted upon by the brain, and which can act on the body through the brain, is the only one compatible with all the facts of experience.

A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME.*

SET in their sylvan frame of piquant narrative, the six stories and sketches in this literary diversion make a captivating book—a book not of the serious order, although it has fine and noble thoughts in it, but a gracious companion for a leisure hour; something to be read and at intervals lingered over; spontaneous, vital, full of feminine touches; as attractive as the woods and waters whose freshness and beauty are in its pages.

Away down at "the very tip end of the heel of Cape Cod" lies, we are told, Fair Harbor, terra incognita to the general, but known and loved by a fortunate few. At Fair Harbor is the quaint old farmhouse of Captain Nye and his wife, where Margaret Temple is staying, watching the trees and the sea and the sunsets. There, become châteline of the stately white villa near by, she gathers in the autumn a goodly company—her brother Ralph, the Wall Street broker, given to "money-making, plain thinking, and high living;" Miss Carr-Wynstede, an English girl of the queenly type; Mr. and Mrs. Bowdoin, two agreeable every-day sort of people; Charlie Wyatt, the handsome yachtsman; Mrs. Chauncey, a blundering, good-humored, amusing person; and Prof. Philip Kirkland, the dignified occupant of the chair of ethics at Harvard University. There are sailing excursions, and rambles by moonlight, picnics, and idle hours on the lawn, music, and a little love-making, and each night some one of the company reads a story, the professor closing the week with a memorable little sermon on happiness.

The stories are all good and some of them are very good; they are interspersed with a number of exquisite songs which seem to be original, and which at any rate are full of melody; and they are bound together by a thread of dainty narration, in which bits of finely-colored description, merry talk, harmless satire, flashes of poetry, earnest discussion, meet and mingle into one gracefully-wrought strand. The volume charms by its naturalness, its cheerful, wholesome tone, its skillful revelations of character, its apt variety of interest, its utter freedom from the conventional qualities that go to make up a conventional book. To all who are weary of the melancholy sameness of current literature we commend as a welcome antidote the indulgence of a mental holiday in A Week Away from Time.

MR. STANTON'S RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS.*

DEVOID of rhetorical graces, often ungrammatical and uncouth in style, the Random Recollections of the late Henry B. Stanton are piquant, original, discursive, and they teem with condensed details concerning the noteworthy men and events of half a century. The services of Mr. Stanton in behalf of the anti-slavery movement are known to all. Many of his reminiscences are naturally concerned with the leaders among the abolitionists. But he tells us much about his early life. The political feelings that agitated the people during the Madisonian epoch are vividly described. Then, on a difference of party "schoolboys pulled hair and grown men drew swords." Mr. Stanton's father, sword in hand, drove a company of Federalist militia from his grounds at Pachaug, Conn., and paid a round sum in damages. A sturdy Democrat taught the boy of seven "to stand on a chair and say 'The Hartford Convention was hatched in the purlieus of hell!'" The church in those days had no fires in winter; the only musical instrument was the chorister's pitch-pipe; ministers prayed "fifty or sixty minutes by the glass, the audience all standing."

Opposite the front entrance was the whipping-post, near by were the stocks, while on a distant hill grinned the skeleton of the gallows. In my childhood I saw a wretch scourged at the post, a drunkard writhing in the stocks, and a negro executed on the gallows. These exhibitions have sufficed me for a life-time.

From his grandmother the lad heard of Whitefield and his marvelous voice, "now soft as a flute, anon swelling like a bugle," and of how "he rode at full gallop from town to town to keep engagements, the skirts of his silk gown streaming behind on the wind." In 1832 Henry Stanton went to Lane Seminary, near Cincinnati, where Dr. Lyman Beecher presided later on. Of Dr. Beecher several anecdotes are given and his advice to the students on oratory quoted: "Young gentlemen, don't stand before a looking-glass and make gestures. Pump yourself brimfull of your subject till you can't hold another drop, and then knock out the bung and let nature caper."

At Lane Seminary Mr. Stanton made his first anti-slavery speech in a debate where he alone represented the opposition. "For nearly forty years," are his words, "I 'fought it out on that line,' till I saw the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments incorporated into the Constitution, and Horace Greeley the regular Democratic candidate for President." He describes an abolitionist convention in Boston and the miscellaneous array of lunacy and genius that gathered in front of the platform. In 1840 he attended the anti-slavery convention in London and was surprised at the personages of rank who took part in the proceedings. He heard Brougham and the Duke of Wellington speak in Parliament, and saw Mr. Gladstone, then at the dawn of his fame, as "a cold, serene, haughty, and intensely ambitious scholar and orator." Lord Lytton he found to have "a dash of dudism in his manners," and "the Iron Duke," he was astonished to discover, "ran much to legs." Mr. Stanton did not think highly of British oratory. "Such hesitating, hemming, hawing, stammering, stuttering, stumbling! They cultivate this style and think it aristocratic." During the sitting of the convention Mr. Stanton had a verbal combat with Thomas Campbell, who from a eulogy of American institutions plunged into a contemptuous criticism of American poetry. "All this was taken down by the stenographer, but it was omitted from the published report by the English managers on their excuse that Campbell was intoxicated." Here is an extract from Mr. Stanton's narrative:

I met Thomas Carlyle. He was dressed in a shabby suit of gray. I was not delighted with this "writer of books," as he called himself. We talked about America, and he betrayed great ignorance of a people at whom he sneered. He conversed rapidly, walked the room nervously, and shot out porcupine quills indiscriminately at good and evil. As a specimen of his talk I will say that he called Victor Hugo "a glittering humbug."

* A Week Away from Time. Roberts Bros. $1.25.

* Random Recollections. By Henry B. Stanton. Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Mr. Stanton devotes several chapters to the bench and bar of Massachusetts and New York; describes the Democratic convention of 1844 and the Whig convention of 1852; and in general gives a rapid inside view of American politics down to the presidential contest of 1876. Three chapters on American journalism with reminiscences of leading journalists are of especial interest. Mr. Stanton had a high opinion of his profession, and thought that the public ought to know how many great speeches and legislative reports were productions of "newspaper men." The book as a whole is, as our summary indicates, often coarse and crude in tone; but it has strong fiber in it.

MRS. PRESTON'S SONNETS AND BALLADS.*

THE refined simplicity of Mrs. Preston's verse is well exemplified in this refreshing volume of ballads and sonnets. Mrs. Preston as a poet is always sure of her motives; her imagery is never vague or misapplied; her command of metrical resources is inevitably firm and true, while never harsh or pedantic. But what we find most to admire in her writings is the tender, gracious, womanly spirit that sways and interfuses every line, and touches the mind to fine issues. The ewig Weibliche, the feminine element, is here constantly drawing all that is base and earthly toward the high goal of ennobling aspiration. Like some translucent vase of rarest tint, her imagination, holding an object or incident common to common eyes, exercises a transforming power, and reveals beauties otherwise unseen.

These qualities are shown in the colonial ballads, where fragments of tradition or historical allusions are worked out full circle, and made to convey some weighty meaning. Very real is the portrayal of Sir Walter Raleigh's escape from prison for a farewell interview with his wife, and his return, since he preferred death to dishonor. The melodious recital of the last meeting of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith at the English court is admirably conceived. There is a quiet but genuine humor in "The Price of a Little Pilgrim" and "The Puritan Maiden's May Day."

For the most part a serene faith vivifies Mrs. Preston's poems, yet sometimes a questioning of divine decrees finds expression. Of one who saved another's life at the loss of his own, the longshoreman says:

Yes — the example may thrill the land,
But — can it help the man who's drowned?

and in "A Touch of Frost" — "did he mean to wound her so?" "Never! Does Nature mean to kill?"

Can she be conscious that on some night
Frostier, keener, and colder far
Than is her wont, she breathes a blight?
No — but the roses are!

* Colonial Ballads, Sonnets, and Other Verse. By Margaret J. Preston. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

Perhaps the most gratifying of all the varied and acceptable contents of Mrs. Preston's book are the sonnets, which are every one so exquisitely wrought and so full of intellectual strength. Mrs. Preston has rare command of the sonnet form, and uses it with a noteworthy lack of self-consciousness. The thought that in each rises to certain culmination is a spontaneous growth, like a beautiful flower nourished by the gentle ministry of nature into fullness of bloom. Each has its meaning also, yet the word didactic is too narrow to express their amplitude of purpose. Let us say, rather, that they are ethical, with a certain lofty seriousness that is Greek in its unassuming power.

KARL MARX'S CAPITAL.*

IT is not a little surprising that the great work of the famous German socialist, Karl Marx, has waited until now for translation into our tongue. Das Kapital was written in London and published twenty years ago, and in about ten years had been rendered into Russian (in which language it had a large sale) and French. The delay is the more strange since the work, though written by a German in his own tongue, is quite English in many respects. Marx was a thorough student of the English economists, earlier and later, and had a hearty contempt for everything that called itself political economy in Germany. Two reasons, probably, have gone far to retard the work of translation. One is the notion that the whole work is "very stiff reading," owing to the complicated terminology of the first part, and the unusual meanings given to some of the most common words of the science. The second is the highly revolutionary character of Marx's doctrines of value and labor, which have made it the "Bible of the social democracy," and which have prejudiced many against even reading the work.

In these later times, however, when even anarchy is commonly preached among English-speaking peoples, this second reason has lost much of its former force, and probably the notion that Das Kapital is very hard reading has had much more to do with its late appearance in English. It is true that the first one hundred and fifty pages demand close attention beyond most works on economics; but of the remainder it may safely be said that it is very easy reading. Marx's literary ability was great; he was one of the few German writers on scientific subjects who knew how to write well. If a part, then, of his great treatise is difficult, the other part much more than compensates for the difficulty from the vivacity and keenness of its style. Much of the matter is of course a tirade against capital; but it is a tirade infinitely above the level of the crude socialism of the present hour. Marx is a master of satire, and even when he goes beyond bounds we cannot refuse our admiration of his skill. He has been fortunate in his translators; seldom, indeed, have we found a translation from the German in such good form. Nothing of the exuberance of Marx's contempt for all who differed with him is toned down. Macaulay is a "sycophant," Earl Russell, "the tom-tit of Liberalism," and even J. S. Mill is "a shallow syncretist." At this we merely smile, knowing that such epithets strengthen no arguments; but they do serve to lighten the severity of technical discussion.

* Capital: a Critical Analysis of Capitalist Production. By Karl Marx. Translated from the Third German Edition by Samuel Moore and Edward Aveling, and Edited by Frederick Engels. Two Vols. Scribner & Welford. $12.00.

The argument of these two volumes is well known, indeed, to all readers of current works on socialism. Untranslated, Das Kapital has been the fountain-head from which the minor prophets of socialism have drawn their reasonings and their facts. Their reasonings on the nature of value as determined only by hand labor, on the identification of capital with money, and the iniquity of capital thus conceived, we hold to be fallacious. Their sufficient refutation may be found in such excellent works as Mr. John Rae's Contemporary Socialism, and we have here no space to discuss them.

The great body of facts concerning the hardships of the laboring classes in the past and the present, which Karl Marx was the first to put into shape, makes the chief value of these volumes to the student of modern society. The elaborate chapters on the working-day, the effect of machinery upon industry, and the factory legislation, have great permanent importance. They are a storehouse here of knowledge of which the judicious may make excellent use. Knowing that capital is much more than money, that brain power is no less important than hand power, and that value is determined among men in other and more common tests than those to which Marx would confine it, we yet gladly recognize the very high merits of Das Kapital. We can do nothing better for students of socialism, its narrow-minded opponents and its zealous friends alike, than to recommend them, now Marx's work is accessible in English, to read it carefully. We should not like to see any one converted to Marx's errors of temper or of logic, but we would like to see every one well informed! No one but an economic bigot can rise from these volumes without a better opinion of Karl Marx and the socialism which he represents, erroneous though its theory in some vital points may be.

— Lee & Shepard announce Life Notes; or, Fifty Years' Outlook, by Rev. William Hague, D.D., the Baptist minister and orator. Dr. Hague devotes a portion of his book to controverting some of Emerson's views, and gives a chapter to Margaret Fuller as "the Hypatia of the Nineteenth Century."

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JUNE 11, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

A Fancy.

A tender little perfumed poet, he.
His rhymes are tuned to perfect melody.
So sweetly sings he, that I surely think
He writes on lily leaves with violet ink.

Lanier.

He sang of life, who drew at every breath
But closer to the stilly gates of Death.
Oh! wise and high, to know that, though ere long
The lips that sang — the hand that penned the song —
Would turn to dust, yet still the song would be Born unto glorious immortality.

MAUDE ANNULET ANDREWS.

Savannah, Ga.

PERIODICALS VS. BOOKS.

SOME time ago Mr. Henry Holt, the New York publisher, delivered at Yale University under the auspices of the department of political science an address on "Practical Aspects of the Literary Life," of which that new and useful periodical The Writer gives in its June number a suggestive abstract. Just what relation a department of political science has to the practical aspects of literature we cannot undertake to say, but it is clear that Mr. Holt treated his subject in an original way. He is confident that the genius which succeeds is "a genius for regular, careful work;" that a man's duty to his body is almost as important in literature as in athletics; that a significant force in the equipment for a literary calling is "the power to do uncongenial things;" and that in the long run honest work pays and meretricious work does not pay. "In literature," says Mr. Holt, tersely and pertinently, "the function of imagination is not to supply truth, but to decorate the expression of it." It is not of these propositions, however, excellent as they are, that we desire to speak now, but of the closing portion of Mr. Holt's address. He has previously asserted that in America no form of literary work except contributions to newspapers can be depended on as a means of livelihood; and he goes on to say that as far as general literature is concerned, books bound in shape for keeping are not relatively sought after as much as they were twenty years ago. There may be as many books published, but he is certain that there are not as many sold. "In novels, poems, travels, essays, histories, biographies, the publishers find that they can, as a rule, place about one third as many copies of a new-bound book as they could ten years ago." It is not strange, in view of these facts, that Mr. Holt should advance the question "Will the coming man read books?" and he answers it in this wise:

The knowledge of the future is going to be stored much more generally than the knowledge of the present is, in vast sets of bound periodicals with elaborate indexes. The drift in that direction is very plain in the libraries now. It does not seem probable that the number of periodicals can ever be so great relatively to the number of people as that of books now is. There are only about a dozen that supply any literature worthy of the name—I mean non-technical literature. Of books of similar character there are published every year many hundreds. But books do not average a sale of a thousand apiece. Probably not one in a year sells fifty thousand. We now have three good magazines selling far more than a hundred thousand a month. If each copy of such a magazine displaced a copy of a book, these three magazines would in a year kill off five million books. Of course they do not kill off that many books, but they kill a great many.

After this, for a publisher, pessimistic conclusion, it is consoling to believe that the books "killed" are those "least fit to survive," and that the literature furnished by the periodicals "is, on the whole, the best of its kind." Still, we cannot help thinking that this view relates to the lighter and more ephemeral forms of literature, and that in the future there will continue to be a "saving remnant" which will both write and read books that the world will not willingly let die.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Egyptian Explorations.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

With all the remarkable successes attending the Egypt Exploration Fund, whereof review, magazine, journal, sermon, and lecture record, the question of money is just now paramount. Of the $3,000 yearly sought, I am some $700 to $800 short this fund year, which ends in mid-summer. Dr. Roswell D. Hitchcock suggests that some of our five-dollar donors double their amounts, and another eminent New Yorker that there be "patrons" pledged to $25 annual subscriptions. Let some who read this be patrons; and all giving $5 can get the coming memoir, The Land of Goshen, and can have past memoirs, such as Naukratis, at $5 each. Is not this liberal? But Miss Amelia B. Edwards and all give their labor; hence such noble returns in the book line.

WM. C. WINSLOW,

American Vice-President, etc., of the Egypt Exploration Fund.

429 Beacon Street, Boston,
June 7, 1887.

A LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

LONDON, May 9, 1887.

VERNON LEE has laid aside her half-finished novel to collect a handful of descriptive and æsthetic essays in her earlier vein, which, under the title of Juvenilia, will shortly appear, and which will close (as the gifted writer assures us) the pleasant youthful hours of art and artistic enthusiasm that in her case have preceded the maturer space of time she intends to devote to political economy. Let us hope that this is not the last time that Vernon Lee will bid farewell to art; but that often, on a sunny spring morning such as this, she will invite us to go with her to the chapels of Santa Croce, or walk with her among the scarlet-flecked and purple-scattered Tuscan fields, so bright now that the tender green of the cone spreads a brilliant carpet under the gray boughs of the olives. We cannot spare the most original of our essayists to the exclusive cult of the dismal science; and we should chronicle the appearance of Juvenilia in a more doleful mood were we not convinced that this will form the first of a series, and that often again it will be our lot to meet Vernon Lee, a little book of essays in her hand, bidding a last, and again a last, farewell to those gardens of the Hesperides wherein it will be her lot continually to wander.

One more thing may be said of Juvenilia. Some of the most charming essays in the book are translated by the author from the Italian, in which she originally wrote them and in which they originally appeared. At the present moment she is writing in French a story for Messrs. Bussod-Vadadon's magnificent Revue. How many authors in Europe, we wonder, write in three languages and brilliantly in all? When we have named Mr. Marion Crawford we come to a long pause.

Mr. George Moore has just published in English his book on Ireland, of which a French translation appeared in Paris while the original was still in manuscript. The book should be read by all who take an interest (and who does not take an interest?) in the great political question of the day—the fate of Ireland. Coarse as it is, coarse with the singular unconscious coarseness of a very keen and quite amoral perception, the book is valuable as a direct and truthful impression. Mr. Moore is Irish by race and by birth; he is an Irish landlord and knows his country well. But he knows it only under one aspect. Ireland to him is always the hateful bog whence the happy absentee draws the means of existence in London, Italy, or Paris, and which, from time to time, driven back by failure of funds, he is compelled to visit until terms have been made with a rebellious tenantry. This hateful Bogia of slime and poverty is the Ireland of the absentee, and all who would understand the point of view of that deleterious personage should read the clever pages of Parnell and his Island. Clever, subtle, brutal, veracious, absolutely unconcerned, the book is a singular one for any human being to have produced on so serious a subject in so serious a time. Written by an Irishman, about his own country; by a landlord, about his own order and his own means of livelihood, the absolute frankness of this little volume, its freedom from prejudice, its perfect aloofness from any political passion, strike us strangely. The clearness of the author's vision is never once obscured by the films of patriotism, love of home, passion for justice and liberty, nor ever once by the sense of authority and right or devotion to the old order of things, or loyalty—or even self-interest. The fay has given Mr. Moore perhaps the undesirable gift of seeing himself, his own party, and his own country as others see them—or as others might see them did the world contain other creatures so unprejudiced. "I have treated Ireland," says Mr. Moore, "from the picturesque point of view—as a Japanese ivory fan." This is a very singular and remarkable achievement.

Miss Mabel Robinson, the authoress of Disenchantment, has ready a new novel which treats the Irish question, and the position of affairs in Ireland at the actual moment, from a less esoteric point of view. This book also, we believe, will first be given to the world in the pages of a French review. It is extraordinary how in the last few years the French have begun to reciprocate our interest in their literature.

I will conclude by advising my unknown friends in America to read The Woodlanders, Mr. Hardy's new novel, a masterpiece of beauty and irony. With objects of probability in action, it possesses (what is more important) infinite verisimilitude of character. The two heroines are drawn with a touch both fine and strong. The one, simple, loving, staunch, profound, remains, owing to an extrinsic roughness, an unpolished superior, scarcely detected by the reader to the end. The other, borrowing from superior education, from youth and freshness, an adventitious grace, wields over not only her fellow characters but over the reader of the story a compelling charm. We admire, we reverence, we honor, we follow, and yet in every essential of the soul this woman is as mean and common, as uninspired and acquiescent as Marty South is original and great. The Woodlanders, in short, is not merely a novel to read: it is a book to analyze, to understand, and to remember.

A. M. F. R.

SIX BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Professor Johnny. By Jāk. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] The author of this story was evidently brought up on Jacob Abbott's books, and in this, as well as the preceding volumes, he does credit to his master. If he is trying to "write some similar books . . . to cover the subjects Mr. Abbott left" (p. 50) he has no occasion to be ashamed of his work. The boy, Johnny, is bookish but has good practical sense, and though he talks learnedly he proves to have a good deal of genuine fun and the right, healthy material. He is in excellent contrast to the cousin, Felix, who comes near disarranging the family system, but is brought to reason and nobler living by the admirable management of the father and mother of Professor John. The book is to be thoroughly commended.

The Fairfax Girls. By Mrs. Nathaniel Conklin (Jennie M. Drinkwater). [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25.] The Fairfax Girls is a charming story, religious, but without cant or obtrusiveness of precept; sweet, wholesome, tender, of a fine literary quality, and giving the history of people we would like to have known—it is a book one would gladly put into the hands of a young girl. The Fairfaxes are two aunts, and two cousins, their nieces, living in a delightful old homestead where an atmosphere of domestic peace, of reverence, of steadfastness, of deep happiness, pervades the attractive rooms and the fine old garden. Not often is the beauty of Christian living set forth in a manner so captivating, though we think the author might have accomplished her purpose without using The Mill on the Floss to illustrate her point, since the reader unacquainted with George Eliot will get thereby only a one-sided view.

The Bird's Nest, and Other Sermons, for Children of all Ages. By Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.] This preacher and author is well known by his many volumes of expositions and sermons. The one now in hand is made up of sixteen sermons, with such "taking" and odd titles as "How to Take a Bird's Nest," "On Cutting Ditches," "The Best Dish," "Kicking Calves," etc. Dr. Cox has an admirable expository touch, and explains some passages and allusions in the Bible in a way to give new significance and force, besides attracting and holding the attention. These all were preached for the children of his large congregation and the young people whom he has seen grow up under his care; hence a strong personal interest characterizes them, and a warm heart is back of the kindly words. As listened to they must have been very persuasive and convincing; on the printed page they lose, in some cases, their power through a fault common with authors who write down to children, undervaluing the intelligence of youthful minds.

The Peace Egg. Dandelion Clocks, and Other Tales. (Two vols.) By Juliana Horatia Ewing. [E. & J. B. Young & Co. Each 30c.] The finish of style and delicate mingling of humor and pathos which make Mrs. Ewing's longer stories so remarkable, are equally characteristic of her shorter ones. The two little volumes entitled Dandelion Clocks and The Peace Egg, republished from Aunt Judy since her death, are excellent examples of these qualities, of a sweetness which charms and a fun which instructs and benefits.

The Blind Brother: A Story of the Pennsylvania Coal Mines. By Homer Greene. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. 90c.] Mr. Greene has written a wholesome, manly story which all boys will read with interest and profit and which older people will peruse with pleasure. Mr. Greene believes in the old-fashioned virtues of honesty and courage, and in life as he sees it among the Pennsylvania mines there is still left something of the earnest elements of human affection to guide and control the acts of the roughest and least conventional men. Tom and his blind brother Bennie, and poor sinful Jack Rennie with his final atonement, are persons worth knowing. The little tale that ends the book is unutterably pathetic. Mr. Greene has talent of a distinct and valuable kind.

MINOR FICTION.

The Yoke of the Thorah. By Sidney Lusk. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] We cannot better characterize Mr. Harland's story of The Yoke of the Thorah than by saying that it is a feverish and improbable romance. Elias Bacharach, age 26, a Jewish artist of repute in his native city, New York, meets and falls in love with Christine Redwood, daughter of a Yankee costumer. Before declaring himself he has a mental struggle over the commandments in the Thorah which forbid under pain of dire penalties the marriage of a Jew and a Christian. But the man conquers the Jew and the day for the wedding is fixed. Elias then confides his secret to his uncle, the rabbi, who calmly tells him that the Lord will interfere and that the marriage never will take place, and in apparent conformity with the prophecy Elias, in the midst of the ceremony, is stricken down with an epileptic fit. The disease so affects his character that he readily succumbs to his uncle's influence, renounces Christine, and marries a Jewess, Tillie Morgenthau. After a time he gradually awakens to the realization that his love for Christine is as intense as ever. He leaves his wife and takes refuge in a bachelor apartment house, where he learns of the approaching marriage of Christine. He writes her an insane letter asking her to meet him in the park, goes thither, and is seized with another epileptic fit. The newspapers next day contain notices of his death and of Christine's wedding. Mr. Harland has created several life-like personages, notably the rabbi and old Redwood, the rude, uncultivated, straightforward father of Christine. Altogether the best part of the book is that describing the manners and customs of the German Jews, who are one and all depicted with graphic power. Nothing could be better in their way than Mr. and Mrs. Blum and Mr. Koch, with their free and easy vulgarity and warm hearts, or Tillie Morgenthau, with her prosaic, flashy demeanor and exquisite musical genius. If Mr. Harland would give us more work like this and leave the mock-heroics and sickly melodramas to writers incapable of actuality, he would find an audience worthy of his talent.

The Devil's Hat: A Sketch in Oil. By Melville Philips. [Ticknor & Co. $1.00.] "The Devil's Hat" is the name of a small isolated table land on a certain sandy plain in a certain portion of the Pennsylvania oil region. Wells have been drilled all about it, but nobody has attempted to strike oil on the Hat because of the supposed volcanic disturbance of the strata. The attempt is made, however, by two former law students—Ogden, who tells the story, and Joyce Selden, the two having met by chance at the oil city of Sandhole. Selden is the leading spirit in the enterprise. To conceal their operations it is given out that they are building a summer hotel, and with great success they succeed in eluding the scouts who are always on the alert to learn of a new well in order to take advantage of its effect upon the market. The well proves to be a "gusher"—that is, it yields a good flow of oil—and the two partners become rich. Meanwhile Ogden has fallen in with Mrs. Brace, ostensibly a widow, and her lovely daughter, Petrice. Startling complications ensue. The story of Mrs. Brace's antecedents comes to light, and a cultivated hermit is found to be an important personage. There is a double love entanglement which drags to an inconsequential ending. The value of the book is in its emphatic, highly-colored, but evidently truthful pictures of the oil regions; in its equally vivid portrayal of typical characters, from Major Dibbs, the oily-tongued editor of the Sandhole Spouter, to Tickly-Bender, the "torpedoer" of failing wells. Mr. Philips gives us the whole picture and his strokes are bold and true. The business of striking oil, a storm on the Devil's Hat, a battle with scouts, a ball in aid of the widows of "torpedoers," a fire among the storage tanks, the petroleum exchange at Oil City—these are noteworthy elements in Mr. Philips's narrative. The style of the book is unequal and at times deplorable—but The Devil's Hat is a novel worth reading.

The Confessions of Claud. A Romance. By Edgar Fawcett. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] This romance is romantic only in motive, and that motive is psychological. Otho Clauss is the son of a German peasant and a Breton bourgeoisie. The father, of a jealous and vindictive temperament, wrongfully suspects his wife of infidelity, becomes insane, stabs her to death in the street, and is hanged. Otho, represented as a remarkably handsome lad, is adopted by a woman of wealth, who introduces him to the world as Otho Claud. Early in life the boy realizes that he has inherited from his mother a distinct set of good impulses, from his father dark and cruel tendencies which at times get the mastery. When he has won the love of Ada Gramerney and is about to marry her, Foulke Dorian confronts him with the story of his origin and the threat to reveal it to Ada if Otho will not surrender his claim to her hand. Otho strangles Dorian in obedience to a hereditary impulse, and Ada, when she learns of the deed, condones it and urges her betrothed to use all his power to escape legal penalty for his crime. He does so, is acquitted, marries Ada, and the two live in retirement, the remorse of the criminal softened by the "angelic devotion" of his wife. The novel is written with no small degree of power, but we regard it as unworthy of Mr. Fawcett's talent, which is more at its ease in tracing the idiosyncrasies of metropolitan social cliques than in exploiting the weird and romantic. The characters in The Confessions of Claud move in a melodramatic atmosphere, and in many of their actions are little better than travesties of the humanity they malign.

Cracker Joe. No Name Series. [Roberts Bros. $1.00.] The author of Cracker Joe is manifestly an accomplished hand at the writing of novels, and in this dramatic, original, tensely-wrought story has had the good luck to fall upon material not hitherto utilized to any great extent by novelists. The scene is Florida, somewhere down toward the central part of the sunny peninsula, as we read aright; the time the present; the characters a diversified assemblage of cultivated northerners, "crackers," "low-down whites," negroes, "moonshiners," with a handsome recluse and a young Georgian in leading parts. Cracker Joe, as Joseph Carew is known in the hamlet of Wild Rose, has risen from the lowest level to be the owner of one of the best tilled and most productive farms in all Florida. He is a king in a small way and is worthy of his position; but he must not be taken as a representative of his class, who in general are a far different sort from this wide-awake, go-ahead planter. The characters are, every one, carefully individualized, and in the case of the negroes and the old Squire supply the humorous element in abundance. The author seems to understand the colored people thoroughly; Aunt Prunty and Canty are masterpieces in their way, and nothing could be more comical than the scenes in which they take part, especially during the earthquake, when all the negroes fall on their knees and confess "sins enough to hang them." The story of Derintha's fate is perhaps overwrought a little; its intense pathos needed no artistic touches to render it effective. The midnight interview between George Barron and Cracker Joe is intensely dramatic and leads to an unexpected climax. The novel is sure to attract attention for its many fine qualities, as well as for its picturesque if rather fanciful portrayal of Florida life.

Woodland Tales. By Julius Stinde. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.00.] There are six quiet stories by the author of The Buchholz Family in this volume, which has been written in excellent English by Ellis Wright. Dr. Stinde here shows himself to have the imagination of a poet; the romantic element which runs through the whole volume is made distinctly prominent; and the treatment is always delicate and discerning. In "Aunt Juliana" we have unfolded before us the heart history of a gentlewoman who is loved by the Count, although he marries another, and who, loving him in return although she pities his weakness, "found her happiness in making the happiness of others." "His Stupid Wife" is the story of a marital misunderstanding and how it was remedied; "Brother Johannis" relates the fate of a monk falsely suspected of crime and sustained by the affection of a woman who strives to save him by declaring herself guilty;

"Three Times Ten Years" is the story of an artist fallen from his youthful ideals by pride and thirst for wealth, but won back to the road of truth through love; in "Bello" is depicted the life of a noble mind outlawed by conventional prejudices and driven to destruction; and "Princess Goldenhair" is a dainty idyl of youth and youthful dreams.

7 to 12. A Detective Story. By Anna Katherine Green. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 25c.] From the author of The Leavenworth Case we expected something better even in the way of a trifle than this extremely diaphanous story of baffled crime. Any quick-witted reader will discover from the tenor of the first chapter what is up and how it is coming out, or if he does not he will have no great interest in following the narrative to the end. "One Hour More," a story of an amnestied communist, bound up in the same volume, is vastly better told and is better worth the telling.

Miss Bayle's Romance. [Henry Holt & Co. 30c.] Miss Bayle's Romance lacks only "the little more" to make it an unusually clever story. The heroine, a Chicago girl, daughter of a railway king, conquers the fashionable world of London by her beauty, freshness, and frankly audacious personality. She says "guess" and "real nice" and "you don't say," and pronounces things "perfectly elegant," and generally disarranges conventional forms of speech, but all this does not prevent her from being right-minded and well-read, honest and bright, or from becoming the reigning American beauty of the season. In fact the story leaves her a marchioness. There is something incongruous to the comprehension of an educated American in this, and yet Miss Bayle is a good study of character. She is as innocently frank as Daisy Miller, but her instincts and observation are far in advance of that remarkable young lady. She has a power of success, inherited from her keen-witted father—her crudities are but superficial. It is easy to imagine that a few years of well-bred surroundings would make of her an elegant woman, whereas a life-time would have been too short for such a transformation in the case of poor Daisy Miller. Mr. Bayle is another good character sketch—and so is Mr. Rupert Wentworth with his underlying sense of failure—but in all there is just a something lacking. Can it be what M. Taine calls that "last accent, which is life"?

The Epicurean. By Thomas Moore. [Henry Holt & Co. 30c.] Moore's Epicurean had its day of popularity, and in spite of She and other modern rivals, it holds its own as a work of imagination. In style it more than holds its own. Compare its polished periods with the jerky and awkward sentences of Mr. Rider Haggard, and the least trained ear must mark the difference.

Worth Winning. A Novel. By Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] An English novelist, in Worth Winning, brings a new contribution to the mass of demoralizing and debilitating fiction. Her theme is the favorite one with certain mediocre English writers—that of the young heir entangled in a love affair with the daughter of one of his father's laborers, and at the same time seeking in marriage another girl whose wealth will pay his debts and help keep up his impoverished estate. There are a few chapters, after the young spendthrift meets the heiress, which seem to promise something of interest, but the author immediately falls into the melodramatic, and ends with disgusting us. The hero is the person whom she considers "worth winning," but the reader will reverse the verdict both in his case and that of the lady.

The Silent Workman. A Story. By Clinton Ross. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.] The Silent Workman is a short story which might almost be called a monograph, the motif of which is to show that punishment is born at the same time with sin; "whoever expects punishment already suffers it, and whoever suffers it expects it." It is the study of one man, Eb Randall, a workman in the steel mills of Middlewood; of magnificent physique, and of so much will and determination that he makes a strong impression on the master, Philip Twickenham, at the time when five thousand of the men strike. Philip refuses to comply with their demands, and Eb, made desperate by the troubles and by the death of the poor seamstress whom he loved, shoots Philip; and, supposing that he is killed, runs on and on nearly all night to flee from the deed he has done. Tortured by remorse and memories of his boyish innocence, he goes back after several weeks to give himself up, but meets Philip on the very spot of the crime, which so overpowers him that he becomes mad, and is placed in an asylum, where he stays five years and is then discharged sane. He cannot, however, remain in a world so changed to him, and is sent to an isolated farm, and there he works in silence, making friends of dumb creatures. It is a psychological study of much power and pathos.

My Lodger's Legacy; or, The History of a Recluse. Written by Himself. Compiled and Arranged by Robert W. Hume. [Funk & Wagnalls.] A singular and not wholesome narrative is told in My Lodger's Legacy, which purports to be a sort of autobiography left in manuscript to the keeper of a New York boarding-house by one of her lodgers, an Englishman, who remained under her roof twenty years,—a man of peculiar ideas, who had taken a wife from a class below him, in the face of her protest against the violation of caste instincts. The marriage, however, was one of great mutual happiness until both were long past middle life, when on his return from a sojourn in London, where he had been engaged on newspaper work in connection with a woman of lax views on the social relations, he found his wife on suspiciously intimate terms with the steward, and both husband and wife admitted their unfaithfulness. The steward soon came to his death under circumstances that implicated the husband, who was tried for murder. As the evidence was not satisfactory, he was acquitted; but existence in the same house with his wife (who suspected him, and not without cause) became intolerable and he exiled himself to America. This story, which is also in the line of psychological study, is of singular candor and not without interest, but interest of a morbid kind, and no good comes of putting it into print.

Wee Wife. A Novel. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] The author of Wee Wife has seen fit to carefully revise this production of her earlier years, but it still retains evidence of immaturity. A favorite theme with Miss Carey is that of making a hero marry a woman he does not care for because he cannot have the one his heart is set upon. It is not always, however, that she proves so manageable as poor little Fay, or that the other is so noble as Margaret. As for Sir Hugh, let us hope that there are not many men so brutally cruel as he was to the inoffensive mother of his child.

Uncle Max. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] In Uncle Max Miss Carey shows a great advance. This is autobiographic in form. A young girl, Ursula Garston, gives the story of her life in the parish of her uncle, where she devotes herself to taking care of the sick and needy. Her experience is charmingly told and is of use as an example for others. She is somewhat after the Jane Eyre pattern, and, like Jane, is rather officious at times, but is an exceedingly helpful and comforting body and comes to deserved happiness. The jarrings and misunderstandings in the Hamilton family and the complex character of the cousin, Miss Darrell, are treated in a way that shows intimate knowledge of human nature. The books of this author have a domestic atmosphere, and are written in a graceful and refined way.

Geoffrey Stirling. A Novel. By Mrs. Leith Adams (Miss Laffan). [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] The chief merit of Geoffrey Stirling consists in the fidelity to life shown in the scenes where the humble class of English village folk act and gossip and give their opinions—those worthies who met at the Safe Retreat and discussed the bank robbery, the terrible illness of Squire Stirling, the walking of the ghost and the loss of the young heir. It is a somber story of a great wrong, of life-long remorse, of a stricken man and an avenging woman. These two in their half-maddened state are overdrawn; but the two children, Ralph and Hilda, are as true as they are sweet and loving. The scenery, the willow-bordered dikes, the two great houses and the village are so faithfully described as to give the air of being real places.

In One Town. A Novel. By Edmund Downey. [D. Appleton & Co. 25c.] The scene of In One Town is Sloughford, an old seaport in the south of Ireland, and several chapters are devoted to the talk of the skippers in their gatherings at the "Bold Dragoon"—each man of them a character. The story is that of a girl, Susan, who pledged herself to Dick Salton on the eve of his sailing on a long voyage, but was forced by her mother into a marriage with Captain McCormick. While the latter is absent the old lover returns, and then begins her struggle between love and duty, made desperate by the rumor that her husband's vessel has gone down, but when further word comes that it is not true, she thanks God that she can meet him with the consciousness that she has "sinned only in thought." However, the worthy captain is really lost at sea, and in the end the lovers are married. Many threads of other lives are made to cross the chief story, and the every-day events in the old seaport are made to go right along as they would outside of a book (which is certainly complimentary to the author's ability); besides, there is all the trouble at the ship broker's, the history of the singular experience of Butler, and the episode in which the American, Nixon, played a part.

The Hornet's Nest. A Story of Love and War. By Edward P. Roe. [Dodd, Mead & Co. 25c.] In The Hornet's Nest is told a story of daring exploits during the Revolutionary War, in the region roundabout the county town of Charlotte, North Carolina, which probably received its name from Colonel Tarleton, who said to Lord Cornwallis on his retreat from the place, "I think you've got into a hornet's nest."

MINOR NOTICES.

Mrs. Siddons. By Nina A. Kennard. Famous Women Series. [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.] We follow in this work, with a bright, chatty, and sympathetic guide, the relations of the artist Sarah Kemble, afterwards Mrs. Siddons, with the other members of her family, her occasional meeting with various people of distinction in England, flourishing at the close of the last and beginning of the present century, and the steps by which she gradually won her way to the eminence of a great queen of tragedy. In a biography of a person long before the public it is necessary, in the judgment of Mrs. Kennard, "to divest the character as much as possible of the legendary traditions adhering to it, and bring it down into the regions of ordinary life." With this end, free citation is made of private letters, and from these and other sources evidence is given of Mrs. Siddons's affectionate fidelity in the private relations of wife, mother, and friend. Yet the work is not one of indiscriminating praise, the biographer having aimed to be always fair, and giving us on the whole a vivid picture of the life and times of her subject.

Outlines of International Law. By George B. Davis, U.S.A. [Harper & Bros. $2.50.] The assistant professor of law at the West Point Military Academy has prepared this volume for use as a text-book in that institution and elsewhere. Considered as such, it is a success, being comprehensive, clear, and compact in its style, and well adapted for use in the class-room. The great number of topics considered in its four hundred pages of large type puts consecutive reading out of the question; but as a class-room introduction to international law it should find acceptance. Prof. Davis begins with quite a full sketch of the origin, sources and historical development of the science. Each chapter closes with a careful bibliography of the subject to facilitate more detailed study. The appendix contains Prof. Lieber's instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field, the Geneva convention for the amelioration of the condition of sick and wounded soldiers, the Declarations of Paris and St. Petersburg, and the laws of war on land recommended for adoption by the Institute of International Law at the session in Oxford in 1880. The volume, it will be seen, is largely concerned with war, but it treats of the laws which are not silent in the midst of arms.

The Mystery of God. By T. Vincent Tymms. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $2.50.] In this second edition of his thoughtful "consideration of some intellectual hindrances to Faith," Mr. Tymms has made but one change of importance from the first edition. This is an addition of some five pages on the subject of animal suffering. Turning to these pages, to note what must be the author's ripest thought, we do not feel that his method of treatment is such as is likely to satisfy the skeptics whom he has in mind. Mr. Tymms is no bigot; he surrenders the verbal infallibility of the Bible without pain; but when he brings forward as the scriptural proof of the unity of all nature the vision of Ezekiel, he commits a fault, common with him, of reading too much of recent thought into the Bible. He will even have St. Paul to be a sympathizer with the sufferings of the animal world—Paul who wrote "Doth God take care for oxen?" He holds, when treating of Christ, to the strict Messianic construction of Isaiah liii, which later critics are referring with increasing unanimity to the Jewish people. Mr. Tymms begins with materialism and ends with the resurrection of Christ. On grounds where exact scholarship is not needed, and where a mystical tendency is a help in the interpretation of truth, we find him a more satisfactory guide than in questions of criticism.

Tolerance. By Phillips Brooks. [E. P. Dutton & Co. 75c.] "My friends, be more afraid of the littleness than of the largeness of life." These words, at the end of these two lectures, which have been delivered to several of the divinity schools of the Protestant Episcopal Church, will express the spirit of all that precedes them. "Tolerance," says Dr. Brooks, "has two elements—positive conviction, and sympathy with men whose convictions differ from our own." Eclecticism is a failure; positive conviction we can never have too much of; but if we take the pains to enlarge our minds we shall inevitably respect the convictions of others and practice a tolerance which is not an insult. Error is never guilt, but insincerity, cant, selfishness, deception of one's self or of other people, cruelty, prejudice—these are the things with which the church ought to be a great deal more angry than she is. The anger which she is ready to expend upon the misbeliever ought to be poured out on these. . . . May you count yourselves the keepers of truth; but may you count yourselves still more the keepers of truthfulness!

Philadelphia, 1681-1887. A History of Municipal Development. By E. P. Allinson, A.M., and Boies Penrose, A.B. [Publication Agency of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. $3.00.] In the Johns Hopkins University series of Studies in Historical and Political Science, of which Prof. H. B. Adams is the editor, this handsome volume is the second extra issue. It contains a more full and detailed account than the other recent numbers of the series in pamphlet form could give of the history of an American city. The government of our cities, or their misgovernment, one should say, is the chief political problem of the day. It is evident that some modification of the too democratic system hitherto prevailing, a system which inevitably issues in a spoils-aristocracy of the unfittest, must be had. Experience in other cities goes to prove that a reversal of this direction is what we need, by giving the municipal government an apparently aristocratic form which shall issue in a real democracy, i. e., in a clean and economical administration. The authors of this elaborate work have thoroughly studied the two-hundred-years-long story of Philadelphia down to its last charter, and have faithfully and clearly presented the results of their patient investigation to arrive at this conclusion, that the tendency of the recent theories of municipal government may thus be briefly summarized: All executive power is concentrated in one head, responsible directly for the whole administration to the people who elect him; a few subordinate heads of departments are appointed by and responsible to this head; a complete separation is made between the executive and legislative branches of government; and a stringent limitation is placed on the power to accumulate indebtedness, while careful regulations are framed for the financial system and methods.

Courses and Methods. A Handbook for Teachers of Primary, Grammar, and Ungraded Schools. By John T. Prince. [Ginn & Co.] The larger part of this little work answers well to its title, and will be a help to any teacher of children; more especially to those teachers who have not had a normal school training, and who have not mastered higher books like Rosenkranz's Pedagogics. Mr. Prince gives the teacher plain directions for all sorts of every-day operations in the school-room, evidently suggested to him by his experience in the oversight of schools taught by young and untrained teachers. Parts of the book, relating to the building and planning of school-houses, are wise and well stated, but are addressed rather to committees of superintendence than to the unfortunate teachers and pupils who suffer in ill-arranged houses.

Elementary Treatise on Determinants. By W. G. Peck. [A. S. Barnes & Co.] The mathematics have been so rapidly and wonderfully enlarged within the last forty years, that only those especially devoted to their pursuit have been able to keep pace with their progress. The mathematics have always been peculiarly dependent upon notation—the secret of their power has consisted largely in the perfection of their language; and it is largely through perfected novelties in notation that the great successes of these four decades have been won. One of the first great steps was taken in 1841 by Jacobi's Treatise on Determinants. The student who would become able to use modern methods in his mathematical inquiries cannot afford to neglect that subject, nor can he, we are persuaded, find any clearer and simpler introduction to the matter than is found in this admirable little volume of Professor Peck.

Correspondence Between Goethe and Carlyle. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. [Macmillan & Co. $2.00.] Prof. Norton has conferred what without exaggeration may be designated as a lasting benefit to mankind in collecting and editing the Correspondence Between Goethe and Carlyle. The correspondence began in 1824, when Carlyle, at the age of 30, had completed his translation of Wilhelm Meister and sent a copy of it to Goethe with a reverent note of thanks for the benefits derived from the original. Goethe, then 75, replied courteously, and up to within a few months of Goethe's death the correspondence was continued, accompanied by a pleasant exchange of gifts, in which Mrs. Carlyle and Otilie von Goethe had a part. Carlyle's letters are those of a disciple to a master and reveal much of his intellectual life. Goethe writes always with the utmost friendliness, and at an early date takes occasion to formulate his views with regard to the world-literature or universal exchange of ideas which was his ideal. He looked upon Carlyle as an important aid in the realization of this project, and in furthering a knowledge of German thought in England gave earnest and friendly aid. The book, admirably edited, is one that should be read by all serious-minded persons, for it gives the history of one of the most attractive episodes in the friendships of great authors.

Letters of Horatio Greenough. Edited by Frances Boott Greenough. [Ticknor & Co.

$1.25.] These letters of Horatio Greenough, written to his brother Henry from 1825 to 1852, possess a certain amount of interest as indications of the character of the author—a self-contained, affectionate, patriotic, liberal-minded man, and an artist of the highest aims and the broadest sympathies. He saw a great deal of social life at Paris, Florence, Boston, and Washington, but his letters contain only brief references to the people he met and the work he accomplished. They tell us nothing of his methods and very little of his friendships. Yet now and then we come upon passages which are suggestive of keen observation and profound thought. In France in 1825 he found too much "cant of freedom." He was with Cooper in Paris, but says almost nothing of their relations. He made the Atlantic voyage on the "Great Western" in 1843, and was "convinced of the superiority of steamers to sailing ships during the summer months at least." The letters in which he relates his efforts to secure the appropriation of Congress for his statue of Washington are models of patience and hopefulness. The editor has done her work well.

A Summer in England with Henry Ward Beecher. Edited by James B. Pond. [Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $2.00.] Major Pond has made an acceptable volume upon Mr. Beecher's English visit last summer, his account of the tour being fortified by extracts from newspapers, reports of addresses, and letters, which show that the great preacher's reception was throughout the three months of his stay a continued expression of cordiality and admiration from all classes. That Mr. Beecher appreciated this kindly welcome is evident from two of his private letters here printed. After all the darkness and trials of his life he felt that his vindication was completed. The volume, aside from the narrative by Major Pond, an amiable and enthusiastic courier, contains the eight addresses delivered by Mr. Beecher in England; four of his lectures, those, namely, on "The Reign of the Common People," "The Wastes and Burdens of Society," "Conscience," and "Evolution and Religion;" seventeen of his sermons; and a number of his prayers. A fac-simile of his notes for an address on preaching to theological students in London shows something of his method of intellectual work. The portrait of Mr. Beecher, an artotype, is in every way excellent, an admirable expression of his remarkable countenance. One of the best of the sayings of Mr. Beecher reported by Major Pond is that in which the British government is defined as "a suppressed democracy."

Two Royal Lives. Gleanings at Berlin and from the lives of their Imperial Highnesses, the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany. By Dorothea Roberts. With portraits and illustrations. [Scribner & Welford. $2.25.] The author of Two Royal Lives has not assimilated her material very well or made half the use of it she might have done; with her facilities, and the advantage of two visits to Berlin, she should have been able to prepare a choice little monograph instead of the present rather sketchy and discursive volume. However, as she requests, her earnestness must atone "for lack of literary skill and experience," and we are glad to have even this presentation of two such honored and admirable personages as the Crown Prince and his worthy and lovely consort. The facts of their lives are given, with a good deal of matter about the English and German royal families, followed by an account of the philanthropic and educational work which the Crown Princess originated and has under her patronage—hospitals growing out of the sad necessities of the war, in which her sympathies were keenly wrought upon, the lyceum for the higher culture of women, sanitary associations, kindergärten, and other institutions and ways for the benefit of the people. It augurs well for the Germans that in their next sovereign they will have such a man as Frederick William with such a wife as Victoria. There are twelve illustrations, including several fine photographs, noticeably the three-quarter length portraits of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess, which were taken last autumn, and those of their eldest son and his wife.

PERIODICALS.

With the June number Scribner's Magazine makes a brilliant closing of a first volume which for variety and interest has hardly been equaled in popular periodical literature. The Thackeray letters continue and lose nothing of their fascination. John C. Ropes has an agreeable commentary on the portraits of Napoleon, illustrated from copies in the author's fine collection. F. J. Stimson under the title of "The Ethics of Democracy" makes a comparative generalization upon legislative tendencies in this country, his conclusion being that the movement up to the present time has been toward absolute socialism and may terminate there. W. T. Brigham writes of Guatemala as a picturesque, uncommercial republic, soon to be reduced to the level of commonplace prosperity. The fiction of the number, including a faithful story of rural life by Miss Jewett, is strong and voluminous; and the verse is of noteworthy quality.

Harper's Magazine for June has a rich store of text and illustrations. Madame Jane Dieulafoy describes the excavations at Susa in 1884-5 with the zeal of a born savante. The engravings accompanying the article are many and valuable. Mr. Warner writes pleasantly of Coatepec as a Mexican province worth knowing for its salubrious climate and remarkable resources. John Mason Brown contributes a paper on the Kentucky pioneers, which is admirably written and historically important. Prof. Ely shows how the growth of corporations is likely to end in coöperation, and Prof. Hadley praises the interstate commerce law as an honest advance in railroad legislation. Mr. Bowker's review of the paper-making industry is crammed with facts. The fiction of the number includes an idyllic chapter in Mr. Howells's "April Hopes," who, by the way, discourses rather savagely of critics and criticism in the "Editor's Study."

The June Atlantic opens with a story dealing with the study of occult phenomena, "A Crucial Experiment," by J. P. Quincy. The transcendental photography of spiritual forms is the object of the experiment, which is artfully related. A. Lawrence Lowell sketches historically the theory of the social compact. There is a capital account, half story, half description, of the recent earthquake in the Riviera. Dr. Holmes's chronicle of his hundred days gossips pleasantly of a visit to Stratford-on-Avon. John Fiske reviews the completed work of the Federal Convention. Horace E. Scudder advocates with sound sense the use of nursery classics in school as a sure foundation for steady progress in the appreciation of imaginative literature. Altogether a readable and instructive number.

The Century for June has a most interesting report of an interview with Count Leo Tolstói by George Kennan, who visited the famous novelist at his country estate in Tula last summer. Count Tolstói is represented as carrying out the principles advocated in My Religion, working in the fields and passing the evenings in making shoes. The description of his massive, virile, sympathetic personality as made by Mr. Kennan is very fascinating. One cannot help thinking that here is an elemental force in the growth of humanity toward the ideal good. A striking portrait accompanies the article. Julian Hawthorne discusses college boat-racing and is not too severe on the betting evil. Prof. Atwater continues his useful remarks on food and nutrition. Dr. Munger offers several thoughtful ideas regarding education and social progress as influenced by the specializing tendencies of the times. "Jack," the story of the life of a Gloucester fisherman by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, is surcharged with a pathos that is irresistible; it is to be classed with the most effective work Miss Phelps has ever penned.

Prof. Francis L. Patton points out in the June Forum what he considers Romanizing tendencies in the Andover doctrine of future probation, since it bases salvation on works rather than on faith! Andrew Lang argues that in one sense there are no books which do not help a man, and in another that it may be doubted whether any books help a man at all. His special sympathies are for Scott, Thackeray, Homer, Thucydides, Molière, Tennyson, Pascal, Montaigne, Plato, Aristotle, Marcus Aurelius, and Matthew Arnold's poems. Prof. G. J. Romanes defines the object of life as "to love and to think." John Fulton says the revised version has failed because it attempts to represent the broad outlines of the sacred pictures with the cunning work of microscopic engravers. Dr. J. M. Buckley argues against the abolition of capital punishment. I. T. Brooks inveighs against the evil of railway passes. Commander H. C. Taylor says that the control of the Pacific depends on a Nicaraguan canal. The Forum leaves no live topic of the day untouched, and is always vigorous and suggestive.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

O'Connor's "Index to the Works of Shakspeare." The plan of this book just published by the Appletons [$2.00] is so good, and so well carried out in some respects, that one cannot help regretting the faults and defects by which it is marred. The compiler has aimed to combine in one compact volume a sort of phrase-book, a dictionary of obscure words and allusions, an outline history of the plays, and a list of all the characters that appear in them. She has done the work carefully and faithfully in the main, but seems to lack that thorough acquaintance with Shakespearian literature which is necessary for the judicious handling of some of her materials. The book will be a useful one in its way, and worth its price to readers and students, but it might easily have been made a good deal better.

The editor says that it was her intention to "refer to every passage of importance under the word that best expresses its subject"; but under many words (or subjects) she gives only one or two out of perhaps a dozen passages, and it is difficult to see on what principle the selection is made. Under Amusement, for example, we find only "The Tempest, i. 2; Hamlet, iii. 4." There is a cross reference to Astonishment, where three other passages are given; but the five by no means include what we should regard as all the passages "of importance" that properly come under these heads. Under the noun Annoy, of which there are eight examples in Shakespeare, we find merely "Annoy, farewell to, 3 Henry VI. v. 7"—perhaps the slightest and least interesting of them all. Of the many apt references to April, we have only the "spongy April" of Temp. iv. 1, and the comparison of love to "an April day" in T. G. of V. i. 3. It is unfortunate, by the way, that the line-numbers of the references are not given.

As a dictionary of obscure words and phrases the book is far from complete. Opening it at random, our eye falls on "Picture, of we three, Twelfth Night, ii. 3." Here the allusion is explained; but on turning to "Nobody, picture of, Tempest, iii. 2"—of which the other reminds us—we find no explanation, though the phrase needs it quite as much as the other. Such unfamiliar words as pricket and sorel (as applied to deer) do not occur at all, not even under "Hunting terms and allusions." Mere, in the emphatic sense of absolute—a word which has led learned editors to alter the text of Bacon, to make it conform to the modern meaning—is likewise missing; as is element (= air or sky), old intensive), as in "old swearing," etc.), censure (judge, and judgment), conscience (consciousness), and the like. Tuition has "of God" added, with a reference to Much Ado, i. 1, but no hint of its peculiar sense of protection. Spet is called the "old past of spit," a blunder which we believe Grant White had made before, forgetful of Milton's "spets her thickest gloom" (Comus, 132) and other examples of the form as a present. The past tense is of course like the present, as in spit.

Of these outright blunders we have noted only a few in a hurried glance at the pages. Bias is correctly explained, but with the additional statement: "Anything that ran against it was a rub." Perhaps the lady meant to write "that it ran against." Under rub we have only Hamlet's "There's the rub." Henry V. ii. 2. 188 ("But every rub is smoothed on our way") and similar passages should have made it clear to her that a rub was any inequality or obstacle on the surface over which the bowl is rolled. Under Book-knowledge we are told that it is "ridiculed in Armado in Love's Labour's Lost;" where Holofernes was probably meant. The "Barbary hen" of a Henry IV. ii. 4. 108, does not appear under Barbary, but under the separate heading of Barbury (which we do not understand, as no explanation is appended), and the "Barbary cock-pigeon" of A. Y. L. iv. i. 151 is not mentioned at all. The note on Crispian (Henry V. iv. 3) confounds Crispin and Crispian; rolling the two shoemaker-saints mentioned into one.

Foreign words and phrases are translated, but without informing the reader whether they are Latin, French, Italian, or Spanish. Here we meet with some misprints, as core for cuore (p.

73), etc.; and so also in some proper names, as Mecenas for Mæcenas, Battista Spagnolus (p. 216) for Spagnuoli or Spagnoli (if the Italian form of his name is intended, as the Battista indicates), Goularb (p. 69) for Goulart, etc.

The sketches of the history of the plays are generally accurate, but worthless conjectures are sometimes introduced; as, for instance, that "possibly some other dramatist assisted Shakspeare in the scenes between the lovers" in the M. N. D. Under Pericles, it is said that some critics believe that "the first three acts" are not Shakespeare's; but nobody, so far as we are aware, ever had any doubts about the third act; and the shipwreck scene referred to farther on as "in Shakspeare's best manner" is in that act.

Most of these slips, and many others like them to which lack of space does not permit us to refer, may be set right in a second edition; but the omissions in words and phrases cannot be so easily supplied, unless in an appendix. But, as we have said, the book, even in its present condition, is likely to be of service to students, especially to those who have not Schmidt's Lexicon and other costly reference books.

Massinger in the "Mermaid Series." The second volume of the cheap and useful "Mermaid Series" is devoted to Massinger and edited by Mr. Arthur Symons. It includes The Duke of Milan, A New Way to Pay Old Debts, The Great Duke of Florence, The Maid of Honour, and The City Madam—a selection with which few will quarrel. The introduction is excellent, as Mr. Symons's work on Browning had led us to expect. The notes are fewer and briefer than in the Marlowe, but perhaps sufficient. An etched portrait of Massinger forms the frontispiece to the volume, which altogether confirms the good opinion we expressed of the series after examining its predecessor. Messrs. Scribner & Welford of New York are the American agents for this series, and under their direction it is sure to have a large sale in this country.

The Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford. Since the last number of the World was printed we have received a letter from Mr. Frederick Hawley, the librarian at the Memorial, in which he expresses the hope that committees will be formed in this country—at least in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston—"composed of influential gentlemen who take an interest in Shakespearian matters, and who will make an effort to collect and send to the library every edition of Shakespeare and every Shakespearian work that has been published in the United States, with contributions of general dramatic literature, etc." The suggestion is a good one, and we hope that it may lead to some concerted action among the friends of the enterprise on this side of the ocean.

The English and Americans in Paris forming the Stanley Club have determined to establish a committee there to secure by gift or purchase French Shakespearian and dramatic works for presentation to the Stratford library. Their example should be followed in all the leading cities here.

A Prophet is not without Honor, etc. Mr. Henry Irving, in his speech at the London meeting in behalf of the Stratford library, told this good story:

I remember being at Stratford-on-Avon one Sunday evening with a friend of mine, and we came across a gentleman who was enjoying himself very leisurely. He was leaning against a wall, looking at the blue sky overhead, and smoking a very comfortable pipe. He seemed so familiarly comfortable with the whole place that we thought he would be a rather useful man to get a few particulars from. So we asked him one or two questions—where this Shakespeare lived, and whether he knew him. "No," he didn't know him, but he pointed "over there." He was not very communicative, but we asked was he dead, and how long had he been dead. "Yes," said the man, "he was dead; he had been dead some years, but how many he did not know." We asked him whether he had been to his house very often. "No," he "never went there. Some people did." When we inquired if he could tell us anything of his occupation in life, he said he did not know what he had been. We suggested various things—a baker, butcher, tailor, or may be an author. No, he didn't exactly know; he thought he was "an author, for he writes for summat." At last, on being hard pressed, we got out what he did write for; he "thought he whur an author, and he writ for 't Bible." Now that seems an odd story, but that occurred to myself and my friend, Mr. Toole, at Stratford-on-Avon.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

823. A History Burned. What historian spent sixteen years in writing a history and then burned it, and why? W. C. L.

Providence, R. I.

824. Authors and References Wanted:

- (a.) . . . the many-twinkling smile of Ocean
And [Or] with pleased ear bewildered watch
His chime of restless motion.
- (b.) The friend who holds a mirror to my face,
And, hiding none, is not afraid to trace
My faults, my blemishes within,
Who friendly warns, reproves me, if I sin,
Although it seems not so, he is my friend.
- (c.) She was—but works would fail to tell the what:
Think what a woman should be, and she was that.
- (d.) Death mistook his virtues for his years.
- (e.) All things come to him who waits.
- (f.) God could not be everywhere, therefore he made mothers.

Where in William Penn's writings appears this passage:

(g.) The good, the pious and devout souls are everywhere of one religion, and when death takes off the mask they shall know one another, though the divers liveries they wear in this life make them strangers.

Waterbury, Conn.

A. D. R.

(a.) Keble's Christian Year (second Sunday after Trinity).

825. Author Wanted. Where can the following dedicatory lines be found:

Wise, noble, loved and loving wife,
These heart-born songs, a gift, I bring
To thee, whose deeds, thy muses, sing
The poem of a perfect life.

Jacksonville, Ill.

J. H. W.

826. Jean Ingelow. Can you refer me to a list of Jean Ingelow's works? Are they republished in America, and by whom? Has her Life been written, and by whom? Can you refer me to any review or magazine containing biographical or critical articles about this poetess?

Port Hope, Ontario. J. D. B.

Jean Ingelow's writings are published in this country by Roberts Bros., Boston, in whose catalogue a full list of her works appears. We know of no biography. See Harper's Magazine, XXVII, 276; Scribner's Magazine (old series), VI, 379; Eclectic, LXXXII, 385, XCIV, 63.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

In the Earthly Paradise Mr. Morris knew better, and the consequence was that his Chaucerian words seemed appropriate enough in his Chaucerian metres. Now that he has, quite rightly, selected a non-Chaucerian metre, he should have changed his vocabulary to suit it. His omission to do so will, we greatly fear, leave his translation of the Odyssey, with many great merits, a curiosity for the dilettante, instead of what it might have been, a real revelation of Homer to people who are capable of appreciating him, but need that "one interpret."—The Athenæum.

The fact that Cowley's prose attracts sufficient attention to receive a place in an educational series is one of some interest and presumably also of some promise. It is indeed a scandal that boys should still be taught laboriously to produce the cracked clink of feeble Latin hexameters while they remain uninstructed in the literature of their own tongue, that literature furnishing precisely the means by which the very highest ends in education may be reached; and when one thinks of the stark inefficiency of our English secondary education, one rejoices to see any effort, however mildly tentative, that may impart to it a greater elasticity and range of movement. We require to have that secondary system totally metamorphosed; but meanwhile we must be glad to find English literature being seriously considered at all.—The Academy.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has written the opening article for the Beecher Memorial now being prepared for Mrs. Beecher and her family, by Mr. Edward W. Bok of Brooklyn, N. Y., to which Mr. Gladstone, President Cleveland, the Duke of Argyll and some seventy-five other distinguished Americans and foreigners have also contributed articles. Only one hundred copies of the "Memorial" are intended for the public.

—We are sorry to record the death at Ashburnham, Mass., on May 30, of Prof. James E. Vose, principal of Cushing Academy. In spite of serious physical disabilities, Prof. Vose held a very high position as an educator and he was a writer of noteworthy ability, a critic of unusual acumen, and the author of a text-book on English grammar which is justly prized. Prof. Vose was for some time connected with the Literary World, and his contributions to this periodical, largely relating to biography and educational topics, have been of great interest and value.

—D. C. Heath & Co. of Boston have been made the American agents for the London Journal of Education, a monthly record and review.

—Laughton, Macdonald & Co. have in press, and will shortly issue, a new book for young people, by S. B. Alexander, entitled Ten of Us.

—The July number of Lippincott's Magazine will be largely a Southern one, with such names as Julia Magruder, Thomas Nelson Page, Robert Burns Wilson, Amélie Rives, etc., among its contributors. The prize essay on "Social Life at the University of Virginia" is contributed by John B. Minor, Jr., an undergraduate.

—Armstrong & Son, New York, have in press The Story of the Life of Queen Victoria, "told for boys and girls all over the world," by W. W. Tulloch, son of the late Principal Tulloch, private chaplain to the Queen. The volume, we are assured, has been revised by the Queen's own hand.

—Commenting on our note of a fortnight ago concerning the exigencies of newspaper reviewing, the Beacon says:

It is odd that publishers in reprinting newspaper notices of their publications should prefer abject and fulsome praise to real summaries and fair accounts. The book buyer does not care so much for the praise of a book as for an account of its contents and character.

—Mr. Julian Hawthorne and Inspector Thomas Brynes, chief of the New York Detective Bureau, have been putting their heads together, and the result is to be a series of books which Cassell & Co. are to publish. The first installment of this projected library of detective literature is called A Tragic Mystery, and will soon appear.

—An illustrated article on "Literary Life in Philadelphia," by Moses P. Handy, with sketches of leading celebrities, will be a feature of The American Magazine for July.

—The London Academy says that Prof. Knight of St. Andrews, in the course of his researches into fresh material for the Life of Wordsworth, has discovered at Coleorton Hall, in Leicestershire, a large number of letters addressed to Sir George Beaumont, the painter baronet, not only by Wordsworth, but also by Coleridge, Southey, Scott, and others. The Coleridge letters are specially important, as they throw light upon the obscure period of his residence in Malta. This literary trouvaille, sufficiently large to fill two volumes, will be published in the course of the present year.

—The preliminary announcement of subjects and instructors at the coming session (the fourteenth) at Chautauqua includes a number of new features of special interest, including a course in the Scandinavian languages, by Profs. Edward Olson and A. H. Edgren; instruction in Assyrian, by Prof. D. C. Lyon of Harvard; a course in Egyptian and a series of lectures on Egypt, by an accomplished scholar, Prof. Lysander Dickerman; and a course in social science, by Prof. Richard T. Ely. The session opens on July 9.

—The $494,600 which Mrs. Grant has received from the sale of her husband's work represents 70 per cent of the gross profits on the publication, which have thus amounted to about $706,600. The gross receipts from the sale of the work have amounted to not far from $3,000,000. There have been sold 312,000 sets at an average of probably $9 a set, which foots up $2,808,000 as a fair estimate of what the public has paid for this work. The skins of 7,000 goats and 20,000 sheep have been used for the covers of these volumes.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Barrows have written a book called The Shaybacks in Camp; or, Ten Summers Under Canvass, to be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

—A Yachtsman's Scrap-Book, by J. F. Loubat, practically a history of American yachting, is announced by Brentano Bros., New York.

—Roberts Bros. are to publish A Lad's Love, a story of Campobello, by Arlo Bates.

—It is not often that a library comes into market possessing so much interest as belongs to the bibliographical collection of Mr. Henry Pene du Bois, which is to be sold by Leavitt & Co. of New York next week. The library, of which a sumptuous catalogue has been issued, is particularly rich in the French classics and examples of early typography, and the bindings are choice specimens of French, English, and American art. The catalogue (the first auction bibliography issued in America with page illustrations) is truly a fine work, and of itself a treasure which collectors will cherish. It enumerates about 2,500 numbers, of which 35 are illuminated manuscripts of almost priceless value. Unique copies, limited editions, éditions de luxe, extra-illustrated volumes, abound, and one cannot open the list at any page without lighting upon some treasure. The sale, which is to last for ten days, is likely to attract more attention than any book sale held in this country for many years.

—The J. B. Lippincott Company have arranged to publish the "Report of the Commission Appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to Investigate Modern Spiritualism, in accordance with the Request of the late Henry Seybert." The same firm announce Bellona's Husband, a novel by Hudor Genone, author of Inquirendo Island.

—The Dial of Chicago says that Mr. J. G. Speed of Kentucky, the editor of an elegant edition of the works of Keats published in New York a few years ago, has in his possession the original MSS. of most of the poet's works, including "Endymion" and the "Diary Letters," and intends to present his collection to the British Museum. Mr. Speed is a grandson of Keats's younger brother George, who settled in America.

—The Bookbuyer for June has a portrait of Mr. Rider Haggard, who is represented as a smooth-faced, earnest appearing man of thirty years or so.

—Ginn & Co. will publish during the summer a thoroughly revised edition of Siever's Grammar of Old-English, translated and edited by Albert S. Cook, Ph.D., of the University of California. This new edition embodies the latest conclusions of the best authorities, and brings the whole subject really up to date.

—Hon. David A. Wells will contribute to the July Popular Science Monthly the first of an important series of papers on "The Economic Disturbances Since 1873." Mr. Wells proposes to review the history of these disturbances, and to point out agencies to which such wide-reaching commercial depression may be properly attributed.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

June.
Classics, Nursery, in School.	H. E. Scudder.	Atlantic.
Coleridge's "Ode to Wordsworth."	Alfred Ainger.	Macmillan's.
Criticism.	W. D. Howells.	Harper's.
Education and Social Progress.	T. T. Munger.	Century.
Folk-Lore, The Magic Flight in.	H. E. Warner.	Scribner's.
Language, The Universal.	Richmond Walker.	American Magazine.
Leopardi.	H. F. Brown.	Macmillan's.
Marston (Philip Bourke), Some Records of.	Margaret J. Preston.	Lippincott's.
"Odyssey," Mr. Morris's.	Oxford in the Middle Ages.	George C. Brodrick.
Publisher and Author.	G. W. Curtis.	Macmillan's.
Thackeray, Unpublished Letters of.	III.	Scribner's.
Tolstol, A Visit to Count.	George Kennan.	Century.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

THE LIFE OF REV. GEORGE C. HADDOCK.	By Frank C. Haddock.	Funk & Wagnalls.	$2.00
-------------------------------------	----------------------	------------------	--------

LIFE OF HENRY CLAY. By Carl Schurz. Two vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50
LIFE OF HENRY WARD BEECHER. Editor, Lecturer, Preacher, Novelist, and Philosopher. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

Educational Manuals.

PRINCIPLES OF EDUCATION PRACTICALLY APPLIED. By J. M. Greenwood, A.M. D. Appleton & Co.
THE NEW EDUCATION. Three Papers. By George Herbert Palmer. Little, Brown & Co.
THE RULING PRINCIPLE OF METHOD APPLIED TO EDUCATION. By Antonio Rosmini Serbati. Translated by Mrs. William Grey. D. C. Heath & Co.
HINTS ON EDUCATION AND NURSERY DISCIPLINE. Funk & Wagnalls. 60c.

Fiction.

NEXT OF KIN—WANTED. By Miss M. Betham-Edwards. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 20c.
MARRYING AND GIVING IN MARRIAGE. By Mrs. Molesworth. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 15c.
THE ALKALIST; OR, THE HOUSE OF CLAES. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50
CRACKER JOE. No Name Series. Roberts Bros. $1.00
A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME. Roberts Bros. $1.25
THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT: AN ARABIAN ENTERTAINMENT; AND FARINA. By George Meredith. Roberts Bros. $2.00
THE CRUISE OF A WOMAN HATER. By G. de Montauban. Ticknor & Co. 50c.
DANIELE CORTIS. Translated from the Italian of Antonio Fogazzaro. By Mrs. I. R. Tilton. Henry Holt & Co. 30c.
TO CALL HER MINE. By Walter Besant. Franklin Square Library. Harper & Bros. 20c.
ENVIRONMENT. A Story of Modern Society. By Florence Thayer McCray. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.25
HOW TO MAKE A SAINT; OR, THE PROCESS OF CANONIZATION IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By the Prig. Henry Holt & Co. $1.00
A REVEREND IDOL. Fifteenth edition. Ticknor & Co. 50c.
THE RUSSIAN REFUGEE. A Tale of the Blue Ridge. By Henry R. Wilson. Thomas R. Knox & Co.
IN OLD VIRGINIA; OR, MARSE CHAN AND OTHER STORIES. By Thomas Nelson Page. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25
THACKERAY'S WORKS. Handy Edition. Esmond. Hoggarty Diamond. Yellowplush Papers. Each 75c.
DICK'S WANDERINGS. By Julian Sturgis. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.
THE GREAT HESPER. By Frank Barrett. D. Appleton & Co. 25c.

General Literature.

WAS SHAKESPEARE SHAPLEIGH? A Correspondence in Two Entanglements. Edited by Justin Winsor. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 75c.
THE SUNNY SIDE OF SHADOW: REVERIES OF A CONVALESCENT. By Fannie Nichols Benjamin. Ticknor & Co. $1.00
MURDER AS A FINE ART. THE ENGLISH MAIL COACH. By Thomas De Quincey. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.
RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. The Catholic Reaction. By John Addington Symonds. Two vols. Henry Holt & Co. $7.00
SAPPHO. Memoir, Text, Selected Renderings, and a Literal Translation. By Henry Thornton Wharton. Second edition. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.75
CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOETHE AND CARLYLE. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Macmillan & Co. $2.00
OBITER DICTA. Second Series. By Augustine Birrell. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

Poetry.

COLONIAL BALLADS, SONNETS, AND OTHER VERSE. By Margaret J. Preston. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
THE POETIC AND DRAMATIC WORKS OF ROBERT BROWNING. Vols. V-VI. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each $1.75
THE LEGEND OF DELAWARE VALLEY, AND OTHER POEMS. By Rev. Thomas J. MacMurray, LL.B. Toronto: William Briggs.
BUMBLEBEE BOGO'S BUDGET. By a Retired Judge. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

Theology and Religion.

THE APPEAL TO LIFE. By Theodore T. Munger. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50
ENCYCLOPEDIA OF LIVING DIVINES AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS. A Supplement to Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge. Edited by Rev. Philip Schaff and Rev. Samuel Macauley Jackson. Funk & Wagnalls. $3.00
SCRIPTURE LESSONS ARRANGED FOR RESPONSIVE READINGS IN RELIGIOUS SERVICES. Cranston & Stowe. 30c.

SENT FREE to any address, a copy of our new Bargain Catalogue for 1887, comprising the largest assortment of standard Books of every description offered by any Booksellers in America. All for sale at Great Reductions from Regular Prices. Send your address on a postal card to Estes & Lauriat, 201-205 Washington Street, Boston.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY BUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 24 PARK ROW, N. Y.

Roberts Brothers' NEW BOOKS.

Ourselves and Our Neighbors:

SHORT CHATS ON SOCIAL TOPICS.

By LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

Mrs. Moulton ranges over such topics as "Rosebuds in Society," "Young Beaux and Old Bachelors," "Engagements," "After Marriage," and other similar vital experiences, which are discussed with exquisite refinement, good sense, and unflinching charm. Long social experience in the most brilliant circles in her own country and abroad has given her a large fund of observation from which to draw, and the book will be one not only interesting, but suggestive and valuable.

A Lad's Love.

By ARLO BATES. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

Mr. Bates's romance has Campobello for its locale, and for its subject an experience which most young men undergo, a boyish love for a mature woman. The story is told in an unusually happy vein.

NEW EDITIONS OF

Miss Preston's Novel,

A Year in Eden.

To Rome on a Tricycle:

Two Pilgrims' Progress, by Mrs. and Mr. PENNELL. Paper covers, price 50 cents each.

Some Recent New Books.

A Week Away from Time, $1.25; Cracker Joe, $1.00; Balzac's The Alkalist and The Two Brothers, $1.50 each; George Meredith's The Shaving of Shagpat, $2.00; Mrs. Dodd's Cathedral Days, third edition, $2.00; Mrs. Campbell's Prisoners of Poverty, $1.00; Mrs. Helen Jackson's Between Whiles, $1.25; Mrs. Ward's Life of Dante, $1.25; Mrs. Kennard's Life of Mrs. Siddens, $1.00; A Question of Identity, No Name novel, $1.00; Agatha and the Shadow, Old Colony series of novels, $1.50; Some Chinese Ghosts, by Lafcadio Hearn, $1.00; Miss O'Meara's Mabel Stanhope, $1.25; Through the Gates of Gold, a Fragment of Thought, 50 cents; Miss Robinson's Life of Margaret of Angoulême, $1.00; Sonnets in Shadow, by Arlo Bates, $1.00; Dante and His Circle, by D. G. Rossetti, $2.00; London of Today, by C. E. Pascoe, $1.50; Carving and Serving, by Mrs. Lincoln, 60 cents; Mr. Hale's Franklin in France, $2.00.

* Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS,
BOSTON.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

The Appeal to Life.

A Volume of Sermons. By THEODORE T. MUNGER, D. D., author of "The Freedom of Faith," "On the Threshold," "Lamps and Paths." 1 vol., 16mo, $1.50.

A book of remarkable interest, which appeals powerfully to that which is deepest and most vital in the experience and aspirations of mankind.

Phillips Exeter Lectures.

Lectures delivered before the students of Phillips Exeter Academy, 1885-1886. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50.

A volume of admirable addresses on various important subjects, by Rev. Drs. E. E. Hale and Phillips Brooks, and Presidents McCosh, Walker, Berkhitt, Robinson, Porter and Carter.

Browning's Works Complete.

An entirely New Edition from new electrotypes plates, after the latest revised English edition. In six volumes, crown octavo, gilt top, $1.75 a volume; half calf, $3.00 a volume. The set complete, cloth, $10.00; half calf, $18.00.

Henry Clay.

Vols. XV and XVI in Series of American Statesmen. By CARL SCHURZ. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50.

The signal ability of Mr. Schurz, his profound understanding of the principles, history and public men of the United States, and his remarkable candor, make this a work of unusual value.

Colonial Ballads, Sonnets, and Other Verse.

By MARGARET J. PRESTON, author of "Cartoons," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Mrs. Preston holds an enviable place in the regard of thoughtful readers. Her elevation of purpose, her dignity and repose, give to her verse a character which commands respect, while her lyrical skill lends to it an attraction that wins admiration.

Christianity and Humanity.

By T. STARR KING. With a Memoir by E. P. Whipple. New Edition. 12mo, $1.50.

This is unquestionably one of the noblest volumes of sermons ever published in this country. In thought, in insight, in eloquent utterance, Starr King was one of the foremost preachers America has produced, and his illustrious patriotism endears his memory to every true-hearted citizen.

A Century of Electricity.

By T. C. MENDENHALL. With Illustrations. 1 vol., 16mo, decorated cloth, $1.25.

The peculiar interest of the subject, the author's complete information, the simple style, and the numerous illustrations, make an exceedingly instructive and entertaining book.

History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation.

By REV. MANDELL CREIGHTON. Vols. III and IV. The Italian Princes, 1484-1518. With Appendices and Index. 8vo, $7.50.

The English Churchman says of the former volumes: "His work is in all respects a great one, and is certain of a permanent place on the shelves of the student of ecclesiastical history. It is a grand specimen of conscientious workmanship, written in an admirable spirit, and a credit to English historical scholarship."

A Satchel Guide

For the Vacation Tourist in Europe. Edition for 1887, revised. With Maps, Money Tables, Traveler's Calendar, etc. 16mo, roan, flexible, $1.50.

The Satchel Guide has yearly grown in popular confidence, as it has proved to be thoroughly trustworthy, and to contain just the information tourists wish.

*For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

GEORGE A. LEAVITT & CO.,

287 & 289 Broadway, cor. 10th St., N. Y.

Will sell by auction on

MONDAY, JUNE 13, to TUESDAY, JUNE 21, inclusive, THE Magnificent Literary Collection

OR

HENRY PENE DU BOIS, Esq.,

And consisting of Unique Volumes on Vellum, Manuscripts of Great Value, Black Letter and Fifteenth Century Rarities, Examples of Aldus, Elzevir, Estienne, Galliot du Pre, Hardouyn, etc., Limited Editions on Japan and India Paper, Choice Presentation Copies, Bibliographical Works, French Classics, Erotica and Literature, Medieval and Modern Original Editions, and Hundreds of Exquisite Bibliophilic Gems, in the Most Expensive and Elegant Reliures,

And by such celebrated artists in bibliopegy as Trautz-Bauzonnet, Derome, Lortie, Rousselle, Chamblle-Duru, Thibaron, etc., and some from the Libraries, or with the arms, of King Henry of Navarre, Louis XIII, Louis Philippe, Napoleon III, Madame de Pompadour, and other personages. Also

Superb and Beautiful Prints,

Mezzotinto, Line, Etched, and Stipple, by or after Raphael-Morghen, Forster, Strange, Raffaele-Sansio, Bartolozzi, Boucher, Dupré, Turner, Eisen, Van Eyck, Beham, Deltalle, Rembrandt, etc.;

Original Water-Colors,

By Fragonard, Lafarge, Topfer, Bellows, etc.; and Historical and Interesting Autographs, Library Furniture, Curios, etc.

Catalogues, 2,496 lots, 510 pages thick. 8vo, price $1.00; by mail, $1.15. Proem with full particulars mailed on application.

BARGAINS IN BOOKS
Standard Works at half price and less. Autographs, Rare Prints, etc. Catalogues Free. LORRAINE & CO., 41 W. 31st Street, N. Y. OUR SPECIALTY: } "Cheaper than the Cheapest, Better than the Best."

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUMFORD COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

THE TRAVELERS
HARTFORD CONN.
INSURANCE COMPANY
ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT
COMPANY
OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, withal the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

THE SEASHORE SUMMER SCHOOL.

THE TENTH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE

Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute,

AT COTTAGE CITY, MASS.,

W. J. BOLFE, A. M., President.

Will begin Monday, July 11, 1887, and continue five weeks.

DEPARTMENTS: Art; Book-keeping and Writing; Botany; Chemistry; Civics; Elocution; English Literature (under the charge of the President); French; German; Geography; Geology and Mineralogy; History; Kindergarten; Latin and Greek; Mathematics; Microscopy; Vocal Music; Pianoforte Music; Pedagogy; Phonography; Physics; Physiology; Zoology.

Good table-board at low rates on the Institute grounds.

For Circular giving full information, address

BENJAMIN W. PUTNAM,

Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

FOR

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 P. M. Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston. A. A. FOLSOM, Sup't. P. & B. R. R.

WHEN YOU GO TO

TROY OR ALBANY

Take the EXPRESS TRAIN leaving Boston at 10.30 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted, via Hoosac Tunnel Route, arriving at Troy 6.55 A. M. and Albany 7.25 A. M., connecting with Morning Trains via D. & H. C. Co., West Shore and New York Central Railroads, for all points North and West. Palace Sleeping Cars, Passenger Coaches and Baggage Cars run through without change from Boston to Troy and Albany. For Tickets, Sleeping-Car accommodations and further information, apply at the Company's Office, 250 Washington St., Ticket Office Fitchburg Railroad, CAUSEWAY STREET STATION, BOSTON, or any authorized Ticket Agent in New England.

J. B. WATSON,
Gen. Pass. Agent.

A. V. FISHER,
Trav. Pass. Agent.

THE LEGISLATURE OF 1887

SHOULD have enough D. K.'s to furnish each member with a box. Dyspeptics and sufferers from stomach troubles are capable of passing

Indigestible Laws.

Dr. Mark E. Woodbury's

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS

will put them all in a condition of good digestion. It costs only 50 cents for a box (trial boxes for 25 cents), sent by mail to any part of the U. S. on receipt of price by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 30 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $30.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Theo. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 13. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE NO. 326. Publishers.

BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

A SPLENDID SUMMER NUMBER. Scribner's Magazine.

JULY NUMBER BEGINS VOL. II.

CONTAINS

DR. D. A. SARGENT'S highly interesting and valuable paper on physical culture, entitled "The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man," with many illustrations. The author, professor of physical culture in Harvard University, gives the results of his long experience as a teacher. The system which he expounds will give the youth of the land an incentive to proper physical training, and place in their hands a key to the strong and weak points of their bodies. It will also guide parents as to the growth and development of their children.

SOME ILLUSTRATIONS OF NAPOLEON AND HIS TIMES, the second and concluding paper by Mr. JOHN C. ROSS. Superbly illustrated.

The fourth installment of the UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF THACKERAY. Many of them written from Paris and containing interesting allusion to the famous men whom he met there. Illustrated by interesting fac-similes of letters and drawings.

A GIRL'S LIFE EIGHTY YEARS AGO, a glimpse of social life in New York and New England early in the century, given in a selection of bright letters of ELIZA SCOTSGATE BOWNE. Illustrated.

JEMMY BASCOM, a charming short story by PHILIP HENRY. A GREAT PATIENCE, a dramatic story by EDWARD LEMUS STEVENSON; and the first of a two-part story by H. H. BOYSSER, entitled A PERILOUS INCOGNITO.

FRENCH TRAITS—THE SOCIAL INSTINCT, a strong and acute critical paper by W. C. BROWNELL.

ARTHUR'S BROTHER'S WIFE, the serial by HAROLD FREDERIC. The present chapters giving a graphic portraiture of a political convention in a Central New York town.

POEMS by EDITH M. THOMAS, ELLEN BURROUGHS, CHARLES EDWIN MARKHAM, LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON and CHARLES LOTIN HILDETH.

25 CENTS A NUMBER. $3.00 A YEAR.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
681 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by F. A. ARNOLD, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Northerney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLISTO, M.A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 6 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONIUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPIROZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare and Second-hand Books ready. Special Net Catalogue of Books greatly reduced in price ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE MEMOIRS OF THE MARGRAVINE OF BAIREUTH.

Translated and Edited by

H. R. H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

In 8vo, cloth extra, $2.75.

The Margravine was the sister of Frederick the Great, and exerted great influence over his character. Her Diary is a wonderful narrative of the petty intrigues and gossip of the German Court.

The Volume will have as Frontispiece an Autotype Copy of the Portrait in Berlin.

. Princess Christian, during her recent stay in Berlin, devoted much time and attention to the completion of the English edition of the Memoirs of Wilhelmine, Margravine of Baireuth, sister of Frederick the Great, which the Princess intends to bring out in London a few weeks hence. The Princess has for this edition written a special introduction, explaining in a very interesting manner the main features of the general situation in Europe, and especially in Germany, at that time. In order to prepare herself for this task, the Princess has made a diligent study of the original manuscripts in the Berlin Royal Library, the documents being placed at her disposal by the Crown Prince's special request. In the course of her studies, the Princess discovered an excellent portrait of the Margravine by Pesne; and this, in the form of a beautifully executed autotype, is to stand as the frontispiece of the book.

A New Work by the author of "Syrian Stone-Lore."

ALTAIC HIEROGLYPHS AND HITTITE INSCRIPTIONS.

By CLAUDE CONDER, R. E., with Illustrations. Published for the Committee of "The Palestine Exploration Fund." In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

COURT LIFE IN EGYPT.

By A. J. BUTLER, author of "The Ancient Coptic Churches of Egypt." Demy 8vo, with illustrations, cloth, $4.50.

FOR EVERY HOUSEHOLD!

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING

12mo, extra cloth, $1.00 each.

II. MATERNITY; INFANCY; CHILDHOOD.

Hygiene of Pregnancy; Nursing and Weaning of Infants; the Care of Children in Health and Disease.

ADAPTED ESPECIALLY TO THE USE OF MOTHERS OR THOSE INTRUSTED WITH THE BRINGING UP OF INFANTS AND CHILDREN, AND TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR NURSES, AS AN AID TO THE TEACHING OF THE NURSING OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

By JOHN M. KEATING, M.D.

This little work is intended for mothers, and for those who have undertaken the care of infants and children in health and sickness. The enormous mortality of children under three years of age, the greater part of which is preventable, has attracted the notice not only of physicians, who have long ago insisted that the methods adopted in general for the weaning of children were unscientific, but of the public also, who are beginning to realize this fact, and now willingly accept the advice of those who are giving especial attention to the subject.

I. THE NURSING AND CARE OF THE NERVOUS AND THE INSANE.

By CHAS. K. MILLS, M.D.

"It is by one of the ablest, best known specialists in our country, who has devoted his attention to diseases of the mind and nervous system. It treats of such topics as the management of epilepsies, sleeplessness, delirium, the alcohol and opium habit, and the care of the actually insane. In addition to this, we find plain, practical directions about massage, the movement cure, baths, the clinical thermometer, and the administration of the various forms of electricity. A number of illustrations are inserted."—Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter.

III. OUTLINES FOR THE MAN- AGEMENT OF DIET;

Or, The Regulation of Food to the Requirements of Health and the Treatment of Disease.

By E. T. BRUEN, M.D.

There is probably no more important branch of Physical culture than that pertaining to the subject of which this work treats. A proper recognition of the laws of health can only be maintained by careful observance of Dietary laws.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1867) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

BOOKS FOR SUMMER.

Society Verse by American Writers.

Edited by ERNEST DE LACRET PIERSON.
12mo, cloth. Elegantly printed on fine paper by the De Vinne Press. Price $1.25.

This collection of about eighty poems represents the best vers de société and dainty lyrics which have appeared in this country. It is virtually the first representative collection of vers de société by American writers ever published.

Mr. Incon's Misadventure.

By EDGAR SALTUS.

12mo, cloth, price $1.00.

A novel which is sure to be condemned by every one who prefers platitudes to paradox, or tea and toast to truffles and red pepper.

A catalogue of other publications sent on application.

BENJAMIN & BELL, Publishers,
744 Broadway, New York.

D. APPLETON & CO. SPIRITUALISM.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

The College and the Church:

The "HOW I WAS EDUCATED" PAPERS, AND THE DENOMINATIONAL "CONFESSIONS," from "The Forum Magazine." Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price $1.50.

The two series of articles, "How I was Educated" and "Confessions," attracted great attention as they appeared in "The Forum," and are now published in one volume at the request of numerous readers of that magazine. The "Confessions" are necessarily printed anonymously, but the "How I was Educated" papers are signed, the authors being some of the most distinguished of American scholars.

II.

English Composition and Rhetoric.

Enlarged Edition. Part First: INTELLECTUAL ELEMENTS OF STYLE. By ALEXANDER BAIN, LL.D., of the University of Aberdeen. 12mo, half leather, price $1.50.

Dr. Bain's well-known manual of "English Composition and Rhetoric" has been remodeled and enlarged, both in exposition and illustration, and is made to fall under two divisions, the first of which is now published, the second to follow shortly.

III.

On Teaching English,

WITH DETAILED EXAMPLES, AND AN INQUIRY INTO THE DEFINITION OF POETRY. By ALEXANDER BAIN, LL.D., author of "English Composition and Rhetoric." 12mo, cloth, price $1.25.

The present volume is auxiliary to the enlarged edition of the author's "English Composition and Rhetoric," the first part of which, "Intellectual Elements of Style," is published at the same time.

IV.

Arius the Libyan:

AN IDYL OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH. A new edition in new style, at a reduced price. 12mo, cloth, price $1.25.

"Arius the Libyan" is a stirring and vivid picture of the Christian Church in the latter part of the third and beginning of the fourth century. It is an admirable companion volume to General Wallace's "Ben Hur."

V.

In the Golden Days.

A NOVEL. By EDNA LYALL, author of "Donovan," "We Two," "Won by Waiting," "Knight-Errant." A new edition, uniform with the author's other books. 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

"Miss Lyall has given us a vigorous study of such life and character as are really worth reading about. The central figure of her story is Algernon Sydney; and this figure she invests with a singular dignity and power."—London Spectator.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

J. B. Lippincott Company have just published two important books on this subject.

Seybert Commission on Spiritualism.

Report of the Commission appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to investigate Modern Spiritualism, in accordance with the request of the late Henry Seybert.

Nineteenth Century Sense:

THE PARADOX OF SPIRITUALISM.

By John Darby,

Author of "Odd Hours of a Physician," "Thinkers and Thinking," "Two Thousand Years After," "Brushland," "Hours with John Darby." 16mo, extra cloth.

Either book will be sent by mail on receipt of the price, $1.00. If not attainable at your bookseller's, send direct to the publishers.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,

715 & 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

The Shaybacks in Camp.

Ten Summers Under Canvas. By SAMUEL J. BARROWS and ISABEL C. BARROWS. With Map of Lake Memphremagog. 16mo, $1.00.

An excellent summer book, containing many practical suggestions for spending vacation in a simple, healthful, and delightful way. The Shayback camp is a family camp, and its life and various interests are described in a most engaging and charming manner.

The Crusade of the Excelsior.

By BERT HARTE. With four illustrations. 16mo, $1.25.

This is one of the longest stories Mr. Harte has ever written, and it comes just in time for vacation reading.

The Law of Divorce.

A Treatise on the Law of Divorce, with the Causes for which Divorces will be granted in all the States and Territories; the Time of Residence required in each; and a brief Digest of all the leading Decisions by the Appellate Courts. Containing also a careful Compilation of the Latest Divorce Statistics. By A. PARLETT LLOYD, of the Baltimore Bar. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00; law sheep, $2.50.

The subject of divorce has assumed such importance that Mr. Lloyd's careful work will be very welcome and useful.

A Dictionary of Boston.

By EDWIN M. BACON. New Edition. With a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50; boards, $1.00.

This excellent book describes fully, minutely, and compactly the Boston of today, and the alphabetical arrangement makes its wealth of information easily accessible.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,
BOSTON.

BOOKS WANTED.

Advertiser, to complete his set of 1st Editions of Longfellow, will give $10 per volume for the following:—

"INFERNO," the 1st volume of Dante's Divine Comedy (translated by H. W. Longfellow), one of a few copies dated 1865.

"NEW ENGLAND TRAGEDIES," 1665, by H. W. LONGFELLOW, one of a few copies in press.

G. H. FISHER,

P. O. Box 3766,

New York.

BARGAINS IN BOOKS
Standard Works at half price and less. Autographs, Rare Prints, etc. Catalogue Free
LOREINE & CO., 41 W. 21st Street, N.Y.
OUR } "Cheaper than the Cheapest,"
SPECIALTY: } Better than the Best."

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1887. No. 13.

CONTENTS.

SPRINGHAVEN	195
THE CATHOLIC REACTION IN ITALY	195
AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE	196
THE GREAT ENGLISH DICTIONARY	196
THE STORY OF ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE	197
OBITER DICTA	198
JOHN SEVIER: COMMONWEALTH-BUILDER	198
A HISTORY OF ENGLAND FOR BEGINNERS	199
RECENT POETRY:
The Sleeping World, and Other Poems	201
Civitas: The Romance of Our Nation's Life	201
The Poet's Praise	201
Hallo, My Fancy	202
Ballads of the Revolution	202
Etc., Etc., Etc.
MINOR FICTION:
The Lilies of Florence, and Other Stories and Legends	202
The Great Hesper	203
The Cruise of a Woman Hater	203
Environment	203
Taken by Siege	203
A Humble Romance, and Other Stories	203
In Ole Virginia; or, Marse Chan and Other Stories	203
MINOR NOTICES:
The Phillips Exeter Lectures, 1885-1886	203
How to Make a Saint	204
Manners and Social Usages	204
Scribner's Magazine, Vol. I	204
Maternity, Infancy, Childhood	204
Outlines for the Management of Diet	204
The Rothschilds	204
Etc., Etc., Etc.
SOUTHERN LITERATURE	200
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	200
CORRESPONDENCE:
"The Modern Proteus"	201
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
May Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society	205
Good Old English Reading at "Dime Novel" Rates	205
ENGLISH OPINIONS	205
NEWS AND NOTES	205
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	207
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	207

SPRINGHAVEN.*

LONG before this time everybody has read Springhaven in the monthly installments, but it is well worth while to go leisurely over it in the book, for a leisurely way of reading is what it requires, since it is a novel of the slow, old-fashioned sort. What a contrast to the haste and impetuosity and high pressure of some of his popular contemporaries across the water is Mr. Blackmore's method! and of its kind a very excellent method it is. He lays out his work, minutely describes his localities, and makes us acquainted with the people who are to come into the story. It is as if we were ourselves living in Springhaven, and brought to know our neighbors intimately, as well as all the cliffs and hollows, the street, and the ways to the water-side of that romantic little town. It is a substantial and carefully built novel, a production worth going about in a business manner and finishing up with thoroughness, not forgetting the fine and subtle touches which the genuine artist understands where to bestow. Of course Mr. Blackmore could never write another Lorna Doone, so let us take Springhaven, and be thankful for Dolly Darling and Faith,

* Springhaven. A Tale of the Great War. By R. D. Blackmore. Harper & Bros. $1.50.

for the rare bits of his characteristic description, for the glimpses he gives us of his love for dumb creatures, for the portraits of true heroes, and, most, for his fidelity to human nature in depicting the rough but kindly fisher folk and gossips, till we feel the stir of village life, and the importance that obscure corner of the great world takes on in the eyes of its inhabitants, where a small event would last "a long time to think over," and to say the same thing about "that each other had said to them every time they met."

Although the author has taken so much pains to make Nelson and Napoleon objects of interest, they are altogether overshadowed by the obscure Tugwell and Stubbard, capital characters out of real life, and the lovable old Admiral Darling, with his sweetness and fidelity, and the simplicity of his humor that he is never conscious of himself, as when he talks over Captain Honyman's badly-spelled letter:

"No good officer ever spells well, whether in the army or the navy. Look at Nelson's letters. I am inclined to ascribe my own slow promotion to the unnatural accuracy of my spelling, which offended my lords, because it puzzled them." . . . "Robert Honyman all over." . . . "Twas an old joke against him, when he was lieutenant, that he never could spell his own title; and he never would put an e after an o in any word. He is far too straightforward a man to spell well; and now the loss of those fingers will cut his words shorter than ever, and be a fine excuse for him."

It is a strong and fine novel, with breadth in its conception and careful finish in its details; vigorous in treatment, but with that underlying delicacy of sentiment which is a charm in Mr. Blackmore's books; and such a genial feeling towards human kind that one needs must wonder why the gentle old Admiral should have been so unmercifully slain without a cause, since no artistic limitations or rules could have been violated by letting him live. Of the illustrations it may be said that in most cases the artists have appreciated and are in sympathy with their subjects.

THE CATHOLIC REACTION IN ITALY.*

IN completion of his stately and magnificent review of the renaissance period in Italy, Mr. Symonds has come at length to the epoch of Catholic revival, which, like a mighty dam set across a great river, hemmed back the waters of the new learning and turned them aside into unworn and tortuous channels. To the study of this epoch Mr. Symonds brings a wonderfully rich store of knowledge, clear artistic perceptions, and a philosophical grasp of cause and effect forcing varied and complex tendencies into one definite focus. The thread of a well-determined purpose is kept always in view in the course of the resplendent narrative, which with all its adornments of an exuberant imagination is never vague or elusive. From the beginning to the end of these two large volumes one follows the story of national development and decadence with unfaltering attention. The many-colored panorama reveals alternately elements of healthfulness and decay, and terminates in a majestic outlook wherein "the student of the splendid and the bitter past may pause and bow his gratitude to heaven, and swear that, after all, all things are well."

* Renaissance in Italy. The Catholic Reaction. By John Addington Symonds. Two vols. Henry Holt & Co. $7.00.

The first volume clears the ground and opens the way to an adequate treatment of the intellectual forces which manifested themselves during the Catholic revival in the domains of literature, music, and art. The influence of Spain in Italian affairs is clearly explained; the conduct, character, and power of the Tridentine Council are analyzed and illustrated; the work of the Holy Office is laid bare; and the organization of the Company of Jesus is minutely studied. With regard to Jesuitry, Mr. Symonds takes the ground that it never, properly speaking, deflected from the spirit and intention of Ignatius, but remained throughout the seventeenth century a logical and necessary development on the lines laid down by its founder. Ignatius he compares to Machiavelli, "endeavoring to save a corrupt state by utilizing corruption for ends acknowledged sound." "Monopolists of Brummagem manufactures" is the severest epithet Mr. Symonds has for the Jesuits, in whose ranks he finds few eminences even of the second order. Yet when sound learning had been killed down by the Inquisition, the Index, Spain, and the Papacy, Jesuitry acted like a forcing-frame and brought forth "a rank growth of unwholesome culture." The Catholic revival was, therefore, a direct check upon the natural tide of Italian energy; its influence upon the national temperament was necessarily unhealthy. "We have a right to expect, what in fact we find, the advent of hypocrisy and ceremonial observances, but little actual amendment in manners."

In illustration of this view Mr. Symonds narrates a few of the most remarkable of the domestic tragedies occurring in Italy during the second half of the sixteenth century, selecting by preference those which rest upon authentic documentary evidence and which throw vivid light upon the general social condition of the country. It was a period of the almost universal gratification of lawless passions by means of an almost unparalleled facility of bloodshed, and this portion of the book is anything but savory reading, although the author attempts only to present facts. He reduces, as he himself says, the poetry of the legend of the Cenci "to comparatively squalid prose," while at the end admitting that there is room for belief in the popular opinion of Beatrice's wrongs. He gives a number of causes celf- bres, traces the history of the Medici family, summarizes the confessions of two memorable murderers, and describes the moral condition of the peasantry, the power of superstition, and the prevalence of witchcraft.

In the midst of all these adverse and corrupt influences strong individual forces were at work in the line of creative genius, and to the consideration of these Mr. Symonds devotes his second volume. Tasso and the Gerusalemme Liberata are the themes of two valuable chapters; Tasso is regarded, not without due cognizance of the fate of Bruno, not only as the representative poet, but as the representative martyr of his age, his life of irresolute misery being rightly estimated as containing more of the elements of martyrdom than Bruno's triumphal death. Of the importance of Bruno as a philosopher Mr. Symonds can hardly say enough. His system was golden, divine, a rapturous vision worth the pangs of death at the stake. But a study of Bruno as the great precursor of modern thought in its more poetical and widely synthetic speculation is left for a separate essay. A chapter on Sarpi follows, he being celebrated as "the Christian stoic;" then comes an essay on the minor poets, Guarino, Marino, and the rest; then a study of Palestrina as "the Saviour of music;" another on the Bolognese school of painters and the "pseudo-grand style;" a concluding chapter in which the trend of general European history during the period of the Renaissance is outlined, the identity of Renaissance and Reformation emphasized, and Italy's present and future set forth in words of glowing eulogy and faith; and, finally, a consideration of the ephemeral persistence of humanity on earth, of the futility in believing, "while the infant founts of knowledge are still murmuring in our ears," that any form of faith or science is permanent, and the conclusion that it is "our truest, as it is our humblest, wisdom to live by faith and love."

AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE.*

EVERYBODY knows how in the spring of 1884 Thomas Stevens began at the boundaries of the Golden Gate his ride Around the World on a Bicycle, and has heard now and then ad interim echoes of the adventures he has met with in foreign lands and of the triumphal ending of his undertaking last year. Here, in this closely filled volume teeming with illustrations and prefaced by a striking lithograph portrait, we have the first part of the greatest of modern Odysseys. The book is distinctly unliterary and is for that reason all the more entrancing. Mr. Stevens writes as he rode, straight ahead, daring all obstacles, suffering now and then a "header," but up and on again, intent only on his purpose of "getting there." And Mr. Stevens has a genius for "getting there." Mounted on his airy wheel, carrying the scantiest of luggage, he glides along over the deserts of Nevada, pushes across the Rockies, crosses the continent, and once beyond the Atlantic, begins the most exciting portion of his globe-encircling tour through Germany, Austria, and Hungary, through the Slavonic provinces into Turkey, and thence eastward traversing the wild roads and difficult passes of Asia Minor, entering the Shah's dominions, and finding a convenient resting-place at Teheran.

Everywhere and in all situations Mr. Stevens is the Yankee Odysseus — observant, courageous, keen-witted, fertile in resources, abounding in tact. It is not so much as a display of physical energy that this journey is memorable, but as a triumph of skill and daring told in a narrative of modest eloquence. Of the many peoples that he saw Mr. Stevens writes with clear perception and ready sympathy. He was most of the time after leaving western Europe off beaten tracks, and he saw much that was new and interesting. He was often in peril, and the accounts he gives of experiences with Oriental highwaymen are sufficiently thrilling to stir the blood. Yet in the main the very nature of his bold undertaking made him an object of hospitable curiosity, and there is not a little humor in his descriptions of life among the Turks and Persians. As a book of travels, pure and simple, the volume is better worth reading than many a more pretentious work from a more experienced pen. It is honest, straightforward, full of original observation, and of course spiced with abundance of adventure. Those who think that romance is dead, and that with the advance of science the world has become disenchanted, will find in Mr. Stevens's narrative a source of mental enjoyment comparable only to the youthful pleasure with which they followed the marvels of the Thousand and One Nights.

THE GREAT ENGLISH DICTIONARY.*

WE will assume that our readers are sufficiently familiar with the history of the plan which has thus far resulted in 1,040 pages of A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles; these pages, however, reaching only to the word "Bozzom," though they are one inch longer and one quarter of an inch broader than the pages of Webster's Unabridged, and contain smaller type, with no space occupied by illustration.

Letting go all preliminaries, we wish to set down in the clearest manner what this great word-book is and is to be. To do this we will first transcribe its entire treatment of one word, "Alway":

Alway (phonetic re-spelling) adv. Forms: 1-2 alne weg (W. S. ealne weg), 3-4 alne way, 4-5 alle wey, al wey, 5-6 allewey, allwey, alwey, 5- alway. [orig. two words ALL and WAY, in the accusative of space or distance, = all the way, The whole way, probably at first in reference to space traversed, but already in the oldest Eng. transferred to an extent of time, all along, all the time, continually. Afterwards confused with the genitive form, ALWAYS, which has superseded it in prose, alway surviving only in poetry or as an archai-m.]

1. All along, all the time, perpetually, throughout all time.

c 885 K. ÆLFRED Boeth. xxxviii. § 5, & thæt ealne weg siofodest thæt hi ealne weg naeron on wite, & ie the saede ealne weg thæt hi naefre ne biōth buton wite. 1340 Aeneid, 136. The wel couaytouse wreche thet alne way heth thet eye to the guodes thet othre habbeth and doth alne way and maketh alne way semberlith thet he ne heth nayt. c 1374 CHAUCER Anel. & Arc. 236. For to love him Alwey [v. r. alwey, alway] never the lease. 1398 TRIVISA Barth De P. R. v. xx. (1495) 126. Yf lyfe duryd a thousande yere alwey shold grow teeth more and more. 1611 BIBLE Matt. xxviii. 20. And Loe, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. 1845 NEALE Hymns for Sick 36, Whoso receiveth them, receiveth Thee, With them alway. a 1858 MUHLENBERG Hymn, I would not live alway, I ask not to

2. = ALWAYS 1; every time, at all times, on all occasions. Opposed to sometimes, occasionally.

c 1410 Sir Cleges 221, Wethyr wee have les or more, Allwey thanke we God therefore. 1473 WARKW. Chron. 4, Alwey he promysed he would do. 1513, MORR. Edw. v (1641) 7. Not alway for ill will, but oftener for ambition. 1535 COVERDAL 2 Sam. xv. 2, Abesalom gad him up allwey early in the mornynge, and stode in the waye by the porte. 1611 BIBLE John vii. 6, My time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready. 1851 TRENCH Poems 46, And boldly use the children's prayer alway. 1868 MISS J. E. BROWN Lights thro' Lattice 56, For he [the foe] doth mark each open door alway.

† 3. In any case, after all, still. = ALWAYS 3. Obs.:

a 1400 in Hallam Mid. Ages (1872) iii. 91, Savyng alwey to our liege lord his real prerogatif. 1413 LYDG. Pilgr. Soule iv. 30 (1483) 67, He a disciple is, thou arte a lord, Thou al away art greter than he is. 1475 Bk. Noblesse 34, Notwithstanding so oft tymes treves and alliances taken and made . . . alle waye whan the Frenshe partie coude have and fynde any avantage or coloure . . . they did make new werre.

We have not space to give a complete list of the abbreviations employed, but remark that under "Forms," given above, "1, 2," etc., mean "to A.D. 1100, 1200," etc. The date of the earliest citation is 885. The range of time, then, is a full thousand years. The student of English literature need not ask whether he can follow a word now used back to the times of Wycliffe and Chaucer, and, further, to Robert of Gloucester and Ormin and Layamon. He can go back to five centuries earlier than Layamon, and renew the speech of King Alfred, and some stammering accents of a hundred years before him.

It is not, however, an English Dictionary with an Anglo-Saxon Dictionary prefixed or intermingled. This would be true of it so far as words now used are concerned. These can all be traced to their first appearance in our literature, whether the time be the eighth century or the nineteenth. The distinction between Anglo-Saxon — or, better, Old English — and English is completely ignored. The vocabulary of the great Saxon king stands side by side with that of Tennyson and Mrs. Stowe. The large Anglo-Saxon Dictionary of Bosworth and Toller, so far as issued, is surpassed by the present work in its own field in regard to words not now obsolete. In Bosworth-Toller the conjunction "and" has but one meaning, and occupies, with all its examples, less than four lines. The meanings of "also" and "both—and" (found in A. S. John xiii: 32, xii: 28) are omitted, though mentioned in the Murray Dictionary. Still the present is not an Anglo-Saxon word-book, because it does not contain Anglo-Saxon words that had become obsolete in A.D. 1150! No one will complain of this as too exclusive. Thus the word "arm," poor (same as the German), is included, and has seven citations, the latest being 1250.

* Around the World on a Bicycle. Vol. I. From San Francisco to Teheran. By Thomas Stevens. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

* A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Edited by James A. H. Murray, LL.D. Parts I—II—III. A—Bos. Macmillan & Co. Each $3.25.

The most striking feature of the new Dictionary is the wealth of citation which marks every page; and this cannot be separated from the careful analysis of meanings, each of the forty-one meanings, e.g., of the preposition "at," being supported by from six to twelve citations. Is not this overdone? Possibly. Under "andiron" we have twenty-one citations, beginning with A.D. 1300, and ending at 1878, with Mrs. Stowe's Poganuc People. Perhaps ten or a dozen of these would never be missed. Perhaps the mere fact of having accumulated toilsomely a mass of examples tends to blunt the critical faculty about admitting them; but we are unwilling to find fault with the riches laid under our eyes. If any were cut off it would probably be the later ones, and how long will it be before those will begin to seem distant?

The etymological work in the Dictionary deserves high praise. Though coming after Skeat, the editor does not simply compile and abridge, but shows both judgment and acuteness. Witness his discussion of the doubtful word "bachelor."

To show the position of the work in lexicography, one must compare it, not with an etymological dictionary like Skeat's, which of course allows fuller discussion of derivation, but with the great historical dictionaries of Littré and the brothers Grimm. Littré's work, which has furnished the model for the page, is far outstripped in typography, in the development of meanings, the fullness of citations, and their chronological presentation. We hesitate to claim superiority in essentials over the Grimm Wörterbuch. The dating of forms and citations in the English work is certainly better, as also the type, but on the whole it is enough to say that the two deserve to stand, or rather go on, side by side.

Is the work before us, then, perfect? But a perfect dictionary means, in the highest sense, human infallibility. A dictionary-maker would be the last man to make such a claim. If Dr. Murray should make it in regard to the word "always," we should dispute it somewhat, in this wise: Why should not the first meaning be simply local, all the way? Not only were the two words used probably at first in reference to space traversed, but, in the familiar narrative by King Alfred of the voyages of Othere and Wulfstan, the words, five times over, seem to us unmistakably to refer to place. The passages are as follows, partly translated:

"Then fared he due north along the land, leaving the waste land all the way [ealne weg] on his star-board." "But the waste land was all the way [ealne weg] on his star-board." "And all the way [ealne weg] on the larboard is Norway." "The ship was all the way [ealne weg] running under sail." "Wendland was all the way [ealne weg] on our star-board." Orosius I. i. 13, 18, 20.

If any evidence is needed that "all the way" here does not mean "all the while," we have it in a clause close by one just quoted: "And all the while [ealle tha hwile] he must sail near land." (18) When the writer wished to refer to time he could easily and distinctly do so.

We are not sure, also, but room should be made under "always" for that noteworthy literal meaning found in Acts xxiv: 3 (1611): "We accept it always (rev. ver. in all ways) and in all places."

We will not criticise further, but simply rejoice and give thanks for such a work as this promises to be, and already is. The thousand pages now complete will, we compute, grow to nearly ten thousand. May we enjoy the last page with the readers of the Literary World!

THE STORY OF ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE.*

THE story which Prof. Mahaffy has related in this captivating volume is of great complexity, and, in weaker hands, would almost inevitably have been a tale of perplexing confusion. But Prof. Mahaffy has a firm grasp of his complicated subject, and succeeds in his purpose of sifting "the wheat of important events from the chaff of raids and campaigns," and, from beginning to end of the book, keeps his main object clearly in view. The account of the conquests of Alexander is rapidly summarized, and then, with a clear understanding of his achievements in war, we come at once to the chief intention of Prof. Mahaffy, which is to recount the history of the different portions of the empire, as they rapidly gained and lost their independence and finally were absorbed into the dominions of Rome. This paragraph from the author's preface is fully justified:

As we thread our way through the labyrinth of bloody wars and assassinations, we find our attention happily distracted by studying the influence, which is perceptible in them all, of the ideas that Alexander impressed upon the peoples that he conquered. It is one of the purposes of this volume to present this complex truth distinctly to the reader, and to show also how considerably Rome was influenced by the ideas of conquered Greece, as well as to indicate the manner in which Hellenistic influences modified the characteristics of the dominant people.

The portrayal of the rise and progress of Hellenistic culture gives unity to the whole narrative; and Prof. Mahaffy brings to his task breadth of scholarship, a remarkable capacity for synthesis, and a lucid and graceful style. The book is throughout, notwithstanding the perplexities of homonymous towns, the recurrence of the same names for different personages, and the intricate chronology of the Diadochi, as readable as any historical romance, and it is in its way a contribution to historical literature of very decided significance.

Nothing could be better than the first ten chapters of the volume, describing briefly but clearly the momentous victories of Alexander, his methods of warfare, his wild schemes for mastering the world, his organization of his dominions, his revels in camp, the portents that preceded and the terror and confusion that followed his death, the division of the empire, and the internecine struggles of half a century that followed among the satraps and their successors, the invasion of the Celts—with its welding influence upon the feelings and interest of the Hellenistic world—the career of Phyrus, the Epirot, and the advent of the golden age of Hellenism, the relations of the three great kingdoms of Macedonia, Egypt, and Syria, the condition of the lesser powers, and the characteristics of Hellenistic city life. An effective page records the doom of the posthumous son of Alexander:

Nothing in history is more tragic than the fate of this child of thirteen, for whom all the world waited in anxious expectation; born with no father to protect him, and carried about even as an infant from camp to camp, from province to province, the watchword of parties, the cloak for ambitions, the excuse for murders, in charge of two homicidal princesses, his mother and grandmother. Then he was gradually neglected, confined, imprisoned, and while titular lord of all the Eastern world, was the captive of a cruel and relentless despot. At last he disappears like the English princes in the Tower, with a fate like that of Louis XVII and of the Roi de Rome, but without leaving us a trace of his person or of his character. He gives the date and authority to coins; he is named in pompous hieroglyphics as the King Alexander, the Great Lord, Blessed, that liveth forever. To us, as to the men that made the inscription, the imperial child is but a name, and yet so tragic from its very fortune that few of the greatest sufferers, whose heroic sorrows are known to us all, can claim a higher place in the hierarchy of human martyrdom.

Prof. Mahaffy goes on to trace (always with brevity, but definitely and persuasively) the development of philosophy under the Diadochi, the possible influence of Buddhism on the Hellenistic world, and the condition of science and letters at Alexandria in the days of Philadelphus. Prof. Mahaffy attaches much importance to the translation of the Septuagint, which shows us what sort of Greek was spoken in Hellenistic capitals—very coarse and rude as compared with Attic refinement, interlarded with local words, which would differ according to the province and its older tongue, but a practical and hardy common language, such as Latin was in the Europe of the Middle Ages, and such as we hope English will one day become, when we make our spelling as simple as our grammar, and give up the absurd fashion of writing one sound and speaking another.

* The Story of Alexander's Empire. By Professor John Pentland Mahaffy, D.D. With the Collaboration of Arthur Gilman, M.A. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

Prof. Mahaffy devotes two chapters to Pergamum and Rhodes and exalts their peacefulness, prosperity, and culture, until they show forth as oases of self-restraint in the midst of the wars, tumults, and private murders going on in the neighboring dominions. The rise of the Archæan League and the spread of federations are carefully considered, and then, after chapters on the reign of Demetrius II, the struggles of Cleomenes and Antigonos, the campaigns of Antiochus "the Great," and the career of Philip of Macedon, comes the story of the gradual assertion of Roman supremacy, till Popilius Lænas drew his famous circle about the fourth Antiochus, and the empire of Alexander, founded by a single genius, broken up by ambitious generals, held together in spirit and in culture by unity of language, of interests, of commerce, sank into dependence upon Rome, and ceases to have any other than a spiritual history.

In a closing chapter is given in outline a picture of the influence of Hellenism on Rome, of how beneath the surface scum of the prevailing Græcomania the purest and best of the Romans were learning from the Greeks the knowledge of philosophy, history, poetry, the plastic arts, and finally architecture, and ultimately spread them over the world in Roman form. The conquerors were conquered. The spirit of the empire of Alexander never died, but "after centuries of foreign life in the heart of Rome, came back to adorn the distant regions where it had made its earliest and perhaps its greatest conquests."

It is a magnificent era in history thus depicted, and Prof. Mahaffy in his masterly epitome of its events and tendencies has left nothing to be desired. The accurate maps, and the many fine illustrations of coins, statues, and other works of art, are distinct aids to comprehension and are exceedingly creditable to the publishers.

OBITER DICTA.*

IT is pleasant to have another batch of Obiter Dicta with the author's name upon the title-page. Mr. Birrell is a graceful and amusing essayist, and he has the art of saying a great deal in an attractive way. He has scholarship without a shadow of pedantry; he has ideas of his own and does not hesitate to utter them, however unconventional they may be; he has human sympathies; he holds to the old-fashioned theory that literature ought to please, and he is earnest in expressing his pleasure. To read this book, or its predecessor with the same title, is like listening to a wise and witty companion who has the masterpieces of English prose and poetry stored in his memory, and in dressing-gown, with feet on fender, chats at ease.

Mr. Birrell, in formulating his literary creed, asserts three fundamental principles: that it is the first duty of authors to write agreeably; that reading is not a duty and therefore should not be made disagreeable; and that nobody is under any obligation to read any other man's book. One of the best essays in the volume is on Samuel Johnson, a glowing but not extravagant tribute to the personal and intellectual qualities of the great lexicographer. Incidentally there are some comparisons between Johnson and Carlyle, and the biographies of the two men are effectually contrasted. "Boswell's book," writes Mr. Birrell, "is an arc of triumph, through which, as we read, we see his hero passing into eternal fame. . . . Froude's book is a tomb over which the lovers of Carlyle's genius will never cease to shed tender but regretful tears." After reading in the Reminiscences Carlyle's outcries against dyspepsia and sleeplessness, Mr. Birrell quotes with "thankfulness and reverence" the letter in which Johnson told Mrs. Thrale how he endured an attack of paralysis. No attempt is made to disparage Carlyle to the glory of Johnson, but the suggestion is made that "it would be better for a man's reputation to be knocked down by Dr. Johnson than picked up by Mr. Froude."

Another excellent essay is that on Milton, which opens the volume. Mr. Birrell does away with the popular idea that Milton was a person of prominence in the government of the Commonwealth. He was simply a clerk to the council and had nothing to do with shaping the foreign policy under Cromwell, and there is no reason to suppose that Cromwell and Milton ever exchanged words. Milton, it is well to remember, is not mentioned in Clarendon's history; Thurloe speaks of him as a blind man who wrote Latin letters; and Richard Baxter in his autobiography does not speak of Milton at all. There can be no doubt that owing to the controversy with Salmasius, Milton's reputation on the continent was much greater during his lifetime than at home. Mr. Birrell is bold enough openly to admire Paradise Lost:

The story of the Fall of Man, as recorded in the Semitic legend, is to me more attractive as a story than the Tale of Troy, and I find the rebellion of Satan and his dire revenge more to my mind than the circles of Dante. Eve is, I think, more interesting than "Heaven-born Helen, Sparta's queen"—I mean in herself and as a woman to write poetry about.

Of course a man who admires Paradise Lost finds Pope to be a poet, particularly as his "lines not infrequently scan and almost always rhyme." Mr. Birrell thinks too that Pope's Iliad is the best "after Homer's," in spite of the fact that Pope did not know Greek. "Had he done so he probably would not have translated Homer, though he might have lectured on how not to do it." On the whole, Mr. Birrell discovers in Pope a great deal worthy of praise, and finally commends him to members of Parliament who would keep alive the scholarly traditions of the past. "Think how, at all events, the labor members would applaud, not with a 'sad civility,' but with downright cheers, a quotation they actually understood." Charles Lamb, as may be supposed, is another favorite of the author of Obiter Dicta:

Lamb's letters from first to last are full of the philosophy of life; he was as sensible a man as Dr. Johnson. One grows sick of the expressions, "poor Charles Lamb," "gentle Charles Lamb," as if he were one of those grown-up children of the Leigh Hunt type, who are perpetually begging and borrowing through the round of every man's acquaintance. Charles Lamb earned his own living, paid his own way; was the helper, not the helped; a man who was beholden to no one, who always came with gifts in his hand, a shrewd man capable of advice, strong in council. Poor Lamb, indeed! Poor Coleridge, robbed of his will; poor Wordsworth, devoured by his own ego; poor Southey, writing his tomes and deeming himself a classic; poor Carlyle, with his nine volumes of memoirs, where he Lies like a hedgehog rolled up the wrong way, Tormenting himself with his prickles—

call these men poor, if you feel it decent to do so, but not Lamb, who was rich in all that makes life valuable or memory sweet.

We have probably indicated sufficiently well the point of view taken by Mr. Birrell. He does not find much to please him in Emerson, of whom the complaint is put forward that he "makes no terms with his readers" and that his utterances are too often "thin and vague." Of "intellectual Boston," as described in Dr. Holmes's memoir of Emerson, Mr. Birrell says:

It does not seem to have been a very strong place. We lack performance. It is of small avail to write, as Dr. Holmes does, about "brilliant circles" and "literary luminaries," and then to pass on, and leave the circles circulating and the luminaries shining in vacuo. We want to know how they were brilliant and what they illuminated.

Other attractive essays in this volume are in defense of the epic element in history, on the persistence of human types, and on the fascinations of book-buying.

JOHN SEVIER: COMMONWEALTH-BUILDER.*

MR. GILMORE in this romantic narrative takes up a little-known chapter in American history and reveals to us in the person of John Sevier a character deserving of unflinching memory and honor, one of the primal forces in the founding of the great commonwealths which grew immediately out of the original thirteen colonies. To him the State of Tennessee owes its existence, and the period of paternal rule during which he administered the affairs of its first citizens is in benignity and power almost unparalleled in the annals of popular sovereignty.

* John Sevier as a Commonwealth-Builder; a Sequel to the Rear-Guard of the Revolution. By James R. Gilmore. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* Obiter Dicta. Second Series. By Augustine Birrell. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

Mr. Gilmore has been a faithful student of the life of Sevier, and in a previous book, The Rear-Guard of the Revolution, told the story of his services up to the heroic attack at King's Mountain, when, with a force of 950 men, he was instrumental in defeating the left wing of Cornwallis's army and thereby struck a sturdy blow, which was followed at Yorktown by the achievement of American independence. In the book now before us Mr. Gilmore continues the narrative of Sevier's career, beginning with the formation of the State of Franklin. Mr. Gilmore has depended largely on traditions for his materials, but these traditions were gathered by systematic inquiry from descendants of the pioneers and from those who knew the chief actors in the events recorded. The accounts thus obtained, carefully compared with one another and verified as far as possible by documentary evidence, form the substance of a narrative which in all chief points is undoubtedly authentic, and which in freshness, originality, and incident, has many of the attractions of wholesome romance.

The opening chapter brings out clearly the radical difference between the trans-Alleghany settlers who formed the Commonwealth of Tennessee and the intervening colonists of North Carolina. Both classes went out from Virginia, but they were of very dissimilar character. The first, more adventurous, and although penetrating into the heart of the wilderness, more prosperous, were for the most part men of cultivation and inherited ability.

They were so generally educated that in 1776 only two in about two hundred were found unable to write their names in good, legible English. No body of men ever had clearer ideas of civil polity or more highly valued the blessings of good government. Order-loving and God-fearing, they lived together for twelve years without so much as one capital crime among them. Shut out by wide forests and high mountain barriers from civilized law, they made their own laws, and framed for themselves a government which was, with the sole exception of the "Fundamental Agreement," entered into by the "free planters" of New Haven on June 4, 1639, the first absolutely "free and independent" constitution that existed in this country.

With such a company the exploits of John Sevier are not surprising. He found them a handful of thirty holding their own against twenty thousand armed savages; in five years they numbered two hundred riflemen, and then for six years they kept the gateways of the Alleghanies and beat back with fearful slaughter the savages that, enlisted on the side of the British, would have carried desolation into Eastern Carolina. Then when peace came and the exactions of the mother colony were unbearable, these brave "over-mountain men" set up a government for themselves under Quaker auspices. The State of Franklin was an abortive failure, but it paved the way for the formation of Tennessee, of which Sevier was six times unanimously chosen Governor, and which he represented through three successive elections in Congress till the day of his death.

Sevier, as Mr. Gilmore depicts him, is a fascinating personality. He was of honorable lineage, a born leader of men, one who "knew how to achieve great results with slender means." His remarkable strength of purpose and surety of action were combined with delicacy of manner and kindness of heart. He had enemies, two of whom, Joseph Martin and John Tipton, Mr. Gilmore, contrary to received opinion, shows in an unfavorable light, the one as a traitor, the other as a demagogue. But Sevier was without doubt the idol of his people. They revered his wishes, and though, as a class, impatient of restraint, abstained to a remarkable degree from crime, and in cases of controversy the Governor was the authority of universal appeal. Mr. Gilmore draws an effective picture of the patriarchal sway of this great and good man. It was said that he could call every man and woman in the State by name even when they numbered more than a hundred thousand, and to all he was like an affectionate, unassuming brother, assisting those in distress until he impoverished himself for the good of others. "I have called him," says Mr. Gilmore in concluding, "a hero, a soldier, and a statesman;" but he was more than all these: he was a civilizer, a great organizer, a nation-builder. He found Tennessee a little cluster of log houses, and he left it a great State, with happy homesteads, and smiling villages, and populous cities, in which were palatial dwellings and magnificent temples and a population of nearly four hundred thousand souls. To this day Tennessee has left him without a monument; and it may be said that no monument can so well proclaim his greatness as the great State which he built.

A HISTORY OF ENGLAND FOR BEGINNERS.*

WITHOUT attempting to enter into a comparative judgment of the various elementary histories of England now before the public, we may as well say at the outset of this notice that we regard Mrs. Fisher's History of England for Beginners as a work of exceptionally high merit, a decided acquisition to the list of authoritative text-books on the subject, and a volume that even those who are familiar with the details of English history may read with not a little pleasure.

Mrs. Fisher has a sure command of essential facts. Her knowledge of obscure periods is exact and thorough. She is, as far as we have examined her text, absolutely impartial. The arrangement of her material is unquestionably scientific. She holds firmly to her intention of depicting "the rise and development of England," of presenting the record of events in such a way as to show the achievements of the English people and the growth of laws, constitution, trade, and colonies. Her account of the mingling of race elements in early Britain and Old England is the clearest and altogether the most satisfactory of any brief outline with which we are acquainted. Her style is charmingly simple, because conveying definite ideas. She is not afraid of big words where they are necessary, but uses them with unflinching discrimination. She never attempts to write down to uncultivated intelligences, yet leaves no sentence vague or obscure. The knowledge is sure, the thought direct, the phrasing in harmony with the thought. We do not mean to say that Mrs. Fisher's book is perfect; it probably contains some errors; but it comes as near to perfection as any reasonable critic has a right to demand. As an example of Mrs. Fisher's style we quote the paragraph relating to the American civil war:

The Northern States did not allow slavery, but the Southern States still had slaves, and they were very sore when in 1850 the new State of California adopted laws forbidding slavery. Still up to 1860 the Presidents of the United States had been chiefly on the side of the South. In that year the Abolitionists succeeded in electing Abraham Lincoln, a just and moderate man, who would not have favored the slave owners, though he would have respected their laws. Upon this the Southern States wished to secede and form a confederacy of their own, and a war broke out which lasted four years. Now as the raw cotton used by English manufacturers came chiefly from the Southern States, whose ports were soon blockaded by the North, thousands of men and women in the cotton factories of Lancashire were thrown out of work and almost starved before cotton could be got from Egypt and India. In spite of all the funds which were raised for them, they suffered terribly, but they bore it most patiently, and even sympathized with the war, because they thought that no men ought to be slaves. The higher classes of England were not so wise. They sympathized chiefly with the South, and many vessels, among which was the famous Alabama, were built in English shipyards and allowed to go to the Southerners to be used in the war. At last in 1865 the North conquered, and slavery was abolished, though noble Abraham Lincoln was shot by an assassin. The Americans had now time to complain to the English government for having allowed ships to be built for the rebels, and in the end England had to pay three million pounds in compensation for the mischief which the Alabama had done.

The History is brought up to the Victorian "jubilee," and in regard to recent events has a proper respect for the doctrine of relative values. The account of "Irish obstruction" is wholly just; the difficulties of the present outlook are calmly stated; and the intellectual and material advances of the last fifty years are happily summarized. All the wars in which England has taken part since the Indian mutiny are enumerated and characterized in the space of half a page. The comment on the war in the Soudan "to support the Khedive against the Arabs" is that then "for the first time in history, a European army ascended the Nile in boats. It was in this war that the hero, Charles George Gordon, lost his life in Khartoum."

Mrs. Fisher provides a table of contents which is at the same time a running abstract of each chapter, and by the aid of marginal dates, a chronological table. Dates are used sparingly in the text, but are printed at the head of the pages and in the marginal index. The tables of genealogies are exceptionally good; and the maps, though few in number, are models of taste and skill.

* History of England for Beginners. By Arabella B. Buckley (Mrs. Fisher). Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JUNE 25, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

SOUTHERN LITERATURE.

WE hear a great deal about Southern literature nowadays, and no doubt the novelty and excellence of the literary productions now coming from the South justify careful attention. But it is a question whether the universal outburst of eulogy which has arisen may not work harm to the interesting coterie of young writers, upon whom the continuance of the literary revival depends. Time was when a novelist wrought long and faithfully to win the public applause. Many volumes were needed to build up the fame of Dickens and Thackeray, of Cooper and Hawthorne, of (to descend the scale with a rapid diminuendo) Mr. Howells and Mr. Henry James. But here are several youths and maidens sailing into the harbor of renown by the aid of no other argosy than a short story or a bit of vers de société! Honor to whom honor is due. If the story and the poem are good, let us say so, warmly, loudly, three times over. But let us not cast our laurel wreaths about with too lavish a hand. These valiant competitors have hardly begun the race, and behold, we crown them in advance as victors, and enshrine their portraits and the record of their achievements in that convenient modern substitute for the temple of fame—the monthly magazine! Surely this is not wise. If we pitch our ideals so low, will there be any to rise above them?

If it be once thoroughly understood that the loftiest Northern conception of Southern literature is a short tale of plantation life told in negro dialect, or a more or less successfully rhymed description of Southern scenery, shall we be likely to get anything better? Is it not true in literature as in other departments of productive labor, that the supply is proportioned to the demand? No man will bring the golden apples of the Hesperides to market if people will pay more for common fruit.

Already we think we discover traces of degeneration in the work of the Southern writer. He is inclined to repeat himself. He utilizes themes he has already made familiar and seeks to give them renewed popularity by giving them new forms. We have had the negro served up as the pièce de résistance in various garbs, and in spite of our sincere recognition of his humanity we confess that we are finding him a little tiresome. Are all negroes as jolly, as humorous, as innocently sinful as they are represented to be by the contemporary writer of successful short stories? We have our doubts. There are other sides to negro life, to Southern life generally, which have never yet got into literature. We have had the negro in various guises; we have had the creole; and we have had, in spite of Miss Murfree's mannerisms, the mountaineer. Aside from these three types no other figure, identified with the South, has been clearly and definitely depicted. Southern heroines are still for the most part impossible creations; Southern planters as they appear in the literature of the South are, as artistic portrayals, monotonous failures; Southern scenes and Southern customs are invested with a glamour of pseudo-romance as offensive as it is unreal.

And yet what a field there is in the South for the exercise of the novelist's capabilities! From the early colonial days on through the development of the planter caste, with all its old-time glory and old-time shame; on through the more complicated social system that immediately preceded the war; on through the war with its infinite variety of influence upon Southern character; on through the era of reconstruction with so much in the background that the North has never fully known; on into the superb modern period of commercial and intellectual awakening, involving the intrusion of foreign forces and the assimilation of new ideas—what a magnificent panorama of history and romance is there lying ready for the master hand to touch it into life!

And this is the unexampled heritage of the Southern writer. Since the English renaissance of the sixteenth century there has been no such accumulation of human experience left unrecorded by human pen. The Southern writer of today has within his grasp all this wonderful wealth of material, and he contents himself with tales of plantation negroes and with facile imitations of French balladists or English cockney rhymesters of society verse! It may be that the very superfluity of riches at command is an embarrassment, and that the new Southern writers prefer to cull the wayside blossoms of fancy rather than to penetrate the dense wilds where imagination loves to wander. Still we cannot help believing that the pitiful optimism of Northern criticism has had much to do with this state of things. It is so easy to praise indiscriminately, so easy to lose all sense of relative values, so difficult to be wholly and entirely just.

But we hope that the Southern writers who are adding so much to the pleasure of Northern readers will not be enervated by the torrid wave of praise that has been pouring upon them from this portion of the universe. Let them select for themselves a high standard of criticism and maintain it; let them be stimulated by an acquaintance with the masterpieces of fiction from other lands; and let them not pattern their methods after those of the narrow-minded, unreal "realists" who have brought American literature into disrepute. Something more than a magnifying lens and a quiet corner is needed to supply the inspiration of the genuine artist. There must be, beside microscopic knowledge, a constant, undeviating exercise of the synthetic power, by means of which all forms that come within the field of the artist's observation are vivified, associated, put in motion, and are made to illustrate in brightness and shadow the complex meanings of all the varied aspects of life.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

BERLIN, June 3, 1887.

THE Goethe community have been in a state of great excitement this last fortnight; and this time for much better reason than many a time before, when it was a question of trifles of a biographical or critical description. It is no matter of "hair-splitting as a fine art" about which I am speaking, but one of real importance to literary history. Dr. Erich Schmidt, past director of the Goethe Archives at Weimar, has discovered the identical MS. of the first wording of Faust. This discovery throws much new light on various points connected with our knowledge of Goethe's doings, and with the history of that celebrated play itself. Some of the current Faust theories are being upset, others confirmed. The second annual meeting of the Goethe Society, which took place at Weimar exactly a fortnight ago, and extended over three days, scarcely dealt with anything else but the Urfaust (i. e., the original drama) which had been found out at Dresden by a mere chance; the MS. was read and commented upon, the story of its detection told, and the promise given to print it in time for publication in the coming autumn. It is the very MS. which Goethe brought with him to Weimar in 1785; thus the famous fragment of 1790 loses its title, hitherto held, to being the first draft of Faust. The Goethe Society, by the way, now numbers nearly 2,700 members, exclusive of its English branch, which has reached the figure of 200. I must not omit to mention the exceedingly fine and worthy address on "Goethe and Herder," read at the Weimar meeting by Dr. Suphan, the renowned editor of Herder's Complete Works.

There is a wide gulf between the stage play Faust and the Berlin stage; permit me to jump over it. A remarkable theatrical movement is preparing here. Before the last Franco-German war Vienna was considered the foremost stage town in German-speaking lands, and the Berliners made merry over the "pleasure loving" Viennese, who were pronounced to be "theater mad." What a change has taken place within the last fourteen years or so! Ever since the overwhelming financial crisis of 1873, the Vienna theaters, eight in number, went from bad to worse. Two of the biggest burned down (1881 and 1884) and three others have to fight a hard struggle in order to keep up a very precarious existence; three only are fairly prosperous. The pretendedly "pleasure-loving, theater-mad, Phaeakian" Viennese, a million of people, positively refuse to fill their playhouses, excellent though they be (and they are rather famous). And Berlin? Here nearly two dozen theaters contrive to nourish their proprietors and managers, and, with few exceptions, they succeed in doing so to a very great extent. The pretendedly "critical, scornful, squeamish" Berliners throng the playhouses, and so much so that many pieces are performed a hundred, two hundred, and even three hundred times without interruption. (Such has never been the case in Vienna, not even in its halcyon days.) There are two opera houses, two stages exclusively for operettas, four for the higher orders of dramatic literature, etc., etc. And it seems there are not enough of them yet, for several new ones are planned just now, quite apart from great changes and migrations in some of the existing ones.

Four or five years ago a renowned actor and playwright, L'Arronge, founded the "German Theatre," so called by him because of his intention to promote and foster German dramatic literature. It has, no doubt, become the best stage in Berlin, but as to being mother-nurse to the German drama, nothing has come of it. It performs a great many French as well as Shakespearean plays, and among its German répertoire Schiller and Lessing, and other classics not having any copyright in their works, take the lead. Modern, and more especially living, authors get only a comparatively small share of performances. And as regards the larger public, the masses, the prices at Herr L'Arronge's "house" are much too high not to be exclusive. Thus Herr Barnay, one of the greatest of our actors, has decided on creating a "People's Playhouse," which is to offer high-class acting of all sorts of good plays; he has already succeeded in tempting away several of the leading members of the "German Theatre," although his reign shall not begin before September, 1888. Herr Barnay had scarcely made known his idea when Dr. Oskar Blumenthal, a well-known stage critic and playwright, whose latest pieces you have mentioned in your last annual review of German literature, came forward about a fortnight ago with a public statement to the effect that he is about to establish a "Theatre of the Living" sometime next year. By "living" he means the living authors who, in his opinion and their own, are not sufficiently valued and performed by contemporary stage managers. This being so, he intends to pay exclusive attention to the productions of our own time. If any one else were to issue such a programme it would be all right, but in Dr. Blumenthal's mouth it sounds half ridiculous, half impudent, for in his capacity as a critic he has always done his utmost to decry and discourage almost every contemporary playwright (for many years he was called "Bloody Oscar"); probably he is going to perform mostly his own plays and those of his friends. Besides, he is much too inexperienced in technical stage matters. He is a talented writer, but his name and fame are to a great extent due to his puffing himself up systematically in the great daily paper whose stage critic he is.

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"The Modern Proteus."

To the Editor of the Literary World:

The Legend of Thomas Didymus, the Jewish Skeptic. By James Freeman Clarke. Boston: Lee & Shepard. 1881.

Life and Times of Jesus, as Related by Thomas Didymus. By James Freeman Clarke. Boston: Lee & Shepard. [n. d.]

When Mr. Whitney issued his "Modern Proteus" it was thought he had rendered a valuable service to the cause of good literature and good morals. But the evil which he so well exposed has not been cured, and public attention must continue to be called to it. The titles given above furnish an aggravated example of this evil, perpetrated by those from whom better things might have been expected.

The two titles cover one book, printed from the same plates, with slight alterations that serve to some extent to hide the identity. As first issued the book bore the date on the title-page and at the end of the preface. The second issue has no date on the title-page, and the date has been omitted from the preface, and the reader is left to infer that the book has just been written. And the book has every appearance of being sent forth with the distinct purpose of deceiving the public into the belief that it is a new book. Is it possible that the Rev. Dr. Clarke is a party to this gross deception? Or has he been entrapped by the publisher? The author owes it to himself to ward off an imputation that will be likely to attach to him.

JOHN EDMANDS.

Philadelphia, June 14, 1887.

RECENT POETRY.

Even the most ardent believer in the efficacy of modern poetry must come to an array of newly published volumes of verse with doubts and forebodings. We all know the power of the highest poetry to inspire, to strengthen, and to heal, but who can find inspiration, strength, or healing in the productions that in spite of the dearth of popular approval are constantly poured forth from the press? The volumes now before us are, almost without exception, crude and aimless expressions of mediocre thoughts, vague in style, imperfect in technical form, lawless yet half cultivated, like a wild rose brought into the garden plot, and losing all its charm because of its incongruous conditions. The tradition that youthful emotions must find an outlet in rhyme is too firmly rooted to die out without a protest, and it continues to send up sickly shoots in spite of the fact that the world has grown wiser, and would gladly have none of it. Sensible men and women nowadays have other and better things to do, and can find no time to cherish the frail exotics of sickly imaginations which spring up along their paths. Unless human egotism has reached an incomprehensible limit, ninety-nine out of a hundred, yea, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand of these pseudo-poets must know that they can add nothing to the sum total of human pleasure with their detestable attempts at saying in verse what they themselves know to be the dreariest commonplace in prose. Commonplace ideas are none the less common because chopped into lines of measured length and decked out with tawdry bits of rhetoric. Every healthy-minded person must feel that it is more honorable to hoe a row of corn, or measure cloth behind a counter, or sweep a room, or make a loaf of bread, than to spend time over the petty word-mongering which passes current in these days for poetry. To be a nuisance to respectable publishers, to be regarded by the public with stony indifference, and to be detested by the reviewers, who are the only people that ever read their productions at all, would seem to be an unenviable destiny, and yet scores of youths and maidens are every day choosing it as the one object of desire. All this display of "intellectual" activity must, of course, mean something; we think it means an urgent necessity for the establishment of a thorough system of industrial education in our public schools. Boys and girls who learn to do something useful in the world do not grow up to write silly verses, or, if they do, they have the wisdom not to publish them.

Here is Miss Lillian Blanche Fearing, for instance, who in The Sleeping World, and Other Poems (A. C. McClurg & Co.) sets forth her emotions on contemplating the moon, the sun, the stars, and the impenetrable mysteries of interstellar space. Her titles cover a wide range, yet hardly one of her pieces is without several astronomical metaphors. The opening poem on "The Sleeping World" is of the N. P. Willis order. The two best things in the book are "The Heart's Bitterness" and "My Angel and I." Miss Fearing believes in God, and faith, and love, and says so with a good deal of fervor, but she evidently believes that she is superior to the rest of humanity, because she feels more akin to the moon and stars than to common mortals (p. 21). Perhaps a short service in a training-school for nurses would make her sympathies a little more definite. At any rate she ought to study etymology and natural history before she writes any more poetry. "Frore" and "terrene" are not substantives, as she seems to think (pp. 30, 55); "lachrymals" will not do for tears, although it sounds well to speak of the sun's heart dripping "In lachrymals of glory down" (p. 62); the "aspic" does not suck the heart blood, in spite of Miss Fearing's supposition to the contrary (p. 16); and it would be impossible for "Life" to "gasp" from one wound, to say nothing of a hundred (p. 16); moreover we do not understand how "white deeds" can "drift like snow" and at the same time "lift the soul" (p. 63). But perhaps we are too matter-of-fact.

In Civitas: The Romance of Our Nation's Life (G. P. Putnam's Sons), Walter L. Campbell takes some 3,500 rhymed decasyllabics to relate how young Civitas, surnamed America, having passed the barrier of tyranny, fought the battle of the world, lay an unfriended, prostrate victor upon the field his valor won, and was there wooed by Anarchia and Monarchia, and by Philosophia through the medium of her son Democrates. He would have none of them, but went a-wooing on his own account, and gained the hand of Libertas, and with her aid pursued the founding of a state. He was, however, nearly seduced by the wiles of Anarchia, who, later on, appears with her son Plutocrat, who claims (falsely it seems) Civitas as his father. Plutocrat threatens to "reveal all" to Libertas unless Civitas will give him control of the new nation's commerce. Civitas accedes, and Plutocrat—

His web of steel and wire a spider spun,
And o'er the land his meshes threads were run.
He in his parlor put a tempting bait,
And on the Nation dined; supped on a State.

Associations, corners, unions, pools,
Or simply corporations make the rules
Which run the markets and prescribe the price
We pay for food, for furniture, for ice;
For everything we eat, or drink, or wear;
For berth in sleeper or for railroad fare;
For coffins, cradles—everything we use,
From grandma's night-cap to the baby's shoes.
We do an errand, telegram despatch,
Express a package, or but strike a match;
We ring a telephone, our lamp we light,
Whatever we do by day or e'en by night—
Some combination, somewhere, tribute takes,
And what we pay is just the price it makes.

Finally Plutocrat is brought to trial, confesses the fraud by which he attained his power, and then the mob rises up and does its work, and "proud Plutocrat was slain." Anarchia is thus rendered powerless, and Civitas, united once more with Libertas, resumes his sovereignty. To Mr. Campbell we can only say:

Deluded man, with good thoughts to rehearse,
Seeks but the medium of machine-made verse;
Thus hides the wisdom that he would make plain,
Obscures his mission and instructs in vain.

Henry Hamilton gives us a whole book in The Poet's Praise (G. P. Putnam's Sons). He cannot, he says, define poetry, but he is sure that

The poet's eye, far-glancing, catches view
Of what eludes the sight of all, save few,
And sees high thought and love, where others find
Material objects and no trace of mind.

When the poet's eye does that, none is more eager than we to welcome the resulting vision. Mr. Hamilton's visual range, we say it with regret, is not beyond that of the majority of human beings, although his fine devotion to poetic ideals is, in many instances, felicitously expressed. His book is the result of genuine thought and emotion, and is to be ranked far above the outpourings of the rhyming brood of jingling verse-makers.

There is excellent society verse in Hallo, My Fancy! by Charles Henry Lüders and S. D. S., Jr. (David McKay) — excellent, that is of its kind. Like the society verse of the contemporary London school, it glides gracefully in the footsteps of Villon and Marot, is delicate in form, and is overwrought with a glittering fretwork of bewildering affectations. Mr. Lüders shows more depth of thought than does his merry collaborator and is less exuberant in his fancies. One must go back to the days of Euphues to find anything so deliciously nonsensical as "Love and a Compass" by S. D. S.:

Due north of the dimples that hide in her chin,
Two lips conceal music behind them;
And when a smile plays on them, Cupids begin
To break from the bonds that confine them.

Just south of her chin stands a full rounded throat,
Whose whiteness than marble is whiter;
Southeast and southwest of it shoulders I note —
No curves are more graceful, or lighter.

Prof. George Lansing Raymond's Ballads of the Revolution (G. P. Putnam's Sons) are built upon a solid foundation of historical foot-notes. Unfortunately they are not ballads that any one would willingly read; nor do the miscellaneous poems in the volume call for special comment. The dramatic composition, "Haydn," we have found very tedious. Prof. Raymond has done much better work than this. — Mr. George Martin says in the preface to his Marguerite and Other Poems (Montreal: Dawson Bros.) that they "have been inspired by the history and scenery of Canada, and in collecting them . . . the author hopes to put in permanent literary form some of the natural and social aspects which are peculiar to this country." And yet they are entirely devoid of local color, and none of the "natural and social aspects" of Canada or any other country are to be found in them. — The refinement of imagination in The Dream of Holy Alsace, by Charles Rufus Lathrop (Belford, Clarke & Co.) is noticeable, but the author seems to be indefinite of purpose and somewhat uncertain in his method. — Mr. John Howell in his Songs and Sonnets (Louisville, Ky.: John P. Morton & Co.) contents himself for the most part with enumerating the aspects of nature in this wise:

The land is quite dreary, the ocean is worse,
The vessels are tossed on a dangerous coast,
Their beacon lights beckon so gently to me
As I watch them intently far out at sea.

The Rev. Thomas J. MacMurray in The Legend of Delaware Valley (Toronto: William Briggs) rhymes about a "lovely maid" of "dusky race," a "valiant knight," a "proud chieftain," and a "fatal dart," although he knows that all these phrases have been worn threadbare by an innumerable host of poetasters. Elsewhere he offers this brilliant and original advice concerning "The Road to Success":

If you want to succeed in this life,
You must have an abundance of pluck;
There is no one can win in the strife
By relying on what is termed "luck."
Temptations must be bravely withstood;
Even poverty must be o'erthrown;
And, with purposes lofty and good,
You must struggle and suffer alone.

Of Between the Centuries, and Other Poems, by Jane Maria Read (Henry A. Young & Co.), we can say that they are musical in form, even if the music is in a very familiar strain, for the author is attentive to her meter and her rhymes are usually unimpeachable. One knows of course what to expect in the way of poetry from such titles as "Deeds Die Not," "Baby Asleep," "Rain-Drops," and "Looking Heavenward."

It is a relief to turn to Bumblebee Bogo's Budget, by "A Retired Judge" (Macmillan & Co.), a dainty little volume which has some claim to be styled the modern Mother Goose. The Judge writes delightful nonsense rhymes of of the sort that children like and his budget is sure to be a favorite in nursery circles. — In the same category, although having a more valid interest for older people, is Hallam Tennyson's Jack and the Bean-Stalk in English hexameters (Macmillan & Co.), with illustrations from sketches by Randolph Caldecott, which were among the last work executed by that lamented artist.

There is more poetry of thought than poetry of expression in the Sonnets of Mrs. Emily Pfeiffer (Scribner & Welford). Mrs. Pfeiffer has the sibyl's power of introspection and she formulates her ideas with a certain grandeur of utterance that carries the impress of power. Each sonnet, taken as a whole, is a masterpiece of condensed meaning, and yet there is not one memorable line in the entire series. The sustained nobility of tone compensates to a certain degree for this lack, and in thoughtful mood one reads Mrs. Pfeiffer's sonnets with deep pleasure. They grapple firmly with great problems, and they hold always to the higher truths as opposed to the philosophy of mere materialism.

When Mr. David Skaats Foster undertakes to philosophize in rhyme he perpetrates something like this, which we select from a poem on "The Unknowable" in The Romance of the Unexpected (G. P. Putnam's Sons):

A problem strange is matter, for resolve it o'er and o'er
Into its simplest forms, we are no further than before;
For then, a tiny grain, a germ invisible we hold,
Which still can be divided, though divided time's untold —
A grain which may become the air, the water, or have power
To grow into a giant tree, or to a slender flower.

All of which is as true as the multiplication table, but what a bore we should think the man who undertook to say it in prose! and is a man any the less a bore for putting such stuff into the form of verse? Mr. Foster, in some of his other pieces, has a not unpleasant vein of sentiment, and sometimes, as in "The Game of Chess," he hits it off very well — but the interest aroused by his book is fitful and languid.

Mrs. Whitney's Daffodils (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) offer themselves as simple wayside flowers, and in their simplicity is their charm. Mrs. Whitney has the grace not to write poetry of malice prepense; her verses evidently come to her as the spontaneous expression of reverence, faith, and love, and she writes them down without any pretense to the artifices of the phrase-makers, but casts them into a natural form well suited to their meaning.

Mr. Frank Dempster Sherman is a sprightly rhymester who can "do" his Madrigals and Catches (White, Stokes & Allen) after the manner of Locker and Praed, and his ballades and rondeaux after the manner of Dobson and Gosse, with a good deal of facility. Mr. Sherman has the familiar stock-in-trade of the imitative versifier, the red roses, and pretty girls, and April breezes, and bright eyes which have done such excellent service in other combinations, and which he sets forth in the old, familiar way. A half-dozen sonnets in the middle of the volume (a dainty volume it is) show that Mr. Sherman is capable of something better. Perhaps, however, he thinks it too serious to be original.

The Rev. O. C. Auringer in Scythe and Sword (D. Lothrop Co.) has an earnest regard for nature as she appears to the wanderer in fields and woods; an unyielding faith in the divinity of song; a broad and liberal religious creed; a noble ideal of the coming preacher; a fine understanding of certain great men of recent times such as Emerson, Gordon, Darwin, and Carlyle. On all these themes he discourses in excellent verse, showing a manly sympathy, a scholarly appreciation of the uses and powers of language, and a determination to say what he has to say without any sort of affectation. One finds in the poet who writes thus the embodiment of his own verses:

A soul serene, that hath its dreams apart;
A mind unmoved by blind Ambition's call;
A noble, calm capacity of heart;
A faithful vision glorifying all.

In his Sonnets in Shadow (Roberts Bros.) Arlo Bates has sought to express the thoughts and emotions of one under the cloud of bereavement. The sonnets follow one another in well devised sequence; they voice the alternate fears, doubts, forebodings, and questionings that torment the sensitive mind oppressed by sense of loss. The sonnets do not utter any very profound or ennobling ideas. They are in the minor key, and their melody is for the most part of a lugubrious sort, although there is a clinging hope that somewhere, somehow, the beloved sees with tender passion the soul struggles of its earthly mate. Taken as an expression of individual sorrow the volume will doubtless appeal to many who have loved and lost, but it voices not at all that universal monody of human passion which renders the world's great elegies forever memorable.

MINOR FICTION.

The Lilies of Florence, and Other Stories and Legends. By Mme. George Sand. Translated from the Original Manuscripts by Lew Vanderpoole. [John W. Lovell Co. 20c.] Mr. Lew Vanderpoole, the literary executor of George Sand, has selected from the one hundred and twenty-seven manuscripts comprising the posthumous literary remains of that writer, the sixteen stories and legends now brought together in this volume. None of them has ever been published in French, but all have appeared in English through the medium of newspaper syndicates in this country and Great Britain. They are all of the most romantic character and are without exception masterpieces of narration. The first tale, The Lilies of Florence, fills about seventy-five pages, and is wonderful in its highly-wrought intensity of mystery and passion; but even this is outdone by the condensed tragedy of some of the shorter stories — "Lamia," "My Queen, Brunhilde," "Three and One," "A Cry in the Night," and "An Etruscan Palace." The imaginative range of Mme. Sand, her incomparable intensity of expression, her masterful grasp of motives, are well illustrated in these stories, of which every line seems to have been written with a pen of fire. The pages burn themselves into the memory and will not be forgotten. We may declare the themes and treatment to be wildly impossible, but the art with which they are put into words is something whose magic sway we cannot escape; thrills of sympathy, terror, admiration, and loathing are as inevitable in reading this book as they are in witnessing a fine performance of Lear or Macbeth. There can be no doubt that this little volume, which Mr. Vanderpoole has translated with admirable skill, will do much to revive interest in Mme Sand's romances. It is, we suppose, by a happy stroke of satire that the book is dedicated "To William Dean Howells." Surely between The Minister's Charge and The Lilies of Florence there is a great gap fixed!

The Great Hesper. By Frank Barrett. [D. Appleton & Co. 25c.] The Great Hesper is one of the best stories of incident that we have read for many a day. In the opening chapter a motley crew land at Southampton, England, from the "Southern Cross," just arrived from Cape Town. They are Joseph Brace, better known as the "Judge," and late of the California gold regions; Bernard Thorne, or "Gentleman Thorne," as he is called by his associates; Israel Van Hoeck, a blind Dutch Jew; and Lola Brace, familiarly known as the "Kid." It soon appears that this strange company have in their possession a white diamond of 820 carats, four times as large as the great Koh-i-noor! The stone has been discovered through the sagacity of Van Hoeck, and the three have signed an agreement providing that in case of the death of one or both of the partners the survivors or survivor shall profit thereby to the exclusion of all other claimants. They make their way to the residence of a wealthy connoisseur, Sir Edmund Lascelles, are hospitably welcomed by him, and then a series of tragic occurrences begins, resulting in the loss of the "Great Hesper" and a profound mystery as to its whereabouts. Brace and Lola go away under suspicion; Van Hoeck remains; and Bernard, surrendering his claim to the hand of Sir Edmund's beautiful daughter, enters upon the career of a fruit farmer in Southern California. There he falls in once more with the "Judge" and the "Kid," and with them undertakes an expedition in search of the "Great Hesper." How the diamond was found and what became of it we leave the reader to find out. There are two capital chapters in the book, describing the midnight struggle with the thief at Monken Abbey, and the descent of the "divide" in the Sierra Nevada.

The Cruise of a Woman Hater. By G. de Montauban. [Ticknor & Co. 50c.] The woman hater is Bernard Jarves, a rich and idle young fellow, without ambition, but possessed of a certain restlessness which led him to undertake adventures. He has been disappointed in two love affairs and has acquired a cynical dislike for the opposite sex which he believes nothing can overcome. At the invitation of an old friend, Captain Bluson, he starts on a voyage to China with the understanding that the Captain's wife and children are to be the only passengers. Just as the ship is sailing out of sight of Sandy Hook a tug approaches, and Mrs. Helen Bates, a young widow, puts in an appearance to accept the invitation which she had previously rejected. She is taken on board, and what follows may readily be imagined, although some 250 pages are employed in getting to the dénouement. The story is fairly well told, although somewhat crude at times and bearing the marks of an amateur in fiction.

Environment. A Story of Modern Society. By Florine Thayer McCray. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.25.] It is impossible not to recognize the earnest purpose which has actuated the author of Environment, although we may accept perhaps with a grain of salt the assertion made in a circular sent out with the book by the publishers, regarding "the fearful evils of the drinking customs which are stealthily creeping into fashionable life among ladies of wealth and high social standing." However, in New York social circles as Mrs. McCray describes them, women carry to concert and opera vinaigrettes filled with whiskey to refresh themselves during the performances, and the favorite modiste is a Madame Couture, who keeps in connection with her establishment a luxurious apartment where "ladies in various comfortable attitudes upon sofas and easy chairs" pass the time in drinking brandy and smoking cigarettes. Mrs. McCray describes the effects of these influences upon a beautiful and refined woman who becomes a victim to alcohol because her physician prescribes it as necessary to facilitate recovery from an acute disease. She falls very low, but is won back by the efforts of her stepdaughter. There is a great deal in the book that is trivial in the way of conversations, and on the other hand some of the characters are drawn with skill. The tone of the book is, we think, somewhat affected; we are of the opinion that the author has the capability for more natural, and therefore better, work.

Taken by Siege. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] When Rush Hurlstone was twenty years old he went to New York and sought to make a career for himself as a journalist. He began as reporter on the Dawn, and after working up some clever detective business rose rapidly, until at thirty he was managing editor of that enterprising sheet at an annual salary of ten thousand dollars. Meanwhile, he has almost on his first arrival fallen in love with an American opera singer, Helen Knowlton, who is some years his senior. His love is not returned, and with genuine manliness he keeps it to himself till he can speak to the purpose. Then he declares his unflinching devotion, and after some hesitation Miss Knowlton consents to become his wife. It is a pleasantly written, wholesome story, with several striking pictures of metropolitan life in it, and there are suggestions that make one think that it was founded on fact.

A Humble Romance, and Other Stories. By Mary E. Wilkins. [Harper & Bros. $1.25.] These stories of New England country people are written with a power of characterization that is unusually effective. The author has seized upon a number of well-defined types—the poor girl who has "lived out" all her life and finally runs away with the peddler; the old woman who pieces quilts for a living, and by mixing up the pieces, fearing she has defrauded her employers, rips them up and does her work all over again; the girl who promised her dying father to pay the mortgage, and does it, going without adornments and losing her betrothed; two old women taken from their poor dwelling by well-meaning friends to the "Old Ladies' Home," and languishing in homesickness there till they finally desert their luxurious quarters by stealth and make their way back to their previous abode; the little old maid devoted to her cat, and doubting the existence of a beneficent Providence when he is lost—these are a few of the themes upon which Miss Wilkins employs her talent; and simple as they are, she casts them into forms that impress us by their faithfulness, their careful reproduction of rustic traits, their careful recognition of the human attributes of love, devotion, forbearance, patience, and honesty, which underlie the scant, pitiful, narrow lives whose experiences and conditions she describes so well. Miss Wilkins has a realistic touch that is singularly effective, and at the same time her comprehension of inner motives is inspired by the revelations of a refined imagination. The simplicity, purity, and quaintness of her stories set them apart from the outpouring of current fiction in a niche of distinction where they have no rivals.

In Ole Virginia; or, Marse Chan and Other Stories. By Thomas Nelson Page. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.] Mr. Page has for some time been recognized through his contributions to the magazines as one of the most promising of the young writers of the South, who have achieved fame by means of a short story. In this prettily bound volume we have his collected works—"Marse Chan," a vivid and dramatic tale of Virginia during the war time; "Unc' Edinburg's Drowndin'," a plantation echo; "Meh Lady," another story of the war, very effective in its pathos; "Ole 'Stracted," touching on the pitiful fate of a freedman; "No Haid Pawn," a story of evil deeds and the superstitions that sprang from them; and "Polly," a fresh and piquant love episode. Of these, "Marse Chan" and "Meh Lady" are by far the best. The narrative in each instance is related in the words of a negro, and the admirable management of the dialect, the quaint turns of expression, and the incidental revelations of character undoubtedly heighten the charm. But the motives are genuine, and in them elements of humor, pathos, and tragedy are intermingled. Mr. Page does not strain after highly-colored effects. He does not go very deep below the surface of life, but what he gives us we know to be true to the laws of universal nature. It is not the whole South by any means, or any great part of its complex characteristics, that is depicted by Mr. Page. He knows a few types, and he has employed them with the skill of a real artist. His material is slight, but he has made the most of it. He has dared to be faithful to simple impressions, and therein lie his strength and his limitation.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Phillips Exeter Lectures. 1885-1886. By Presidents McCosh, Walker, Bartlett, Robinson, Porter, and Carter, and Rev. Drs. Hale and Brooks. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.] Young men especially will derive sound benefit from these lectures, which are addressed to serious minds and are enriched with the fruits of long and noteworthy experience. Dr. Hale opens the series with a wise exposition of the inter-relations of physical, mental, and spiritual training, which he says to preserve health must receive an equal share of attention, the whole secret of right living being reduced to the formula of acceptable service. Dr. Hale does not, however, content himself with uttering theories; he explains how the theories are to be carried out. President McCosh speaks of habit and its influence in school, President Walker of socialism, and President Porter of the ideal scholar:

all seek to inspire forethought, discrimination, and the necessity of noble purposes. Dr. Brooks's discourse on biography is truly charming, for it directs young readers (some who are old may take the hint) to biographies as constituting the literature of life and supplying the elements of inspiration. What is the New Testament but a biography held in the heart of the world forever? And Dr. Brooks goes on to point out many of the great biographies accessible in English, placing Lockhart's Scott by the side of Boswell's Johnson as the two best in the language. "Happy the boy who very early gets at these two books, and feels and feeds upon the broad and rich humanity of the two men whom they keep ever picturesque and living." Many others are mentioned from the memoirs of Grant to The Story of Ida, and of each Dr. Brooks has some enlightened comment.

How to Make a Saint; or, The Process of Canonization in the Church of England. By the Prig. [Henry Holt & Co. $1.00.] Whether the reader does or does not enjoy the Prig's lively "skit" will depend a good deal on his theological predilections. It relates how the Rev. Kentigern Maniple is impressed by the anomaly that every saint in the Prayer-Book was a Roman Catholic, and that the Roman Church has gone on enriching her calendar with saints who lived in modern times, while the English Church has never canonized a saint since the Reformation. So he organizes the Society for the Promotion of Anglican Saints and sets about supplying the deficiency. There is considerable wit in the account of the trial that followed Mr. Maniple's attempt at canonization, and in the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to whom the question finally came for settlement, that while the term "saint" was inadmissible as a posthumous title, the term "poor" was entirely proper. So it was ordered that from the statutes of the subjects for canonization the word "poor" should be substituted for "saint"—"Poor Richard Hooker, Poor William Laud, Poor Samuel Johnson, and Poor Hannah More," because "members of the Church of England had been in the habit of speaking of their departed friends as 'poor So-and-so' with impunity from time immemorial." But the Prig might be in better business.

Manners and Social Usages. By Mrs. John Sherwood. [Harper & Bros.] No one can doubt Mrs. Sherwood's qualifications for speaking on the usages of good society, and this new, revised, and enlarged edition of her readable manual will be very welcome to those who are not constantly "in the swim." Indeed, Mrs. Sherwood comments so sensibly upon all debatable points of etiquette that even leaders of fashion might derive benefit from her observations. Mrs. Sherwood is not a slavish adherent to old-world manners, whether English or French. She believes that Americans have a right to social customs of their own, and in general she advocates a code which adapts itself to circumstances. On all details concerning the etiquette of visits, weddings, dinners, afternoon teas, and so on, Mrs. Sherwood is sufficiently explicit, and she adds chapters on "How to Treat English People" and on table d'hôte and casino life abroad. Mrs. Sherwood would like to see the English custom of sending cards by post adopted in this country. "It is in every sense as complimentary to send a letter by the post as by the dirty fingers of a hired messenger." On the proper use of the words "gentleman" and "lady" Mrs. Sherwood is almost casuistical. "No women talk to men about 'gentlemen,' and no men talk to women about 'ladies,'" is a good rule which, like all good rules, has exceptions; but they are rare.

Scribner's Magazine. Vol. I. January-June. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.] A handsome book is made of the first volume of Scribner's Magazine with neat, tasteful, durable cover of English buckram, with simple ornamental stamping of gilt; its exquisite typography and broad margins. It is a strong volume in literary quality. One is surprised to note the number of really important articles on great topics, now that they are brought together, and in fiction and verse the showing of significant merit. Of course the Thackeray letters compose the pièce de résistance; but we cannot complain of the other contributions, all of which are fully up to the highest standard of current periodical literature—a standard whose demands only magazine editors clearly appreciate!

Maternity, Infancy, Childhood. By John M. Keating, M.D. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] Dr. Keating intends his book to meet the wants of mothers and those who undertake the care of infants and children, in health as well as in disease. He is sure that the enormous mortality of children under three years of age can be largely reduced by attention to hygienic rules, and these he formulates with noticeable freedom from technical phraseology. The object of the work, then, is "simply to state as clearly as possible . . . all that is of interest to a mother, and it must be, of course, limited to those suggestions which will be of service in ordinary cases." He therefore does not attempt to lay down stringent rules, but offers hints and suggestions easily comprehended and to be readily followed. Dr. Keating gives a careful chapter on pregnancy; describes the proper care of children up to and through the first period of dentition; and in part second of his useful and meritorious manual prescribes the treatment to be observed in the customary sicknesses of childhood, not omitting whooping cough, scarlet fever, and measles. On all these topics Dr. Keating is a wise counsellor, and his injunctions ought to be familiar to every mother.

Outlines for the Management of Diet. By Edward Tunis Bruen. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] Dr. Bruen is a Philadelphia physician of repute and a person well qualified to give instruction on the subject of diet, which, as he justly says, holds the first place in the influences promoting cheerfulness and good digestion. The substance of the book was delivered in the form of lectures to nurses in hospital training schools, and is adapted to all intelligent people. Dr. Bruen explains the physiology of digestion with simplicity and exactness; considers the adaptation of food to the requirements of health at different periods of life; tells how to reduce and how to increase flesh; and provides four chapters on diet in special diseases, such as dyspepsia, rheumatism, fevers, consumption, and neurasthenia. Dr. Bruen lays great stress upon the importance of milk as an article of diet in all forms of deficient nutrition. With regard to alcohol he says, "It is of infinite value in certain acute diseases attended with cardiac failure, and in nearly all instances of cardiac weakness."

His table of the digestibility of alimentary substances (p. 20) is, like all tables of the sort, open to criticism. It enumerates, for instance, grouse, asparagus, cauliflower, and black tea among articles "easy of digestion," but a great many do not find them so. In the main, Dr. Bruen's book is admirably qualified to meet the needs of those for whom it is designed.

The Rothschilds: The Financial Rulers of Nations. By John Reeves. [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.] Mr. Reeves has an interesting subject in the history of the Rothschilds and he has made the most of it, although his narrative has no special literary attraction. The first of the men of financial genius who have built up the glory of this house was Mayer Anselm Rothschild, born in the Judengasse of Frankfurt in the house of the red shield (hence the family name) in 1743. His father was a peddler of curiosities and old coins. Mayer Anselm was educated with a view to his becoming a rabbi, but his talent for commercial pursuits manifested itself at an early age, and after an apprenticeship with the bankers Oppenheim in Hanover, he set up in business for himself at his father's house in the Judengasse. It was Mayer Anselm who became custodian of the fortune of the Landgrave of Hesse, although Mr. Reeves explodes the familiar legend of the way in which the Landgrave's fortune came into the Rothschilds' care. For details concerning the early history of the family Mr. Reeves complains that he has been obliged to depend largely upon tradition; and he thinks it hard that the living representatives of the name should treat all inquiries as impertinent. Mr. Reeves follows the career of each of Mayer Anselm's five sons with a good degree of definiteness. Naturally considerable space is given to Nathan Rothschild, and there is a readable account of how he got to London after the battle of Waterloo before the news reached the stock exchange, and by taking advantage of the market made a profit of nearly a million sterling. Mr. Reeves is enthusiastic in praise of the benevolence of the Rothschilds, and he gives many anecdotes illustrating their various characters. Such a book as this undoubtedly gratifies a public demand, and it is pleasant to find that it has been produced with excellent taste.

Willem Usselinx, Founder of the Dutch and Swedish West India Companies. By J. Franklin Jameson, Ph.D. Papers of the American Historical Association. Vol. II. No. 3. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.] Willem Usselinx, born at Antwerp in 1567, lived contemporaneously with the eighty years' struggle of the Netherlands for independence. He came of a trading family and was educated to a business career. He was for a time in Spain and then served as a factor in the Azores, which were then on the highway of East and West Indian trade, and derived great wealth by dealings with the richly laden argosies that came to their harbors laden with gold, silver, pearls, silks and spices. Here Usselinx conceived his idea of founding a great West India Company, and to this scheme and the formation of the Swedish South Company he devoted nearly half a century of unremitting labor. Prof. Jameson calls him "the Lesseps of the seventeenth century," and by means of laborious research has gathered the material for writing this monograph on the career of one who is little known to the English-reading public, although he has for Americans an especial interest, since he was "though not directly the founder, at any rate the originator, of two of our colonies—that upon the Hudson and that upon the Delaware." Prof. Jameson has left no source of information unexplored, and can vouch for the fact that of the last three fifths of his narrative nearly all is new. Usselinx is shown advancing his plans with unfaltering vigor before the courts and legislative assemblies of the Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden, and Prussia, always poor, always devoted to the public good. Prof. Jameson tells the story in a sympathetic way and fortifies his assertions with the fruits of abundant knowledge. He gives a full bibliography of Usselinx's printed and unprinted works, the former comprising twenty-seven numbers, the latter enumerating ninety-five manuscripts. The quotations from Usselinx are of much interest and show him to have been a vigorous and keen-witted writer. Prof. Jameson's monograph is highly creditable to American scholarship.

The Poets and Poetry of America. A Satire. By Lavante. With an Introductory Argument to Prove that "Lavante" was Edgar Allan Poe. [Benjamin & Bell.] This satire, written in heroic couplets, was published at Philadelphia in 1847. It bore no author's name upon the title-page, but at the end was signed "Lavante." Some anonymous investigator has now revived it with an introductory argument aiming to prove that the thing was the work of Poe. The argument is ingenious, but not convincing; some of it is merely fanciful. The satire itself is not a remarkable production. It agrees with Poe's known views on the subject of American poetry; it attacks the enemies of Poe and glorifies his friends; and Poe's name or work is not mentioned. The satire is, however, strained, and we must confess that we have found the production exceedingly dull reading. If it was written by Poe, it is not strange that he neglected to claim the authorship.

The Sunny Side of Shadow: Reveries of a Convalescent. By Fannie Nichols Benjamin. [Ticknor & Co. $1.00.] The world would be a brighter place and better worth living in, if it numbered among its human freightage more convalescents who take the same hopeful, truth-and-beauty-seeing views of life that have animated the author of this gracious little book. The thoughts she has written down are of a loving and womanly order, dealing with commonplace themes, but treating them in a way that preserves a very attractive element of personality. The "Convalescent" has considered the problems arising out of diversities of character, the attributes of love and friendship, the necessity of faith in noble ideals, the requirements of imaginative natures, the religion whose attitude is a divine submission, and on all these themes she has something to say not profound and inspiring, but full of sympathy and comprehension and therefore to be welcomed by those who appreciate such qualities. We are of the opinion that most women will like this book, particularly those of thoughtful, questioning natures, and that they will derive benefit from its perusal.

We have at hand a number of new books, demanding notice, which we must dismiss briefly. Mr. H. T. Wharton has prepared a second edition of his Sappho, with some additions, photographic reproductions of two Sapphic fragments from the Fayoum papyri, and with the text printed from a new font of Greek type of great beauty. The whole forms an exquisite piece of book-making. [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.75.]—Hints on Early Education was first published in London sixty years ago and has been attributed to a sister of Elizabeth Fry. It is an enchainment of moral counsel, wise, discriminating, and humane, and its sweet piety insures beneficence to all who come within its influence. [Funk & Wagnalls. 60c.]—A Few Thoughts for a Young Man, read by Horace Mann before the Boston Mercantile Library Association thirty-seven years ago, has been many times reprinted and we hope still retains the popularity it deserves. [Lee & Shepard. 50c.]—Prof. W. G. Hale's pamphlet on The Art of Reading Latin aims to teach the student how to read that language "with speed and relish," and accomplishes the aim. Every teacher of language ought to be familiar with Prof. Hale's method, which is very simple and very effectual. [Ginn & Co. 30c.]—In their "Series of Select Novels" the J. B. Lippincott Co. publish an edition of Alice King Hamilton's novel of military life in Florida, One of the Duans. [25c.]—Ticknor's handsome series of summer fiction now includes A Reverend Idol and A Nameless Nobleman. [Each 50c.]—In their "Globe Library," with its sickening yellow and maroon covers, Rand, McNally & Co. publish a hastily compiled but not despicable Life of Henry Ward Beecher, and Wilkie Collins's recent novel, The Evil Genius. [Each 25c.]—There is nothing about The Life and Times of Jesus, except the sub-title "As Related by Thomas Didymus," to indicate that this book by James Freeman Clarke is not a new work. It was first published six years ago under a different title. [Lee & Shepard. $1.50.]—The "Pocket Edition" of Thackeray's works has received three additions: The Yellowplush Papers, The History of Samuel Titmarsh, and Esmond. We again take occasion to praise the good workmanship shown in getting up these volumes—and to lament the smallness of the type. [J. B. Lippincott Co. Each 50c.]—Messrs. Wentworth and Hill in sending forth the first of their Exercise Manuals on Arithmetic offer it as a supplement to the text-books by supplying a great number and variety of examples. [Ginn & Co. 35c.]—Mr. J. H. Stickney's Third Reader shows a considerable advance over the usual reader of that grade by its greater range and decided literary quality, the selections being largely chosen from American authors of repute. [Ginn & Co. 55c.]—Students of the Spanish language will be glad to avail themselves, we should think, of the ten thousand or so Spanish Idioms with their English Equivalents, collected by Sarah Cary Becker and Frederico Mora. There is an index to the Spanish idioms, but why not one also to the English equivalents? [Ginn & Co. $2.00.]—The Franklin Square Song Collection No. 4 has all the merits pertaining to the three preceding issues in this standard compilation of vocal music for the home and school. [Harper & Bros. 50c.]—The Annual American Catalogue for 1886 is compiled from the files of the Publishers' Weekly, and offers not a complete record of all books published in the United States during the year named, but "probably covers 99 per cent of books generally sold and read." It enumerates 4,676 works and gives the names of 517 publishers; but "the list of live American publishers scarcely reaches 200." [Office of the Publishers' Weekly.]

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

May Meeting of the New York Shakespeare Society. The eighteenth regular meeting of the Society was held in Hamilton Hall, May 26th, 1887, Mr. Jas. E. Reynolds in the chair. The meeting was devoted to the disposition of accumulated arrears of business. Among other matters the By-Laws of the Society were amended so as to provide as follows: that any society, club, or other organization devoted to or organized for the purpose of reading, studying, or otherwise investigating the works of William Shakespeare or the Shakespearean or Elizabethan Drama may become a perpetual member of the Shakespeare Society of New York upon the same terms that are at present made to individuals becoming life-members, viz.: upon payment of the sum of fifty dollars at one payment, such payment to entitle such society, club, or other organization to receive one copy each of the publications of the New York Shakespeare Society (except the Bankside Edition) as issued; said payment further entitling any and all members of the admitted society to the privileges of the floor of the New York Shakespeare Society for debate, reading of papers, etc., except the privilege of voting for officers. But such admitted society may designate one of its officers or members, residing in the State of New York, to cast one vote for such officers the same as if an individual member of the New York Shakespeare Society. Dr. Horace Howard Furness, of Philadelphia, was on motion duly elected a member. The Society then adjourned to the last Thursday in November.

Good Old English Reading at "Dime Novel" Rates. Some months ago we referred to the admirable selections from Elizabethan and other old writers which Messrs. Cassell & Co. are furnishing at ten cents a volume in their "National Library." Among the numbers issued more recently are the Voyages and Travels of Marco Polo, Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici, Hakluyt's Voyages in Search of a Northwest Passage, Bunyan's Grace Abounding, Shakespeare's As You Like It and Tempest, Lodge's Rosalind, Raleigh's Discovery of Guiana, Barrow's Sermons on Evil Speaking, etc. Many of these would work into school courses of reading very well, and their cheapness may render them available where the cost of other editions would be objected to. Seventy volumes have now been issued in the series, and the selection from more modern literature is equally commendable in its way.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

In her vindication of her heroine Miss Devey has overshot the mark. She relies implicitly on Lady Lytton's own evidence as given in her diaries, letters, or an autobiographical and unpublished MS. called "Nemesis." No impartial person can fail to see that much of this evidence is extremely high-colored. Even in her calmer moments Lady Lytton could not refrain from caricature, and when her passions are violently agitated she is not, to say the least, a trustworthy witness. It is incredible that Lord Lytton was the infamous, unmitigated scoundrel, devoid of all scruple, honor, or humanity, that he is here represented to have been. A more sober statement would have served Lady Lytton's cause more effectively, and would, we believe, have approximated more closely to the truth.—The Athenaeum.

There is a little literature the importance of which it is impossible to overrate; but we habitually overrate the importance of literature in the mass, and especially its kindling effect. Action is contagious as well as thought, and the hero makes heroes as quickly as any poetry of heroism. Tyrtaeus was a great poet, but Leonidas made Sparta. No thinker could do more to raise the standard of duty than General Gordon's example; and it is in the statesmanship of great statesmen, rather than in their thoughts, that the lesser statesmen seek guidance. Even in theology, where thought would seem to be all, it is the teacher's life that compels conviction, at least as much as his words—unless, indeed, those words are accepted, like Mahommed's, as directly divine. That the pleasure of the world is sadly diminished when men of literature take to politics, is often true; but the other results of that course may, and frequently do, outweigh any benefit to be derived from intellectual pleasure. The admirers of incisive writing lost much when Lord Salisbury took to statesmanship; but then, a great party gained a leader, and England a Premier whose guidance may far outweigh in value for his people tons of the most acridly clever of "contributions." It is, we fear, when men of literature fail in action, and then only, that the world has reason to regret their divergence from their first career.—The Spectator.

Modern history is actually a subject which Dr. Freeman is bound by his principles not to study. And he appears to remain strictly loyal to his principles. . . . He is never tired of asking, "What is 'modern history'? Is not history one thing? On what principle can it be divided into sections? And above all, where can the line be drawn?" It strikes us that no one knows better than Dr. Freeman that practically history must be divided. To draw a firm line may not be possible, but after reading this volume [Chief Periods of European History] we are more than ever convinced that there really is such a thing as modern history. We would propose to define it as that part of history which Dr. Freeman does not know.—The Athenaeum.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—In the current issue of The Independent, Thomas Wentworth Higginson makes a comparison between England and America as to their annual production of book literature. Having presented tables and copious statistics he draws this conclusion:

If these figures are anything like a fair approximation to the truth, and if the tendencies they represent are permanent, it is evident that in another fifty years—or perhaps in a much shorter period—the United States must replace England as the great publishing center for the English-speaking world.

—The "Clarendon Press Edition" of Boswell's Life of Samuel Johnson, which Macmillan & Co. are to publish, is to contain a concordance to Johnson's sayings and an unusually elaborate index. The editor has had the use of some unpublished letters of Johnson and has been able to clear up obscure points in his history.

—Some glimpses of social life in New England and New York at the beginning of the present century will be given in a series of selections from the letters of Eliza Southgate Bowne, which will be published in Scribner's Magazine for July and August, under the title "A Girl's Life Eighty Years Ago."

—The Rev. J. O. S. Huntington ("Father Huntington"), who is devoting his life to doing the work of an apostle in the most "congested" district of New York, has an article in the Forum for July, on "Tenement House Morality."

—General Sherman has written a paper on "The Grand Strategy of the War," which The Century will print. In the July number George Bancroft contributes a short paper on "An Incident in the Life of John Adams," and Gen. O. O. Howard writes on "The Struggle for Atlanta."

—Macmillan & Co. will publish immediately a new novel entitled Ismy's Children, by Mrs. Noel Hartley, formerly known to her friends as Miss Laffan, and to the public only as the anonymous author of "Hogan, M.P.," and several other brilliant stories.

—J. B. Lippincott Co. announce that they have nearly ready an examination of the subject of Spiritualism by "John Darby," understood to be Dr. James E. Garretson, surgical teacher and author. The work is entitled Nineteenth Century Sense: The Paradox of Spiritualism.

—It would seem as if Chicago had at last got a periodical worthy of its claims as a literary center. In the Swim the new journal is called, and it is edited by Alanson S. Appleton, the enterprising person who manages the "Bureau of Writers." In his salutatory the editor declares his paper to be "a very modest effort to assist in a practical way the 'Literary Movement in Chicago.'" "We cannot but note," he says,

A sort of flowing together in Chicago of influences from all quarters of the earth, tending to make of Chicago the biggest city in the shortest time in the history of the world; and—as literature is but a record of the thoughts, deeds, and feelings of its time—we may expect for Chicago a literature of no mean merit or proportion.

Chicago "literature" is to be above all things "practical:"

for it is, after all, the business of literature, as of railroads, sculpture, or gas companies, to contribute to the happiness of mankind. And the main happiness of man is domestic, and the main business of man is on the earth.

With these domestic and terrestrial limitations, In the Swim will do its best to advance the literary repute of Chicago.

—Mr. H. C. Bunner has written a Fourth of July poem for Harper's Young People. It is called "Grandfather Watts's Private Fourth."

—Benjamin & Bell announce for immediate publication Society Verse by American Writers, selected by Ernest De Lancey Pierson, about eighty poems, some by well-known authors, and some by contributors who will appear for the first time in this volume. The book will be printed by the De Vinne Press. The same house will issue a novel by Edgar Saltus, to be entitled Mr. Incoul's Misadventure; Shakespeare in Fact and Fiction, by Appleton Morgan, President of the New York Shakespeare Society; and a fourth edition of The Book-Lover's Enchiridion, by Alexander Ireland.

—In the "Library of Anglo-Saxon Poetry," Ginn & Co. will publish this summer Zupitza's Eleni, edited by permission of Prof. Zupitza, by Prof. Henry Johnson, Ph.D. (Berlin), of Bowdoin College. The same firm announce an "Ancient History for Colleges and High Schools." Part First, The Eastern Nations and Greece, by P. V. N. Myers, President of Belmont College, to be issued this summer; and Part Second, Rome, by W. F. Allen, Professor of History in the University of Wisconsin, to appear next year.

—Mr. John Bartlett sends us specimen pages of A New and Complete Concordance or Verbal Index to the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare, which promises to be a boon to all Shakespearian students. The work is to fill about 1,600 quarto pages, passages being given with such fullness as to preclude the necessity of further reference. The text used is that of the "Globe" edition.

—We learn from the London Athenaeum that the Paris publishing house of Hachette has undertaken the issue of a series of literary biographies, somewhat after the pattern of the "English Men of Letters." The series is to be called "Les Grands Écrivains Français;" and, as will be seen from its sub-title—études sur la vie, les œuvres, et l'influence des principaux auteurs de notre littérature—special attention will be given to the influence of each author upon the historical development of the literature of France. The volumes, of which some eighteen have already been arranged for, will be published at two francs, and will each have a portrait reproduced by photogravure. The first two, to appear immediately, will be Victor Cousin, by M. Jules Simon, and Mad. de Sévigné, by M. Gaston Boissier. Among others of special interest we may mention George Sand, by M. Caro; Turgot, by Léon Say; Montesquieu, by M. Albert Sorel; Villon, by M. Gaston, Paris; Rousseau, by M. Cherbuliez; Balzac, by M. Paul Bourget; Musset, by M. Jules Lemaitre; Sainte-Beuve, by M. Taine; and Guisot, by M. Gabriel Monod.

—A volume of the prose work of the late Philip Bourke Marston is forthcoming under the title, For a Song's Sake, and Other Stories. It will contain eighteen short stories by Marston, with a portrait of him, and a memoir, filling some fifty pages, by William Sharp. The portrait represents a finely molded though massive head and face, bearing a slight resemblance to the present Earl of Lytton. No trace of the poet's infirmity of blindness appears in this portrait; he sits at a table, his head resting upon his hand and his eyes cast down. Roberts Brothers, who are to publish this book, will also issue an edition of Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life, by George Meredith, and a new low-priced edition of The New History of Sandford and Merton, by F. C. Burnand.

—Penelope's Suitors, a story of Old Colony days in Massachusetts, by E. L. Bynner; Prose Pastorals, by Herbert M. Sylvester; an edition in paper covers of Dr. Breen's Practice, by W. D. Howells; and new revised editions of their guide-books to New England, the White Mountains, and the Maritime Provinces, are issued this week by Ticknor & Co.

—Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have ready this week the new Victoria Shakespeare, which will be one of the most popular editions of the poet's writings ever issued. The text employed is that of the "Globe" edition, but it will be more readable, being printed from new type, larger than that used in the "Globe." It will be very convenient and handy, being issued in three volumes—Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. The type used in the "Globe" edition is a little too small for any but young eyes, and the aim of the publishers is to make this new Vic- loria Shakespeare the one most used in the household library. It is dedicated to her Majesty the Queen, and is printed by Messrs. R. & R. Clark of Edinburgh. A new Glossary, more complete than that in any other popular edition of Shakespeare, has been especially prepared for this edition by Mr. Aldis Wright.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

June.

Blackwood's Magazine.—The Literature of the Last Fifty Years.—The Restorers of Florence. Lord Lamington—Joyce. Chaps. 5-8.—Bison-Stalking—Mar'se Dab After the War: A Virginian Reminiscence—Secondary Education in Scotland. Prof. G. G. Ramsay—Thomas. A True Story—The Progress of the Session.

The Fortnightly Review.—The Present Position of European Politics. VI. The United Kingdom—Victorian Literature. Prof. Dowden—The Progress of Science from 1836 to 1886. Grant Allen—The Progress of Thought in Our Time. J. Addington Symonds—English Music during the Queen's Reign. Francis Hueffer—The Material Growth of the United Kingdom from 1836 to 1886. (With Diagram.) Prof. Leone Levi—Fifty Years of Colonial Development. G. Baden Powell, M. P.—In Parliament. A Gladstonian M. P.

The National Review.—Our Indo-Chinese Frontier. Sir Richard Temple—Old and New Oxford. T. E. Kebbel—Queen's Plates—Horse Supply. Lord Ribblesdale—In the Heart of the Forest. Alfred Austin—The Byron Ladies. Rev. Henry Hayman, D.D.—Notes on New Zealand. E. Brodie Hoare—The Royal Academy and the Salon. William Sharp—State-Directed Colonization. Lord Brabazon—The Foreign Missions of the Church of England. Rev. F. Arnold—England in the Mediterranean. Harold A. Perry—Politics at Home and Abroad—Correspondence.

The Contemporary Review.—The Great Olympian Sedition. W. E. Gladstone—The Liberal Party and Home Rule. R. W. Dale—Thomas Stevenson, Civil Engineer. Robert Louis Stevenson—Faith-Healing and Fear-Killing. Frances Power Cobbe—Oxford after Forty Years. II. E. A. Freeman—Literary Plagiarism. Andrew Lang—Professor Green's Political Philosophy. D. G. Ritchie—Lesecholf Enfranchisement. Howard Evans—The Tendencies of French Art. Harry Quilter—Our Position in Cyprus. H. Rider Haggard—Annus Aureus: A Jubilee Ode. Robert Buchanan—Old Testament Literature. Prof. S. R. Driver.

Americanisms, An Englishman on. Cassell's Temple Bar.
Broughton's Miss) Novels. Temple Bar.
Browning, Elizabeth Barrett. W. T. Her-ridge. Andover Rev.
Criticism, Some Curiosities of. Temple Bar.
Elizabethan Age, Songs of. F. T. Palgrave. Leisure Hour.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Fiction.

A NAMELESS NOBLEMAN. By Jane G. Austin. Seventeenth Edition. Ticknor & Co. 50c.
DRONES' HONEY. By Sophie May. Lee & Shepard. $1.50
MISTAKEN PATHS. By Herbert G. Dick. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25
ONE OF THE DUANES. By Alice King Hamilton. J. B. Lippincott Co. 25c.
BEHIND THE BLUE RIDGE. By Frances Courtenay Baylor. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25
A HUMBLE ROMANCE, AND OTHER STORIES. By Mary E. Wilkins. Harper & Bros. $1.25
THE EVIL GENIUS. A STORY OF HOME LIFE. By Wilkie Collins. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.
WALLINGFORD: A STORY OF AMERICAN LIFE. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25
A SUMMER IN OLDPORT HARBOR. By W. H. Metcalf. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

Text-Books and Educational Manuals.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND FOR BEGINNERS. By Arabella B. Buckley (Mrs. Fisher). With Additions by Robert H. Ladbarton. Macmillan & Co. $1.00
THE ART OF READING LATIN: HOW TO TEACH IT. By William Gardner Hale. Ginn & Co. 30c.
WENTWORTH AND HILL'S EXERCISE MANUALS. No. 1. Arithmetic. Ginn & Co. 55c.
A THIRD READER. By J. H. Stickney. Ginn & Co. 55c.
SPANISH IDIOMS WITH THEIR ENGLISH EQUIVALENTS. Embracing Nearly Ten Thousand Phrases. Collected by Sarah Cary Becker and Federico Mora. Ginn & Co. $2.00

Miscellaneous.

THE PORTS AND POETRY OF AMERICA. A Satire by "Lavante." With an Introductory Argument to Prove that "Lavante" was Edgar Allan Poe. Benjamin & Bell.
TRIPS TO THE MOON. By Lucian. From the Greek by Thomas Franklyn, D.D. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.

A FEW THOUGHTS FOR A YOUNG MAN. By Horace Mann. New Edition. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

THE OBLISK AND ITS VOICES. By Henry B. Carrington, U. S. A. Lee & Shepard. 50c.

THE FRANKLIN SQUARE SONG COLLECTION. No. 4. Selected by J. B. McCaskey. Harper & Bros. 50c.

MANNERS AND SOCIAL USAGES. By Mrs. John Sherwood. New Edition. Harper & Bros. $1.25

EVOLUTION AND CHRISTIANITY. A Study. By J. C. F. Grumbine. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS AS RELATED BY THOMAS DIDYMUS. By James Freeman Clarke. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

THE ROTHSCHILDS: THE FINANCIAL RULERS OF NATIONS. By John Reeves. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING. OUTLINES FOR THE MANAGEMENT OF DIET. By Edward Tunis Bruen. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

AROUND THE WORLD ON A BICYCLE. Vol. I. From San Francisco to Teheran. By Thomas Stevens. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. Vol. I. January—June, 1887. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.25

PAPERS OF THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION. Vol. II, No. 3. Willem Usselinx, Founder of the Dutch and Swedish West India Companies. By J. Franklin Jameson, Ph.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. By the Rev. Gilbert White, A.M. Vol. II. Cassell's National Library. Cassell & Co. 10c.

THE PHILLIPS EXETER LECTURES. 1835-1886. By Presidents McCosh, Walker, Bartlett, Robinson, Porter, and Carter, and Rev. Drs. Hale and Brooks. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

LETTERS OF HORATIO GREENOUGH TO HIS BROTHER, HENRY GREENOUGH. Edited by Frances Boott Greenough. Ticknor & Co. $1.25

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING. Maternity, Infancy, Childhood. By John M. Keating, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lascelles Wrayall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30; Half Morocco, $39.50; Full Morocco, Gilt Edges, $45.

....Sold only by subscription....

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS DO

For the people.
The story told (in one inch of space) about

D. K.'s

SAVED in one day, by the records of sales, 864 people, from further torture and suffering from DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION. DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, who furnish these statistics, will mail to sufferers in any part of the U. S. a large box of the D. K.'s for 50 cents, or a trial box on receipt of 25 cents.

SENT FREE to any address, a copy of our new Bargain Catalogue for 1887, comprising the largest assortment of standard Books of every description offered by any booksellers in America. All for sale at Great Reductions from Regular Prices. Send your address on a postal card to Estes & Lauriat, 301-305 Washington Street, Boston.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

83 Equitable Building, Boston.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND Lover needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to

R. C. HARTMAN, 708 NANKIN STREET,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books. Send for Catalogue of Americana.

"THAT SUPPRESSED BOOK."

A Woman in the Case.

By Professor Cames.

"If there had been a woman in the faculty," says the author, "she would have told them that to try to suppress my speech would give it the widest possible publicity."

FOR SALE AT BRENTANO'S,

1015 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. O., "Literary World" Office, Boston.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of

A. S. CLARK, 24 PARK ROW, N. Y.

ANY BOOK WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by MESSRS. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.00 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.

RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.

JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst. Sec'y.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE VICTORIA SHAKESPEARE.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

In three volumes, crown 8vo, each $1.75; or three volumes, in paper box, $5.00.

Vol. 1, COMEDIES. Vol. 2, HISTORIES. Vol. 3, TRAGEDIES.

This edition, dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen, is printed after the text of the Globe edition, from entirely new type, by B. & R. Clark of Edinburgh. No pains have been spared to produce an edition at once convenient and beautiful. A new glossary, more complete than in any other popular edition of Shakespeare, has been specially prepared for this edition by Mr. Aldis Wright.

Windsor Castle, Jubilee Edition.

WINDSOR CASTLE,

WITH A DESCRIPTION OF

THE PARK, TOWN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD,

By W. J. LOFTIE, B. A. F. O. A., with numerous illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

"A spirited and remarkably attractive history of the interesting spot to which it is devoted."
—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

THE VICTORIAN HALF CENTURY,

A Jubilee Book, by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, author of "The Heir of Redcliffe," etc., with Portrait of Her Majesty the Queen. 16mo, 50 cents.

"One of the most readable, conservative narratives of the Queen's Life and Times that has appeared. . . . The book is timely, well written, accurate in its statements, and an interesting narrative from first to last."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Boswell's Johnson—Oxford Edition.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL. D.,

And Journal of a tour to the Hebrides, including Johnson's Diary of a journey into North Wales. Edited, with Notes, etc., by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D. C. S., Pembroke College, Oxford. 6 vols., 8vo, $16.00.

"This edition, for which the author of 'Dr. Johnson: His Friends and His Critics' has been collecting material for many years, embodies the results of the most recent research on the subject. The editor has been favored with the loan of many unpublished letters of Johnson, and has thus been able to clear up some obscure points in his history. He has likewise taken every opportunity of testing and verifying Boswell's statements and references and those of former editors, and has spared no pains to render the Oxford edition of the Life fully worthy, in point of accuracy and the judicious selection of illustrative matter, of the author and his work."

CARLYLE'S NEW VOLUME.

REMINISCENCES. By THOMAS CARLYLE. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. 12mo, $2.50.

EARLY LETTERS OF THOMAS CARLYLE. Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. 12mo, $2.25.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GOETHE AND CARLYLE. Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. 12mo, $2.00.

By the author of
"MARIUS THE EPICUREAN."

IMAGINARY PORTRAITS. By WALTER PORTER, author of "Marius the Epicurean," "Studies in the Renaissance," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES. An Attempt to Treat some Religious Questions in a Scientific Spirit. By the Rev. JAMES M. WILSON, M. A. 12mo, $1.50.

NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

A New Story by the author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," etc.

SARACINESCA.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Mr. Isaacs," "Dr. Claudius," "Zoroaster," "A Tale of a Lonely Parish," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

"Delights and interests more than anything he has written since he surprised the world with 'Mr. Isaacs.' . . . He has in 'Saracinesca' written a powerful story of modern Roman life, which is better even than his 'Roman Singer.'"—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

"'Saracinesca' is a very remarkable book, and a great advance upon any of the author's previous work. . . . It would be difficult to conceive of a more gracious presence than that of the Duchess Corona. She is so pure and true, so brave under trial, and withal such a thorough woman—no angel, just a passionate, loving, lovable woman—faithful to her high ideal of right, loyal to her husband. . . . This is one of the most effective romances since 'John Inglesant.'"—London Academy.

By the same author. Price $1.50 each.

MR. ISAACS. DR. CLAUDIUS.
ZOROASTER.

A TALE OF A LONELY PARISH.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d Street,

NEW YORK.

HAVE NOW READY:

I. THE AMERICAN ELECTORAL SYSTEM. By CHARLES A. O'NEIL, LL. B.

12mo, cloth, $1.30.

"The American Electoral System" treats of a subject of the greatest importance to every citizen, and especially to students and legislators. The introduction recounts the difficulties presented in devising a plan for choosing a President, describes the state of affairs in 1789, when the country had no executive, and the steps which led to the Federal Convention and to the various changes which have finally resulted in the present electoral system.

II. THE FISHERY QUESTION; Its

Origin, History and Present Situation. By CHARLES ISHAM. Questions of the Day, No. 41. Octavo, cloth, 75 cents.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

THE STORY OF ASSYRIA. By MADAM

Z. A. RAGOZIN, author of "Story of Chaldea." Being Vol. 16 of "The Story of the Nations." Each complete in one volume and profusely illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

THE STORY OF ALEXANDER'S

EMPIRE. By JOHN P. MAHAFFY, Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. With the collaboration of Arthur Gilman. Being volume 15 of "The Story of the Nations." 12mo, cloth, fully illustrated, $1.50.

. Full prospectus of this series will be forwarded upon application.

HOW TO TRAVEL. Hints, Advice and

Suggestions to Travelers by Land and Sea, all over the Globe. By THOMAS W. KNOX. Revised edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

7 TO 12. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, author of "The Leavenworth Case," "A Strange Disappearance," "Hand and Ring," etc. 16mo, paper, 25 cents.

"The most melodramatic and intensely interesting of the stories by Anna Katharine Green."—Public Opinion.

. Putnam's New Catalogue sent upon application.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, withal the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harpers' Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 50th Street, New York City.

MACMILLAN & CO., New York,

112 FOURTH AVENUE.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

Vol. XVIII, No. 14. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 327. Publishers.

213 BOSTON, JULY 9, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

Popular Books in Paper Covers.

"Among the many series of paper-bound books continually being issued, that published by the Scribners, and popularly known as their 'Yellow Covers,' has a distinct individuality which has not been sacrificed to the necessity of periodical publication. The various volumes published at irregular intervals during the last three years have been most carefully selected, and number altogether less than thirty."—The Boston Post.

Published Today:

THE LAST MEETING.

A Story. By BRANDER MATTHEWS. 50 cents.

"Every word of it is worth reading; it is more dramatic than many a drama; it is packed, as full as a nut is with meat, with a thrilling, intricate story."—The Critic.

A DESPERATE CHANCE.

By Lieut. J. D. J. KELLEY. 50 cents.

"Novel and exciting incidents follow in rapid succession. It is a fresh and lively story, and entertains to an unusual degree."—The Boston Globe.

LATEST ISSUES.

ROBERT GRANT.

FACE TO FACE.....	50
FRANK E. STOCKTON.
THE CHRISTMAS WRECK, AND OTHER STORIES.....	50
THE LADY, OR THE TIGER? AND OTHER STORIES.....	50
BUDDER GRANGE.....	50

GEORGE W. CABLE.

DR. SEVIER.....	50
OLD CREOLE DAYS. In two parts; each complete.	50

A. A. HAYES.

THE JESUIT'S RING. A ROMANCE OF MOUNT DESERT.....	50
---	----

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

STRANGE CASE OF DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.....	25
KIDNAPPED.....	50
THE MERRY MEN AND OTHER TALES AND FABLES.....	25

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

THAT LASS O' LOWRIE'S.....	50
----------------------------	----

J. T. WHEELWRIGHT.

A CHILD OF THE CENTURY.....	50
-----------------------------	----

MARION HARLAND.

JUDITH: A CHRONICLE OF OLD VIRGINIA.....	50
--	----

GEORGE PARSONS LATHROP.

AN ECHO OF PASSION.....	50
NEWPORT. A NOVEL.....	50
IN THE DISTANCE.....	50

SAXE-HOLM STORIES.

FIRST SERIES. SECOND SERIES. Each complete.....	50
---	----

J. S. OF DALE.

GUERDALE: AN OLD STORY.....	50
-----------------------------	----

BRANDER MATTHEWS.

A SECRET OF THE SEA, AND OTHER STORIES.....	50
THE LAST MEETING.....	50

BRANDER MATTHEWS. } H. C. BUNN.

IN PARTNERSHIP: STUDIES IN STORY-TELLING.....	50
---	----

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

AN AMERICAN FOUR-IN-HAND IN BRITAIN.....	25
--	----

CAPTAIN RONALD COFFIN.

THE AMERICA'S CUP. Illustrated.....	50
-------------------------------------	----

* * These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
651 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANÇOIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A. THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDSON. Translated from the French by E. J. MULLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS. BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOSA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

* * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare and Second-hand Books ready. Special Net Catalogue of Books greatly reduced in price ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE MEMOIRS

OF THE

MARGRAVINE

OF BAIREUTH.

Translated and Edited by

H. R. H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

In 8vo, cloth extra, $3.75.

The Margravine was the sister of Frederick the Great, and exerted great influence over his character. Her Diary is a wonderful narrative of the petty intrigues and gossip of the German Court.

The Volume has as frontispiece an Autotype Copy of the Portrait in Berlin.

* * Princess Christian, during her recent stay in Berlin, devoted much time and attention to the completion of the English edition of the Memoirs of Wilhelmine, Margravine of Baireuth, sister of Frederick the Great. The Princess has for this edition written a special introduction, explaining in a very interesting manner the main features of the general situation in Europe, and especially in Germany, at that time. In order to prepare herself for this task, the Princess has made a diligent study of the original manuscripts in the Berlin Royal Library, the documents being placed at her disposal by the Crown Prince's special request. In the course of her studies, the Princess discovered an excellent portrait of the Margravine by Pesne; and this, in the form of a beautifully executed autotype, stands as the frontispiece of the book.

THE PERFECT WAY;

OR, THE FINDING OF CHRIST.

By ANNA BONUS KINGSFORD (M. D. of the Faculty of Paris) and EDWARD MATTLAND (B. A. Cantab.). Revised and Enlarged Edition, being the first with the authors' names. Square 8vo, cloth, uncut tinted paper, $3.75.

"It is a book that will be largely read by students of esoteric philosophy, theosophists, and investigators of recondite branches of thought and philosophy."—Boston Transcript.

"The more this book is read carefully—as it deserves to be—the greater does the wonder grow as to its production, and the interpretative genius that pervades each well-weighted sentence."

"A veritable gospel of interpretation."

"Those marvelous appendices."—From Light and elsewhere.

PENELOPE'S SUITORS.

By EDWIN LASSETTER BYNNER. 1 vol., 32mo, quaintly bound in antique paper boards, with strings, 50 cents.

This captivating story of the Old Colony days in Massachusetts was originally published serially, when it aroused wide attention and great admiration. In deference to a public demand, it is now brought out in a quaint and dainty little volume, making one of the prettiest and most bijou-like books of the year. The Boston Daily Advertiser pronounces it: "A subtly clever, original, and remarkably well-told story. The way in which the Governor steals the heart of the young gentlewoman—just at a time when she is about to become engaged to a young friend of his—is sketched with exquisite grace and charm."

PROSE PASTORALS.

By HERBERT M. SYLVESTER. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

A series of very charming chapters on Nature and the manifold attractions of rural life, and rambling in the forests and meadows. No better companion can be found for a summer day in the country. It is an entirely new work, the result and crystallization of years of communion with Nature.

American Guide-Books.

All Newly Revised in 1897.

NEW ENGLAND.

Berkshire, Stockbridge, Lenox, Green Mountains, Lake Champlain, Moosehead Lake, Mt. Desert, Nantucket, Cape Cod, the Connecticut Valley, etc.

"The best, most thoroughly systematic and useful guide-books yet prepared in this country."—The Independent.

"Complete, exhaustive and exact. It is not only a good thing for a traveling satchel, but deserves a place in the library."—Outing.

THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

The Land of Evangeline, Nova Scotia, Labrador, Bras d'Or Lakes, Cape Breton, Newfoundland, Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Grand Manan, Montreal, The Saguenay.

"Whoever wishes to visit the famous Bras d'Or, or the land of Evangeline, or Grand Manan, or other resorts of this picturesque and historic region—the land of perpetual coolness and quaintness—will find this book invaluable."—New York Graphic.

"Its fund of instruction to tourists is really immense. This richly stored book."—Literary World.

"Every one going to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick or Quebec should buy Ticknor's excellent 'Maritime Provinces,' a rich treasury of everything the tourist wants to know about these delightful countries."—Boston Gazette.

THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

North Conway's Meadows, Fryeburg's Lowlands, Jackson's Glens, Mount Washington, Bethlehem, Jefferson, Lancaster, Littleton, Ossipee and Asquam, Franconia's Marvels, Pemigewasset Valley, etc.

"The best book ever made for a similar purpose. It covers the ground so completely that, as a matter of economy, no visitor to the White Mountains should be without it."—Magazine of American History.

"Equal to the best foreign guide-books, and superlatively intelligent accounts of whatever is worth knowing and seeing in the countries they cover. These exquisitely rich and fine volumes serve also as pleasant reminders of days spent in rational enjoyment. To travel with one of these guide-books is a liberal education."—The Beacon.

Highly commended by the London "Times," the "Revue Internationale" (of Florence), the "Bulletin of the Italian Alpine Club" (of Turin), etc.

Contains the New (1897) Map, in which (among other things) appears the results of the labors of the Appalachian Mountain Club.

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price ($1.50 each) by

Ticknor & Co., Boston.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

23 Equitable Building, Boston.

The Detective and the Novelist.A TRAGIC MYSTERY.

FROM THE DIARY OF

INSPECTOR BYRNES,

BY

JULIAN HAWTHORNE,

Author of "John Parmelee's Curse," etc.

1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1; paper cover, 50c.

Such a combination of authors as Messrs. Cassell & Company have just succeeded in making will prove an epoch in the literary world. Dumas, Dickens or Charles Reade would have given worlds for such material as Inspector Byrnes has furnished Mr. Hawthorne.

"A TRAGIC MYSTERY"

Describes a mysterious murder which startled New York several years ago, narrates the efforts made by the police to discover the criminal, the circumstances by which for a long time they were baffled and misled, and the final dramatic and tragic conclusion.

Mr. Hawthorne has constructed a tale of interest more sustained and absorbing than any example of "Detective" literature either in this country or in Europe.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

Horsford's

ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.

Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,

Mental and Physical Exhaustion,

NERVOUSNESS,Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.

Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.

It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.

It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,

Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SUMMER BOOKS

FROM THE PRESS OF

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

BEHIND THE BLUE RIDGE.

A Homely Narrative of Southern Life and Character. By FRANCES COURTENAY BAYLOR, author of "On Both Sides," etc. 12mo, extra, cloth, $1.25.

"It is exceedingly bright and clever. Its character, plot, and admirable wit and humor alike proclaim the high merit of Miss Baylor as a writer in her chosen field."—Washington Public Opinion.

"No more delightful picture of the every-day life of the Virginia mountaineers could well be imagined. Intensely dramatic in construction, rich in color, picturesque in description, and artistic in its setting."—Philadelphia Record.

THE DESERTER.

By Captain CHARLES KING, U. S. A. This powerful story of army society life appears in Lippincott's Magazine for May, 1887. Price 25 cents; or bound in half cloth, 50 cents.

SAINT MICHAEL.

A Romance. From the German of E. WERNER, translated by Mrs. A. L. Wister. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

TAKEN BY SIEGE.

A Novel. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

WALLINGFORD.

A Story of American Life. Extra cloth, $1.25.

A SUMMER IN OLD PORT HARBOR.

A Novel. By W. H. METCALF. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

MISTAKEN PATHS.

A Novel. By HERBERT G. DICK. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

BELLONA'S HUSBAND.

A Romance. By HUDOR GENONE. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

New Cheap Editions. Paper Covers.

THE OLD MAM'SELLE'S SECRET.

By E. MARLITT. Translated by Mrs. A. L. Wister. Paper cover, 25 cents.

ONE OF THE DUANES.

A Novel. By ALICE KING HAMILTON. Paper cover, 25 cents.

BELLONA'S HUSBAND.

A Romance. By HUDOR GENONE. Paper cover, 25 cents.

Interesting Household Reading.PRACTICAL LESSONS IN NURSING.

II.—MATERNITY; INFANCY; CHILDHOOD. The Hygiene of Pregnancy; the Nursing and Weaning of Infants; the Care of Children in Health and Disease. By JOHN M. KEATING, M.D. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

III.—OUTLINES FOR THE MANAGEMENT OF DIET; or, The Regulation of Food to the Requirements of Health and the Treatment of Disease. By E. T. BRUNN, M.D. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

NINETEENTH CENTURY SENSE:

THE PARADOX OF SPIRITUALISM. By JOHN DARBY, author of "Old Hours of a Physician," "Hushland," "Flours with John Darby." 16mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

THE SEYBERT COMMISSION ON SPIRITUALISM.

Report of the Commission appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to investigate Modern Spiritualism, in accordance with the request of the late Henry Seybert. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.00.

* * * For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,

715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JULY 9, 1887. No. 14.

CONTENTS.

WINDSOR CASTLE	211
A LAD'S LOVE	211
THE KERNEL AND THE HUSK	212
TWO MORE BALZAC NOVELS:
The Two Brothers	213
The Alkahest	213
PROSE PASTORALS	213
THE STORY OF METLAKANTLA	214
MINOR NOTICES:
Outlines of Logic and of Encyclopædia of Philosophy	215
A Hebrew Grammar	215
Great Writers: Coleridge, Dickens, and Rossetti	219
Connecticut	219
My Creed	219
Etc., Etc., Etc.
MINOR FICTION:
Daniele Cortis	218
Behind the Blue Ridge	218
Drone's Honey	218
Who is John Noman?	219
Dinah Mite	219
That Child	219
The Bride of the Nile	219
PASSING MENTION	220
PERIODICALS	220
MRS. JACKSON'S GRAVE	216
A NEW PUBLIC LIBRARY	216
THE CASE OF THE METLAKANTLANS	216
PARAGRAPHS	216
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Arlo Bates	217
CORRESPONDENCE:
Decay of the Book-Buying Habit. Henry Holt	217
The Dialect in Miss Murfree's Stories. G. H.	217
Picard	217
HOME CLUB STUDY. Elizabeth Porter Gould	217
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Mr. Morgan and Verse-Tests in Shakspeare	221
Middleton in the "Mermaid Series"	222
ENGLISH OPINIONS	215
NEWS AND NOTES	222
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	222
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	223

WINDSOR CASTLE.*

HOW much this handsome and interesting book, whose publication is so timely at this moment of the Queen's Jubilee, would have been improved for American readers by a map of Windsor and its surroundings, a simple sketch-map even of a single page, which should show Windsor in its relations to London, with its adjuncts of Eton and Waltham, and Stoke, and Slough, and Burnham, and its other Berkshire and Buckinghamshire connections. Where such a map might have been there is instead a heliotype of a statue of Victoria, by Boehm, representing Her Majesty's entire figure, sitting, in robes of state, her crown upon her head, and her left hand reaching towards a faithful dog who lies dignifiedly at her feet, emblem of a true British subject, we suppose. This is only one of sixty-seven illustrations, the rest of which are on wood and scattered through the book, some of them full-page drawings, others vignettes inserted in the text, the series serving to place the characteristic features of both Windsor Town and Castle pleasantly before the eye. The Castle at a distance and the Castle near, the old Windsor Church, the Cloisters and the Deanery, the Hundred Steps, the famous Round Tower without and within, gateways, cloisters, and corridors, prison-room, dining-room and drawing-room, library, staircase, and closet, St. George's Chapel and the Albert Memorial Chapel, these are a few examples out of the well executed drawings pertaining to Windsor itself; while among the accessories we have views of the sleepy little town of Datchet, of Eton College "towered and fair," of the venerable Burnham Beeches, and of Stoke Poges Church and Gray's Tomb. It is not often that so large a collection of as pretty engravings are found in a book of this character.

The accompanying text by Mr. Loftie is by no means subordinate in interest to the pictures, though we have attended to the latter first in this notice; but is a careful and exact historical and descriptive narrative, commencing with a comparison of the Castle to the Tower of London, uncovering its foundations, so to speak, tracing the various reconstructions and restorations by which it has been brought to its present estate, and visiting in succession all of its departments and apartments that are ever open to the public. Here and there indeed the curtain is cautiously lifted upon a more sacred corner. The castle is of Norman origin, has kept pace with the growth of the British state, and is described by Mr. Loftie as a fitting home for present royalty. Its situation is happy; its noble park is a delight to the Rambler. Of its early history in detail we know little. The hand of William the Conqueror was in it. It is the center of some of the most delightful landscapes in England. A happier hunting ground for artists than its vicinity it would be hard to name. Artistically the castle may be disappointing, but in picturesqueness certainly it is not lacking.

The tangible history of Windsor begins with the Henrys, each of whom left his mark upon it in a chapel, or a gate, or some added feature. In its great Round Tower tradition laid the Round Table and gathered the doughty knights about it. At Windsor Henry VIII and Jane Seymour were buried, and in 1648[9] the decapitated body of Charles I was laid in the same tomb. This famous tomb was opened by authority in 1813, and the remains of the two once illustrious monarchs were readily identified and examined. That of Henry VIII "was a mere skeleton, a little of the beard only remaining on the chin." The head of Charles was in a much better preserved condition.

Such grim topics as this, however, are not the staple of Mr. Loftie's pages, which pass from history to description, and from description to personal inspection, so that on closing the book one feels as if he had really paid a visit to Windsor, indeed had watched the growth of the ancient and diversified pile, ivies, associations, traditions, and all.

The pictures are plentiful enough and good enough to add greatly to the enjoyment of the volume.

A LAD'S LOVE.*

A FORMER novel by Mr. Bates we considered disagreeable and discreditable; this latest we pronounce a success and an honor. The bad taste left in our mouth by The Pagans is wholly taken away by A Lad's Love. It gives us pleasure to say this, and to commend the new story as ingenious, clever, interesting, amusing, and in every way delightful. The book is more than brilliant; it is thoughtful; there is wisdom in it, experience, and feeling; it is always bright and sometimes witty, and holds the attention closely from the first page to the last. The fame of the island of Campobello as a watering place receives by it a finishing touch; distinguished heretofore by having two of the finest hotels on the coast, one of them bearing the exotic name of Tyn-y-coed, it now has a romance to celebrate its charms and individualize its history.

The Tyn-y-coed itself is the scene of this pretty and pleasing story, about whose parlors and piazzas copies of the book may be expected shortly to be in great demand. The actors are a little group of summer guests, including chiefly Mr. and Mrs. Bode-win Ranger, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Crawford, Mrs. Kellogg and her daughter Clare, the Misses Hatherway and Mayho, Mrs. Van Orden and her daughter Phoebe, Mr. Gilbert Hampton, Burton West, and a few other young men, not too many in all. These people are drawn with great naturalness, without stiffness or affectation, the single exception being Mr. Sefton, the Baltimorean, the sketch of whom runs into caricature. Burt West is a Harvard student, conditioned on a German elective, who makes much fun for the party, and whose quips and jokes are generally fresh and good. A little of the dialogue that goes on in connection with a picnic at Head Harbor will give an idea of how high their spirits run:

"If you find an ant in your tea," asked Kate, "what do you do? Drink it?" "You consider its ways," answered Phoebe. "I've already considered its ways of getting in; now I'd like to have a chance to study the way to get it out. I haven't any spoon." "You might try Hampton," Burt West suggested under his breath. "Hush!" Kate retorted in the same tone. Then aloud she added, "I'm dreadfully tired of poor puns." This trivial piece of deception tickled Burt's fancy greatly, and he broke into a laugh full of glee. "Mr. West has to relieve his spirits in some way," Mr. Ranger observed, smiling in condescending tolerance of the frivolity of youth. "Yes," West retorted; "I overflow with spirits, like a lager-beer fountain. The truth is," he added, as if he had given the subject the deepest consideration, "I feel so vivacious that I am confident I was intended for twins." "It's such a pity you hadn't been," Manton called across the fire. "Oh, no," Hitty hastened to put in; "just think of having two of him!" "That would be horrible; I was thinking we should only have to have half of him at a time." The dowagers ate and smiled good-naturedly at this foolish badinage. "How funny Mr. West is!" a Baltimore lady remarked to Mrs. Kellogg. "He is silly," was the uncompromising reply, "and in nine cases out of ten that answers every purpose."

* Windsor Castle. With a Description of the Park, Town, and Neighbourhood. By W. J. Loftie. London: Seelye & Co.

* A Lad's Love. By Arlo Bates. Roberts Bros. $1.00.

As a mere picture of pleasant idle life at a summer resort A Lad's Love is truthfully and skillfully done.

But it is much more than a picture. The interest lies in its story of Gilbert Hampton's "calf-love" for Mrs. Van Orden, a vivacious and fascinating widow, old enough to be his mother, and of the adroit and happy way in which she extricates both herself and him from an unpleasant situation, and slips her daughter into her place. Mother and daughter, both with brilliant red hair, full brown eyes, and beautiful skin, are as alike as two peas, and it is funny to see how readily Gilbert, when he finds he has made a mistake in making love to the widow, takes up with Phœbe. This is the point of the book—the tendency of boys' hearts to hop, skip, and jump; but the point is brought out with such good nature, that we can neither blame Mrs. Van Orden for her perhaps thoughtless indulgence of Gilbert, nor despise him on the charge of fickleness. It all comes about so easily and naturally that the spectators have little or nothing but enjoyment over it, and give their best wishes to all concerned.

As a little comedy of American social life, Mr. Bates's story is extremely well conceived and written. Without anything morose or cynical or morbid, it has an undertone of serious meaning, and yet sparkles on the surface like a lakelet rippling in the sunshine. For some of the stock guests at the summer hotels it will serve as a mirror, good for them to look in. The scenery of lovely Campobello, of Passamaquoddy Bay, and of sleepy St. George is just prominent enough to furnish a distinct but not obtrusive background. Who has not been to just such picnics, taken just such horseback rides, fallen into just such quagmires, and participated in just such private theatricals as are described in these pages? Is not the serene old Mrs. Wilson doubtless at this very moment knitting away on a zephyr shawl on the broad piazza of the Tyn-y-coed? And will not Castle Cliffs furnish such scenes as the following not only over and over again this summer, but for all summers to come?

